when such want of jurisdiction appears on the record. And in this case the judgment rendered on the 9th of September was a mere nullity, and the case then stood in the same manner as though the summons had been returned indorsed non est inventus; for he had a cause pending, and, having failed to get service on the defendant, he had a right to move for an alias summons, and it did not prejudice the rights of the defendant," etc. It is immaterial whether the void judgment was vacated or not. It was, as BOISE, J., said, "no judgment,"—of no binding force or effect against the defendant,—and in its legal aspect the record stood with only a complaint filed against the defendant, upon which, as we have seen, an alias summons might be issued for service upon the defendant. No right of the defendant was prejudiced by it, and the action of the justice in the premises was exactly what the circuit court, upon a writ of review, would have directed him to do, if the judgment had been allowed to remain, and no summons issued or further action taken, namely, to vacate the judgment, and issue an alias summons against the defendant. It is clear, then, both on authority and principle, that the power of the justice was not exhausted and the case terminated, but that he was authorized to issue an alias summons, and acquire jurisdiction of the defendant, which, when obtained, continued until the case was disposed of legally. The facts disclosed that the defendant did appear as required by the alias summons, and filed a plea in abatement, to which a demurrer was sustained, and the defendant refusing to further plead, judgment was rendered against it. It is now suggested that the defendant has not had an opportunity to be heard on the merits. But this is not so. The defendant appeared and was in court, and when the demurrer to the answer was sustained refused to further plead, and thereby of its own volition deprived itself of the opportunity of being heard on the merits. We think there was no error, and that the judgment must be affirmed.

PILZ v. KILLINGSWORTH.

LABORER'S LIEN—GRADING CITY LOT—FORECLOSURE—AVERMENTS OF NOTICE OF LIEN.

1. When a person is employed by the owner of a lot in an incorporated city, to grade, fill in, or otherwise improve the same, and he employs laborers to assist him in performing the work, the services of such laborers will be considered as having been rendered at the request of the owner, within the meaning of section 3676, Hill's Code.

2. A "lot," within the meaning of section 3676 of Hill's Code, is evidently not to be understood as synonymous with "tract" or "parcel," but in the sense of a city lot, as bounded and described on the recorded plats of the city, or as subdivided and bounded by conveyances of the owners thereof, or by other acts done by themselves, or the city authorities, in exercising the right of eminent domain in opening and establishing streets.

3. It must affirmatively appear from the complaint, in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's or laborer's lien, that the notice filed contained all the essential provisions required by statute.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; L. B. STEARNS, Judge.

This is a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien alleged to exist in favor of respondent and several other persons, for clearing a tract of land within the corporate limits of the city of Albina. The complaint alleges, for first cause of suit, that defendant, Killingsworth, is the owner of a certain tract of land in the corporate limits of the city of Albina, which is particularly described; that on the — day of —, 18—, the true date of which is to plaintiff unknown, the defendant Killingsworth duly made and entered into a contract with the defendant Vennigerholz to clear, improve, and grade the land above described; that during the year 1890 the said defendant Vennigerholz employed this plaintiff to do work and labor for him on said land, under said contract, and this plaintiff performed work and labor under said employment for the period of 27½ days, at the agreed price of $1.75 a day, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $47.68; that no part of said sum has been paid, and there is now due and owing to plaintiff therefor the sum of $45.93; that on the 20th day of June, 1890, plaintiff duly made out and filed in the office of the recorder of conveyances for Multnomah county, Or., his notice that he intended to, and did, hold a lien upon the land above described, to secure the payment of said sum; that said lien was so filed within 30 days after plaintiff ceased to work under said contract, and was duly recorded at page 119 of Book B of Record of Mechanic's Liens for Multnomah county, Or., where the same has ever since remained of record and unsatisfied; and there is now due and owing to plaintiff the sum of $45.93, the payment of which is secured by said lien, together with interest from date of said lien; and that $10 is a reasonable attorney's fee for foreclosing said lien, and plaintiff paid $1 for the recording of said lien. The remaining causes of suit are mere repetitions of the first, except as to names and amounts. Defendant demurred to the complaint, because it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of suit; which being overruled, and defendant declining to answer further, a decree was entered foreclosing the liens, and ordering the sale of the property, and hence this appeal.

Sears & Beach, for appellant. J. C. Moreland and W. Y. Masters, for respondent.

BEAN, J., (after stating the facts as above.) By section 3676, Hill's Code, it is provided that "any person who shall, at the request of the owner of any lot in any incorporated city or town, grade, fill in, or otherwise improve the same, or the street in front of or adjoining the same, shall have a lien upon such lot for his work done and materials furnished in grading, filling in, or otherwise improving the same; and all the provisions of this act respecting the securing and enforcing of mechanics' liens shall apply thereto." The lien in this case is claimed by virtue of the provisions of this section of the statute. The contention of defendant is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to bring the case within this provision of the law, because (1) it does not appear that the work was done at the request of the owner of the property; and (2) that the property described in the complaint is not a "lot," within the meaning of this section.

1. It appears that defendant made a contract with Vennigerholz to clear, improve, and grade this property. This authorized the latter to do all acts necessary and proper to enable him to fulfill his contract. It must have been understood that this work was not wholly to be done by the contractor with his own hands. He was fully empowered to employ such assistance as might be necessary to enable him to complete his contract. The consent of the owner to the employment of laborers by the contractor is a necessary and inevitable implication from the contract under which the work was done. We think a fair and reasonable construction of the section under consideration is that when a person is employed by the owner of a lot, in an incorporated city or town, to grade, fill in, or otherwise improve the same, and he employs laborers to assist him in performing the work, that the services of such laborers must be considered as having been rendered at the request of the owner, within the meaning of section 3676. Parker v. Bell, 7 Gray, 429; Sweet v. James, 2 R. I. 270; Weeks v. Wolcott, 15 Gray, 54; Clark v. Kingsley, 8 Allen, 543. This construction is confirmed by the latter clause of the section, which is that "all the provisions of this act respecting the securing and enforcing of mechanics' liens shall apply thereto." Section 3669 of the Code, which is section 1 of the act, makes every contractor, subcontractor, etc., having charge of the construction, etc., of any building or other improvement, the agent of the owner for the purposes of the act; so that any work done at the request of the contractor is deemed to be done at the request of the owner. The evident intention of the legislature was, by the latter clause of section 3676, to make the provisions of section 3669, so far as it made the contractor the agent of the owner, applicable to liens for grading, filling in, or otherwise improving any lot in an incorporated city or town. The object and purpose of the act is to protect those persons who by their labor, skill, or material have contributed to the enhancement in value of the owner's property, and this object should be kept in view in interpreting the language used. The word "securing," as used in section 3676, must, we think, be held as applicable to the creation of the lien, and not to its protection, as contended for by appellant. The legislature, having made all the necessary provisions in section 1 for securing the lien, deemed it unnecessary to repeat them again in section 8, but simply made them applicable by a general provision.

2. The right to a lien is in derogation of the common law, and can only be established by a clear compliance with the requirements of the statute. The right is conferred by statute, and the party claiming such lien must show a substantial compliance with the statute, and by his complaint must bring himself within its provisions. Allen v. Rowe, 19 Or. 188, 23 Pac. Rep. 901; Kneel. Mech. Liens, 221. The complaint in this case does not allege that the property therein described is a lot within Albina, but describes the same by metes and bounds, without stating the quantity, although on the argument it was assumed that it contained 10 acres. The mere fact that property may be within an incorporated city or town is not sufficient to subject it to a lien for labor bestowed in grading, clearing, or improving the same. In addition to being within the incorporation, it must be a lot. The word "lot," when applied to real estate, is indefinite in its dimensions, but is a portion of land that has been set off or allotted, whether great or small. There is no definite and fixed meaning to the word which is applicable to all cases alike. What would be deemed a "lot" of land in the country would not be so considered in a city or town. Its ordinarily accepted meaning, when applied to property within an incorporated city or town, is evidently not to be understood as synonymous with the word "tract" or "parcel," but in the sense of a city lot, as bounded and described on the recorded plats of the city, or as subdivided and bounded by conveyances of the owners thereof, or by other acts done by themselves, or the city authorities in exercising the right of eminent domain in opening and establishing streets. It must be property so situated and subdivided, with reference to streets, as to have impressed upon it the character of urban, as contradistinguished from rural, use. City of Evansville v. Page, 23 Ind. 525; Collins v. City of New Albany, 59 Ind. 396; Fitzgerald v. Thomas, 61 Mo. 499; Gardner v. Eberhart, 82 Ill. 316; Wilson v. Proctor, 28 Minn. 13, 8 N. W. Rep. 830. The legislature must have intended to use the term "lot" in the sense of a city as contradistinguished from a rural lot, for it is provided that such lot must be within an incorporated city or town, and that a lien may be had on the lot for grading, filling in, or otherwise improving the street in front of the same. The including of wild or farming land within the corporate limits of a city would not make such land a lot, within the meaning of the law, nor could a laborer claim a lien thereon for work done in grading or improving the same. The complaint in this suit does not allege that the property upon which it is sought to hold a lien is in any sense a city lot, nor does it allege anything from which the court can infer that it is anything more than a 10-acre tract of land which is within the corporate limits of the city, and this, we have already said, is not sufficient to give plaintiff a lien upon the land for the value of his labor. Until plaintiff shall, by the allegations of his complaint, bring his case within the provisions of the law, his complaint will be vulnerable to a demurrer.

3. There is yet another fatal objection to the complaint here. The only averment of the filing of the notice required by law is that it was duly made out and filed. This is but a conclusion of law, and is clearly insufficient. It must affirmatively appear from the complaint that the notice filed contained all the essential provisions required by statute; that it was proper in form, verified as required, and filed within the time prescribed. Hallagan v. Herbert, 2 Daly, 253; Gault v. Soldani, 34 Mo. 150; Jones, Liens, §§ 1588, 1589; Kneel. Liens, § 202; Eatee, Pl. & Pr. (Pomeroy's Ed.) § 2344. The decree of the court below must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer.

STATE v. MYER et al.

JURISDICTION OF COUNTY COURT — OBSTRUCTING HIGHWAY.

1. The county court, in exercising its jurisdiction in laying out and establishing a public highway, is a court of special and limited jurisdiction, and the necessary jurisdictional facts must appear.

2. It is only when such courts have acquired jurisdiction that the same intendments obtain in favor of the regularity of their proceedings as prevail in courts of general jurisdiction. Where a party was convicted of obstructing a public highway, and the record of its laying out and establishment by the county court was insufficient to show the necessary jurisdictional facts, held, that the judgment of conviction must be reversed.

Appeal from circuit court, Jackson county; L. R. WEBSTER, Judge.

C. B. Watson and L. L. Burtenshaw, for appellant. Wm. M. Colvig, Dist. Atty., for the State.

LORD, J. The defendants were indicted, tried, and convicted for obstructing a public highway. The cause was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, upon the express consent, by stipulation, of the defendants, and no objection is urged or error assigned on that account. The facts stipulated admit that the defendants did cut the tree alleged in the indictment, and that thereby it became an obstruction to the alleged highway; that the defendant Myer is the owner of the land covered by one-half of the width of said highway at the point where said obstruction was placed, and also the land upon which said tree was growing at the time it was felled. In the progress of the trial, to prove the public highway alleged, the state offered in evidence the record of the county court for the location and establishment of said highway for obstructing which the defendants were indicted. To the introduction of this record as evidence the defendant objected for various reasons, namely, that there was no sufficient proof of posting notices; that the petition was insufficient, and likewise the description of the proposed highway; that no plat of the same was filed, as required by law, nor any order of the county court declaring the alleged highway to be a county road, etc.; but the court overruled the objections, and received the record in evidence. As this record involves the only question necessary to be considered, it is sufficient to say that the court found, among other things, that the county court, on the day specified, had ordered the alleged public highway opened to public travel, and that the same was and is a regularly laid out and duly-established public highway of said county, and that the defendants obstructed said highway, as set forth in the indictment; and, as a conclusion of law from these facts, that the defendants were guilty as charged, and sentenced them to pay a fine.

From this statement it will be seen that the defense relied upon is that the road set forth in the indictment is not a lawfully established public highway, mainly because the county court never acquired jurisdiction to make it one, and for the further reason that there never has been any order of the county court declaring it a public highway. The question then to be determined is whether the record of the county court discloses the necessary jurisdictional facts to show that the road alleged to have been obstructed was a legally established public highway. In this state the county court, in exercising its jurisdiction in laying out and establishing a public highway, is to be regarded as a court of special and limited jurisdiction, and that the necessary jurisdictional facts must affirmatively appear. In State v. Officer, 4 Or. 182, where the defendant was convicted on an indictment charging him with having obstructed a public highway, the question raised, like the one at bar, was whether the record of the county court disclosed the necessary jurisdictional facts to entitle it to be read in evidence to prove that the road charged to have been obstructed was a legally established public highway; and, as the question to be determined involved a collateral attack upon the jurisdiction of the county court, it was deemed necessary to consider the character of such court from a constitutional standpoint, and the result reached was that such court, so far as it exercises judicial power, as a board of county commissioners, in laying out and establishing public highways, was a court of special and limited jurisdiction; and, the record offered in evidence being insufficient to show the necessary jurisdictional facts, the judgment of conviction was reversed. In Bewley v. Graves, 17 Or. 282, 20 Pac. Rep. 322, STRAHAN, J., said: "It is settled by a line of uniform decisions in this state that the county courts, when they exercise the power of laying out roads, are courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction." Thompson v. Multnomah Co., 2 Or. 34; Johns v. Marion Co., 4 Or. 46; Road Co. v. Douglas Co., 5 Or. 280. It is only when such courts have acquired jurisdiction, or jurisdiction has attached, that the same intendments obtain in favor of the regularity of their proceedings as prevail in courts of general jurisdiction. The case before us, then, is that of an adjacent owner of land prosecuted for obstructing a highway, objecting to record evidence material to establish the charge against him, not on the ground of irregularity merely in the proceedings to establish the alleged highway, but because such record discloses affirmatively on its face that the court was without authority to exercise its jurisdiction in the premises to lay out and establish such highway.

The existence of a road as a highway is to be proven by the record of its establishment, (Naylor v. Becks, 1 Or. 217;) and "the court has no power over the subject until a petition of the prescribed character and proof of notice is presented, and it is necessary that the record should show affirmatively that jurisdiction has been thus acquired, or the proceeding cannot be sustained."

It thus appears that the jurisdiction of the county court in laying out or locating a county road rests upon the petition and the proof of posting notices, and, when these fall short of the requirements prescribed by the statute, the court does not acquire jurisdiction, and the proceeding fails for the want of it. That the record of the proceedings offered in evidence—and especially as to the proof of posting notices—to disclose the necessary jurisdictional facts to show that the road charged to have been obstructed was a legally established public highway was not gainsaid or questioned, but the contention of the prosecution was that, under the peculiar form in which the action was tried, the finding of facts were conclusive upon the court, and not subject to be reviewed, and, consequently, beyond the reach of the objection urged. But this is not so. The bill of exceptions discloses that the objection was made when the record of the court was offered in evidence, and the court overruled it, necessarily holding that it exhibited the necessary jurisdictional facts; and, as we are satisfied, within the rulings of this court, that the record discloses a want of jurisdiction, and is insufficient for the purposes of proof offered, it ought to have been rejected, and cannot be made to sustain the finding that the road alleged to have been obstructed was a legally laid out and established public highway.

Where a finding is excepted to as being without any evidence to support it, and that fact is made to appear by the bill of exceptions containing all the evidence upon that point, such finding will be disregarded. This was expressly ruled in Hicklin v. McClellan, 18 Or. 138, 22 Pac. Rep. 1057, THAYER, C. J., saying: "If the findings of the circuit court are wholly unsupported by the evidence, and that fact is made to appear by a bill of exceptions purporting to contain all the evidence upon the point, this court would disregard the findings." It is where there is some evidence having a tendency to support the finding, as shown by the bill of exceptions, that the finding is to be regarded as conclusive, and not subject to review. Although this phase of the case was argued to sustain the finding and conviction, it is clear that it could not avail, for the reason that the bill of exceptions discloses the evidence upon that point, which shows the finding is wholly unsupported by the evidence. But the objection to the record as evidence here was taken to its admission for the purposes offered, precisely as if the case had been pending before a jury, and is so certified to us; and, as this objection is fatal, and ought to have been sustained, the case properly ended there, and with it the contention now urged for the state, which has likewise been shown to be without merit. In whatever view, therefore, the case may be considered by this record, the judgment must be reversed.

REAL-ESTATE BROKER — POWER TO SELL — PERFORMANCE—COMMISSIONS.

1. A real-estate broker empowered to sell real property for a commission performs his part of such contract, so as to be entitled to his commission, when he brings to his employer a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase the property on the terms and conditions authorized by his employer, although the sale may not be completed because of a defect in the title shown by the abstract furnished by the seller to such proposed purchaser.

2. A principal cannot accept that part of his agent's acts which are to his advantage, and reject another part of his acts, in the same transaction. He must either accept or reject the transaction in its entirety.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Jackson county; L. R. WEBSTER, Judge.

The questions of law argued on this appeal arise on the findings of the trial court, which are as follows:

"(1) On the 17th of April, 1889, the plaintiff and defendants made an agreement that, if the plaintiff, who was a real-estate agent, would sell for the defendants a certain tract of land containing two hundred and fifty acres, owned by them, they would pay him two hundred and fifty dollars for his services in making such sale. There was no time stated in this agreement wherein this sale was to be made.

"(2) On the 17th of April, 1889, the plaintiff began negotiations with one E. C. Kane for the sale of said land to him, and as the result of said negotiations Kane orally agreed to purchase the land at the price, and, upon the terms, as set out in the written agreement, which is incorporated in the third finding of facts herein. It was admitted upon the trial that Kane was able to purchase this land.

"(3) Plaintiff prepared a written agreement containing the terms of the proposed sale, which the defendant signed. Kane did not sign this agreement, though he was willing to do so, afterwards thought he had signed it, and it was through an oversight, and for no other reason, that he did not sign it. The agreement is as follows: 'Articles of Agreement for Warranty Deed. Articles of agreement made this 17th day of April in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, (1889,) between Chas. G. Rippey and Frank Amy, both of Central Point, Jackson county, Oregon, parties of the first part, and E. C. Kane, of Ashland, Jackson county, Oregon, party of the second part, witnesseth: That the said parties of the first part hereby covenant and agree that, if the party of the second part shall first make the payments and perform the covenants hereinafter mentioned on his part to be made and performed, the said parties of the first part will convey and assure the party of the second part in fee-simple, clear of all incumbrances whatsoever, by a good and sufficient warranty deed and abstract of title, the following lot, piece, or parcel of ground, viz.: The west two hundred and fifty (250) acres of what is known as the "Watson Place," and situate about one mile north of Central Point, Oregon, and further described as the two hundred and fifty acres lying adjacent to the railroad track. And the said party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to pay to the said parties of the first part the sum of forty dollars ($40) per acre, and is to take two hundred and fifty acres, more or less, according to the following provisions, viz.: If there be, when surveyed, two hundred and fifty acres on the west or north-west side of Bear creek, or further described as the portion adjacent to the railroad track, then the party of the second part agrees to take two hundred and fifty acres of land; but if it should appear from the survey, in getting together two hundred and fifty acres of land, that five acres, or less than five acres, should come on the east or north-east side of said stream, the parties of the first part agree to keep that amount out of the two hundred and fifty acres; and the party of the second part also agrees that if more than five acres should by a survey be shown to come on the east or north-east side of said stream, and being a part and parcel necessary to make the said two hundred and fifty acres, then the party of the second part agrees to accept of said land on the east or north-east side of said stream. Payments to be made in the following manner, viz.: Five hundred dollars in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the balance in two payments, as follows, viz.: Three thousand dollars at the time of the delivery of a good and sufficient warranty deed and abstract of title to said land; six thousand five hundred dollars on or before three years from date of last above payment, interest to be paid at the rate of eight percent. per annum on deferred payments, payable annually, all in U. S. gold coin of the United States; the latter amount, six thousand five hundred dollars, to be secured by a note and mortgage on said land; and it is understood that said mortgage shall be released on part or all of said land at any time that the party of the second part may pay the amount due; and, in case of any failure of the party of the second part to make any of the payments or perform any of the covenants on his part hereby made and entered into, this contract shall, at the option of the parties of the first part, be forfeited and determined, and the party of the second part shall forfeit all claims made by him on this contract, and such payments shall be retained by said parties of the first part in full satisfaction and liquidation of all damages by them sustained, and they shall have the right to re-enter and take possession of the premises aforesaid, with all the improvements and appurtenances thereunto belonging. It is also mutually agreed that all the covenants and agreements herein contained shall extend to and be obligatory upon the heirs, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties. In evidence whereof the parties of these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written. [Seal] CHAS. G. RIPPEY. [Seal] FRANK AMY. Done in the presence of C. W. AYERS, FRANK LENNAERT, A. T. KYLE, Jr.'

"(4) As soon as the contract set out in the third finding of fact was signed by the defendants, Kane paid them five hundred dollars under said contract, which they accepted.

"(5) Within a short time after the execution of the agreement as set out in the third finding of fact, and the payment of the five hundred dollars thereunder as set out in the fourth finding of fact, the defendants furnished to Kane an abstract of title of the land mentioned in said agreement, prepared by an abstractor mutually agreed upon by Kane and the defendants. Kane submitted this abstract to his attorney, who advised him that the title of the defendants to said land was defective.

"(6) Within a short time after said abstract mentioned in the fifth finding of fact had been furnished, the defendants executed their warranty deed for said land to said Kane, and tendered the same to him, and they were willing and ready to complete the sale of said land to him.

"(7) Kane refused to accept the deed so tendered to him as found in the sixth finding of fact, and refused to accept the land under said deed, and refused to complete the purchase of said land, and to pay therefor, as provided in the agreement, alleging as a reason for such refusal that the title of said defendants was not perfect, that he had been so advised by his attorney, and that the title was not satisfactory to him.

"(8) After the deed had been tendered to Kane, as found in the sixth finding of fact, Kane exhibited to Chas. G. Rippey, one of the defendants, a purse containing a quantity of gold coin, and said he was ready to pay the three thousand dollars if defendants could and would make him a good deed, and give him a clear title to the land, and asked to see the deed, which Rippey thereupon showed him. After looking at the deed, he remarked that it was all right if it was not for the abstract. Rippey said that was all the deed they could make, and Kane took his money and left.

"(9) Kane would have accepted said land, and paid for it according to the terms of said agreement set out in the third finding of fact, if the title of the defendants thereto had been satisfactory to him.

"(10) The defendants have not paid the plaintiff the amount claimed by him in this action, nor any part thereof.

"As a conclusion of law from the foregoing conclusions of fact, I find that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action, but that the defendants are entitled to recover from the plaintiff their costs and disbursements therein. It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the defendants do have and recover of and from the plaintiff their costs and disbursements herein, taxed at ——— dollars and ——— cents.

[Signed] "LIONEL R. WEBSTER, Judge."

Hammond & Briggs, for appellant. Wm. M. Colvig and C. W. Kahler, for respondents.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) This is a second appeal. The result of the former appeal is reported in 19 Or. 186, 25 Pac. Rep. 141. The only question presented by this record is whether or not the court drew the correct conclusion of law from the facts found. The plaintiff was a real-estate broker, and was employed by the defendants to negotiate a sale of certain real estate in Jackson county, for which service he was to receive an agreed sum of $250. The plaintiff produced a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase the property on the terms prescribed by the defendants, and the defendants received on said contract $500, and were to furnish an abstract and make deed, etc. When the abstract was furnished it was submitted by Kane, the proposed purchaser, to his attorney for his advice, who advised him that such abstract did not show a clear title in the defendants, and for that reason alone he declined to complete the purchase after having paid $500 thereon. In construing the language of the contract between the plaintiff and defendants, its objects and purposes must not be overlooked. The plaintiff had no power, by virtue of that contract, to complete a sale. All he could do was to find a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the property on the terms offered by the defendants; when he had done this he had performed his contract, and was entitled to the compensation agreed upon. 16 Cent. Monnot*, *42 N. Y. 203. These authorities, and numerous others that might be cited, conclusively establish the proposition contended for by the appellant; but it was claimed on behalf of the respondents that, because the proposed purchaser did not sign the contract set out in the findings, the plaintiff was not entitled to his commissions. It does not appear through whose oversight that omission occurred, nor is it material. The plaintiff brought the defendants a purchaser, and they undertook to enter into a contract in writing with him, and received $500 thereon. If the omission occurred by the plaintiff's fault, the defendants waived their right of objection by accepting and retaining the $500 paid under the contract; if through their own fault, they cannot complain. Winnepenny v. French, 18 Ohio St. 469. This is upon the well-settled rule that a principal cannot accept that portion of his agent's work that is to his advantage, and repudiate the residue. He must accept it in its entirety, or not at all. It is evident from the findings that the abstract furnished by the defendants upon its face showed some defect in the defendants' title. Whether it was a real defect, or one that was only apparent, is not shown by the findings. If it was a real defect, and the sale failed for that reason, the plaintiff would be entitled to his commission. He was not responsible for the condition of the defendants' title. If the defendants offered for sale a piece of land the title to which was not marketable it was not the plaintiff's fault. In the ordinary course of business, the title would probably not be examined until a purchaser was found, and it was the defendants' fault not to know the state of their title before they put it upon the market. On the other hand, if the defect shown by the abstract was only apparent,—some cloud that could have been readily removed,—it was the defendants' duty to have caused its removal at once, so that the sale should not have failed for that reason. Without further examination of the subject, we are satisfied that the learned circuit judge erred in his findings of law, and that the same should have been that the plaintiff was entitled to recover against the defendants the amount sued for. The judgment must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to find the law in accordance with this opinion, and to render judgment thereon for the plaintiff.

PERSONS, ETC., IN DELINQUENT LIST OF MARICOPA COUNTY FOR 1888-89 v. TERRITORY.

In re PHOENIX & M. R. Co.

(Supreme Court of Arizona. Feb. 9, 1891.)

INDIAN RESERVATIONS—TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION—TAXATION OF RAILROADS.

1. In the absence of treaty or other express exclusion, the different Indian reservations become a part of the territory where situate, and subject to territorial legislative jurisdiction, subject, however, to the power of the general government to make regulations respecting the Indians, etc.

2. A railroad built across an Indian reservation in the territory is subject to taxation by the territory, where there is no treaty stipulation or express exclusion against the jurisdiction of the territory.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from district court, Maricopa county.

Clark Churchill, Atty. Gen., and Frank Cox, for appellant. H. N. Alexander, for the Territory.

GOODING, C. J. The territory of Arizona, appellee, recovered judgment against the Phoenix & Maricopa Railroad Company, appellant, in the court below for taxes on that part of the Phoenix & Maricopa Railroad lying in the boundaries of the Gila River Indian Reservation, in this territory. It is claimed by appellant that the territory has no jurisdiction within the said reservation, or legislative control over, and consequently no power to tax, property situate therein. If the reservation is to be considered as exclusively under the jurisdiction of the United States, the same as places purchased by the United States within the boundaries of states, and with the consent of said states, and for the purpose of forts, arsenals, magazines, dock-yards, etc., as seems to be assumed by appellant, then the contention of appellant would be supported by a great weight of authority, and would prevail in this case, provided the proposition applied to a railroad track part of which is situate within and part without the boundaries of the reservation. In other words, we conceive it to be the law that property situate wholly within boundaries exclusively within the jurisdiction of the legislative power of the United States cannot be taxed by the territory within which it may be situate. But is the reservation within or outside of the legislative control of this territory? The organic act provides as follows: "Sec. 1839. Nothing in this title shall be construed to impair the rights of personal property [should be 'persons or property'] pertaining to the Indians in any territory, so long as such rights remain unextinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of such tribe, embraced within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any state or territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and constitute no part of any territory now or hereafter organized until such tribe signifies its assent to the president to be embraced within a particular territory. Sec. 1840. Nor shall anything in this title be construed to affect the authority of the United States to make any regulations respecting the Indians of any territory, their lands, property, or rights, by treaty, law, or otherwise, in the same manner as might be made if no temporary government existed, or as hereafter established in any such territory." Section 1839 provides, in short, that where there is a treaty with an Indian tribe, providing that they shall not be included in any territory without their assent expressed to the president, they shall not be included until their assent is given. If there exists a treaty between the government of the United States and the Pima and Maricopa Indians containing such a provision, then their reservation is outside of the political jurisdiction of this territory. If there is no such treaty, and there is no act of congress excepting their reservation out of the operation of the organic act, then it would seem that the reservation becomes a part of the territory for legislative and judicial control. Section 1840 provides that nothing contained in this title shall be construed to affect the authority of the United States to make any regulations respecting the Indians of the territory, their lands, property, or rights, etc. Thus it will be seen that the authority of the United States over the Indians is not to be interfered with by the territory. Of course, so long as it is a territory, the authority of congress is paramount in and outside of the reservation. But this does not prevent the exercise of the territorial legislative functions in or outside of the reservation. In the absence of treaty or other express exclusion, the reservation becomes a part of the territory, subject, however, to the power of the general government to make regulations respecting the Indians, etc.

There is nothing to show, nor does the court know judicially or otherwise, that there ever was any treaty between the government and the Indian tribe or tribes on the reservation. The case in 102 U. S. 145, (Langford v. Monteth), is directly in point. We make the following quotations: "Langford, the plaintiff in error, who was plaintiff below, brought an action before a justice of the peace in the nature of forcible detainer, to recover of Charles E. Monteth the possession of buildings and grounds occupied by the latter under the agent for the United States for the Nez Perce Indians." Passing the first ground of defense, the opinion says: "Another allegation of the defense is that the property is situated within an Indian reservation, to which the Indian title has never been extinguished, and therefore forms no part of the territory of Idaho. Of course, if this latter allegation be true, neither the justice of the peace before whom the case was tried first, nor the district court to which it afterwards came by appeal, had any jurisdiction over it. The opinion of this court in Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476, is relied on by the defendant. The principle announced in that case is sound, namely, that when, by an act of congress organizing a territorial government, lands are excepted out of the jurisdiction of the government thus brought into existence, they constitute no part of such territory, although they are included within its boundaries. Congress, from which the power to exercise the new jurisdiction emanates, has undoubted authority to exclude therefrom any part of the soil of the United States, or of that whereto the Indians have the possessory title, when by our solemn treaties with them a stipulation to that effect had been made." The opinion further says: "This court in Harkness v. Hyde, supra, relying upon an imperfect extract found in the brief of counsel, inadvertently inferred that the treaty with the Shoshones, like that with the Shawnees, contains a clause excluding the lands of the tribe from territorial or state jurisdiction. In this case it seems we were laboring under a mistake. Where no such clause, or language equivalent to it, is found in a treaty with Indians within the exterior limits of Idaho, the lands held by them are a part of the territory, and subject to its jurisdiction, so that process may run there, however the Indians themselves may be exempt from that jurisdiction. As there is no such treaty with the Nez Perce tribe, on whose reservation the premises in dispute are situated, and as this is a suit between white men, citizens of the United States, the justice of the peace had jurisdiction of the parties, if the subject-matter was one of which he could take cognizance." The title to real estate having been raised, it was held that he had not jurisdiction of the subject-matter. This is a decision of the supreme court of the United States to the effect that, in the absence of treaty stipulation, a justice of the peace would have jurisdiction over persons and property on a reservation. The Idaho act was substantially, and almost literally, the same as the organic act of this territory in that particular. In U. S. v. McBratney, 104 U. S. 621, it is held that the circuit court of the United States for the district of Colorado had no jurisdiction to try a white man for the murder of a white man on the Ute reservation, in the state of Colorado. There a treaty existed between the United States and the Ute Indians, and among other provisions there was the provision "that a certain district of country therein described should be set apart for the absolute and undisputed use and occupation of the Indians therein named, * * * and that no persons except those therein authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employes of the government as might be authorized to enter upon Indian reservations in discharge of the duties enjoined by law, should ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory so described, except as otherwise provided in the treaty." The act admitting Colorado into the Union as a state provided for its admission upon an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever. It was held that this language, notwithstanding the treaty, subjecting the reservation to the state jurisdiction, transferred the jurisdiction to try the defendant for murder within the reservation to the state court, the reservation not being expressly excepted out of the state jurisdiction. In U. S. v. Ward, 1 Woolw. 1, the circuit court held that the state courts had no jurisdiction in the lands of the Shawnees. But there was a treaty that their lands should never be brought within the bounds of any state or territory, or subject to the laws thereof.

The appellant is evidently misled by failing to note the distinction between reservations with treaties providing against their being included in territorial and state jurisdictions and reservations having no such treaty stipulation. But, even if there had been such treaty stipulation, a subsequent act of congress in conflict with it would prevail over it. Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 621, says: "A treaty may supersede a prior act of congress, and an act of congress may supersede a prior treaty." But appellant cites a number of cases holding the authority of the United States to be exclusive in certain places and districts, and denying the authority of state or territory therein. These cases are, however, a class unto themselves, and come under a provision of the constitution of the United States. The provision is as follows: "Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular states and the acceptance of congress, become the seat of the government of the United States, and exercise like authority over all such places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings." The origin and effect of this provision is somewhat curious and interesting. The origin and scope of the provision is to be found in Railroad Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995. It is there said: "The necessity of the supreme legislative authority over the seat of government was forcibly impressed upon the members of the constitutional convention by occurrences which took place near the close of the revolutionary war. At that time, while congress was in session in Philadelphia, it was surrounded and insulted by a body of mutineers of the continental army." In giving an account of this proceeding, Mr. Rawle, in his treatise on the Constitution, says of the action of congress: "It applied to the executive authority of Pennsylvania for defense, but, under the ill-conceived constitution of the state at that time, the executive power was vested in a council consisting of thirteen members, and they possessed or exhibited so little energy and such apparent intimidation that the congress indignantly removed to New Jersey, whose inhabitants welcomed it with promises of defending it. It remained for some time at Princeton without being again insulted, till, for the sake of greater convenience, it adjourned to Annapolis. The general dissatisfaction with the proceedings of the executive authority of Pennsylvania, and the degrading spectacle of a fugitive congress, suggested the remedial provisions now under consideration."

The effect and scope of this constitutional provision is illustrated in a number of cases, extracts from several of which are set out in 114 U. S. 528, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997, which case is cited and relied upon by appellant. We will notice a few of these cases, and it will be readily seen that they are very different from the case under consideration. In Com. v. Clary, 8 Mass. 72, "the supreme court of Massachusetts held that the courts of the commonwealth could not take cognizance of offenses committed upon lands in the town of Springfield purchased with the consent of the commonwealth by the United States, for the purpose of erecting arsenals upon them. That was the case of a prosecution against the defendant for selling spirituous liquors on the lands without a license, contrary to a statute of the state, but the court held that the law had no operation within the lands mentioned. 'The territory,' it says, 'on which the offense charged is agreed to have been committed is the territory of the United States, over which the congress have the exclusive power of legislation.'" In Mitchell v. Tibbetts, 17 Pick. 298, it was held "that a vessel employed in transporting stone from Maine to the navy-yard in Charleston, Mass., a place purchased by the United States with the consent of the state, was not employed in transporting stone within the commonwealth, and therefore committed no offense in disregarding the statute making certain requirements of vessels thus employed." The court said: "To bring a vessel within the description of the statute, she must be employed in landing stone at, or taking stone from, some place in the commonwealth, and that the law of Massachusetts did not extend to and operate within the territory ceded; adopting the principle of its previous decision in 8 Mass." "In Sinks v. Rees, 19 Ohio St. 306, the question came before the supreme court of Ohio as to the effect of a proviso in an act of that state ceding to the United States its jurisdiction over land within her limits for the purposes of a national asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers, which was that nothing in the act should be considered to prevent the officers, employes, and inmates of the asylum who were qualified voters of the state from exercising the right of suffrage at all township, county, and state elections in the township in which the national asylum should be located; and it was held that upon the purchase of the territory by the United States, with the consent of the legislature of the state, the general government became invested with exclusive jurisdiction over it and its appurtenances, in all cases whatsoever, and that the inmates of said asylum resident within the territory, being within such exclusive jurisdiction, were not residents of the state so as to entitle them to vote, within the meaning of the constitution which conferred elective franchise upon residents alone."

But these cases are clearly distinguishable from this case. They come within the provision of the constitution conferring exclusive jurisdiction "over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings." The reason and purpose of the exclusive jurisdiction in such places does not exist on Indian reservations. Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, says: "If there has been no cession by the state of the place, although it has been constantly occupied and used, under purchase or otherwise, by the United States for a fort or arsenal, or other constitutional purpose, the state jurisdiction still remains complete and perfect;" and in support of his statement refers to People v. Godfrey, 17 Johns. 225. In that case the court says: "If the United States had the right of exclusive legislation over the fortress of Niagara, they would have also exclusive jurisdiction. But we are of opinion that the right of exclusive legislation within the territorial limits of any state can be acquired by the United States only in the mode pointed out in the constitution,—by purchase by consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be,—for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings. The essence of that provision is that the state shall freely cede the particular place to the United States for one of the specific and enumerated objects." " * * * Where, therefore, lands are acquired in any other way by the United States within the limits of the state than by purchase with her consent, they will hold the lands subject to this qualification: that if upon them forts, arsenals, or other public buildings are erected for the uses of the general government, such buildings, with their appurtenances, as instrumentalities for the execution of its powers, will be free from any such interference and jurisdiction of the state as would destroy or impair their effective use for the purposes designed." Appellant contends that the owner of the right of way is the Indians, says so in express terms, and says: "You can't tax it, and no lien can exist on such land." The right of way is distinct from the ownership of the soil. The government has granted the right of way, and the Indians have consented to it. That they have no title to the soil, but a mere occupancy, is well settled. In Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 574, it is decided that the title to the soil is in the sovereign, though the land may be in the occupancy of the Indian tribes; that the right of the Indians consists in the right of occupancy, and does not interfere with the transfer of the soil by the sovereign or its grantees. This conclusion is reached after a careful and exhaustive review of the whole subject. In a case where the grantee of the Indian title held by a perfect title, if the Indians could acquire and convey a good title to the soil. But it is argued that the land belongs to the Indians upon and over which the track and improvements exist, and cannot be sold for taxes. That the rights of the Indians, whatever they may be, cannot be sold for taxes, is quite clear. The proceeding is not to sell anything not belonging to appellant. The track of the railroad, and its right of way, is charged with the taxes assessed against it, and only the property upon which the charge exists is liable to sale, and the title to no other property would pass thereby. That the railroad track and right of way may be sold for taxes is, we think, too obvious to require argument or citation of authority. That part of it within the reservation may, in our opinion, be fairly considered as subject to taxation by reason of the grant of the government and the consent of the Indians, and as being a part of a great public highway for railroad purposes, independent of the question of general jurisdiction, above discussed and decided. The item of interest from May 6, 1889, to February 6, 1890, amounting to $106.20, being interest on taxes, is disallowed. There is no other error, and judgment will be entered for the proper amount.

STRICKLER v. CITY OF COLORADO SPRINGS.

WATER-RIGHTS — PRIOR APPROPRIATION — TRANSFER OF RIGHT — COMPENSATION — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. The fundamental principle of our system of water-rights is that priority in point of time gives superiority of right among appropriators for like beneficial purposes.

2. The rights of a prior appropriator from a stream cannot be impaired by subsequent appropriations of water from its tributaries.

8. A prior appropriator of water from a stream may change the point of diversion and the place of use without losing his priority, provided the rights of others are not injuriously affected by such change.

4. A priority to the use of water for irrigation is a property right, and may be sold and transferred separately from the land in connection with which the right ripened.

5. Rights acquired to the use of water for irrigation, prior to the adoption of our state constitution, cannot be taken by a city for the domestic use of its inhabitants, without compensation.

6. The provisions of the constitution operate prospectively only, unless a contrary intention clearly appears from the words employed.

Error to district court, El Paso county.

This is an agreed case submitted for decision without suit, under chapter 24 of the Code. The section permitting the submission reads as follows: "Parties to a question in difference, which might be the subject of a civil action, may, without action, agree upon a case containing the facts upon which the controversy depends, and present a submission of the same to any court which would have jurisdiction if an action had been brought; but it must appear by affidavit that the controversy is real, and the proceedings in good faith, to determine the rights of the parties. The court shall thereupon hear and determine the case, and render judgment thereon, as if an action were depending." Section 278, Code 1887. The present controversy has reference to an attempted increase by the city of Colorado Springs of its water supply, such increase becoming necessary on account of the growth of the city; the city being about to purchase from the owners of water-rights for agriculture such rights, to the end that the water may be diverted to the use of the city. The plaintiff, a citizen and tax-payer of the city, and an owner of a water-right for irrigation purposes upon Fountain creek, hereinafter mentioned, seeks to restrain the city authorities from its contemplated action. The agreed statement of facts is as follows: "(1) That the defendant is a municipal corporation, being a city of the second class of this state, and has and maintains a system of water-works for the purpose of furnishing, and through which it furnishes, its inhabitants with water. (2) That the plaintiff is a citizen and tax-payer of the city of Colorado Springs, and an owner of a water-right for irrigation purposes, upon the Fountain creek, hereinafter mentioned, that is prior in right to any appropriation of water made by the defendant, and which is impaired by the defendant's appropriations of water. (3) That heretofore, in the year 1878, defendant constructed a pipeline and reservoir, and supplied and still supplies them with water, from Ruxton creek, above the town of Manitou; and that in the year 1889, to supply the increased wants of its inhabitants, defendant greatly enlarged the capacity of said pipeline, reservoir, and water-works system, and to supply them now requires about * * * million gallons of water daily, and exceeding the flow of water in said Ruxton creek; that the waters of the Ruxton and the Fountain creeks flow together in the town of Manitou, and that the waters of said creeks at their junction are naturally of about equal volume; that said Ruxton creek is about five miles in length, and is fed and formed by a number of streams coming together above the place of intake of defendant's pipe-line, all of which is substantially shown by the map herewith filed. (4) That defendant has, for the purpose of supplying its said water-works, the first priority of water-rights upon said Ruxton creek, but that there are upon the Fountain creek, below the point where said Ruxton creek and Fountain creek flow together, a great number of water-rights for irrigation and ranch purposes, prior to defendant's right, upon said Ruxton creek, sufficient to take all the waters of Fountain creek, after receiving the waters of Ruxton creek. (5) That defendant takes, and will continue to take, for its said use, substantially all of the waters of Ruxton creek, so that no water of Ruxton creek will reach Fountain creek. (6) That, in addition to the said pipe-line, said defendant is the owner of a certain ditch or canal, known as the 'El Paso County Canal,' which takes water directly from the said Fountain creek, for the use of its inhabitants. (7) That defendant requires both the said pipe-line and the said ditch to furnish the necessary supply of water for the use of its inhabitants. (8) That the water taken from Ruxton creek aforesaid, through defendant's pipe-line, is continuously used by its inhabitants, through its hydrants, for culinary, drinking, general household purposes, sprinkling lawns and streets, in business houses, livery stables, etc., while the water taken through said ditch or canal is used by defendant to irrigate lawns, parks, trees upon its streets, small gardens, truck patches, etc., continuously from April to October of each year. (9) That the defendant's said ditch was by the district court of El Paso county, in the year 1882, in the adjudication of the priorities of water-rights of water district No. 10, adjudicated to be No. 32, and said original pipe-line was then in like manner adjudicated to be No. 1 on Ruxton creek, and that there are 31 appropriations of water upon said Fountain creek that are prior to the defendant's said ditch, which are of capacities sufficient, in times of scarcity, to take all of the waters of said creek for agricultural purposes; so that, in order that defendant have the use of water when it needs it, it must to a great extent interfere with said appropriations that are prior to its ditch and pipe-lines, and including the said water-rights of plaintiff. (10) That the defendant has continuously, including the months from April to October of each year, since the year 1871 to the present year, taken from the waters of said Fountain creek, through its said El Paso county canal, water to the capacity of said canal; and also has taken continuously, through its said original pipe-line, of the water of said Ruxton creek, continuously since the year 1878, waters to the full capacity of said original pipe-line, claiming it had a right so to do; and though the plaintiff and other prior appropriators of water of said Fountain creek have been to a greater or less degree, for and during each of said periods, injuriously affected thereby, they have failed to object thereto, and to assert any prior rights of appropriation he or they had to the water so taken by the defendant; yet said persons, including the plaintiff, now claim damages therefor of the defendant, and the full amount of their respective original appropriations, without diminution of the amounts so taken and appropriated by the defendant, which defendant will pay to them unless enjoined by this court. (11) That many of the persons holding priorities upon said Fountain creek over the defendant, and who are injuriously affected by defendant's said appropriation of water, do not take, and never have taken, through their respective canals or ditches, water to the amount decreed to them in and by the decree aforesaid, because either that their said ditches are not of sufficient capacity to carry such decreed appropriation, or that sufficient water has not been contained in the said creek to supply the amounts so decreed, or that such person has not had under cultivation sufficient land to receive such decreed amount of water; yet, nevertheless, such persons demand of the defendant damages upon the full decreed amount of their respective appropriations, and, unless restrained by this honorable court, the defendant will settle their damages upon such basis. (12) That the defendant has been negotiating for and is about to purchase some of the water-rights for agricultural irrigation purposes that are prior to the defendant's ditch and pipe-line, with the view of taking the water belonging to such prior water-rights, through its said ditch and pipe-line, for the use of its inhabitants. (13) That defendant is about to negotiate for such of said water-rights as are prior to its pipe-line and its ditch, under and pursuant to subdivision 73 of section 3312 of the General Statutes, upon the basis that such priorities as it so settles for, either by consent or condemnation, deprives such prior appropriator of all his right, title, claim, and priority in and to the waters of said Fountain creek, and by such settlement defendant will pay to such prior appropriators sums of money greatly in excess of what it would pay by settling with such prior appropriators upon the basis that by such settlement or condemnation the said rights remain intact, subject only to diminution to the extent of defendant's uses." Plaintiff prays that defendant be enjoined from purchasing water-rights from said Fountain creek, etc., and for general relief. The court below, upon a final hearing, denied the relief sought by the plaintiff, and entered judgment accordingly.

T. A. McMorris, for plaintiff in error.
Wm. Harrison, for defendant in error.

HAYT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The points upon which a decision is asked, as given upon the oral argument, may be stated as follows: (1) Are the rights of a junior appropriator of water from a tributary stream subject to the rights of a prior appropriator from the main stream below? (2) Can the priority of a farmer to the use of water for agricultural purposes be transferred by sale to a city for city purposes, so that it may succeed to the rights of the original appropriator? (3) To the extent the use made by the city is purely for domestic purposes, has it the right, without compensation, to take waters theretofore appropriated for agricultural purposes? That an affirmative answer must be given to the first of the above questions seems obvious. A negative answer would wipe out the doctrine of priorities upon which our elaborate system is based,—a system generally recognized as among the best yet devised, and upon which vast property rights have been built. The fundamental principle of this system is that priority in point of time gives superiority of right among appropriators for like beneficial purposes. To now say that an appropriator from the main stream is subject to subsequent appropriations from its tributaries would be the overthrow of the entire doctrine. All large streams are dependent upon tributaries for a supply of water. To cut off the water from such tributaries would be to destroy the capacity of the stream, to the injury of those below. It would result in ruinous and useless expenditures of money in a race between rival claimants in the extension of ditches towards the source of water supply, and reward success at the expense of the rights of prior appropriators. But counsel say: "The waters of the Ruxton lose their identity upon reaching the Fountain. For all purposes to the appropriator, below the point of confluence, Ruxton creek does not exist; it cannot be identified. That being so, how can it be said by the appropriator upon the Fountain creek that the appropriator upon Ruxton creek has taken his water?" It is shown by the stipulation that Ruxton creek is fed and formed by a number of streams coming together above the place of intake of defendant's pipe-line. Now, if plaintiff in error be correct, and the appropriator of water from a stream be held to have no claim upon the water of the tributaries of that stream, then defendant's water supply is liable to be cut off by settlers above at any time,—a conclusion so manifestly unjust that it must be discarded. It is not a question of identity, as counsel seem to suppose, but one of supply. It is of no consequence to the appropriator below whether the water supplied to him comes from Ruxton creek or from some other tributary to the Fountain; this is entirely immaterial, so long as his supply is adequate. When it is lessened by junior appropriators to his injury, he has cause to complain, no matter whether the diminution results from such appropriators taking the water direct from the Fountain, or from some of its tributaries, before it reaches the main stream.

2. Upon the next proposition plaintiff in error insists that a water-right cannot be transferred by sale separate from the land. The question raised is one of first impression in this court. Its importance is apparent. In Fuller v. Mining Co., 12 Colo. 12, 19 Pac. Rep. 836, a nearer approach was made to its consideration than in any other decided case. It was there held that one who has the right by appropriation to divert the waters of a stream may change the place of diversion, and also the place of use. This disposes of plaintiff's contention that the water is only appropriated for a particular tract of land, and that the appropriation will not hold for any other; for, although the decision is based upon diversion for mining purposes, no reason is perceived why the rule in reference to appropriations for agricultural uses should not be the same, the requirement in all cases being that the water diverted from the stream shall be applied to a beneficial use. After reviewing the authorities, the court said: "It seems to be well settled by these decisions that a prior appropriator of water from a stream may change the point of diversion and the place of use, without affecting his rights of priority, and all the cases reviewed, except the case of Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 27, make the right to make such change dependent upon the condition that the change shall not injuriously affect others. We think that the rule announced in Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 162, 'that, in the absence of injurious consequences to others, any change which the party chooses to make is legal and proper,' is the only rule under which the rights of the prior appropriator can be fully exercised, and his rights, and the rights of all other persons, fully protected. The right to change, so limited, includes the point of diversion, and place and character of use."

The rule, as thus stated, seems to be fair to all parties concerned. If A. is the owner of 160 acres of land, with a water-right for only 80 acres, it may be of great benefit to him to change the place of use as the soil upon a portion of the tract becomes exhausted or impoverished by the raising of crops. To deny the right to change the place of use under such circumstances would result in injury to the prior appropriator, with no corresponding benefit to others. The wisdom of the rule in Fuller v. Mining Co. is apparent when applied in such a case. And no reason is perceived why, if the place of use may be changed to a tract adjoining the one in connection with which the priority came into existence, it may not as well be changed to a piece of land at a greater distance. The principle permitting the first change to be made being established, the exercise of the right cannot be made to depend upon the locus of the use, provided the rights of others are not injuriously affected by the change. The authority for changing the place of use from one part of a quarter section of land to another place upon the same quarter section will permit the purchase of land elsewhere, and utilizing the water in its cultivation. Thus, if the owner of land near Ruxton creek, with a water-right therefor, may purchase land further away from the source of water supply, say at Colorado Springs, and utilize his appropriation for such land, in turn he may sell and convey this land with such water-rights as he may have therefor; and there is nothing to prevent the said city from purchasing both, and thereafter changing the place of use, the same as any other appropriator. But why force the city to buy the land if it only needs the water?

An examination of the case in 12 Colo. and 19 Pac. Rep. will show the conclusions there announced to be well supported upon principle and authority; and, it being thereby established that the place of use may be changed, it logically follows that the right to the use of the water for irrigation is a right not so inseparably connected with the land that it may not be separated therefrom. The right has been treated and held as a property right in numerous cases. In Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 162, it is said: "The court has never departed from the doctrine that running water, so long as it continues to flow in its natural course, is not and cannot be made the subject of private ownership. A right may be acquired to its use which will be regarded and protected as property, but it has been distinctly declared in such cases that the right carries with it no specific property in the water itself." Mr. Gould, in his work on Water-Rights, at section 234, says: "The right to water acquired by priority is the subject of property, and may be sold and conveyed." "The exclusive right to divert and use the water of a stream as well as the ditch or other structure through which the diversion is affected, may be transferred and conveyed like other property, or rights analogous to property." Pom. Rip. Rights, § 58.

The authorities seem to concur in the conclusion that the priority to the use of water is a property right. To limit its transfer, as contended by appellee, would in many instances destroy much of its value. It may happen that the soil for which the original appropriation was made has been washed away and lost to the owner, as the result of a freshet or otherwise. To say, under such circumstances, that he could not sell the water-right to be used upon other land would be to deprive him of all benefit from such right. We grant that the water itself is the property of the public. Its use, however, is subject to appropriation, and in this case it is conceded that the owner has the paramount right to such use. In our opinion this right may be transferred by sale so long as the rights of others, as in this case, are not injuriously affected thereby. If the priority to the use of water for agricultural purposes is a right of property, then the right to sell it is as essential and sacred as the right to possess and use. Blackstone says: "The third absolute right inherent in every Englishman is that of property, which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land." 1 Bl. Comm. p. 138. What difference can it make to others whether the owner of the priority in this case uses it upon his own land, or sells it to others to be used upon other lands? There is no claim of waste occurring between the present points of diversion and the place where the city is to take the water. Where a material waste results from the change, a new feature is introduced which need not be considered here. In chapter 5 of Angell on Water-Courses, a number of instances are cited where at common law water-rights were declared to be the subject of sale, and although with us such rights are acquired by appropriation rather than by grant or prescription, as at common law, this certainly cannot affect the right of alienation. In Hurd v. Curtis, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 94, several owners of mill privileges had apportioned the water among themselves by a written agreement. By the terms of this instrument one W., the owner of a fulling-mill, was entitled to a certain portion of the water for the use of his mill, "or for other machinery requiring equal power;" and it was held that the water-right was not inseparably connected with the building or site at which the water was then used, but that it might be used elsewhere. In De Witt v. Harvey, 4 Gray, 486, a deed had been given of land bordering on a canal supplying mills, "with the privilege of crossing to and from and around the same, and of erecting and using tenter-bars in some convenient place near the same, with the privilege also of drawing water from said canal at all times when it may be done without injury to the said mills, sufficient for the purpose of a fulling-mill and shearing-machine, but for no other purposes whatever." And it was held that the right to use the water for a fulling-mill and shearing-machine is not made appurtenant to the land grant, and also that such right was not extinguished by the dam being subsequently taken down by the owners of water-power at that spot, and rebuilt in such a manner as to overflow the land granted by the deed; the court being of opinion that the rights of water were not appurtenant to the particular parcel of land granted, but that the owner might use the water at any place, or in any manner, so long as the rights of others were not thereby impaired. When, therefore, the land became submerged, it was held that the right of the owner to use the water at any other mill, or upon any other parcel of land situated on the same dam, should be sustained. There is no controversy in the present case in reference to the mode and manner in which the right to the water may be conveyed, the contention extending further back; the claim being that the right cannot be conveyed at all, except with the land. The claim is not well founded. As we have seen, the right is the subject of property, and may be transferred accordingly; the sole limitation being that the rights of others shall not be injuriously affected by such transfer.

3. Has the city the right to take the water without compensation? This right is claimed under section 6, art. 16, of our constitution. The section relied upon and the preceding section read as follows: "Sec. 5. The water of every natural stream, not heretofore appropriated, within the state of Colorado, is hereby declared to be the property of the public, and the same is dedicated to the use of the people of the state, subject to appropriation, as hereinafter provided. Sec. 6. The right to divert the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial uses shall never be denied. Priority of appropriation shall give the better right, as between those using the water for the same purpose; but, when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient for the service of all those desiring the use of the same, those using the water for domestic purposes shall have the preference over those claiming for any other purpose, and those using the water for agricultural purposes shall have preference over those using the same for manufacturing purposes."

As the rights desired by the city accrued prior to the adoption of these constitutional provisions, a well-understood rule of construction, applicable alike to constitutions and statutes, exempts this case from the operation of the constitution in this respect. That instrument operates prospectively only, unless a contrary intention clearly appears from the words employed. Cooley, Const. Lim. 62, 63. No such intention appears in the provision quoted; in fact, the use of the words, "not heretofore appropriated," in section 5, and "unappropriated waters," in section 6, clearly indicates an intention to limit the application of these provisions to the future. If, as urged by plaintiff in error, these provisions were intended to confer upon cities, towns, or individuals the right to take without compensation, for domestic use, water appropriated for agricultural and other purposes before its adoption, they would fall under the ban of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, which provides that no person shall be "deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." As we have already seen, a priority to the use of water is a property right. The construction contended for would also bring the provisions quoted from the state constitution in conflict with several other provisions of that instrument, notably, section 3 of the bill of rights, in which it is declared "that all persons have certain rights, among which may be reckoned that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property;" and section 15, which provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation;" and section 25, which contains the same language as that just quoted from the national constitution. And for this reason it should be rejected, it being equally open to a construction that will at once harmonize and make effective the entire provisions of the instrument in relation to the subject. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the constitutional provisions relied upon were not intended to affect, and do not affect, prior vested rights, but that all owners of such rights are entitled to compensation therefor before the same can be taken or injuriously affected. This is in accordance with the express terms of the statute under which the city is attempting to acquire a supply of water, as the same was enacted at the first session of the legislature convened after the adoption of the constitution. "They shall have the right and privilege of taking water in sufficient quantity, for the purpose hereinbefore mentioned, from any stream, creek, gulch, or spring in the state: provided, that if the taking of water in such quantity shall materially interfere with or impair the vested rights of any person or persons or corporation, heretofore acquired, residing upon such creek, gulch, or stream, or doing any milling or manufacturing business thereon, they shall first obtain the consent of such person or persons or corporation, or acquire the right of domain, by condemnation, as prescribed by the constitution and laws upon the subject, and make full compensation or satisfaction for all the damages thereby occasioned to such person or persons or corporation." Section 73, Gen. St. 1883, p. 974. The statute is instructive, as a contemporaneous legislative interpretation of the constitution, aside from the argument to be based upon the fact of the city being purely a creature of statute, and can therefore only exercise the powers conferred in the manner provided by the legislative department. From anything that we have predicated upon the fact that the water-rights desired by the city antedate the adoption of our constitution, we are not to be understood as intimating that, if the contrary had been the fact, the rule requiring compensation to be made, when such rights are taken for a higher use, would be different. The determination of this question is not involved in this case. The right of a tax-payer to bring an action of this nature has not been raised or considered; for, accepting the agreement of counsel that he may do so, we are of the opinion, for the reasons given, that the facts relied upon do not constitute a cause of action. The judgment of the district court denying relief must therefore be affirmed.

HENRY V. TRAVELERS' INS. CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of Colorado. Feb. 13, 1891.)

APPEAL—DISMISSAL—INTERVENTION—REVIEW—FORECLOSURE OF TRUST-DEED.

1. An application to dismiss a proceeding in this court for non-compliance with the rules respecting briefs must be made and insisted on in apt time.
2. The denial of an application to intervene is a final judgment as to the petitioner, which may be reviewed in this court upon writ of error.
3. In determining whether an application to intervene should be allowed, the averments of the petition, so far as the same are well pleaded, must be taken as true.
4. The interest which entitles a person to intervene in a suit between other parties must be in the matter in litigation, and of such a direct and immediate character that the intervenor will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment.
5. Where bonds are secured by deed of trust, the trustee, if acting in good faith and as an impartial representative of all the bondholders, is the proper party to control foreclosure proceedings to secure payment of the bonds. Nevertheless a person holding certain of the bonds, and owning an interest in the property sought to be subjected to their payment, is entitled to intervene for the protection of his interests, when it is shown that the trustee is not acting in good faith, and that the litigation is being conducted upon a false and fraudulent basis, prejudicial to his rights.

Error to district court, Rio Grande county.

The pleadings in this cause are very voluminous, containing over 200 folios. A brief summary of them will suffice for an understanding of the opinion. The Travelers' Insurance Company, plaintiff, hereinafter called the "Insurance Company," commenced this action as the holder of certain bonds executed by the Citizens' Ditch & Land Company, hereinafter called the "Ditch Company." The bonds were secured by a deed of trust to Gustavus F. Davis, as trustee, upon the property of the ditch company. The ditch company and Davis were made parties defendant. The object of the action was to secure the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the mortgaged property, and for other relief; the plaintiff alleging that the ditch company was insolvent, and that its property was deteriorating and going to waste for lack of funds to keep it in repair, whereby the security for the bonds was greatly impaired. The defendant Davis appeared and filed a cross-complaint, in which he alleged that he had not been derelict in any of his duties as trustee; that he had not been called upon by any of the bondholders to institute proceedings in their behalf, and had not refused to act in their interest. He further alleged that the indebtedness secured by the trust-deed was due and unpaid. He prayed for a foreclosure of the trust-deed and for the sale of the property, and that he be allowed to control the suit in the same manner as if it had been brought by him originally as plaintiff. The insurance company and the ditch company each filed its answer to the cross-complaint of Davis, trustee, admitting all the allegations thereof to be true. Before final judgment or decree was rendered in the cause, Theodore C. Henry appeared and presented to the court his petition as intervenor. The petition sets forth circumstantially, and with great particularity, the alleged equities of said Henry in the subject-matter of the original suit. Among many other matters, the petition states, in substance, that the whole issue of the ditch company bonds sought to be foreclosed amounted to $200,000 par value; that the petitioner, Henry, is the owner of $10,000 thereof; that he is also the owner of a majority of the stock of the ditch company, and had pledged the same as security for advances made to him, or to the ditch company, or for other purposes; that said issue of $200,000 was made for the purpose of paying a former issue of bonds of the par value of $100,000, and certain other indebtedness against the ditch company, including certain mechanics' liens against its property; that certain of this indebtedness was due to the insurance company for advances made to the ditch company; and that the insurance company had agreed to receive and had received bonds of the $200,000 issue in full payment for such advances, and had agreed in consideration thereof to discharge the debts and liens aforesaid, and that upon the faith of this agreement said Henry had accepted 10 bonds of the new issue in exchange for a like number of the old; that said mechanics' liens were second liens under the first deed of trust, but became first and prior liens to the second deed of trust, unless paid and discharged, as agreed by the insurance company. The petition then charges that, notwithstanding the insurance company had been thus paid in full, and had agreed to have said mechanics' liens paid and discharged, nevertheless, in fraud of the rights of the ditch company and of Henry, and in violation of its agreement, it had not caused said mechanics' liens to be discharged, but had proceeded to sell the stock of the ditch company owned by said Henry, but pledged as collateral as aforesaid to the debts thus paid; that by this means the insurance company had obtained control of the ditch company, its officers and agents, and by fraud and collusion with them had procured false and fraudulent judgments to be rendered against the ditch company to the amount of about $90,000 on account of claims and obligations of the ditch company already paid by its acceptance of bonds of the $200,000 issue, as above stated; that the conduct of the insurance company in keeping and maintaining of record its said false and fraudulent liens and judgments against the ditch company is greatly prejudicial to the credit of the latter company, rendering it powerless to pay its debts or to carry on its business, and greatly injurious to the interests of said Henry. The petition further charges that said Gustavus F. Davis, trustee as aforesaid, is the vice-president of the insurance company, and is acting wholly under its direction and under the advice of its attorneys in conducting this litigation, and is not a fair and impartial person to act as trustee in the premises. Similar charges are also made against the receiver who had been appointed in the action on the application of the insurance company. It was further claimed in the petition that it would be inequitable, unjust, and damaging to the interests of said Henry and of the ditch company to permit a sale of the property to take place while judgments and liens are standing of record against the same which have been actually paid as aforesaid. The petitioner prayed that the matters aforesaid might be fully ascertained, and that an accounting might be had concerning the indebtedness of the ditch company before rendering a decree foreclosing the trust-deed, and directing a sale of the property of the ditch company to pay its debts. Upon consideration of the petition, in connection with the other pleadings in the action, the court rendered judgment denying Henry's right to intervene. Error is assigned upon this action of the court.

J. P. Brockway and Teller & Orahoad, for plaintiff in error. Chas. H. Toll, Wolcott & Valle, D. V. Burns, and W. R. Barbour, for defendants in error.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) We shall notice in limine some of the formal objections presented by counsel for defendants in error:

1. It is urged that we should dismiss the writ in this case for the reason that plaintiff in error has failed to file a printed brief, as required by the rules of this court. The brief filed is merely type-written; it is very imperfect and unsatisfactory; it has been of very little assistance to us in the investigation of the questions involved in the record. If a motion to dismiss for non-compliance with the rules in respect to briefs had been insisted upon in apt time, it might have prevailed. Briefs need not be lengthy, but they should conform substantially to the rules of the court, and should be full and clear upon the points relied on for reversal.

2. It is contended that the petition of intervention has not been properly made a part of the record. This objection is without foundation. The record shows that the cause came on to be heard on the complaint, cross-complaint, the separate answers of the several parties, and the petition of intervention of Theodore C. Henry. The record further shows that upon said hearing all objections and exceptions to the formality or regularity of the offer of said petition were expressly waived by all parties; that, upon the denial of said Henry's petition to intervene, exception was duly reserved by the petitioner to such ruling and judgment. The bill of exceptions containing the several matters aforesaid, including the petition of intervention, is signed and sealed by the presiding judge and the same is regularly certified under the seal of the court.

3. It is insisted that there is no final judgment in this case to which a writ of error will lie. This objection is not tenable. Upon the entry of the judgment or order denying Henry's application to intervene the cause was finally determined as to him; and, unless he be entitled to a writ of error from this court, he is precluded from any review of such judgment. Railroad Co. v. Jackson, 6 Colo. 340; Curtis v. Lathrop, 12 Colo. 169, 20 Pac. Rep. 250. The petition of intervention having been presented in due form and in apt time, the question for our consideration is, does the petition set forth a state of facts in relation to the parties and the subject-matter of the litigation entitling Henry to be made a party to the action as an intervenor? This question must be determined from a consideration of the matters set forth in the petition, taken in connection with the other pleadings and proceedings in the action. In determining this question, whether, upon application to file the petition, or upon motion to strike out the petition, or upon demurrer to the petition for insufficiency, the averments of the petition, so far as the same are well pleaded, must be taken as true, mere uncertainty or ambiguity in the averments of the petition should not be held sufficient to defeat the right of intervention without giving the usual opportunity to amend. The Code of Procedure of this state (section 22) provides: "Any person shall be entitled to intervene in an action who has an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of either of the parties to the action, or an interest against both." In Horn v. Water Co., 18 Cal. 69, a lucid construction is given to this section by Mr. Justice FIELD, as follows: "The interest which entitles a person to intervene in a suit between other parties must be in the matter in litigation, and of such a direct and immediate character that the intervenor will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment." The petition in this case states that Henry is the owner of 10 of the ditch company bonds, of the par value of $10,000, secured by the deed of trust sought to be foreclosed; that he is the owner of a majority of the stock of the ditch company; and that he is unable to appear and defend in behalf of the ditch company by reason of the fraudulent conduct of the insurance company in acquiring the actual control of his ditch stock, and thereby obtaining control of the ditch company, its officers and agents; that the insurance company, by fraud and collusion with the officers of the ditch company, controls its affairs, including the management of this cause, to which the petitioner seeks to be admitted as a party. Undoubtedly Davis, the trustee named in the deed of trust sought to be foreclosed, if acting in good faith, and as an impartial representative of all the bondholders, might properly be admitted as a party to the action commenced by the insurance company, and allowed to control the litigation for the purpose of foreclosing the deed of trust, selling the property, and making application of the proceeds to the payment of the bonds thereby secured. Jones, Ry. Sec. § 436; 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1385; Campbell v. Railroad Co., 1 Woods, 368. But the action was instituted for additional objects and purposes; besides, the good faith and impartiality of Davis as trustee are directly challenged by the sworn petition of intervention as presented. The complaint avers that the insurance company accepted and holds $190,000 of the bonds of the ditch company, par value, parcel of the $200,000 issue, not as owner, but as collateral to secure its former claims and liens against the ditch company. The petition of intervention, on the contrary, alleges that all such claims and liens had in fact been paid and discharged by the insurance company's acceptance of said bonds as its own property, and not as collateral. A sharp issue upon this material question was thus presented for adjudication by the petition of intervention. The ditch company, being a party to the action, might ordinarily be depended upon to defend against an attempt to obtain judgment against it, and against its property, to the amount of $90,000 in excess of all just demands, and on account of claims and liens which had already been paid and discharged. But the petition shows that the parties seeking to obtain such judgment had fraudulently obtained control of the ditch company, its officers, agents, and attorneys, so that it would neither make nor undertake to make such defense. Under such circumstances, it is plain that the petitioner, Henry, being the owner and holder of $10,000 of the bonds sought to be foreclosed, and also being the owner of a majority of the stock of the ditch company, and so an equitable owner of the larger part of the property which plaintiff was thus seeking to subject to false and fraudulent claims, liens, and judgments, had a direct and immediate interest in the matter in litigation, and that he must be directly affected by the legal operation of the judgment sought to be obtained in the action. Hence, under the Code, as well as upon principles of equity and justice, he was entitled to intervene. Story, Eq. Pl. § 72 et seq.; Railroad Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. 459; Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514. The averments of the petition, in reference to a former suit pending in the United States circuit court, are undoubtedly material and relevant to this action. It is shown that both Henry and the insurance company are parties to such former suit; that the suit concerns the same subject-matter as this litigation; that an interlocutory decree has already been rendered in the circuit court declaring the existence of the contract between the insurance company and the ditch company, as alleged in the petition; that an accounting concerning the bonds held or owned by the insurance company has been ordered; and that such accounting is now being carried on. 33 Fed. Rep. 132. But we cannot undertake to determine definitely the effect of the suit pending in the federal court; for, by the lapse of time, the status of the matters thus pending may have greatly changed, and the petition of intervention may require alteration or amendment in respect thereto, and perhaps in respect to other matters also. It is urged that Henry should not be allowed to delay the foreclosure of the trust-deed, and thus postpone the rights of other bondholders in order to enable him to litigate his controversies with the insurance company. This objection has little force, in view of the fact that the record shows that there are no other bondholders save Henry and the insurance company, and that they are the only real parties in interest, so far as a recovery of the bonded indebtedness of $200,000 is sought in the action. No other bondholders, therefore, can be delayed or inconvenienced by the litigation of the matters presented in the petition. Besides, as we have seen, the owners of the ditch stock, of which Henry held the greater share, are directly interested in having the property of the ditch company protected against the false and fraudulent liens, as alleged in the petition; and to secure such protection they must either litigate the same in the foreclosure suit, or await the determination thereof in the federal court. The district court should not have denied Henry's application to intervene, but should have ruled the other parties to the action to answer the petition as they should be advised, and should have allowed the parties to the record to try the matters thus put in issue. The judgment of the district court in denying such application is accordingly reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion. Reversed.

HAYT, J., having determined this application in the court below, did not sit at the hearing in this court.

JUDGMENT BY STIPULATION — EFFECT AFTER REVERSAL.

A stipulation in reference to the argument and decision of a case, entered into for convenience in this court only, will not, upon a reversal of the judgment, be extended to the retrial of the case below.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to district court, Rio Grande county.

J. P. Brockway and Teller & Orahoad, for plaintiff in error. Wolcott & Valle, C. H. Toll, D. V. Bevins, and W. R. Barbour, for defendants in error.

PER CURIAM. This cause was brought to this court for the purpose of reviewing the judgment of the court below in sustaining the demurrer to the petition of Theodore C. Henry as intervenor. By a certain instrument of writing signed by the attorneys of each of the parties hereto, and filed herein, it was stipulated "that no printed brief will be required to be filed by either of the parties hereto, but that, as the same questions are involved in this case as in the case of T. C. Henry, Appellant, v. The Travelers' Insurance Company and the Citizens' Ditch & Land Company, Appellees, this case may be heard and determined at the same time with the last-mentioned case, and that the decision of the court in the case of T. C. Henry v. The Travelers' Insurance Company and the Citizens' Ditch & Land Company et al. shall control this case, and that the same judgment may be entered in this case as in that last-mentioned case." The foregoing stipulation appears to have been entered into for convenience in this court only. In view of its provisions, however, we have not felt at liberty to consider the petition of intervention for the purpose of determining its sufficiency as to form or substance, either with or without amendment. Hence the opinion rendered in the case mentioned in the stipulation, wherein the Citizens' Ditch & Land Company is a party defendant, (ante, 318,) is not to be considered as controlling on the retrial of this action in the court below, except so far as the facts and circumstances of the two cases are substantially alike. This case may be considered and determined de novo upon its own merits as to the several matters of law and fact involved in the record. With this explanation, and in pursuance of said stipulation, the judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings. Reversed.

HAYT, J., having determined the application in the district court, did not participate in this decision.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—MOTIONS—EXEMPTIONS.

1. The general rule is that motions and exceptions cannot be preserved by transcribing them into the record proper; nor can they be considered by a court of review, unless duly authenticated by bill of exceptions.

2. Exemption statutes should be liberally construed. The wages of debtors are exempt, according to the terms and conditions of the statute, so long as they are capable of identification.

Error to Boulder county court.

Plaintiffs in error, Rutter & Johnson, recovered judgment against Shumway, the defendant in error, before a justice of the peace for the sum of $49.60 and costs. They then sought by process of garnishment to subject certain moneys deposited by Shumway in the Boulder National Bank to the payment of said judgment. Shumway claimed said moneys as exempt from garnishment under the act of March 28, 1886, (Sess. Laws, p. 262,) which reads as follows. "There shall be exempt from levy under execution or attachment or garnishment the wages and earnings of any debtor to an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars, earned during the thirty days next preceding such levy under execution or attachment or garnishment of the same: provided, such debtor shall, at the time of such levy under execution or attachment or garnishment, be the head of a family, or the wife of the head of a family, and such family is dependent, in whole or in part, upon such wages or earnings for support: provided, further, that no debts incurred prior to the approval of this act shall be affected thereby." Upon the trial in the county court Shumway's claim of exemption was sustained, and judgment was entered accordingly. To reverse said judgment this writ of error is prosecuted.

Chas. M. Campbell, for plaintiffs in error. R. H. Whiteley, Jr., for defendant in error.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The assignment of error based upon the refusal of the county court to dismiss the appeal from the justice's court will not be considered, for the reason that neither the motion nor any exception to the denial thereof is properly preserved in the record. Such motions and exceptions must be preserved, if at all, by a bill of exceptions duly authenticated. The practice of attempting to preserve mere motions or exceptions of this kind by transcribing them into the record proper is not warranted by the common law nor by any provision of our Code of Procedure. The assignment based upon the refusal of the county court to require the appellant, Shumway, to give additional security must fail for the same reason. Wike v. Campbell, 5 Colo. 127, and cases there cited. The bill of exceptions in this case makes no reference to any of the foregoing matters; neither does it purport to contain all the evidence produced at the trial in the county court. Hence we cannot consider the assignments of error challenging the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and judgment. Cook v. Hughes, 1 Colo. 51; Keith v. Wells, 14 Colo. 322, 23 Pac. Rep. 991. Upon the trial the county court found as matters of fact that the money garnished was earned as wages by the said Shumway; that he was the head of a family, and that such family was dependent in whole or in part upon such wages for support. The court further found that Shumway earned $3 per day during the 31 days of the month of March, 1888, aggregating $93; that he deposited $75 of this sum in the Boulder National Bank; and that the $48.41 garnished in this proceeding of the suit of Rutter & Johnson on April 16, 1888, was a balance of said $75 remaining in said bank; and, further, that said Shumway did not earn during the 30 days next preceding said levy an amount exceeding the sum of $100. As a conclusion of law from the foregoing the court found that the sum of $45 earned by said Shumway during the last 15 days of March, 1888, was not subject to garnishment or levy under execution on April 16, 1888; and so awarded and directed that $45 of the money so garnished be paid to Shumway, and that the residue—$3.41—be allowed to Rutter & Johnson.

Our review of this case will be limited to the consideration of the question whether the findings of the trial court support its judgment under the act exempting the wages and earnings of debtors from levy under execution, attachment, or garnishment. Sees. Laws 1885, p. 262. The constitution of this state provides that the general assembly shall enact liberal exemption laws. To effectuate the purpose of such provision it is obvious that enactments in pursuance thereof should receive from the judiciary a liberal as well as reasonable construction. Const. art. 18, § 1; Barnett v. Knight, 7 Colo. 865, 3 Pac. Rep. 747; Martin v. Bond, 14 Colo. 463, 24 Pac. Rep. 326. It is claimed by counsel for plaintiff in error that the proper construction of the act of 1885, above cited, is that the wages of the debtor are exempt from garnishment while they remain in the hands of the employer before payment, but not afterwards. The statute contains no such limitation or condition. The act declares: "There shall be exempt from levy under execution or attachment or garnishment the wages and earnings of any debtor to an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars, earned during the thirty days next preceding such levy," etc. It is not declared that such wages shall not be levied upon in the hands of the employer, or that they shall not be attached or garnished before payment. The language is unconditional and absolute that such wages "shall be exempt from levy under execution or attachment or garnishment;" and the courts cannot justly add words which would tend to defeat or restrict the manifest purpose of the statute. So long as the wages or earnings of the debtor are capable of identification he is entitled to have them exempt, according to the terms and provisions of the statute. It is argued with much ingenuity that the earnings of the laborer, when received by him, are no longer wages, but capital; that the exemption statute has performed its office when it has enabled the laborer to secure his wages from his employer without let or hindrance; and that thereafter the statute cannot be invoked in his favor. The statute cannot be thus reasoned away. Such a construction is narrow and illiberal. It would compel the laborer to leave his earnings in the hands of his employer, or else forego the protection of the statute altogether. It would not only deprive him of the privilege of depositing his earnings with any bank or other depository for safe-keeping, but would subject his wages to supplemental proceedings even in his own pocket; for, if earnings once received immediately lose their character as wages, then it is evident that the laborer could never retain his earnings for a single hour without exposing them to the very perils which the statute was designed to avert. Such a construction would practically frustrate the beneficent objects of the statute. To illustrate: A man receives $100 as his month's wages. He is immediately called upon by legal process to apply the same to an unsatisfied judgment. He answers: "The money is my last month's wages. I am the head of a family dependent upon my earnings for support." Think of the court gravely responding: "Yes, the money was your wages before you received it, and was exempt; but, having received it, it is no longer wages, but capital, and is not exempt. You were entitled to enjoy it before you received it, but not afterwards." What mockery. It is further claimed that the record in this case does not show that the sum which the court adjudged exempt, was the identical $45 which Shumway earned during the last 15 days of March, or within the period of 30 days next preceding the garnishment. The argument is that he had received $93 as his month's wages; that he had retained $18, deposited $75, checked out all except a balance of $48.41, and that it is not definitely ascertained that such balance included the identical $45 earned during the last 15 days of March, as aforesaid. This reasoning is altogether too subtle and refined to be applied to a statute requiring a liberal construction. It is quite probable that all the earnings of the month of March, except the $48.41 remaining in the bank, had been expended by Shumway or his family before April 16th. It certainly is quite as reasonable to presume that the money first earned was first expended as to suppose the contrary. Again, it is contended that when a general deposit of money is made in a bank the deposit becomes a part of the assets of the bank; that the relation of debtor and creditor is thereby established between the banker and depositor, and that such deposit can be retained as a set-off in favor of any claim which the bank may have against the depositor. None of these principles have any application to the present controversy. The bank claims nothing against the depositor; nor does the depositor seek to evade the equitable doctrine of set-off. The statute does not undertake to exempt the debtor's wages from any lawful set-off. The exemption is from execution, attachment, or garnishment, and that only for the wages of the preceding 30 days, and to the extent of only $100. It cannot be difficult to distinguish the fruits of labor from the accumulations of capital for that length of time; nor can any considerable earnings of the debtor elude the pursuit of the creditor while the $100 limit is retained. None of these considerations require a modification of the rule that the statute should be liberally construed. Giving the statute a liberal construction, and indulging the usual presumptions in favor of the findings of a court of record, we find no ground for disturbing the judgment of the county court. It is accordingly affirmed.

In re HOUSE RESOLUTIONS CONCERNING STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

OPINIONS UPON LEGISLATIVE QUESTIONS — STARR DECISIS.

The decisions of this court, deliberately announced in actual litigated cases, ought not to be overruled upon ex parte arguments in response to legislative questions.

The opinion of the court is in response to certain questions by the house of representatives, as follows: "Whereas, there have been introduced into both branches of the general assembly bills concerning amendments to the city charter of the city of Denver, providing that wherever the owners of the majority of lots abutting on a street or alley, or a section thereof, shall petition the city council for the paving or grading, or either or both, or wherever the board of public works shall order the same, and shall notify the city council, such paving or grading, either or both, shall be ordered by ordinance, two-thirds of the total expenses thereof shall be assessed and be a lien upon the property abutting upon the same, and one-third of such expense shall be borne by the city, and providing that the city council shall assess such two-thirds of the total cost as a special tax against the lots so improved, and in proportion as the respective frontage of each lot bears to the frontage of all the lots so improved; and whereas, doubts exist as to whether or not such bills, if enacted into laws, will be constitutional: Therefore, be it resolved by the house of representatives that the honorable supreme court of the state of Colorado be, and are hereby, respectfully requested to give its opinion of such bills containing such provisions, upon the constitutionality of such laws—First, as to whether such improvements can, under such laws, be legally ordered by the joint action of the board of public works and city council alone, and the assessments duly made for the cost thereof collected from the abutting property; second, as to whether such improvements can, under such laws, be legally ordered, upon such petition of such number of property owners, and the assessments duly made for the cost of such improvements be a lawful lien against the abutting property of those who did not petition therefor, in the district wherein such improvements were ordered made."

PER CURIAM. Upon the submission of the foregoing preamble and resolution from the honorable the house of representatives, able arguments were heard before the court in favor of the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. No one appeared in opposition thereto. It is well understood that during the last 10 years this court has rendered several decisions (commencing with Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 196, decided in 1881) denying the power of the general assembly, under the constitution, to provide for the grading and paving of public streets (except as to sidewalks) at the special expense of the abutting lot owners. That there are decisions by the courts of other states in opposition as well as in support of the doctrine thus announced must be admitted. But we are decidedly of the opinion that the decisions of this court, deliberately announced in actual litigated cases, ought not to be overruled upon ex parte arguments in response to legislative questions. We are impressed with the consideration that, while the city of Denver and its representatives have been zealous to procure a judicial opinion in support of legislation favorable to street improvements at the expense of abutting lot owners, the owners themselves have not been heard upon the subject. Evidently the owners feel that they may reasonably rely upon this court not to reverse its former decisions to their prejudice, without giving them opportunity to be heard in some appropriate action or proceeding in which their constitutional rights shall be thoroughly considered, upon pleas and arguments submitted in their behalf as well as in behalf of the public. Without intimating in any manner what conclusion might be reached in case the questions now presented should be brought before the court in the regular course of litigation, we do not deem it proper to express any further opinion at this time.

RATHVON et al. v. WHITE.

WITNESS—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEASED.

Civil Code Colo. 1887, § 58, which provides that, when cross-demands have existed between two persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counter-claim could have been set up, neither party shall be deprived of the benefit thereof by the death of the other, does not by implication repeal Gen. St. Colo. § 8641, which prohibits a party from testifying in his own behalf when the adverse party sues or defends as executor or administrator of any deceased person; and hence, in an action by an administrator, it is proper to reject the testimony of defendant as to a counter-claim set up by him against plaintiff's intestate.

Appeal from district court, Saguache county.

Jas. M. Denny, for appellants. C. D. Jones and O. P. Arthur, for appellee.

HELM, C. J. White, as administrator of the estate of James B. Smoot, deceased, brought the present action upon a promissory note given Smoot in his life-time by Rathvon & Co. Defendants pleaded set-offs aggregating upwards of $230. These set-offs were alleged to have been due and payable prior to Smoot's death. The cause reached the district court by appeal, and judgment was there rendered for plaintiff. At the trial the deposition of Samuel F.

Rathvon, who had been the leading member of the firm of Rathvon & Co., touching the alleged set-offs, was offered in evidence by defendants. Upon objection, this deposition was rejected, under the inhibition imposed by section 3641, Gen. St. The ruling of the court in this regard constitutes the only assignment of error discussed by counsel for appellant. It is therefore the only assignment that will be noticed in the present opinion. The statute referred to provides that "no party to any civil action, suit, or proceeding, or person directly interested in the event thereof, shall be allowed to testify therein by his own motion, or in his own behalf, * * * when any adverse party sues or defends as * * * the executor or administrator * * * of any deceased person, * * * unless when called as a witness by such adverse party so suing or defending; and also except in the following cases." Rathvon was a party to the suit, and there is no dispute but that he was interested in the result. The alleged counter-claims were due prior to the death of Smoot. It is not asserted that the testimony in question was admissible under any of the exceptions enumerated in the statute. It is clear, therefore, that it was within the legislative inhibition. Whitsett v. Kershaw, 4 Colo. 419; Gilham v. French, 6 Colo. 196; Levy v. Dwight, 12 Colo. 101, 20 Pac. Rep. 12.

But counsel for appellant contends that section 58, Civil Code 1887, so far modifies the foregoing statute as to render the testimony here offered competent. This section reads: "When cross-demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counter-claim could have been set up, neither shall be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment or death of the other, but the two demands shall be deemed compensated so far as they equal each other." We cannot accept the view of this provision insisted upon. It is evident that in the legislative mind at least doubt existed as to the status of ripened counter-claims in cases of assignment or death. To put this doubt at rest the statute in question was enacted. It simply provides that the happening of either of these events shall not affect the right to plead and rely upon the set-off in case of suit. It does not prescribe a rule of evidence, nor does it purport to affect in any way the mode of proof existing at the time of its adoption. The wisdom and justice of said section 3641 are not questioned. It has been in force for many years, and a similar provision exists in most, if not all, of the states. The construction of the new statute urged upon us obviously nullifies almost entirely the force of that provision, in so far as it relates to suits by executors or administrators of deceased persons. The change thus wrought would be sweeping, and it should be evidenced by unequivocal language. The repeal, if repeal there be, is by implication. But repeals of this kind are not favored; they are never recognized if there is serious doubt concerning the legislative intent. To proclaim such a repeal in the present case would be wholly unwarranted. Therefore, we must hold that the rejection of Rathvon's deposition was not error. There being no error in the ruling challenged, the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

ESTOPPEL IN PLEADING—HARMLESS ERROR—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

1. An estoppel in pais is new matter, and cannot be relied upon in evidence as a defense without being specially pleaded.

2. It is not error to refuse a correct instruction if the substance thereof is otherwise fairly incorporated in the charge as given.

3. The general rule is that a new trial will not be granted merely on the ground of harmless error; nor will a judgment ordinarily be reversed for an error in favor of the party seeking such reversal. These rules are applicable to mistakes of the jury as to matters of fact, as well as to errors of the court as to matters of law.

4. Where the verdict is erroneous simply on the ground that it is for a less sum against defendants than was warranted by the evidence, such error cannot be said to be one affecting their substantial rights; and, if the plaintiff does not complain, the judgment should not be reversed merely on the ground of such error.

5. A judgment is a judicial act. It is what is considered and ordered by the court, and not necessarily what is entered by the clerk. Where the judgment was right, but the entry incorrect, the entry may be amended nunc pro tunc.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

This was an action by Clements, plaintiff below, against Gaynor and Standley. Plaintiff alleged an express contract, by which, in consideration that he should obtain a purchaser for defendant's horses, he should receive 5 per centum of the gross sum realized from the sale; that he procured a purchaser, to whom the horses were sold for a large sum of money, but that defendants had refused to pay his commissions. The answer denied the material averments of the complaint, and also contained a special defense, alleging an express agreement by plaintiff to release defendants from the payment of commissions. The second trial resulted in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $1,000.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The assignments of error relate to the rulings of the court upon the admission and exclusion of evidence, to the giving and refusing of instructions, to the refusing of defendants' motion for a new trial, and the entering of judgment for plaintiff. No argument having been presented relating to the admission or exclusion of evidence or against the instructions "given," these matters will not be specially considered. It is claimed in argument that plaintiff, by reason of certain language used by him pending the negotiations, is estopped from maintaining his action for commissions against one of the defendants. Defendants' counsel prayed for an instruction to the jury, based upon such supposed conduct of the plaintiff, which was refused, and the refusal is assigned for error. No defense of estoppel was set forth in the answer. Under the present practice it is well settled that an estoppel in pais is new matter, and cannot be relied upon in evidence as a defense without being specially pleaded. See De Votie v. McGerr, 15 Colo. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 923, and authorities there cited. In so far as the refused instruction was pertinent to the defense as pleaded, which was, in effect, that plaintiff had expressly agreed at a certain stage of the negotiations that he should not ask, demand, or receive any commissions from either of the defendants, it was given in substance in another instruction. It is unnecessary to consider further the refused instructions in detail. The instructions as given state the law applicable to the controversy impartially, and with substantial accuracy. The instructions refused were either incorrect or unnecessary. It is not error to refuse a correct instruction if the substance thereof is otherwise fairly incorporated in the charge as given. Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 524; Gillett v. Corum, 7 Kan. 156.

It is contended in behalf of appellant that the verdict is inconsistent with the evidence in any light in which it can be properly viewed under the issues as framed. The argument is that the complaint alleges an express agreement to pay commissions at the rate of 5 per cent. of the gross sum for which the horses should be sold; that the evidence shows the horses were sold or exchanged for other property; and that the price at which the horses were rated in the exchange was $30,000; hence, that under the contract as alleged plaintiff would be entitled to recover, if at all, a commission of $1,500, but that the jury awarded him only $1,000; "manifestly, a compromise verdict," says appellants' counsel. In addition to the horses rated at $30,000, plaintiff claims that certain other horses were disposed of in the same trade to the same party, rated at $4,500, on which sum he was also entitled to commissions at the same rate, so that his recovery should have been $1,725. The record before us shows that the verdict on the first trial was in plaintiff's favor for the latter amount. For what reason such verdict was set aside does not appear. The evidence on the last trial was conflicting. Indulging the usual presumptions in favor of the verdict of the jury in such matters, they were justified in believing that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale; that he had performed the contract on his part; and that he had not released defendants from their obligation to pay commissions. A verdict for $1,500, or perhaps $1,725, in plaintiff's favor, could not properly be disturbed as being against the evidence by an appellate court. 3 Grab. & W. New Trials, 1218, 1219. The defendants did not assign the smallness of the last verdict as a ground of their motion for a new trial. On the contrary, one of the grounds alleged was that "the damages awarded by the jury were excessive." Perhaps the court below might have perceived reasons for granting a new trial if the inconsistency of the verdict with the evidence had been expressly pointed out; but in this court such an assignment of error cannot ordinarily be viewed with favor. The general rule is that a new trial will not be granted merely on the ground of harmless error; nor will a judgment ordinarily be reversed for an error in favor of the party seeking such reversal. These rules are applicable to mistakes of the jury as to matters of fact, as well as to errors of the court as to matters of law. Where, however, the circumstances or nature of the mistake is such as to indicate intentional misconduct on the part of the jury, a different element of error is involved. Code, § 217. But "misconduct of the jury" was not alleged as a ground of the motion for a new trial. It was not assigned for error; nor does it appear in the evidence. It may be said that the jury erred in judgment; but in a lengthy and complicated trial, with conflicting evidence, and with different theories urged upon their consideration by able and zealous counsel, such error may well be attributed to honest mistake, instead of intentional misconduct. Hill. New Trials, c. 3; Henry v. Smoot, 1 Miss. 18; Covy v. State, 4 Port. (Ala.) 186; Fuller v. Ruby, 10 Gray, 288; State v. Pike, 20 N. H. 344. If the verdict be erroneous simply on the ground that it is for a less sum against defendants than was warranted by the evidence, such error cannot be said to be one affecting their substantial rights; hence the judgment should not be reversed merely on the ground of such error. Code, § 78. The plaintiff below was the only party prejudiced by the insufficiency of the damages awarded, and he is not complaining on this appeal. There having been two trials of the case, the plaintiff being willing to accept the result of the second trial rather than litigate further, and the trial court having sustained the second verdict, we do not feel at liberty to disturb it.

In disposing of this appeal we find it necessary to notice a matter not assigned for error, nor brought to our attention by counsel for either party. The transcript filed in this court shows a verdict rendered on the second trial, as above stated, for the sum of $1,000 in favor of plaintiff, and that thereafter, upon overruling the motion for a new trial at the same term, and on May 22, 1888, it was ordered by the court that "judgment be entered upon the verdict herein, and let the same be recorded in the judgment book." On the last-named date judgment appears to have been entered in favor of plaintiff against defendants for the sum of $1,725, with costs, etc. It will be observed that the judgment as entered was for the amount of the first verdict, instead of the second. The appeal-bond, however, recites the judgment as for $1,000 and costs. From such data remaining of record it is clear that the judgment actually rendered by the court was for the sum of $1,000 and costs, and that the entry of the judgment was a clerical mistake or misprision of the clerk amendable at common law, as well as under the statute of jeofails. A judgment is an official act. It is what is considered and ordered by the court, and not necessarily what is entered by the clerk. Freem. Judgm. §§ 38, 40; Moreland v. Ruffin,

1 Minor, (Ala.) 18. In view of the foregoing, it is manifest that the incorrect entry of the judgment was not in consequence of any error committed by the court, but was the result of carelessness by the clerk in recording the judgment of the court, and that such entry should be amended nunc pro tunc. Freem. Judgm. § 61 et seq. This cause is accordingly remanded to the district court of Arapahoe county, with directions to vacate the record entry of the judgment herein, and to re-enter the same in favor of plaintiff against defendants for the sum of $1,000 and costs as of May 22, 1888, when the judgment was in fact actually rendered for that sum. In view of all the circumstances, neither party shall recover costs incurred by this appeal. Judgment entry modified.

APPEAL—TIME FOR DOCKETING CAUSE.

Laws Colo. 1887, p. 325, providing that a party appealing shall, within 30 days from the approval of his appeal-bond, pay to the clerk of the court to which he takes an appeal fees necessary to have the cause docketed, and that, in case of failure to do so, the cause shall be dismissed on application of appellee, is peremptory, and the cause should be dismissed on failure to comply with the act, though, at the time of the motion to dismiss, the fees may have been paid and the cause docketed.

Error to Arapahoe county court.

F. A. Williams, for plaintiff in error.
W. J. Edwards, for defendant in error.

HELM, C. J. This cause was originally brought before a justice of the peace. Judgment being there rendered for defendant, plaintiff perfected an appeal to the county court. The appeal-bond was approved and filed by the justice on January 27, 1888. The record was, however, not lodged in the county court until February 20th following. Defendant by his counsel entered a special appearance in the county court, and moved to dismiss the appeal for a failure to pay the necessary fee, and have the cause docketed within the time required by statute. Sess. Laws 1887, p. 325. This provision reads, inter alia: "And provided, further, that the party appealing shall, within twenty days from the date of the approval of his appeal-bond, pay to the clerk of the court to which he takes an appeal all fees necessary to have the cause docketed and placed on the calendar of said court. In case said party appealing fails to pay said fees within said time, then the said cause [appeal] shall be dismissed, on application of the appellee." The record of the county court recites that said motion was denied, "on the ground that this cause was docketed at the time said motion was made." There is nothing to show that defendant, who was appellee in the county court, had, prior to interposing the motion, made any appearance, taken any action, or submitted to any ruling in the cause. There is therefore apparent in the record before us no other ground for denying the motion save that above stated.

The right to have the appeal dismissed upon the failure to comply with the provision in relation to fees is expressly given by statute. The statute is, so far as language can make it, peremptory, and no discretion appears to be reserved to the court. We cannot agree with the trial judge that the fact that appellant had paid the fee and docketed the cause before appellee interposed his motion is alone decisive against dismissal; to so hold would, in large measure, be to disregard or abrogate the express statutory command. See Hunt v. Arkell, 13 Colo. 548, 22 Pac. Rep. 826; Law v. Nelson, 14 Colo. 409, 24 Pac. Rep. 2,—construing an analogous provision. Had appellee voluntarily entered a full appearance after the cause was docketed, and taken or submitted to some order of court looking to a trial de novo, before interposing his motion, we might treat his action as a waiver of the right to have the appeal dismissed. Such is the view of the court upon another statute, substantially similar in this respect to the one before us. Robertson v. O'Reilly, 14 Colo. 441, 24 Pac. Rep. 560; Coby v. Halthusen, 16 Colo. —, ante, 148. As above shown, however, no such state of facts is now presented. The statute was doubtless framed to prevent delay in retrying cases on appeal from justices of the peace. The time fixed within which the fee is to be paid and the appeal is to be docketed is not unreasonable, and the general purpose of the provision is wise. It may produce hardship in individual cases, and perhaps the interests of justice would be better subserved by a less rigid rule in the premises. But this is a matter for legislative action. The statutory rule is not invalid, and the courts cannot mitigate its alleged severity. It will be observed that the amendment of 1887, made since Town Co. v. Ives, 10 Colo. 81, 14 Pac. Rep. 120; Schofield v. Felt, 10 Colo. 146, 14 Pac. Rep. 128; and Railroad Co. v. Rader, 11 Colo. 538, 19 Pac. Rep. 476,—were decided, materially changes the scope and effect of the statute under consideration. In view of the foregoing, the remaining assignments of error, and the discussion of counsel pertaining thereto, need not be considered. The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the appeal. Reversed.

ROBERT E. LEE SILVER MIN. CO. V. OMAHA & GRANT SMELTING & REFINING CO.

MINING COMPANY—MANAGER—CONTRACTS.

1. Where the by-laws of a mining corporation declare it the duty of the general manager to "take charge of the business of selling the ores mined," he has authority to enter into a contract with a smelting company for the sale to it of all the ores to be mined within a given period.

2. Where the smelting company, in writing, "offers for the product of the mines" of the mining company for a given period a named price, which offer is accepted by the mining company, and the writing is signed by the general manager of each, this constitutes a contract of sale for the time and at the price named, and is upon sufficient consideration.

ELLIOTT, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Lake county.

Appellant (defendant below) was a corporation engaged in mining and producing ores in the years 1883-84, in the county of Lake. Appellee was a corporation engaged in buying, selling, smelting, and reducing ores. Appellant was a large producer of ore, and had been prior to December 1, 1883. It had been for some time disposing of most, if not all, of its ore to the appellee at agreed prices for the silver contained in the ore, deducting therefrom a charge of $18.50 per ton for treatment. At the date mentioned one E. A. Guilbault was general manager of appellant's mines, and Henry Head was manager of the business of the appellee at Leadville. Appellee being desirous of obtaining control of all the ore produced by appellant, and it being desirous of reducing the price for the reduction and treatment of the ores, entered into negotiations, resulting on the part of appellee in the following offer in writing, which was accepted and signed by Guilbault (manager) for appellant: "Leadville, Col., December 1, 1883. Robert E. Lee Silver Mining Co., Leadville, Col.—Dear Sir: For a period of six months from date we offer for the product of the Robert E. Lee mine as follows: Up to 75 ounces silver per ton, will pay 92 per cent. of New York quotations; 76 to 150 ounces silver per ton, 98½ per cent. of New York quotations; 151 to 250 ounces silver per ton, 94 per cent. of New York quotations; 251 ounces up, silver per ton, 95 per cent. of New York quotations. Deducting seventeen dollars and fifty cents ($17.50) per ton for working charges. Price of silver based on New York quotations on day of settlement. Yours, truly, OMAHA AND GRANT S. & R. CO. By HENRY HEAD. R. E. LEE S. M. CO. E. A. GUILBAULT, Manager." After the signing of the paper of December 1, 1883, and until about the 15th of February, 1884, both parties proceeded under the terms or stipulations contained in the paper; appellant delivering all the ore produced to appellee, and it receiving it. At about the last date appellant leased its mines to one Fritz, who entered into possession, and after that time controlled and disposed of the ores produced from appellant's mines, and declined or refused to deliver them to appellee under the contract, and sold the ores to other parties. After the expiration of the six months from December 1st appellee brought this suit against appellant to recover damages for breach of the alleged agreement. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $8,262. No question in regard to the amount of damages awarded is raised. A stipulation signed by the counsel of the respective parties was filed in this court, containing the following: "Which amount assessed herein is hereby agreed to be correct, provided the supreme court shall be of opinion that no error in any other respect was committed by the court in the findings and rendition of judgment against the defendant."

L. S. Dixon, for appellant. C. C. Parsons and Patterson & Thomas, for appellee.

REED, C., (after stating the facts as above.) The counsel of appellant in his able argument relies upon two general propositions for the reversal of the judgment. They are stated by him as follows: "First. That the alleged contract sued upon, under the construction claimed for it by the plaintiff, was not within the scope of the powers possessed by the witness Guilbault, as general manager of the defendant company. Second. That the instrument sued upon did not constitute a contract between the plaintiff and defendant companies for the sale and delivery to the plaintiff of all or of any particular portion of the product of the mine of the defendant for the period of time specified in it. It was not an agreement for the sale and delivery of any portion of such product, but was merely an offer or memorandum fixing the price for such portions of the product as the defendant might see fit to deliver to the plaintiff during the period of time limited. To this latter extent, but no further, can it be said to have any of the elements of a contract for sale or delivery between the parties." In discussing the first proposition it becomes necessary to examine that portion of the by-laws of the defendant corporation providing for the appointment and defining the duties and powers of a general manager of its mines. It is as follows: "Art. 8. There shall be a general manager of the company's mines to be employed by the president or board of directors, whose duties shall be to take charge of the business of selling of ores mined, and to look after the development of the mining property, and to attend to all of the details incident to the business of the company at its mines, to keep an accurate account of the receipts and disbursements of the company at the mines, and to furnish monthly statements of the same to the secretary,"—which was put in evidence upon the trial. Other portions of the by-laws pertaining to the officers of the corporation, providing for their election or appointment and defining their duties and powers, were put in evidence, but are not necessarily involved or necessary to be considered in the determination of the question. When unrestricted by the by-laws, or his duties undefined by them, a general manager of a corporation has been defined to be "the person who really has the most general control over the affairs of a corporation, and who has knowledge of all its business and property, and who can act in emergencies on his own responsibility; who may be considered the principal officer." And, Law Dict. And such is the judicial definition given in Manufacturing Co. v. Lawson, 57 Wis. 404, 15 N. W. Rep. 398, where it is also said: "The very term implies a general supervision of the affairs of a corporation in all departments." To the same point, Spangler v. Butterfield, 6 Colo. 356. In the absence of restrictions or controlling usages and customs in the particular class of corporations in which he is employed, he must be considered the principal officer, to whom is delegated the entire control and management of the corporate property, as far as operating the same is concerned. Such must of necessity be the construction of his powers when the president is a non-resident, and when the president is present his duties are well defined by law, and do not necessarily extend to the practical management of the property; while directors commonly act at intervals, when called together as a body. All the other officers of a mining corporation, except the general manager, may be, and frequently are, ignorant of the business of mining, hence the wisdom and necessity of delegating to some experienced and skilled person entire control of the property. Upon his ability and integrity, to a great extent, depends the failure or success of the enterprise. He is, as far as the administration of affairs is concerned, the chief officer, and frequently the only responsible officer, at or in the vicinity of the property, capable of binding the corporation by his contracts. In the absence of defined powers, the powers incident to the office and employment would embrace that of employing the necessary labor, opening, developing, and protecting the mine, the purchasing of necessary machinery, tools, and supplies, and mining and selling the ore, with power to bind the corporation for bills necessarily contracted in the prosecution of the work. It also devolves upon him to provide either from the products of the mine, from the funds of the corporation, or some other source, money to discharge the obligations incurred in the prosecution of such work. These would be his duties and powers, and within the scope of his employment, and incident to the office, if his duties and powers were left undefined by the corporation. Other parties in dealing with the corporation have a right to assume, and act upon the presumption, that all the powers pertaining to the office generally are possessed by the individual in question, unless notified of restrictions and limitations. The by-laws of a corporation are not necessarily public and known. They are for the government of the corporation. The learned counsel for appellant put in evidence some portion of the by-laws, and contends in argument that the public, in dealing with the manager, was bound by the authority conferred by the corporation, whether made public or not. The by-law of the corporation, in speaking of the manager, says: "Whose duties shall be to take charge of the business of selling of ores mined, and to look after the development of the mining property, and to attend to all of the details incident to the business of the company at its mines," etc. This is of necessity quite general, does not and could not contain in detail and enumerate all the powers and duties incident to the office, but the latter clause is sufficiently broad and definite to invest him with all the powers incident to the position, while it is fairly inferable from the language used—"at its mines"—that it was contemplated and understood that the other officers were not to be at the mines, and that to him were delegated all the powers and duties necessary for the conduct of the business at that locality. These conclusions are intended to apply only to the managers of mining corporations where, as in this state, the usages, successful prosecution of mining enterprises, and the protection of parties dealing with such mining corporations, require that the powers and duties of the general manager be defined.

The learned counsel for appellant contends, in a very able and ingenious argument, that the language, "whose duty it shall be to take charge of selling ores mined," in the by-law, can only be construed to authorize the manager to sell ores after they are severed and have become chattel, and are on hand as ores, and cannot extend to the sale of ores to be produced for future delivery. His language is, "The question presented under this by-law is whether authority to take charge of selling ores mined gave to the general manager any power to sell or dispose of ores unmined. That it admits of none but a negative answer seems obvious." This construction of the power and the word "mined" we think too narrow and restricted. Nor do we think the contention that the assumption of the power by the manager for the disposition of ore not yet severed from the realty was an exercise of the power to incumber or dispose of the realty of the corporation, or in any way affect it, is tenable. The contract was for the disposition of all the ore produced for a limited time after it became chattel in character,—after it became a product of the realty by being severed. It was no more a contract affecting the realty than would have been the sale for future delivery of a crop of growing grain before maturity. It disposed of no real property of the corporation, nor in any way charged or incumbered the realty, nor was there a contract for any specific quantity that could in any way control or influence the management of the mine. It was only a contract on the part of the appellant to sell, and on the part of appellee to purchase, at fixed prices, all the ore mined, taken out, etc., for six months, after the ore had been mined in the ordinary course, and made personal property. The fact that ore before being mined and separated is a part of the realty in no way affects the character of the ore as personalty after the separation. The mining, breaking, and separating the ore from the mass at once changes its legal character, and it has no more the character of realty than wheat after it is harvested and threshed. Nor has the uncertainty of the tenure of office of the manager, and the fact that he might be at any time removed, any influence in determining the legality of the contract. All officers of a corporation hold office for a limited time, fixed in some instances; in others determinable at the will of the corporation; yet, while filling the office, they can make contracts legally binding upon the corporation for a reasonable time. It appears from the evidence of the general manager that, prior to the agreement in question, the parties had extensive dealings. He said: "The Lee mine was shipping most of their ore to the plaintiff company. I presume it was shipped there for four years and more; to my knowledge, they shipped there continually from the time I came up to the 15th of February, 1884. I came to Leadville in 1883." And the reason given is the following: "We were treated better with the Omaha & Grant than we were by anybody else." With this knowledge and experience of the fairness of the dealings of the appellee, when it was found that a special contract could be made for all the output of ore for six months, with the further benefit to the company of $1 per ton in treatment, it was a duty imposed upon the manager by virtue of his office to make a contract. Another consideration that might greatly have influenced the company and its manager was the fact, as shown by the evidence, that appellant was frequently in want of money in advance of its production of ore, and that appellee was able and willing to assist it by advances. It appears that, at the time of making the contract, Pennock, the president, in person, and as a consideration for its acceptance, obtained an advance of $10,000, pledging the future product of the mine for its payment, and its manager subsequently, on two or more occasions, received advances of from $2,000 to $5,000 each. We conclude that the general manager of appellant had power and authority to bind the corporation by the contract as made. It is true that the declaration and statements of an officer of a corporation not under oath of his power and authority are not competent to establish them. But when, as in this instance, his general power and authority is conferred as in the law, his own testimony in regard to his powers and duties, as incidental to the general power conferred, must be regarded as conclusive, when called as a witness by the opposing party, and his testimony admitted without objection, and remaining uncontradicted by other officers of his company. He said: "I was manager of the Robert E. Lee, and am still manager, but I had the handling of the ore up to the 15th of February, 1884. I had the general management of the mine on December 1, 1883; also charge of handling and disposing of the ore. * * * I was general financial agent of the corporation. * * * I sold and disposed of all the ore that was mined and shipped from the mine. I had authority to choose the reduction works to which I would ship and to dispose of it in any way that my judgment dictated. I was placed in that position by the president of the corporation, Mr. Pennock." The following authorities support our view of the power of the manager to make a contract: Story, Ag. § 93; 1 Pars. Cont. 44; Ang. & A. Corp. §§ 297, 298; Bates v. Iron Co., 7 Metc. (Mass.) 224; Smith v. Peoria Co., 59 Ill. 412; Packet Co. v. Parker, Id. 23; Fay v. Noble, 12 Cush. 16; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 426, note; Union, etc., Min. Co. v. Rocky Mt. Nat. Bank, 1 Colo. 532, 2 Colo. 248; McKiernan v. Lenz, 56 Cal. 61.

There is another view of this case which should not pass unnoticed. The general manager, Guilbault, held that office at the time of the trial, and had also been elected secretary of the corporation, and was naturally prompted to shield his company from damages, as far as he could conscientiously do so. His reluctance to testify fully is apparent. But it is fairly inferable from his entire evidence that he was not alone responsible for the contract. It appears that Mr. Pennock, the president, had been in treaty with Mr. Eddy, of the Smelting Company, in Denver, in regard to the matter, and that the contract was the result of such negotiations. He was asked, on direct examination: "Question. About the 1st of December, 1883, did you receive any communication from the president in relation to making a contract for the treatment of ore or selling ore for six months? Answer. I had word from him by telegraph, I believe, where to ship the ore; have not got the telegram; I looked for it, but could not find it. It was a direction to ship the ore to the Omaha & Grant smelter. He stated Eddy & James. I made no agreement with the Omaha & Grant smelter with reference to the treatment of ore. The agreement was made by them. They submitted the proposition to me, and I signed it. * * * I had no other purpose in signing the name of the company than to formally accept their proposition in writing. I intended to ship them the ore, and I did not take much notice of it. I signed the proposition after I received the telegram from Mr. Pennock. I think it was in pursuance of the direction I received from Mr. Pennock that I signed this proposition, and thought I was carrying out his directions." He further said: "I made no contract to ship unproduced ores before that time. At the time I received the telegram from Mr. Pennock he was president of the Lee Company, and was on his way from Denver to Chicago. I have searched for that dispatch, and cannot find it. I don't remember, but I presume that dispatch was received about the time the proposition was presented. I have searched for it among my papers where I usually keep those things, and searched last night again diligently, and cannot find it. As near as I can remember, the telegram stated for me to ship the ore to Eddy & James, or words to that effect. Ship all ore to Eddy & James." Again, in speaking of the contract made: "That proposition was signed by me in the office of the Omaha & Grant. It was not prepared in my presence. I presume it had been previously prepared. I think I went there to make a settlement upon ores, and they got to talking of shipping the ore, and what word they had got from Pennock and Mr. Eddy. The talk that Mr. Eddy and Mr. Pennock had had, and from what I could learn, Mr. Eddy had written to Mr. Head to make the contract. I think Mr. Eddy had written to Mr. Head. I think that was what I learned there from the conversation with Mr. Head at the time. Mr. Head represented that he prepared this contract in pursuance of instructions from Mr. Eddy. I cannot make out anything else. He showed me the contract, and I signed it. I presume I did say something to him about receiving a dispatch from Pennock. I cannot say positively. * * * The Eddy & James Company is the same thing as the Omaha & Grant Smelting Company. Mr. Pennock's telegram, as I remember it, simply directed me to ship the ore to the Omaha & Grant smelter. I think that was all there was to it. I don't remember positively receiving any letter from him (Pennock) soon after that explaining his telegram."

Although the testimony of this witness is evasive, it is fairly inferable from it that the contract originated with Messrs. Pennock and Eddy in Denver, and the execution of it was pursuant to the instructions received by the respective managers. Mr. Head, the manager of appellee, testified: "About the 27th of November I received information from our Denver office in regard to this contract. In pursuance of that information, I submitted this proposition to the manager of the Lee Company. The conversation I had with Mr. Guilbault, as manager of the Lee Company, was to submit to him that proposition in writing, and I asked him at the time if he had been—if he had any word from Mr. Pennock, and, if so, if he was ready to sign the contract; to which he assented, and signed it, and commenced delivering the ore the next day. At the time this proposition was submitted the subject was first broached by Mr. Pennock, of the Lee Company. It was first broached to me by Mr. Eddy. I was not present when the interview took place between Pennock and Eddy, and I know nothing about that, except by the communication I received at the time." A similar contract to the one in question had been made and fulfilled by the same parties previously. Mr. Head testified: "We had a contract during the preceding eight or nine months. They were not bound to deliver the entire product of the mine to us until some time in October, when we made a contract with them to deliver up until the 1st of December. It is usual for the mine owners and the smelter owner to agree as to the price of smelting before the ore is delivered. That is not the invariable custom, but as a rule it is done. Very frequently shipments are made; that was the rule between our company and the Lee Company. There was an agreed price, made always beforehand; the prices varied from time to time on different contracts. The last they had before this contract was made was $18.50, 8 per cent off," etc.

By whom these contracts were made on the part of appellant does not appear, but it is fairly presumable that they were made by the manager. It also appears that the contract in question was not materially variant from those formerly made, except as to the length of time. The right to pledge or sell the ore three weeks in advance of the mining would also give the right to sell for six months, or any other reasonable time. In each instance they were for ores unbroken, and for future mining and delivery. This contract was unquestioned until the appellant leased its mines and rendered itself incapable of further compliance. It is true Guilbault says Pennock, the president, repudiated the contract, but this was not until after the suit had been commenced. Guilbault's further examination shows that it was only repudiated to him, its legality never having been denied to appellee to his knowledge, and the extent of the repudiation, even to him, seems to have been as follows: "Question. In that conversation with Mr. Pennock, I will ask you if Mr. Pennock, either directly or indirectly, attempted to repudiate that contract that you had made. Answer. Yes, sir; not in the presence of Mr. Head, not with Mr. Head, I don't think. I mean not in that conversation Mr. Pennock and I had at the smelter. He said he would go and see Mr. Eddy, and see if he could not cancel the suit; have it arranged so that he could cancel the suit. I do not know as Mr. Pennock denied the liability of the company in that conversation." That Guilbault's testimony remained uncontradicted by the other officers of his company, and that he retained his position as general manager, and was promoted to the secretaryship of the corporation, are circumstances to be considered in determining how the company regarded his acts in making the contract.

The second proposition relied upon, and ably supported by the elaborate argument of counsel, is "that the instrument sued upon did not constitute a contract between the plaintiff and defendant companies," etc.; and contends that the proposition was but a circular letter, amounting to no more than if it had said: "Our charges for reduction, and the prices we will pay for ores from the Robert E. Lee mine for the next six months, will be thus and so. We invite your attention to these, and solicit the continuation of your patronage." The record shows by the evidence, uncontradicted, of Guilbault and Head, that the contract was the result of negotiations entered into by Pennock and Eddy in Denver, and executed by the respective managers at Leadville. The proposition is directed or addressed to the Robert E. Lee Silver Mining Company, Leadville, Colo.; contains a specific offer to purchase the product of the Robert E. Lee mine for six months at certain stipulated prices per ton, paying 95 per cent. of New York prices for the silver as quoted on the day of settlement, deducting $17.50 per ton for working charges, signed by the company by its manager, Head. It is certainly definite and specific, and we cannot see why all that was necessary to constitute a valid contract was not contained in it when it was accepted by the mining company and appellee notified of its acceptance. True, as urged by the eminent counsel, the proposition did not say we will "buy" and "pay for," nor did the acceptance say we will "sell;" but, in transactions of this kind, words "we offer" must be deemed an equivalent to and synonymous with "we will buy;" and when the words "we offer for" are used, they must be also held to include a promise to pay. Neither in the acceptance is it necessary to say, "I sell;" an acceptance of the offer necessarily embraces the proposition. The only word in the least ambiguous is the word "product," and that does not appear to have been misunderstood or questioned by the parties. Up to the time appellant by its own act in leasing its property incapacitated itself from compliance with its terms, both parties regarded it as meaning what it imports,—the entire product, the output, all the ore mined and marketable. It is insisted that the contract was void for want of mutuality, and that as appellee was not obligated to mine and furnish any given amount of ore, or in fact any ore, the contract was void. True, there was no contract agreement to furnish any ore, but the business of appellant was mining and producing ore, and it was to be presumed that it would mine and furnish it if in the mine and accessible. It is urged by counsel that the contract was void—First, that the contract was void for want of mutuality; second, that it was void for want of consideration. We have already fully examined the first, and cannot adopt the contention. In regard to the second, it is shown by the contract and evidence that there was the actual consideration of $1 per ton reduction in the cost of treatment of all ore to be taken out for six months, and a cash advance of $10,000 on ores to be mined and delivered in the future; either of which was sufficient consideration, though probably neither was necessary. In Violett v. Patton, 5 Cranch, 150, it is said: "To constitute a consideration, it is not absolutely necessary that a benefit should accrue to the person making the promise. It is sufficient that something valuable flows from the person to whom it is made, and that the promise is the inducement to the transaction." See, also, Townsend v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. 182; Hadden v. Dimick, 31 How. Pr. 196; Greve v. Gauger, 36 Wis. 369; Barton v. McLean, 5 Hill, 256; Thorn v. Commissioners, 32 Beav. 490. An almost parallel case to the one under consideration, in many respects, was Riggins v. Railroad Co., 73 Mo. 593, growing out of the following memorandum: "Kansas City, Mo., November 6, 1872. Lead from Baxter to St. Louis at 22½ per 100. All lead shipped by Chapman & Riggins to be forwarded by M. R. F. S. & G. R. R. at above rates from January 1st, 1873, to January 1st, 1874, and above rates guaranteed for same time. H. J. HAYDEN, G. F. A., RIGGINS & CHAPMAN,"—the breach alleged being that the railroad company refused to transport large quantities of lead offered by plaintiff at the rates mentioned in the proposition. The same defenses were interposed that are here insisted upon in argument, and it was held that, although Riggins & Chapman did not agree to ship any definite quantity of lead, they did bind themselves to ship over the road of the company any lead they should ship to St. Louis, and that that was a sufficient consideration for the company's guaranty of rates. It was also urged in that, as in this case, the instrument was not a contract by reason of its uncertainty and indefiniteness; was only an insufficient memorandum; and the court properly held: "Where parties make and sign a memorandum of agreement with the understanding that a formal contract embracing the same stipulations is thereafter to be written out and executed, if they afterwards act upon the memorandum it will be treated as a valid and binding contract, though never written out in a formal manner." See, also, Paige v. Woolen Co., 27 Vt. 485; Kinder v. Brink, 82 Ill. 376; Thorn v. Commissioners, supra; Railroad Co. v. Philipson, 16 C. B. 2. In this case the testimony shows that it was not intended as a memorandum upon which a contract was to be drawn, but a contract entire and complete in itself, and was so understood and acted upon by the parties to it. Gulbault testified: "I signed the name of the corporation for which I was manager, the Robert E. Lee Mining Company, by myself as manager. I presume the signature to that was an acceptance of it. I so understood it. I had no other purpose in signing the name of the company than to formally accept the proposition in writing." He also testified: "Immediately after signing this contract, the price changed to $17.50; all shipments were settled on the basis named in the contract. * * * I think they did receive about $10,000 advances on this contract, but I am not positive of it. Our books do not show it. I think we shipped mineral to the Omaha & Grant smelter about two months and a half after the execution of this contract, and the new rate fixed by the contract of $17.50 per ton; we shipped up to February 15, 1884, and all settlements were made on the basis of the price made in the agreement." Mr. Head, manager of appellee, testified, in substance, to the same, and it remains undisputed; showing conclusively that the paper signed was intended to be and was regarded as a valid existing contract, and was acted upon as such by both parties, until the mines of appellant were leased and the disposition of ore passed out of its control. We do not think the court erred in its findings upon the law and facts, and advise that the judgment be affirmed.

RICHMOND and BISSELL, CC., concur.

CARRIERS—DEATH OF PASSENGER—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE OF DECEASED WITNESS.

1. A passenger on an excursion train, who seats himself on the rear end of an open car, on a railing not exceeding 2½ inches in thickness, with his feet elevated by being placed on the seat directly in front of him, and with no possible opportunity of protecting himself in case of a sudden jolt of the car, when he might have found a safe seat in an adjoining car or stood up in the car in question, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; and, in an action for his death, caused by falling from his seat while the train was in motion, it is error to submit the question of contributory negligence to the jury.

2. The testimony of a witness, since deceased, given at the coroner's inquest, is not admissible in favor of defendant on the trial for the alleged negligent killing, unless it appears that plaintiff had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness; and a recital in the offer of evidence that the respective counsel in this case were present at the inquest is not sufficient to prove that plaintiff had such opportunity, in the absence of a showing in whose behalf, in what capacity, or for what purpose the respective counsel were present.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Lake county.

J. E. Havens and Wolcott & Valle, for appellant. S. J. Hanna and Owen Prentiss, for appellee.

RICHMOND, C. This action was brought by appellee, plaintiff below, to recover damages for the death of John Crilly, her husband, while a passenger upon the train run and operated by the appellant as receiver of the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company. The defendant, among other things, pleaded circumstantially that the death of Crilly was caused by his own contributory negligence. The undisputed facts appear to be that the decedent, Crilly, was one of a large number of persons who attended a picnic at or near Mitchell's station on the Red Cliff branch of the Denver & Rio Grande Railway. That on the day of the accident they left Leadville in the morning, and rode safely to the grounds, and spent the day there in the usual manner. That three trains were run to and from the picnic grounds on that day. That Crilly and his friends, some of whom were witnesses in the case, waited until the last train was about to start for Leadville; that the train consisted of passenger coaches and open cars. That the car which Crilly and his friends entered to return to Leadville was an ordinary coal-car with a box about three feet deep, with seats across it on the inside, placed about eighteen inches from the top. That there were seats across each end of the car, the box of the car forming a back to these end seats. That upon entering the car Crilly seated himself upon the rear end of the box, and placed his feet upon the seat. The board or railing upon which he sat was about 2½ inches thick. In this manner Crilly rode some 12 or 15 miles over a mountainous country. That at a point between Malta and Leadville, and while running on an up grade, Crilly fell from the car, and was killed. The testimony of Patrick Cleary is that the car which Crilly and he entered to return to Leadville was crowded; that, failing to find a seat, Crilly sat on the back railing of the car, with his feet between two men who sat on the rear seat. Cleary himself was standing up. The testimony of James Jolly was to the effect that the train left the grounds about seven or eight in the evening, when it was still light. That he climbed on the car after it was full. That Crilly got on after him, and sat next to him; that they were in their seats about a quarter of an hour before the train started. That Crilly had drank a few beers during the day. Just after coming around the curve going up grade, there was a jar. That the jar was caused by the quickening of the speed. That he heard shouting, and learned that Crilly had fallen. He said he could stand on the seat, but could not stand on the floor except by crushing his way in so that it would be uncomfortable. "Question. Then you could have stood up there? Answer. By crushing in. Q. By a little inconvenience? A. Yes, sir. Q. Instead of sitting on the end of the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. If you could have done that, Mr. Crilly could have done that also, couldn't he? A. Yes, sir." Peter Jolly testifies that he stood up in the car, and that there was room for more to stand; that the train was running about 10 or 12 miles an hour. Joseph Burns testified that at the time of the accident the train was running smoothly. He did not notice any jolt or jar. The testimony also shows that the car next to the one in which deceased rode was not crowded.

The cause was tried upon the theory that the question of contributory negligence is necessarily one of fact for the jury. In this, we think, there was error. The testimony clearly shows that the deceased was in a place of known danger; that he put himself in this place of danger voluntarily, and, it may be said, recklessly. It is beyond all contradiction that the occupancy of the place of danger caused or contributed to his death. If he had been standing up or seated inside the box, or if he had, within the time after entering the car and ascertaining its crowded condition, and before the starting of the train, sought a position in the next or adjoining car, the lamentable accident would probably not have resulted. It is admitted by the testimony and by the strongest witnesses, and, it might be said, by the most willing witnesses, on the part of the plaintiff, that by a little inconvenience to himself he could have stood up in the car as others did, and thus avoided the accident. There was room for him if there were room for others, and he should have taken a place of safety. He was not an infant, nor non compos. The liability of the company was conditioned upon the exercise of reasonable and proper care and caution on his part. Without the latter the former could not arise. He took upon himself the right and privilege of riding on the rear end of a box-car, seating himself upon a board not exceeding in thickness 2½ inches, with his feet elevated by being placed upon the seat directly in front of him, and with no possible opportunity of protecting himself in case of a sudden jolt or jar of the car; and we cannot escape the conclusion that his death was due to his own folly and recklessness. He himself was the author of his own misfortune. This is shown with as near an approach of demonstration as anything short of mathematics will permit. It is a well-known principle of law that where a man negligently and without excuse places himself in a place of known danger, and thereby suffers an injury at the hands of another, either wholly or partially by means of his own act, he cannot recover damages for the injury sustained. The contributory negligence which prevents recovery for an injury, however, must be such as co-operates in causing the injury, and without which the injury would not have happened. The true test is: Did the plaintiff's negligence directly contribute to the production of the injury complained of? If it did, there can be no recovery; if it did not, it is not to be considered. "The question of negligence is ordinarily a question of fact, and ought to be submitted, under proper instructions, to the determination of a jury. Where the facts are disputed, where there is any reasonable doubt as to the inference to be drawn from them, or when the measure of duty is ordinary and reasonable care, and the degree varies according to the circumstances, the question cannot, in the nature of the case, be considered by the court; it must be submitted to the jury. But where the facts and inferences therefrom are undisputed, where the precise measure of duty is determinate,—the same under all circumstances,—where a rule of duty in a given exigency may be certified and accurately defined, the question is for the court, and not for the jury." Dewald v. Railroad Co., (Kan.) 24 Pac. Rep. 1101; Railroad Co. v. Greiner, 28 Amer. & Eng. R. Cas. 397; Lord v. Refining Co., 12 Colo. 390, 21 Pac. Rep. 148. The case of Railroad Co. v. Hoosey, 99 Pa. St. 492, is one somewhat similar to the case at bar. There a passenger in an excursion car was unable to find a seat, owing to the crowded condition of the cars. Although there was standing room inside, he stepped outside of the car while the train was in rapid motion, and placed himself on or near the edge of the platform, with his back against the window, holding on by an iron rail fixed to the car. In this position he rode for some minutes, when a jolt occurred, which threw him to the ground, and inflicted an injury upon him. Suit having been brought by him against the railroad company to recover damages for the injury done him, held, that he had been guilty of such negligence as to preclude his right of recovery, and that the court should have so instructed the jury. In Hogan v. Railway Co., 15 Amer. & Eng. R. Cas. 439, it was held that "when the facts found lead irresistibly to the conclusion of negligence or the absence of it, the inference of negligence or the absence of it is purely a conclusion of law; but where the facts found may leave the inference of negligence or no negligence in doubt, the question of negligence is for the jury, because other facts not found are necessarily to be considered and determined before the inference can properly be drawn." Measuring the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses as above stated by the rule here announced, the court upon the trial might properly have granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit; and, as the testimony of the defendant's witnesses did not improve the plaintiff's case, the verdict and judgment cannot be sustained. Horn v. Reitter, 16 Colo. —, 26 Pac. Rep. 601. There is not in the complaint an averment that in thus providing the box-car for the accommodation of the excursionists the company was negligent or careless. Voluntarily, as one of those who on that day was engaged in the pursuit of pleasure, the deceased entered this crowded car, and assumed a dangerous position, notwithstanding the fact that the adjoining car had ample room in which he could have found convenience, comfort, and safety, and seated himself on the rear end of the car, and in a position which any man of ordinary prudence ought to know was unsafe,—ought to know that in case of the slightest accident or jolt he was liable to fall. No prudent man of ordinary intelligence, sober, in full possession of his faculties, with a due regard for his life, possessing some knowledge of journeying by railroad, and the liability to accident on occasions similar to the one in which deceased lost his life, could fail to conclude that a more perilous situation could not have been assumed by any one than that taken by Crilly.

The defendant offered in evidence what was conceded to be the testimony given by George H. Andrus before the coroner's jury at an inquest held on the body of John Crilly when "the respective counsel in this case were present." It was conceded also that the witness Andrus was examined and cross-examined and that he had since died; but it was not conceded nor proved in whose behalf, in what capacity, nor for what purpose the respective counsel were present at the coroner's inquest. Hence we cannot say that plaintiff had had an opportunity to cross-examine the deceased witness; and for this reason, if for no other, the court did not err in rejecting the testimony. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 163 et seq.; 1 Whart. Ev. § 177 et seq. We think the judgment should be reversed.

BUSSELL and REED, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed.

DUNNE et al. v. STOTESBURY.

DISSOLUTION OF TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—LIMITATIONS IN EQUITY—INTERVENTION.

1. Error in refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction will not justify a reversal of the final judgment, if the record be otherwise free from objection.

2. When the cause of action in an equitable proceeding is one for which plaintiff might have resorted to a common-law remedy, as trover or replevin, the six-years statute of limitations is applicable.

3. A party is entitled to bring his suit in equity at any time within the statute of limitations, except in cases where there has been delay or acquiescence amounting to a recognition of the rights of the opposite party making the assertion of adverse rights inconsistent and unconscionable, or where other equitable considerations equally strong are established.

4. A party is not bound to intervene in an action relating to property claimed by him, but he may seek redress in any court of competent jurisdiction, so long as his right of action is not barred by statute nor otherwise forfeited.

Appeal from district court, Lake county.

Henry H. Stotesbury was plaintiff below, and by this suit sought to be declared the owner and awarded the possession of a certain certificate for 12,500 shares of the capital stock of the Agassiz Consolidated Mining Company. Injunctive relief was also sought in aid of the action. Of the defendants, James Dunne alone made defense. The plaintiff's ownership of 8,100 shares included in said certificate was not controverted, but Dunne claimed title to the other 4,400 shares. A temporary injunction was granted, which the court on motion refused to dissolve. On the final hearing, the court found that plaintiff was the owner of 3,150 of the shares in dispute, and that the defendant Dunne was the owner of the remaining 1,250 shares. Decree was rendered accordingly. An appeal was prosecuted to this court under the act of 1885, from the order of the district court refusing to dissolve the preliminary injunction. Upon the rendering of final judgment sustaining the injunction, except as to the 1,250 shares awarded to the defendant Dunne, another appeal was taken, and the two were consolidated in this court by consent.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The assignments of error upon the first appeal, even if sustained, would not, under the circumstances of the case, justify a reversal of the final judgment, if the record be otherwise free from error; hence such assignments need not be considered in this opinion. Roberts v. Arthur, 15 Colo. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 922. The assignments of error upon the last appeal relate to the admission and exclusion of testimony, and to the findings and judgment of the court. The objections to the rulings of the court upon the testimony offered, as shown by the abstract, were not well taken; they require no discussion. From a careful examination of the printed abstract upon which the appeal is submitted, we do not feel warranted in disturbing the court's findings as to the facts and merits of the controversy. The superior advantages enjoyed by the trial court for determining such matters are well understood. The cause of action was one for which the plaintiff might have resorted to a common-law remedy, as trover, or perhaps replevin, the shares of stock being personal property. But under the Code, and probably under the former practice, he was also entitled to invoke equitable relief in a case of this nature. Hence the six-years statute of limitations, as pleaded, was applicable to the action. Gen. St. §§ 241, 2172; Code, § 70, Ang. Lim. § 28; 1 High. Inj. § 30; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 906, 907; Boylan v. Huguet, 8 Nev. 345; Willson v. Anthony, 19 Ark. 18.

Whether or not the evidence sustained the defense of the statute of limitations was a question of fact. The evidence upon such issue, though somewhat conflicting, fairly shows that the cause of action accrued within the statutory period, and, the court below having found against the defense, its judgment thereon cannot properly be reversed on this appeal.

In determining whether or not plaintiff's rights were forfeited by his laches in bringing suit, independent of the statute of limitations, it is necessary to consider somewhat in detail the subject-matter of the controversy, and the relation of the parties thereto. Henry H. Stotesbury, the plaintiff, Adin Alexander, and Sam B. Morgan were the original owners of all the capital stock of the Agassiz Consolidated Mining Company,—50,000 shares, of the par value of $2,500,000. Plaintiff owned 25,000 shares; Alexander and Morgan each owned 12,500 shares. Alexander, desiring to dispose of his stock, authorized one James Dunne to sell the whole thereof for $60,000 cash, net. Plaintiff was also requested to aid Dunne in the sale of the stock. This was early in June, 1879. Alexander's stock was represented by a single certificate, numbered 3. Plaintiff and Dunne were then in New York, and it was arranged between them that they should sell Alexander's stock, or so much thereof as should be necessary, and that they should retain as their commissions for effecting such sale any surplus, either in money realized or stock unsold, after procuring the $60,000 for Alexander. Eight thousand one hundred shares of certificate No. 3 were accordingly set apart for this purpose, to be sold at the rate, if possible, of 185 shares for $1,000, which would yield the sum necessary to satisfy Alexander; but it was also agreed that 1,900 shares more might be used as an inducement to purchasers in case of emergency to raise the necessary amount. Thus 2,500 shares would be left for plaintiff and Dunne. Shortly after making these arrangements plaintiff came to Colorado. In the latter part of July, 1879, when about $20,000 had been subscribed towards the sale of the Alexander stock through the joint efforts and influence of plaintiff and Dunne, and when it appeared that no more stock could be disposed of, plaintiff purchased the entire Alexander interest, subject to the subscriptions already made thereto. Dunne, by letter, heartily approved of this purchase by plaintiff as the only plan that could have been adopted for the sale of the Alexander interest. Plaintiff was in Colorado at the time of his purchase of the Alexander interest; but certificate No. 3, which originally represented that interest, was in New York, where it had been indorsed to Dunne for the purposes of said sale. It appears, however, that plaintiff did not know of such indorsement at the time of his purchase. Immediately and continuously after the purchase of the Alexander stock, plaintiff assumed the entire control thereof, supplying from his own stock the purchasers who had previously subscribed for portions of the Alexander stock. Thus, while plaintiff did not have the manual or corporal possession of certificate No. 3, he was at all times after such purchase practically in the possession and enjoyment of the entire interest in the Agassiz Company originally represented by said certificate. His ownership of the 8,100 shares represented by said certificate seems never to have been disputed, and that he actually controlled and enjoyed the other 4,400 shares continuously after the date of his purchase from Alexander is admitted by the following paragraph from the answer of defendant Dunne: "That during the period of six years the said plaintiff has been practically in control of the defendant company, operating its mines, conducting its business, making leases, without the knowledge or sanction of the directors, and receiving the proceeds of ores mined therefrom without making any account thereof to the said stockholders or directors; that during said period this defendant was never regarded by plaintiff as a stockholder of said company; that he never received a notice of a stockholders' meeting, nor given any opportunity to assent or dissent concerning the management of said mines, the expenses of said company, or the disposition of its said products, but that plaintiff assumed to represent, own, and have the right to vote and did vote the said 4,400 shares for the purpose of carrying out his own objects, intentions, and policies of and concerning the administration of the affairs of said company." When there has been unreasonable delay in bringing suit, courts of equity sometimes refuse relief, even though the statutory period of limitations has not expired; but this is generally in cases where acquiescence amounts to a tacit recognition of the rights of the party in possession, and where the assertion of adverse rights is regarded as not only inconsistent, but unconscionable, or where other equitable considerations equally strong are established. Courts of equity often act in analogy to the statute of limitations, though not especially applicable to their jurisdiction, and also, in the absence of statutory limitations, upon principles of their own, refuse relief to stale demands. In such cases equity reasons thus: The plaintiff has slept upon his alleged rights. His opponent has long been allowed to possess and enjoy the disputed property without complaint. The controversy has probably been settled. The evidence has been lost or obscured. The plaintiff has sought advantage by delay. His action is an experiment. There can be no justice or equity in his claim. Ang. Lim. §§ 25-30, 171, 172; Ban. Lim. 245 et seq.; 2 Herm. Estop. 1194, 1360; Great West Min. Co. v. Woodmass of Alston Min. Co., 14 Colo. 90, 23 Pac. Rep. 908, and cases there cited; Coffey v. Emigh, 15 Colo. —, 25 Pac. Rep. 83; Wilson v. Anthony, supra; Hamlin v. Mebane, 1 Jones, Eq. 18.

None of the foregoing principles control the present controversy; for, as we have seen, there was a statutory period of limitation applicable to the case, and the same had not elapsed when the action was instituted. Hence the statutory period must control, in the absence of equitable considerations requiring the same to be shortened. Besides, the plaintiff has been practically in the continuous possession and enjoyment of the property in dispute ever since the cause of action arose; he has not recognized his opponent's alleged rights, nor acquiesced in his enjoyment of the property in dispute; nor has he done or said anything in respect thereto calculated to mislead Dunne to his injury. Hence neither the doctrine of laches, nor of acquiescence, nor of estoppel by conduct could properly be invoked as a defense to plaintiff's assertion of his rights to the Alexander stock to the extent of his purchase. The defendant Dunne in his answer alleged that, in a certain action brought by him against the Agassiz Consolidated Mining Company in a New York court, he was decreed to be the owner of the 4,400 shares of stock in controversy, and that plaintiff is thereby estopped from questioning the judgment rendered therein. The answer further averred that plaintiff was a party defendant to the New York suit, but the exemplified copy of the record of that case introduced in evidence on the trial of this action contradicts such averment. Hence plaintiff was not, per se, bound by the New York judgment. His knowledge of the proceedings in that case was, however, allowed to be shown in evidence as bearing upon the question of his alleged laches in bringing this action. Under the circumstances, we are unable to say that the time within which he might bring this action should be abridged by reason of such knowledge. Dunne brought that suit with full knowledge of plaintiff's claim to the disputed stock. Not having made plaintiff a party, he certainly acquired no legal right against him by the proceeding, and it is difficult to perceive that he thereby gained any equitable advantage. The plaintiff was not bound of his own motion to intervene in the New York action. He had the right to seek redress in any court of competent jurisdiction. He selected a forum in the jurisdiction where the property to be affected by the judgment was located. He instituted the suit before judgment was rendered by the New York court, and before the statute of limitations had barred his right of action. The cause having been heard and determined upon legal and equitable principles, without substantial error, the judgment must be affirmed.

PARTNERSHIP — ACCOUNTING — LIABILITY OF SURVIVING PARTNER.

1. During a partnership business, extending over four years, the books were kept under the supervision of both partners, but most of the entries were made by one member of the firm. His copartner, however, was active in conducting the business, had unrestricted access to the books, and might have familiarized himself with the accounts and the manner of keeping them. Held that, after the death of such copartner, it was error, on a settlement of the partnership accounts, to treat the surviving partner as a trustee, and to charge him with all omissions and inaccuracies in the partnership accounts, since both partners were in pari delicto in so far as the unsatisfactory condition of the firm books were concerned.

2. Where the partnership business was continued for 18 months after the death of the copartner, the surviving partner, who was also one of the executors of the deceased copartner, must be regarded as acting in a fiduciary capacity for the heirs of his copartner, and held to a strict accountability on a settlement of the partnership affairs, though the widow of the deceased partner, who was a capable woman, had access to the partnership books at all times.

3. Shortly before his death, the deceased partner sold a lot of cattle, and received the purchase money therefor. At about the time of this sale the purchaser executed a trust-deed on land to secure a note for an amount about equal to the purchase price, which note was described as payable to the two partners. On a settlement of the partnership accounts before a referee, it appeared that the firm dealt in cattle, and the purchaser admitted that he had had no other dealings of similar import with the partnership or the deceased partner. Held, that these facts were sufficient to overcome the presumption that the sale was made on the deceased partner's individual account, arising from the fact that he had individual property, and that the transaction did not appear on the books of the partnership.

Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

Appellant and Joseph Mason were associated as copartners. The firm was the owner of certain mill property, and carried on a milling business. It also became the owner of herds of cattle and horses, and transacted the usual business in connection therewith. On the 11th of February, 1881, Mason suddenly died, and appellees succeeded as legatees to all his property, including his interest in the partnership assets. His will provided for the continuation of the partnership business, notwithstanding his decease, until such time as in the judgment of Mrs. Mason and appellant, who were named as his executrix and executor, it should become desirable to wind up the partnership affairs. By virtue of the foregoing authority in the will, the business of the copartnership was continued for a considerable period. But finally, in connection with the administration upon the estate, an examination of the partnership accounts and assets took place, and on the 18th of September, 1882, an alleged settlement was made. This accounting received the approval of the county court in the final settlement of the estate, and the executrix and executor were duly discharged. In February, 1885, a complaint instituting the present suit in equity for a restatement of the partnership accounts was filed. It is based upon the theory that appellant, by virtue of his familiarity with the partnership business, his superior advantages in manipulating the same, his influence over Mrs. Mason, and especially by virtue of the fact that during Mason's life-time as well as afterwards he attended largely to the keeping of the books, succeeded in overreaching Mrs. Mason, in deceiving the county court, and in procuring a settlement tainted by fraud, and greatly to his own advantage. Various specific acts of fraud were alleged, and the settlement was otherwise impeached. An answer being filed putting in issue all material averments of the complaint, and a sufficient replication thereto being tendered, the cause came on for trial. At this stage of the proceedings, "on motion of plaintiffs' attorneys, the defendant by his own attorneys consenting thereto," it was ordered that a reference be made, the referee to take and state an account of the partnership transactions and other matters referred to in the complaint, to reduce to writing the evidence of the witnesses, to examine all books, vouchers, deeds, and other instruments relating to the partnership affairs, to hear and determine the whole issues, both of law and of fact, and to report to the court the evidence so taken, together with his findings of law and fact, and an account of the transactions mentioned in the complaint; also a judgment or decree in the premises. Upon the investigation and hearing, the referee, in accordance with the foregoing order, reported the evidence, findings of law and fact, and a decree awarding plaintiffs the sum of $19,521.39. The report and decree were by the court, after a brief hearing, approved. To review this action the present appeal was taken. Other facts necessary to a full understanding of the opinion are sufficiently narrated therein.

L. S. Dixon and Ballard & Robinson, for appellant. T. D. W. Yonley and Thos. Macon, for appellees.

HELM, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The parties differ in this court somewhat as to the specific character of the issues originally made by the pleadings. For reasons that will presently appear, however, we deem it unnecessary to consider this feature of the discussion. The pleadings consisted of a complaint, answer, and replication; no demurrer was filed, nor was any question of law otherwise raised prior to trial. The cause, by consent, went to a referee for the purpose of taking and stating a full and complete account of all the transactions of the firm of Mason & Huttel, both before and after Mason's decease, with instructions to report findings of law and of fact, together with a decree in accordance therewith. The referee found as a legal conclusion that the settlement of September 18, 1882, was obtained by deception and fraud on the part of appellant. There are matters in the record tending to sustain this finding, but its correctness is vigorously denied. We shall assume that the referee was clothed by the order of reference, with power to adjudicate this question; and, for the purposes of the present review, his finding in this regard will be accepted, without, however, a formal investigation and approval. The case will be treated as one for an ordinary accounting and settlement of partnership affairs, and questions of fraud, save as incidental to the accounting, will receive no further notice.

Counsel for appellant insists that the findings of fact by the referee were imperfect. But the regularity of the order of reference, the general conduct of the trial by the referee, the manner of reporting his findings, and the procedure preliminary to the approval thereof, and entry of the decree by the district court, are not seriously challenged. Among the principal matters urged for reversal, in both the oral and printed arguments, are alleged errors of the referee in determining adversely to appellant the status of certain items connected with the complicated transactions and accounts of the firm.

Mason sometimes recorded firm debits and credits, but, being a foreigner and unaccustomed to writing in English, he left the keeping of the books mainly to appellant. Appellant's familiarity with the firm affairs gave him an advantage over Mrs. Mason after her husband's death, in connection therewith. Besides, at this time, Mrs. Mason was physically indisposed, and, reposing confidence in appellant, for a considerable period she trusted the firm business to him, though, at the alleged settlement consummated on September 18th, she employed counsel to look after her interests. In view of the foregoing circumstances, we commend the careful scrutiny with which all items in the book-account objected to by Mrs. Mason were examined. But the referee seems to have applied against appellant, throughout the entire period of the partnership business, the equitable rule of evidence governing the fiduciary relation of trustee, most earnestly contended for in this court by appellees' counsel. This rule may be stated as follows: A trustee must keep and render full and accurate accounts of all matters connected with the trust-estate; and any omissions or inaccuracies in his accounts, inimical to the interest of his cestui que trust, give rise to presumptions against him, which are decisive, unless overcome by collateral proofs affirmatively establishing his perfect fairness and equity in the premises. Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1063, and note; 3 Greenl. Ev. (13th Ed.) § 253. In this respect it seems to us the referee unconsciously erred. The firm business extended through a period of nearly six years. Over four years of this time the books were kept under the supervision of both partners, and appellant did not occupy the position of trustee for Mason. Nor should appellant be subjected to the adverse presumptions indulged by courts of equity against a partner when irregularities or defects in the partnership accounts are due solely to his negligence or other misconduct. For the unsatisfactory condition of the firm books the partners were, during Mason's life-time in pari delicto. While appellant made most of the record entries, Mason was active in conducting the business. Both he and Mrs. Mason had unrestricted access to the books. They were or might have been familiar with the accounts, and the manner of keeping them. The partners were on an equal footing, and, for loose habits and negligence in reporting and recording firm transactions, Mason should share the responsibility with appellant. During the remaining 18 months of the partnership, Mrs. Mason, by virtue of the will, became associated with appellant in the business. She appears to have been a capable woman, and had access to the books at all times. But throughout this period we should, perhaps, regard appellant as acting in a fiduciary capacity stronger than that ordinarily existing between partners; for, in addition to his advantages over Mrs. Mason, above mentioned, he was also an executor, co-operating with her in administering upon Mason's estate for the benefit of his children as well as his widow; and, of course, all matters pertaining to the partnership business and the keeping of the partnership accounts, to a greater or less extent, involved the interests of the minor heirs. With these preliminary observations touching generally the facts of the case and the law pertaining thereto, we pass to a brief examination of some of the specific items as to which appellant's counsel challenges the findings of the referee.

Early in the year 1880 Mason sold to one Chaffee one hundred head of cattle, and a short time prior to his death he received from Chaffee $1,702.35 therefor. A few weeks subsequent to Mason's decease, appellant, learning of the payment, entered the same upon the firm books as a firm credit. The referee disallowed this item, treating it as an individual transaction of Mason's independent of the firm. Appellant was thus deprived of one-half of the amount collected. The referee bases his action in the premises substantially upon the following grounds: That there is no evidence indicating that Mason was not prompt and honest in reporting matters disposed of by him to the firm; that he did have money outside of the firm business which might have been invested in cattle; that Chaffee says he "supposed" the cattle to have belonged to Mason; also that the firm books show "no such cattle account," and fail to record otherwise anything about the sale. The original transaction having occurred during the life-time of Mason, and the suit being brought by his executrix, appellant was by virtue of section 3641, Gen. St., disqualified from giving testimony on his own behalf concerning the partnership interest therein. But in the first place, while at the time of the sale the firm owned a large herd of cattle, there is no evidence in the record even tending to show that Mason was the private owner of one hundred head, or any other considerable number. Appellees' counsel state, as an uncontroverted fact, that Mason conducted the purchase of what was known as the "Farmer" herd, but this herd at once, or very soon thereafter, became firm property. Secondly. At or about the precise date of the purchase of these cattle by Chaffee, he executed a trust-deed upon certain realty to secure a promissory note for $1,566, described as payable "to the order of Joseph Mason and B. F. Hottel," which deed was duly filed for record by Mason. Thirdly. Chaffee upon the witness stand, though evidently hostile to appellant, reluctantly admitted on cross-examination that he had no other dealings of similar import and magnitude with Mason & Hottel, or with Mason alone; also that the trust-deed must have been given to secure the purchase price of these cattle, and that the $1,702.35 was therefore paid by him to Mason in liquidation of the debt described in the deed, with interest. The note itself was not produced in evidence, and Chaffee says that it was doubtless delivered to him when he made the payment, and was lost or destroyed. It may be a matter of some significance that no antecedent record of the sale appears in the firm accounts; but the character of this significance depends upon the integrity and punctuality of Mason in reporting the sale, as well as upon the interest of appellant in making the proper record thereof. We recall attention to the fact that, as to this item, the rule governing a trustee's accounting with his cestui que trust is certainly inapplicable. The silence of the books concerning this matter should not, in our judgment, be treated as decisive against the interest of the partnership. Had appellant's reliance in the premises rested solely upon the entry of the item in the account after Mason's death, the action of the referee might perhaps be sustained; although many transactions took place during the six years covered by the firm business that were not recorded with the accuracy of professional book-keeping, or at all. But, as already indicated, appellant produced strong collateral evidence. The recital of the trust-deed given under the circumstances, and unexplained, amounts to proof almost conclusive. Mason appears to have been a good business man, and he would hardly, upon the sale of his own property, have taken a note payable to himself and partner, secured by a trust-deed reciting an apparent firm ownership in the property sold. Had the presumption against appellant, recognized by the referee as arising from the silence of the books concerning the sale, actually existed, it would have been completely overcome. The trust-deed, having been executed under the supervision of Mason, must be regarded as showing his view on the question of title to the cattle sold. If there is any explanation of the matter consistent with Mason's private ownership, the burden of giving it was upon plaintiffs, and not upon appellant. Mason's failure to report the payment in question may be attributed to the fact that his death so quickly followed; and it is not impossible that his neglect to formally record the sale when made, arose from the knowledge that it was so clearly evidenced by the note and trust-deed.

The referee employed an expert accountant for the purpose of examining the books of Mason & Hottel kept during the six years of the partnership, restoring a lost ledger, preparing a trial balance, and rendering other needed assistance. This accountant reported, as one of the results of his investigation, that these books, on September 18, 1882, showed a balance to the credit of the firm of $17,268.56 in the Poudre Valley Bank of Fort Collins. Governed by this report, the referee treated the sum named as a firm asset, and one-half of it enters into the decree against appellant.

The cashier of this bank was sworn as a witness. The bank-books were produced, and, by agreement of counsel duly certified extracts therefrom were admitted in evidence. These books showed that on the said 18th of September there was a balance to the credit of the firm of but $1,775.75. Thus it appears by the most reliable evidence that the showing made in the company's books of a bank credit at the date mentioned, of upwards of $17,000, was wrong, and that the real credit was but little more than one-tenth of that sum. The correctness of the bank-books is not questioned, nor is the accountant charged with inaccurately representing the company's books. Counsel for appellees insist that the difference between the sum actually in the bank to the firm's credit, and the amount that according to the firm books should have been there, must be treated as having been drawn out by appellant, and appropriated to his private use. With reference to this proposition, we suggest that, in the first place, if appellant were actually appropriating to his private use sums of money aggregating upward of $15,000, he would naturally have charged, or at least have attempted to charge, the company with sham expenditures sufficient to offset the amount misappropriated. It is hardly in accordance with human experience to suppose that he would willingly or thoughtlessly have left the accounts in a condition to inevitably arouse suspicions of his guilty conduct. Secondly, the referee does not return a specific finding imputing to appellant the perpetration of this particular kind of fraud. He does, however, report that no stock account was preserved during the existence of the firm; that the books were carelessly and negligently kept; and that many important transactions were not entered therein at all. The evidence justifies these findings of the referee. It shows that many matters should have been recorded in the firm books which were not. This was especially true as to that portion of the business transacted through banks with which the firm was in the habit of dealing. It appears that, instead of attempting fullness and accuracy in the regular firm books concerning items covered by bank accounts, the practice of the partners was to rely largely upon pass-books, checks, and stubs, vouchers returned, stated settlements, and reports given by the banks from time to time when requested. Sometimes, also, matters that would otherwise have been recorded were omitted on account of the absence of appellant. These explanations tend to show that the large difference between the accountant's report and the bank-books may have been due to legitimate expenditures of the firm by means of checks, drafts, and the like, concerning which no record was preserved in the partnership books. They are consistent with the finding of the referee on the subject of negligence in keeping the books, and do not necessarily indicate dishonesty on the part of appellant or Mason in the business. The sufficiency of the foregoing explanations, however, is a question we do not now propose to consider or determine. There is enough before us to warrant the conclusion that the referee probably dealt with appellant in this matter as a trustee, and gave undue weight to the manifest imperfections of the books, notwithstanding the fact that for more than two-thirds of the period covered by the partnership, Mason was also to blame for these imperfections.

The foregoing discussion with reference to the item from the Poudre Valley Bank is, in the main, equally applicable to the partnership account with "A. K. & E. B. Yount," another banking-house. The expert accountant found that, according to the firm books, there should have been, on the 18th of September, 1882, in the latter bank, to the credit of the firm, $2,915.29. The books of this bank were not offered in evidence; but Mrs. Yount, who attended to the bank business, testified that some time during the year 1880, Mr. Mason withdrew from the bank the entire deposits of Mason & Hottel, and that thereafter the partnership made no further deposits in that bank; yet, notwithstanding this testimony, which was uncontradicted, the referee adopted the report of the accountant, and the further sum mentioned, of nearly $3,000, is also treated as a firm asset. Before passing from the subject of these bank-accounts, one additional matter should perhaps be noticed. It appears that early in August, 1882, when appellant, Mrs. Mason, and Rhodes, her attorney, were examining the firm books and endeavoring to make a statement in connection with the final settlement of the Mason estate, and closing up of the partnership business, appellant reported, and the bank-books showed, a debit by overdraft in the Poudre Valley Bank against the firm of $6,434.84. Between the date mentioned and the 18th of September following deposits were made sufficiently large to cancel the overdraft, meet current expenses, and leave the aforesaid balance of $1,775.75 in favor of the firm. Mrs. Mason and Rhodes both testify that appellant made no subsequent report to them of the change that had taken place in the bank-account, and that the settlement was consummated on September 18th upon the basis of an overdraft of $6,000 instead of the credit of $1,700. This omission, and appellant's testimony explanatory thereof, are severely characterized by counsel for appellees.

But counsel for appellant earnestly insists that the mode of settlement adopted rendered it not only unnecessary, but also improper, to consider in the final report the change in question. He asserts that, though the statement of the partnership account was not formally rendered until September 18th, the parties understood that the partnership business was practically closed on the 6th or 7th of August preceding, and their computations rested upon the condition of the bank-account at that date. His position is that from the debts due the firm, treated on August 7th as assets, appellant was to pay this overdraft, together with other firm liabilities, and that, by thus using assets as collected in liquidation of liabilities, no real change in the financial condition of the firm took place; hence he argues the settlement, as made, "was in all respects fair to Mrs. Mason and the estate." To corroborate this theory, counsel refers to the fact that in the memorandum prepared by Rhodes, upon which the settlement ultimately took place, opposite this particular bank item is written the following: "1882, August 4 to 7." The foregoing view of the proceeding in question is not unreasonable. If, however, deliberate fraud in this regard were established, it would doubtless tend to impeach appellant's good faith in other respects, and coupled with additional appropriate proofs, might warrant charging against the firm the supposed bank credit of more than $17,000. But this, with other matters, is left for reconsideration upon the further hearing of the cause. We do not wish to be understood as now deciding that the referee was wrong in his ultimate conclusions concerning the two bank items above discussed. As already stated, he was probably governed in determining appellant's liability in connection therewith, to a very large extent, by an erroneous view of the law applicable thereto; and we must assume that, but for this mistake of law, he might have adjudicated these items differently. For this, as well as for other reasons above given, in our opinion the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings. It is unnecessary to discuss the remaining objections urged by appellant against specified conclusions of the referee. Upon a retrial of the case, such mistakes or errors, if any there were, may not be repeated. The parties need not incur the expense of retaking all the evidence; in so far as is practicable, the reconsideration of the cause may be had upon the proofs originally reported by the referee, coupled with such additional evidence as may be produced. Reversed.

DENVER, T. & G. R. CO. v. SIMPSON.

INJURIES TO BRAKEMEN—UNSAFE LINKS—EVIDENCE.

1. A brakeman who has his hand crushed while attempting to couple in the dark two cars with draw-heads, at an unequal height from the track, can recover for his injuries, where the company had failed to furnish suitable links for such couplings, and the conductor ordered plaintiff to take the unsuitable link with which he attempted to make the coupling.

2. Where the petition avers that the company failed to furnish a sufficient number of safe links, and that the accident resulted from that cause, evidence that the train was not properly supplied with suitable links for the run on which the accident occurred is admissible.

Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

The plaintiff's cause of action, as stated in his complaint, omitting the formal allegation, is as follows: "The plaintiff on the 20th day of December, 1887, in the county of El Paso and state of Colorado, and at the time of the injuries complained of, was in the employ of the said defendant as brakeman, and was engaged at said Francerville Junction, in said county, in coupling freight-cars for the said defendant, as by the nature and terms of his employment he was required to do; and that it then and there became and was the duty of said defendant to procure good, safe, and secure apparatus, links, link-pins, and draw-bars to be used in coupling its said cars; that, by and through the carelessness, negligence, and default of the said defendant and its servants, it failed to furnish a sufficient number of good, safe, secure links and link-pins for coupling its cars aforesaid; and also it provided, used, and suffered to be used, unsafe, defective, and insufficient links and link-pins for coupling said cars as aforesaid, of which it had notice. Fourth. That by the want of due care and attention to its duty in that behalf towards said plaintiff on the 20th day of December, A. D. 1887, and while the said freight-cars and appliances aforesaid were in the use and service of the said defendant, and while the said plaintiff was engaged in coupling the same in his capacity as aforesaid for the defendant, a link was provided by said defendant for the purpose of coupling as aforesaid, and which was being used and handled by plaintiff in his capacity as aforesaid. This link, by reason of its unsafeness, defectiveness, and insecurity, failed to act and operate in the coupling of said cars, and while the plaintiff, with all due care and diligence, was then and there using the same, for the purpose of coupling said cars for the defendant, and by reason of which, and by means whereof, then and there said cars came violently and forcibly into contact, while plaintiff in his capacity aforesaid was endeavoring to couple the same, by means whereof plaintiff's right hand was crushed and mangled, and he was otherwise greatly bruised, hurt, and wounded. By means of the premises plaintiff became sick and disordered, and suffered great and intense pain, and so remained for a long space of time; and suffered the loss of the index finger from his right hand by amputation, as a result of said crushing and mangling as aforesaid; and also lost the use of the middle finger of his right hand by the crushing and mangling of the flesh and bone of the same; and was then and there deprived of the use of said right hand, and is now deprived of the use of the same; and that, as he is informed and believes, he will never be able to use said right hand again, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment for the sum of $10,000." The answer of defendant admits the injury to said plaintiff as in the complaint set forth, but denies that the same is due to any default of the said defendant, or its servants or agents. All other allegations of the complaint are denied. A trial was had to a jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

Wells, McNeal & Taylor and Teller & Oranhood, for appellant. J. B. Belford and T. C. Early, for appellee.

HAYT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) In the court below appellee, as plaintiff, obtained judgment for the sum of $800, for bodily injuries sustained by him while in the employ of appellant in the capacity of brakeman upon its railroad. It is shown by the record that at the time of the accident appellant was operating a line of railroad in this state between the cities of Denver and Pueblo; that appellee was in its employ as brakeman on one of its freight trains running between said points; that upon the morning of the day of the accident the train upon which appellee was employed left the city of Denver going south upon schedule time, that said train was not then properly supplied with links with which to make the couplings necessary to be made upon the contemplated run; that appellee endeavored to provide the train with the requisite number of links before starting from the city of Denver, but was prevented from so doing by reason of the negligence of appellant in failing to furnish such links. About 8 o'clock upon the evening of said day appellee, in his capacity as brakeman, was required to make a coupling at Franceville Junction, upon the line of said railroad. In making that coupling appellee sustained the injury for which damages were recovered in the court below. The facts attending the accident are practically undisputed; the witnesses introduced by the plaintiff agreeing as to all material particulars, while the only attempt made to overthrow this testimony rests upon evidence of admissions claimed to have been made by the plaintiff to other employees of the company shortly after the accident. By such evidence contributory negligence on the part of appellee was attempted to be established. It is shown that the draw-heads of the two cars which appellee was required to couple were of unequal heights above the tracks, making the coupling somewhat difficult. The night was dark, cold, and stormy; the supply of links furnished the train by the company was exhausted; none remained with which to make this coupling. In this extremity, and as the train was coming down the side track to the cars to be joined with it, appellee was searching about the tracks to find a link with which to make this necessary coupling. At this juncture the conductor in charge of the train ordered him to take a link laying upon the ground near the side track, and make the coupling with it. The accident occurred while appellee was endeavoring to execute this command. The link pointed out by the conductor not being a suitable one with which to make the coupling, it caused appellee's hand to be crushed between the cars. As described by the witnesses upon the stand, it was a bent link, as distinguished from a crooked link; a crooked link being one crooked in a particular way for the purpose of making couplings in cases where the draw-heads of the cars to be connected are of different elevations above the track, while a bent link is one that has become misshapen by use. In view of the evidence, the verdict of the jury in favor of appellee cannot be disturbed. He was acting at the time under the immediate direction of his superior, the conductor, who had charge of the train, and of the brakemen employed thereon, including appellee. Appellee did not discover the defect in the link in time to avoid the accident. He could not well do so in the darkness. He was required to act promptly in making the coupling, without time for investigation or opportunity for reflection. Under the law he was only required to exercise such care as might reasonably be expected from a person of ordinary care and prudence in the situation in which plaintiff was then placed. In view of the facts, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that he did not exercise reasonable care. On the other hand, the company is properly chargeable with negligence in failing to provide the train with a sufficient number of links in the first instance, and again in directing appellee to use the defective link. The duty of the master to supply the servant with suitable machinery and appliances for the work to be performed is universally recognized. Railroad Co. v. Discoll, 12 Colo. 520, 21 Pac. Rep. 708; Wells v. Coe, 9 Colo. 159, 11 Pac. Rep. 50; Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213. Some of the witnesses for appellant testified that soon after the accident appellee stated that the accident was caused by his glove sticking to the link, the glove being wet at the time. Evidence was introduced, however, to show that the accident was not so caused, and that, if appellee made the statements attributed to him, he was in error in so doing. It was also in evidence that the glove was not wet, and that its use under the circumstances was reasonable and proper. All these matters, together with the law in relation to unavoidable accident and contributory negligence, were fully submitted to the jury under proper instructions. The damages are not excessive, and we see no reason for disturbing the verdict. Gilmore v. Railroad Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 866; Railroad Co. v. Doyle, 49 Tex. 190. In its essential features the case is entirely dissimilar from Wells v. Coe, supra, relied upon by appellant. In that case Coe, the party injured, was "foreman and boss of the workmen." His authority at the mine was plenary, save, perhaps, at such times as Wells might happen to be present. He had charge of the workmen and control of the machinery. By his orders the means provided to prevent just such accidents as the one causing the injury complained of were dispensed with, thereby making the accident possible, and it was rightfully held, under these circumstances, that he could not recover. It is contended that all evidence of the insufficiency of the supply of links upon the train was inadmissible under the pleadings. An examination of the complaint and answer shows that this was one of the matters directly put in issue; consequently the evidence was properly admitted.

The judgment will be affirmed.

COSTS—EQUITY SUITS—DISCRETION.

Where, in a suit to enjoin the infringement of water-rights, the questions of fact submitted to the jury are found in defendants' favor, and the chancellor finds that at no time prior to the trial did defendants interfere with or damage plaintiffs' rights, his judgment against plaintiffs for costs will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Douglas county.

Wm. Dillon, for appellants. John L. Jerome, for appellees.

RICHMOND, C. This was an action for an injunction to enforce certain rights to water for irrigation in water district No. 8, Douglas county, Colo. The plaintiffs claimed certain water-rights in respect to four ditches, setting forth the ownership by defendants of two ditches, and alleging the commission by defendants of various wrongful acts in violation of plaintiffs' prior rights to water. Prayer for injunction, and for general relief, and for costs. By the answer various defenses are set up which we deem it unnecessary to recite in the statement of the case. The question of whether or not the diversion of the water by defendants lessened the flow of water in the creek at the head or heads of plaintiffs' ditch or ditches was submitted to a jury, and upon the trial the jury answered in the negative; thereafter the cause was set for final argument and decree. On February 21, 1887, final decree was made by consent, save as to the costs. The apportionment of costs was submitted to the court, and the plaintiffs were adjudged to pay the costs up to and including the trial, and each party was directed to pay their own costs made subsequent to the trial. That part of the decree was as follows: "And it is further adjudged and decreed that the defendants have and recover of and from the plaintiffs their costs up to and including the trial of this cause, to be taxed, and have execution therefor, and that as to the costs made subsequent to said trial each party to pay their own costs." To this appellants here and plaintiffs below excepted, and to reverse it have prosecuted this appeal. It is contended by appellants that this decree is appealable under the act of 1885, and the appellees do not controvert that position. Treating it, then, as a right of appellants to prosecute the appeal, we come to the consideration of the one and only question involved, and that is, did the court err in taxing the costs up to and including the trial, which resulted favorably to the defendants, to plaintiffs, and directing payment of their costs subsequent to the trial of each of the parties to this proceeding? Appellants have filed an extensive abstract of record, including the pleadings, all of the testimony, and the decrees of the court. In considering this question, we deem it essential to call attention to the first paragraph of the decree, which is in the following language: "Now come the plaintiffs, by William Dillon, Esq., their attorney, and the defendants, by John L. Jerome, Esq., their attorney, also come; and thereupon the motion of the defendants for final judgment in this cause, upon the trial heretofore had herein, and this cause having been tried before a jury at the December term of this court, A. D. 1886, and the issues submitted to said jury having been found in favor of the defendants, and the court having heard the arguments of counsel, and being now sufficiently advised in the premises, and the said parties hereto in open court consenting to the dates mentioned in the following order, the court doth find: That the defendants did not, and neither of them did, at any time prior to the bringing of this cause, interfere with the supply of water in the ditch known as 'Spring Creek Ditch No. 8' and the 'Ratcliffe Spring Creek Ditch No. 43,' used and enjoyed by the plaintiffs, and did not, prior to the trial of this cause, at any time, damage the plaintiffs, or either of them, with respect to their rights and privileges in said ditches." The findings appellants admit were by consent, although it was stipulated that nothing therein contained shall prejudice appellants on the question of costs. From the foregoing it will be seen that the issues submitted to the jury were found in favor of the defendants; that, in addition to this, the court found that the defendants at no time prior to the bringing of this cause had interfered with the supply of water in the ditch known as "Spring Creek Ditch No. 8" or "Ratliff's Ditch No. 43," used and enjoyed by the plaintiffs, and did not, prior to the trial of this cause, at any time damage the plaintiffs, or either of them, with respect to their rights and privileges in said ditches. Whether the trial court, in apportioning the costs, had a right, notwithstanding the stipulation of counsel, to consider the findings independently of the evidence, is quite immaterial. The evidence certainly justified the findings, and, in considering the judgment for costs, we must indulge in every deduction to support this part of the judgment that can reasonably be drawn from the evidence. True it is that if, from the abstract of record, we could be satisfied that the discretionary right of apportioning costs in chancery proceedings by the court had been abused, we would be warranted in reversing the decree to that extent. But a careful examination of the pleadings and the testimony justifies us in the assertion that the action of the court in thus apportioning the costs was not an abuse of its discretion. The general doctrine is that the matter of costs is so largely within the discretion of the chancellor that his action will not be disturbed unless error be very manifest. Sanborn v. Kittredge, 50 Amer. Dec. 58; Shields v. Bogiolo, 7 Mo. 134; Portz v. Schants, 70 Wis. 497, 36 N. W. Rep. 249. We find nothing in the case that justifies us in disturbing the decree of the court in any particular, and therefore recommend that it be affirmed.

REED and BISSELL, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

CONVERSION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where in an action for the value of two transits it appears that defendant bought out a firm to whom plaintiffs had delivered two transits for sale, and that, just after the sale, defendant, acting on information afforded him by one of the clerks of the firm, wrote plaintiffs that he had the transits, but afterwards discovered that one of the transits belonged to another, to whom he surrendered it, and so told plaintiffs, the evidence is insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiffs for the value of that transit.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court of Denver.

BISSELL, C. This action was originally commenced before a justice to recover the value of two Gurley mountain solar transits from the appellant, Mitchell. It was claimed that they came into his possession at the time he bought the stock of Alger & Co., to whom they had been antecedently delivered for sale by Reed Bros. It has been assigned as ground for reversal that the judgment of the superior court rendered upon the appeal to it is manifestly against the weight of evidence. This contention appears to be well based and properly laid. About certain of the facts essential to the plaintiffs' recovery there is no dispute. The Reed Bros. owned two transits, which were sent to Alger & Co. for the purposes of sale. Subsequently the appellant, Mitchell, became the purchaser of Alger & Co.'s stock upon a lumped sale, without any inventory. The principal question in the court below, as well as in this, is, did Mitchell receive the two transits belonging to Reed Bros. at the time of the purchase from Alger & Co., and was he obliged to account to them for the value? Originally, as is evident, he was no party to the transaction. He had entered into no contract with Reed Bros., and incurred no liability with reference to the transits, either by virtue of an original stipulation with the bailors, nor by reason of anything that occurred as between him and Alger & Co. at the time of his purchase. Under these circumstances, his obligations to the Reed Bros. were exceedingly slight, and whatever he may have written, done, or said with reference to those two transits is to be construed in the light of these existing relations. The only evidence which was produced by Reed Bros. in support of their claim to recover the value was sundry letters which were written by Mitchell to them concerning the instruments within a very few days subsequent to his purchase. Mitchell seems very early to have discovered that his vendors, Alger & Co., had in their possession at the time of the sale to him sundry instruments, left with them for repairs or sale by various persons who claimed to own them. He seems to have attempted by inquiry to ascertain the facts concerning the ownership of all such instruments, and to have attempted their return to the parties who had the title. In pursuance of these plans he wrote the letters which were offered in evidence, which, in terms, conceded his possession of two instruments belonging to the plaintiffs, offered to dispose of them, and account for the proceeds. One of them was so sold by him, and the price remitted. As to the other, he contends that the letters were written under a mistake, and without full knowledge concerning the fact of the ownership of the instruments. His explanation upon this subject is full, and apparently satisfactory. The court below, however, seems to have proceeded upon the theory that, as the letters were written by Mitchell, and conceded his possession, he was as much bound by them as though he had been a party to the original contract, and therefore in a fashion he was estopped to deny the conclusiveness of their admission. No such effect should be given to those letters. The case demonstrated that the letters were written almost immediately upon the sale in June, 1884; that they were written without any absolute knowledge on the part of Mitchell with reference to the instruments, but were based upon information given to him by an employe of Alger & Co., and in the execution of an attempt upon his part to deliver the instruments to the persons to whom they belonged. Within a very short time of the writing of the letters, the actual owners of one of the instruments, the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company, made claim upon him, and established their title, and he surrendered the instrument, which he had supposed belonged to Reed Bros. This undoubtedly he had a right to do, and the only question is, was it the instrument belonging to the Reeds? It satisfactorily appears from the evidence that it was not their property. At the time of the sale and purchase referred to it is shown that there were but three instruments in the stock purchased which would be included within the designation of mountain solar transits. One of them was a Boffenberger, which was subsequently delivered to one Martin; one was a light mountain Gurley, which was sold for the Reeds, who received the proceeds of the sale; and the other was a Gurley, which belonged to the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company. This accounts for all of the solar transits belonging to third persons which came into the possession of Mitchell by virtue of his purchase from Alger & Co. It is thus evident that his letters were the result of a mistake, and that he should not be held to the same strict responsibility for their contents as would be the rule had they been written by the persons with whom the original contract had been made. These conclusions are very largely supported by the course and conduct of the plaintiffs in the general history of the transaction. One of them made a personal claim upon Mitchell very shortly after the letters had been written, and very directly after they had been advised of the error into which he had fallen. Mr. Mitchell at the time explained the situation and circumstances of the transaction, showed the reason for his mistake, and the basis for his then and present contention. In all these things apparently the plaintiffs acquiesced, for they took no steps for the recovery of the instrument for nearly three years, and not until after a controversy between the appellant, Mitchell, and one of the principal witnesses for the appellees. These facts and circumstances tend very strongly to support the appellant's position.

Upon the whole record, it is the opinion of this court that the judgment was manifestly against the weight of the evidence, and finds very little support in it from testimony which is not satisfactorily contradicted and explained. Under these circumstances, however much this court may regret the necessity for a reversal, and whatever may be the pressure of the general rule restricting interference with judgments upon this ground, it is obvious that, in obedience to its convictions, the case must be reversed. The case should be reversed, and remanded for further proceedings.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings.

HALEY v. BREEZE, Treasurer.

(Supreme Court of Colorado. Feb. 27, 1891.)

PRACTICE—FILING PLEADING—DEFAULT.

Under the Colo. Pr. Act of 1885, providing that the pleadings shall be filed within 10 days after service of a copy of the answer, but not imposing any penalty for a failure to file them, a defendant who has served his answer in apt time should be permitted to defend, notwithstanding his failure to file the answer within 10 days after such service of it.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Routt county.

John A. Coulter and W. T. Hughes, for appellant. John M. Breeze, Daniel E. Parks, and H. B. Johnson, for appellee.

BISSELL, C. This action was brought by Lewis H. Breeze, as treasurer of Routt county, on an injunction bond filed by Haley in a suit to restrain the county treasurer from collecting certain taxes. The suit was commenced under the practice act of 1885. The only error which will be considered will be that predicated on the ruling of the court which deprived the appellant, Haley, of his right to defend the suit. By the terms of the act of 1885, the summons must contain a substantial notification to the defendant of the names of the parties, of the court, and the purposes of the suit, and must require him to answer and serve a copy thereof, within a time specified, upon the attorney whose name is signed to it. It is conceded that the defendant served his answer upon the attorney in apt time, and thus formed an issue which he was denied the right to try. The defendant's answer was not filed in the clerk's office prior to the meeting of the court on the first day of the term ensuing the service. On that day the defendant tendered his answer to the clerk, who refused to file it. Some time prior to that date the plaintiff had filed a motion for a default, and asked for judgment because of this failure to file the answer. Before any action whatever had been taken by the court upon this motion, the defendant asked leave to file his answer, basing his motion upon the ground that the answer had been previously served in apt time, in accordance with the statute, and because the statute itself made no certain provision as to the time at which the answer should be filed in court. The court denied the application, entertained the motion for a default, and entered judgment against the defendant for nearly the entire amount for which the plaintiff had sued. The statute is in accord with the defendant's contention. It provides for the filing of the pleadings within 10 days after service of a copy of the answer, but does not impose a duty in this regard on the defendant, or enact a penalty for the disregard of the statute. The section which contains the 10-day clause likewise provides that the pleadings must be filed before default or judgment. The only inhibition, in the nature of a penalty, which attaches by the terms of the statute, is that relating to the entry of default or judgment. It is thus clear that the defendant loses no right by a failure to file his answer previously served in apt time, within the specified 10 days. While it was in the power of the court to order the answer filed at any prescribed time, it clearly was not within its power to enter judgment as upon a failure to answer, when no such penalty was imposed by the statute, and the act had been substantially observed by the defendant. It is clear that Haley should have been permitted to defend. Counsel have pressed some questions concerning the proper measure of damages which are likely to be of importance on the trial. A decision would doubtless be an aid to the trial court. It would be given without hesitation, if the record contained the facts essential to a correct decision. In their absence, an intelligent judgment is impossible, and these matters are left wholly undetermined. For the reasons given, this judgment must be reversed, with directions to the court below to set aside the default and judgment, and to enter an order permitting the answer to be filed, when the cause will proceed according to the law in such cases.

RICHMOND and REED, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to proceed in accordance with the suggestions made.

FRAZER v. LYNCH et al. (No. 14,087.)

CONTEMPT—DISOBEDIENCE OF SUBPENA—PUNISHMENT.

1. Though Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1991, provides that disobedience of a subpoena may be punished as a contempt, "and if the witness be a party his complaint or answer may be stricken out," it is error to strike out the answer for defendant's disobedience of a subpoena duces tecum, where his counsel admit the contents of the document sought to be produced, so as not to cripple plaintiff's case.

2. Where defendant is an illiterate person, and it is not clear that she knew the contents of the subpoena, and her counsel knew nothing of the matter, and had given her no advice as to her duty, the court should notify her of the effect of her disobedience, and give her an opportunity to produce the document before striking out her answer.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. PIERCE, Judge.

Reinoehl & Harrison, for appellants. C. L. Jenks, D. W. Welty, and A. E. Nutt, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an action of ejectment. The defendants joined in an answer, which put in issue all the allegations of the complaint as to the ownership and right to the possession of the demanded premises, the value of the rents, issues, and profits, and the amount of damages claimed by plaintiff. The plaintiff caused to be issued and served upon the defendant Catherine Lynch a subpoena duces tecum, requiring her to produce in court a United States patent, conveying a portion of the land in controversy to one Patrick Lynch, through whom plaintiff claims title. The said defendant did not produce the patent as commanded. The court below, of its own motion, examined the defendant upon oath as to her reason for not doing so. Her evidence is as follows: "Question. This paper was served on you, Mrs. Lynch, which reads as follows, among other things, [reading the commands of the subpoena, and then continuing:] This paper purports to have been served upon you,—you say your son read it to you? Answer. Yes, sir; that patent that I got. Q. Did you bring it? A. No, sir; I did not. Q. Why did you not bring it? A. I did not know that there was any case. Q. You did not understand that you were compelled to bring it by this subpoena? A. No, sir. Q. Tell me your reason for not bringing it, after your son read this subpoena? A. He read it to me after I got it from Washington; that is all. Q. Now, who read it to you?—you were served with a paper reading like this, were you not? A. Yes. Q. Who read that to you, or did you read it yourself? A. No, sir; I could not read myself. Q. Who read that to you? A. I do not believe any one read it to me. I was summoned on the road. There was a lady with me. She just looked at it, and I took it home, and left it on the shelf. Q. Your counsel told you, did they not, that it was necessary to bring this document into court? A. No, sir. Q. Your son told you, did he not? A. He did not tell me anything; he came home at six o'clock last night, sick. Q. Didn't your son tell you that your counsel said to you to bring that paper into court. A. I suppose he could have got it; he is very sick, and laying down sick in town here, and didn't get home until six o'clock. Mr. Harrison. We are ready to admit the contents of that document, so that it will not cripple the plaintiff's case. The Court. That paper was served upon that lady. She said at first that it was, and then afterwards that perhaps it was not, read to her. It is her duty, when a paper is served upon her, bearing the official imprint, as this document does,—if she cannot read it,—it is her duty to take it to some person and have it read. I certainly do not wish to be harsh with any person, but it seems to me that this is a flagrant obstruction of justice, and a disobedience of an order of the court, and, although I have listened with interest to the remarks that have been made by yourself and Mr. Reinoehl, I cannot quite come to the conclusion that this woman has done this through ignorance; it seems to me that there is some reason for it. The answer will be stricken from the files."

The question presented by this appeal is as to the correctness of this ruling, and it is clear to us that it cannot be sustained. Section 1991 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that disobedience of a subpoena may be punished as a contempt of court; "and, if the witness be a party, his complaint or answer may be stricken out." This latter clause of the section is intended for the protection of the adverse party, whose substantial rights are or may be affected by such disobedience, as well as a punishment for the contempt itself; and it is evident from the nature of the power thus conferred on the court, that it should not be exercised, except with guarded discretion, and with a view to promote substantial justice in the case before it. It is apparent from the record before us that the defendant Mrs. Lynch is an illiterate person, and it is not entirely clear that she knew the contents of the subpoena, and that what is claimed as an admission that it had been read to her did not really refer to the reading of the patent itself. It is evident that her counsel knew nothing of the matter, and had given her no advice in relation to her duty in regard to the subpoena. Under these circumstances the court should have distinctly notified her of the effect of a willful refusal to produce the paper, and have given her an opportunity to do so, before making the order under review. But, in addition to this, her counsel, before the making of this order striking the answer from the files, offered to admit everything that could be shown by the patent itself; thus obviating any necessity for its production, and fully saving every right of the plaintiff. This offer, thus made, is to be treated as that of the defendant herself, and was so far a substantial compliance with the commands of the subpoena as to make the subsequent order of the court clearly erroneous. This order is not, as claimed by respondent, a judgment for contempt, such as is provided for by section 1222 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and which, by the terms of that section, is final and conclusive; but was an error of law occurring during the trial of the action, and, being excepted to, may be corrected on this appeal. Judgment and order reversed.

PUBLIC LANDS—"SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED"— MEXICAN GRANTS—RES ADJUDICATA.

1. Where the register and receiver of the district land-office decides that certain land was not "swamp and overflowed" at the time of the enactment of Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, or that the patentees thereof are entitled to it on the ground that they were, before disposal of it by the state, bona fide purchasers within Act Cong. July 23, 1866, providing for the quieting of land titles in California, and confirming to purchasers in good faith lands included in rejected Mexican grants, the decision, if not appealed from, is conclusive against the state and its grantees.

2. The opinion of the register and receiver of the land-office as to whether land was swamp and overflowed, recited: "The evidence shows that all of said tract has for many years been used for ordinary purposes of agriculture in growing grain and grass for hay and pasture. And the fact of its adaptability for the cultivation of these staple agricultural products would seem to determine the question as to the character of the land against the state. At any rate, these circumstances, coupled with the fact" that claimants were bona fide purchasers, etc., entitles them to the land. Held, that it was not decided that the land was not swamp and overflowed.

3. Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, granting to the different states all swamp and overflowed lands within their borders, did not grant lands the right to the possession of which was at the time vested in a grantee under a Mexican grant, though such land may have afterwards, on final survey, been excluded from the grant.

THORNTON, J. Ejectment. Judgment for plaintiff. Motion for a new trial by defendants denied, and appeal from the judgment and order denying the motion.

The plaintiff claims title to the land in controversy under a patent of the United States, issued to Willard Hodges, dated December 15, 1882, which was put in evidence, as was also a conveyance of the tract by Hodges to the plaintiff. The claim of Hodges is under the seventh section of the act of congress of July 23, 1866, entitled "An act to quiet land titles in California," 14 St. at Large, p. 220. This section provides that when persons in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, have purchased lands of Mexican grantees or assignees, which grants have subsequently been rejected, or when the lands so purchased have been excluded from the final survey of any Mexican grant, and have used, improved, and continue in the actual possession of the same, according to the lines of their original purchase, and when no valid adverse right or title (except of the United States) exists, such purchasers may purchase the same, after having such lands surveyed under existing laws, at the minimum price established by law, upon first making proof of the facts as required herein, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner of the general land-office. Hodges and Upham made proof before the proper land-office of their right to purchase the land in suit under the section of the act of 1866 above referred to, bringing themselves within its provisions, and were allowed to purchase, and did purchase, on this proof and purchase, the patent of the United States above mentioned, under which plaintiff asserts title. This patent establishes prima facie the right of plaintiff to recover, and must be regarded as conclusive against the defendants, unless the latter can attack it, and successfully impeach its sufficiency to vest title in those claiming under it.

Defendants claim that the rights possessed by them entitle them to attack the patent. They say that as a matter of fact the land sued for was on the 28th day of September, 1850, swamp and overflowed land, and by virtue of the act of congress of that date entitled "An act to enable the state of Arkansas and other states to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits," the title to this tract passed from the United States to the state of California, and that it was out of the power of congress or of the United States government in any way or mode to divest this title so passed to the state by the act of 1850. It must be regarded as settled beyond controversy that the first section of the swamp-land act (Act Sept. 28, 1850) is a grant in presenti to each state of the swamp and overflowed land within its limits. The supreme court of the United States, speaking through Justice FIELD, have said of this act in Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 488, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985: "The words of the first section of the act, 'shall be and are hereby granted,' import an immediate transfer of interest, not a promise of transfer in the future." This construction of the act has been sustained in several cases. See Tubbs v. Wilhoit, 73

Cal. 63, 14 Pac. Rep. 361, and cases there cited, and cases cited in Wright v. Roseberry, supra. The contention of the defendants is that they can impeach the patent of plaintiff by showing that the land in suit was, on the day of the passage of the swamp-land act of 1850, in fact swamp and overflowed land. To this contention plaintiff replies that defendants are estopped from making such proof by an authoritative decision of a competent tribunal to the contrary, binding on both plaintiff and defendants. When the defendants offered to defeat the effect of the patent to prove that the land was swamp and overflowed on the 28th day of September, 1850, the plaintiff met it with proof of what he claimed to be an authoritative decision and adjudication to the contrary, as above stated, and with the objection that by reason of such decision such evidence was incompetent and improper.

The material facts pertaining to this adjudication are as follows: In 1871 a contest arose, and was carried on in the United States land-office at Marysville, in the contested case of Willard Hodges and George B. Upham in regard to tract No. 12, township 12 N., range 3 E., to which John McNamara (one of the defendants in this case) and the state of California were parties. Tract 12 includes the land in suit in this case. Hodges and Upham claimed the whole of this tract 12. This contest involved the right to a portion of this tract 12 as between Hodges and Upham and John McNamara, and to a portion of the same tract as between Hodges and Upham and the state of California. There were other parties to the contest, but as their claims are not in any way involved in this action, they need not be further referred to. Citations were issued and served on all the parties. McNamara appeared by counsel and with his witnesses. The state of California did not appear, nor did any one appear for it. The register and receiver awarded the land in contest (in suit here) between the claimants Hodges and Upham and the state of California to the former. To John McNamara a portion of tract 12 was awarded, as against Hodges and Upham. This last-named portion awarded to McNamara is not included in the land sued for in this action. This decision, as between Hodges and Upham and the state of California, does not seem to have been carried by appeal to the commissioner of the general land-office at Washington. The decision of the register and receiver remains unchallenged by the state of California, or any one claiming under her. In a contest with another claimant as to lots 22 and 2 (involved herein) these lots were, on appeal, awarded by the secretary of the interior to Hodges and Upham. In awarding the lands in suit here to Hodges and Upham the register and receiver held that their right to purchase the lands was superior to that of the state. As the ruling was not appealed from, it would usually be regarded as concluding the state, and estopping her from any claim to the land in controversy.

But did the register and receiver hold that the land was not swamp and overflowed? On this point they say in their opinion: "Contestant, state of California, does not appear to contest the claim of Hodges and Upham, and no direct testimony was called out as to the alleged swamp and overflowed character of the land in dispute between these parties. The evidence, however, shows that all of said tract No. 12 has for many years been used for ordinary purposes of agriculture in growing grain and grass for hay and pasturage; and the fact of its adaptability for the cultivation of these staple agricultural products would seem to determine the question as to the character of the land as against the state. At any rate, these circumstances, coupled with the fact that prior to the act of July 23, 1866, and to the state's disposal of the land to purchasers in good faith, the claimants became purchasers in good faith of the grant title to the same, should, in our judgment, conclude the state in the premises." It is undoubtedly held in the opinion of the register and receiver that Hodges and Upham were entitled to the land involved in the contest with the state under the seventh section of the act of July 23, 1866. As far as regards the land in suit, the decision is binding on the state, in so far as the register and receiver have decided on the right of Hodges and Upham, (see Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 580;) and also binding, in our judgment, on defendants, the McNamaras. In these contests before the officers of the land department as to the right to enter land the parties to whom it could be awarded on the contest are the proper and necessary parties. In the contest we are considering between Hodges and Upham and the state of California land could be awarded only to one of these parties. It would not and could not be awarded to a grantee of the state, as, in this case, to McNamara. The United States authorities in such contests only notice the rights of parties who have a right under the laws of the United States to enter and purchase the land. Any person claiming under the state must prosecute or defend their rights under the state as a party to the contest. McNamara, claiming under the state in this case, must have defended his right under the state as a claimant, and it was incumbent on him to do so. Therefore it follows that whatever was binding on the state, bound McNamara. If, as the result of the contest between Willard Hodges and the state, it had been adjudged that the land was not swamp and overflowed, that would have bound the state within the rule laid down in Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72, approved and followed in Hosmer v. Wallace, 47 Cal. 471. See, also, Samson v. Smiley, 13 Wall. 91; Warren v. Van Brunt, 19 Wall. 653; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530; Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 580; Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 473. The determination of the facts in the same contest adjudging the right of Hodges and Upham as against the state to enter and purchase the land in suit is for the same reason binding on McNamara. The estoppel as to the state exists only as to the determination by the officers of matters of fact. Their determination, if free from fraud, and not the result of a fraudulent imposition upon them, is final and conclusive. It is still conclusive, though they may err in judgment as to the weight of testimony, or may decide directly against the evidence, subject to the limitation as to fraud and fraudulent imposition above stated. It may be remarked that this matter of fraud, or fraudulent imposition, could not be set up in an action at law, as this is. The patent on these grounds must be assailed by a proceeding in equity. Such is the law on this subject. See Johnson v. Towseley, supra, and Moore v. Robbins, supra. But if the officers of the land department award land to one person which has been granted to another, the courts of law can furnish a remedy. It is not within the power or jurisdiction of the land department to award that to one person which by an act of congress has been granted to another. The land department cannot grant land. It is incumbent on the land department, in executing the laws of congress in relation to the public lands, to award to a party claiming to enter and purchase land, such right as the laws of the United States have invested him with in regard to the land he claims; but if the laws have invested another with title by grant of the land to that other, a decision of the land department awarding it to another is a nullity. No title passes by such decision, though the officers of the land department have decided that he is entitled to it. To decide otherwise would be to hold that the land department can grant land contrary to an act of congress.

It is argued here on behalf of appellants that the officers of the land department have not decided as a matter of fact that the land in controversy was not swamp and overflowed. It seems to us that this contention, on a fair consideration and interpretation of the opinion of the register and receiver, is sound and maintainable, and that the decision of the register and receiver awards the land to Hodges and Upham on their claim, preferred under the seventh section of the act of July 23, 1866, and regardless of the fact whether the land in contest before them was swamp and overflowed or not. The language of their opinion on the point whether the land is swamp and overflowed or not is indefinite and ambiguous, and such that it cannot be said of it that it determines that the land is not swamp and overflowed. The opinion refers to the evidence, and says of it, "that it would seem to determine the question as to the character of the land as against the state." It does not say (as will be observed on a perusal of it) that the evidence shows the land to be dry land, and not swamp and overflowed, but that it would seem to do so. The opinion, in the next sentence, proceeds: "At any rate, these circumstances, coupled with the fact that prior to the act of July 23, 1866, and to the state's disposal of the land in good faith," etc., proceeding then to award the land to Hodges and Upham upon this claim under the seventh section of the act of congress just referred to. The judgment of the register and receiver is too indefinite in its terms to be regarded as a decision that the land here was not swamp and overflowed. Under these circumstances, it is argued that the defendants have a right to show that the land is swamp and overflowed; that as such it vested in the state by the act of 28th September, 1850, known as the "Swamp-Land Act;" and that, having so vested, it could not be divested and the title conferred on another, by the subsequent act of July 23, 1866.

Did the swamp-land act of 1850 grant the swamp and overflowed land within the exterior bounds of a grant, which were excluded on the final survey, to the state of California? This is a question of interpretation of the provisions of the act of 1850, considered in the light of and influenced by the nature of the grants made by the Mexican authorities in California. Was it the intention of the law-makers to grant to the state lands of the nature and character above mentioned? The question is one relating to the intent of the law-making power. We are of opinion that there was no such intent to grant by the act referred to. The reasons for this opinion we will proceed to give. It is the settled law of this state that the grantee of a Mexican grant is entitled to the possession of all the land within the exterior limits of the tract designated in the map or diseno, (which generally attended the application of a grant,) though the quantity intended to be allotted to him on the final survey is a much less quantity than that designated in the map or diseno, and this right continues until the final survey has been made and approved, and perhaps until the patent is issued; or, to express the rule more briefly, where the grant is of a smaller quantity (say three leagues) within a larger area, (say of ten leagues,) from which the three leagues are to be taken, that the grantee is entitled to the possession of the whole until the quantity (three leagues) to be allotted to him is set off by the final survey, and that he (the grantee) is entitled to recover possession of the whole ten leagues by action appropriate to that end, until the specific quantity granted him is set off.

The above is the rule declared in Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 621, followed in numerous cases to the same effect. Cornwall v. Culver, 16 Cal. 429; Riley v. Heisch, 18 Cal. 198; Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 Cal. 552. The same rule has been approved and declared to be the law by the supreme court of the United States in Van Reynegan v. Bolton, 95 U. S. 35, 36. We insert here that portion of the opinion (by FIELD, Justice) which relates to this point, as a clear exposition of the rule and the reasons on which it rests: "In the case at bar, the surveyor general for California disregarded the boundaries established upon the juridical possession delivered to the grantees. He proceeded upon the conclusion that the confirmations were restricted by the decree to one square league, to be measured out of the tract within those boundaries, which exceeded that amount by about fifteen hundred acres. Whether the terms of the decree justified his conclusion is a question upon which it is unnecessary for us to express an opinion. That is a question which must, in the first instance, be determined by the land department in carrying the decree into execution by a survey and patent. It is sufficient for the present case that the survey made was contested by the confirmees, and the contest was undetermined when this action was tried. Until finally approved, the survey could not impair their right to the possession of the entire tract as delivered by the former government to the grantee under whom they claim. Until then it was inoperative for any purpose. Even if the limitation to one square league should ultimately be held correct, that square league might be located in a different portion of the tract by direction of the land department, to which the supervision and correction of surveys of private land claims are intrusted. The confirmees could not measure off the quantity for themselves, and thus legally segregate it from the balance of the tract. The right to make the segregation rested exclusively with the government, and could only be exercised by its officers. Until they acted and effected the segregation, the confirmees were interested in preserving the entire tract from waste and injury, and in improving it; for until then they could not know what part might be assigned to them. Until then no third person could interfere with their right to the possession of the whole. No third person could be permitted to determine, in advance of such segregation, that any particular locality would fall within the surplus, and thereby justify his intrusion upon it, and its detention from them. If one person could in this way appropriate a particular parcel to himself, all persons could do so; and thus the confirmees would soon be stripped of the land which was intended by the government as a donation to its grantee, whose interests they have acquired, for the benefit of parties who were never in its contemplation. If the law were otherwise than as stated, the confirmees would find their possessions limited, first in one direction, and then in another; each intruder asserting that the parcel occupied by him fell within the surplus, until in the end they would be excluded from the entire tract." This right of possession is property, and full protection of it was granted to the Mexican grantee by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and by the constitution and laws of the United States. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 620, 621.

That the tract of land involved in this case was within the limits of the grant to Sutter was conclusively determined against defendants in the proceeding in the land-office considered in a former part of this opinion, where the land in suit was awarded to Hodges and Upham, under the seventh section of the act of congress of July 23, 1866. When the swamp-land act of the 28th of September, 1850, was passed, Sutter had a right to possession of the land sued for, and it is not to be supposed that the congress of the United States would grant land to one when another person had to it a right of possession for an indefinite period, granted to him by its laws at the time the grant is said to have been made. It cannot be presumed that congress would have granted directly and unconditionally to a person a tract of land of which the United States did not have the absolute and uncontrolled title, so that its grantee might at once take possession. It could not be predicated of such a grant as the swamp-land act that congress intended to grant land to the state when at the time of the grant Sutter had title to possession of the land, and might become invested with the full legal title. He would have been so invested if, on the final survey of his grant, the land in suit had been included in such final survey. The principle here invoked and relied on was adopted by the United States supreme court in Railroad Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S. 733, where it was held that a grant of land to the state of Kansas to aid in the construction of a railroad, embraced only the land whereto the complete title was in the United States at the date of the act, and was applicable only to public lands owned absolutely by the United States. This was held in regard to a grant of land to the state of Kansas, where at the time the grant was made the land in question was included in a reservation made to the Osage tribe of Indians. We think the rule of construction laid down in the case just cited shows that it was not the intention of congress to grant to the state of California by the act of September 28, 1850, lands the right to the possession of which was then vested in a Mexican grantee, and guaranteed to him by a treaty as well as by the constitution and laws of the United States. We see nothing in Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, or U. S. v. McLaughlin, 127 U. S. 428, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1177, in conflict with anything ruled herein. We cannot see that those cases have any correct application to the case under consideration. From the foregoing it follows that the judgment and order are without error, and must be affirmed.

There is some very significant evidence in the record in relation to the land in suit, upon which we will make some observations in its relation to the legislation of congress in regard to swamp and overflowed lands. The fourth section of the act of July 23, 1866, is in these words: "Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, that in all cases where township surveys have been or shall hereafter be made under the authority of the United States, and the plats thereof approved, it shall be the duty of the commissioner of the general land-office to certify over to the state of California, as swamp and overflowed, all the lands represented as such upon such approved plats within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year from the return and approval of such township plats. The commissioner shall direct the United States surveyor general for the State of California to examine the segregation maps and surveys of the swamp and overflowed lands made by said state; and, where he shall find them to conform to the system of surveys adopted by the United States, he shall construct and approve township plats accordingly, and forward them to the general land-office for approval: provided, that in segregating large bodies of land, notoriously and obviously swamp and overflowed, it shall not be necessary to subdivide the same, but to run the exterior lines of such body of land. In case such state surveys are found not to be in accordance with the system of United States surveys, and in such other townships as no survey has been made by the United States, the commissioner shall direct the surveyor general to make segregation surveys, upon application to said surveyor general by the governor of said state, within one year of such application, of all the swamp and overflowed land in such townships, and to report the same to the general land-office, representing and describing what land was swamp and overflowed under the grant, according to the best evidence he can obtain. If the authorities of said state shall claim as swamp and overflowed any land not represented as such upon the map or in the returns of the surveyors, the character of such land at the date of the grant, September twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and fifty, and the right to the same, shall be determined by testimony, to be taken before the surveyor general, who shall decide the same, subject to the approval of the commissioner of the general land-office." The record shows that the plaintiff offered in evidence the approved official township plat of township 12 N., range 3 E., M. D. M., filed in the United States land-office at Marysville, in this state, on August 2, 1869, and also the approved diagram of amendments to said plat from the office of the surveyor general of the United States for the state of California, dated 6th of September, 1869, filed in the United States land-office above mentioned, of the land district in which the land in controversy is situated, on September 9, 1869, showing the public lands and claims with specific boundaries within the rejected limits of the New Helvetia ranch. The above plat and diagram include the land involved herein, which is designated thereon as land claimed by purchasers of Mexican grantees, or their assignees, and which have been excluded from the final survey of the Sutter grant. It will be observed that the land involved in this suit was not represented on the approved plat, or the approved diagram of amendments to it as swamp and overflowed, and it therefore did not become the duty of the commissioner of the general land-office, under the fourth section of the act of 1866, above quoted, to certify such land over to the state. Nor does it appear in the record that any township plat has been constructed which represents such land to be swamp and overflowed. Under the provisions of the fourth section it will be seen that the governor of the state was vested with authority to have the swamp and overflowed lands segregated by survey on application to the surveyor general; and it was further provided in the same section that if the authorities of the state shall claim as swamp and overflowed any land not represented as such upon the map or in the returns of the surveyors, the character of such land at the date of the grant, (September 28, 1850,) and the right to the same, shall be determined by testimony, to be taken before the surveyor general, who shall decide the same, subject to the approval of the commissioner of the general land-office. In this case no steps have been taken by the governor or the state authorities to have the character of this land determined, to have it decided whether it was swamp and overflowed at the date of the grant. Nor does it appear that the defendants have ever taken any steps to have the governor or state authorities move in the matter. The patent under which the plaintiff makes title was issued on the 16th of December, 1882, on a claim commencing as far back as 1850. Defendants claim that their claim vested on a certificate of purchase issued on the 21st of July, 1856. The delay in this matter to have the character of the land determined as it could have been done under the section of the act of 1866 above quoted, though not conclusive, is strongly persuasive that the land was never of the character described by the swamp-land act of 1850 as swamp and overflowed. The court did not err in refusing to allow defendants to prove that the lands in suit belonged to the category of swamp and overflowed lands. We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment. The swamp-land grant of 1850 is one in present, and passed the title to the lands as of its date, but it could not attach to any specific tract until it was determined by the proper officer that the land was swamp in character. Under the act of 1850 it was the duty of the secretary of the interior to make out accurate lists and plats, and transmit the same to the governor of the state, and at the request of the latter, cause patents to issue therefor. No provision was made for a review of his action in ascertaining and designating the character of the lands. Under the act of July 23, 1866, which was passed to quiet land titles in California, the duty of identifying swamp lands by survey and segregation was put upon the surveyor general, subject to the approval of the land commissioner. It was provided that a hearing might be had by the state before the surveyor general for the purpose of showing that the township plats were incorrect. Provision was also made for the adjustment of the claims of bona fide purchasers from Mexican grantees, where the land purchased had been excluded from the survey of the grant on its final confirmation. These contests were heard before the register and receiver of the local land-office, under certain rules formulated by the commissioner. On August 2, 1869, the land in controversy was returned and designated upon the official plat as public land, claimed by purchasers of Mexican grantees, or their assigns. It was not returned as swamp land, and was not designated on the official plat with the usual government sections and subdivisions, but in accordance with existing lines of subdivisions, so as to include "permanent improvements," as provided by section 7 of the act of July 23, 1866. This plat, which in effect showed that the land was not regarded by the surveyor general as swamp and overflowed land, remained on file in the local land-office from August, 1869, to June, 1888, without challenge by any one—the state or its grantees—as to the character of the land. Hodges and Upham filed, in the local land-office, in September, 1869, a pre-emption claim for the land under section 7 of the act of 1866, claiming to have purchased it for a valuable consideration from the Mexican grantees, and placed valuable improvements thereon in part only. On this statement citations were issued by the officers of the land-office to the defendant, who had filed on a portion of the tract described in the Hodges claim, and to the state, to show cause against the application of Hodges and Upham to purchase. The state did not appear, but the defendant herein appeared, and contested the application. An appeal was taken to the commissioner of the general land-office, and from his decision to the secretary of the interior, who finally determined that the applicants were entitled to a patent. I think the proceedings had on application of plaintiff's grantors, who purchased the land under the provisions of the seventh section of the act of July 23, 1866, and the decision rendered by the department, are a complete bar to any claim of the state, and to the claim of the defendants. It is true, the proceedings against McNamara involved other lands than those in controversy here, but they also involved the right of said grantors to purchase the lands in controversy as against all parties to that action. At the time those proceedings were pending, McNamara held a certificate of purchase, under which he now claims title to the lands in suit. Although that certificate was issued in 1860, and the hearing before the land-office was not had until March, 1871, yet I think McNamara's right was concluded therein. The application of Hodges and Upham was based upon the allegation that they were bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration from Mexican grantees of land which had been excluded from the final survey of the grant; that they had made improvements, and occupied the land according to the lines of their original purchase, and that there was no valid adverse right except that of the United States. In accordance with the rules of the department the said McNamara and all other persons interested were duly cited to appear and contest their right to purchase the land under the act of July 23, 1866. The defendant did appear and contest the claimant's right to a portion of the land, but made no contest as to that portion which is in controversy here, and for which he at that time held a certificate of purchase. The state had parted with her title to the defendant, and was interested in the contest. It was the duty of McNamara, as grantee of the state, to defend whatever claim he had under his certificate. It seems to me that, in the absence of fraud, the decision of the land department was binding on all the parties and all the world. Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 488, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985; French v. Fyan, 93 U. S. 169. The defendants did not offer to show that the land was swamp and overflowed at the time the grant took effect, to-wit, September 28, 1850. The evidence offered was all addressed to the question as to its character at the time of the trial. The court did not err, therefore, in excluding the evidence.

EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the sole question is one of fact, and the evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the court, the judgment will be affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; C. W. C. ROWELL, Judge.

E. B. Stanton and Goodcell & Leonard, for appellant. Rolfe & Freeman, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. There seems to have been but one material issue of fact made by the pleadings in this action, and that was as to the ownership of the land described in the complaint. On this issue the court found for the plaintiff. We think the evidence is sufficient to sustain this finding. We find no error in the record. Judgment and order affirmed.

PER CURIAM. This case presents the same question as was involved in Carroll v. Seymour, ubi supra, (No. 14,221, just decided by this court,) and upon the authority of that case the judgment and order are affirmed.

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—DESCRIPTION OF PREMISES—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

Where the description in a mortgage annexed to and made part of the complaint, in a suit to foreclose, shows that the mortgaged premises were, at the time the suit was commenced, in a legal subdivision, which the court judicially knows to have been within the boundaries of the county in which the suit was brought, it cannot be objected that the complaint does not show that the premises were so situated.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. TOWNER, Judge.

Wells & Hendershot and Chas. S. McKelvey, for appellants. Lee & Scott, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an appeal from a decree foreclosing a mortgage. The complaint is in all respects sufficient, and, as the answer raised no material issue, the court properly gave judgment for the plaintiff on the pleadings. It is objected that the complaint does not show that the mortgaged premises are in the county of Orange, where the action was commenced and the decree rendered. But the description in the mortgage, which is annexed to and made a part of the complaint, shows that the mortgaged premises are part of a legal subdivision which we know to have been within the boundaries of Orange county at the date of the commencement of the action, though at the date of the mortgage it was in Los Angeles county. Judgment affirmed.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICE—ACTION AGAINST RECEIVER—ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIM.

1. An action against a receiver appointed to receive and hold the rents of land pending an appeal in ejectment, brought by one to whom the successful party assigns her right to such rents, is not an equitable action, but an action for money had and received, and a justice has jurisdiction thereof. The rents in his hands are no part of the judgment in ejectment.

2. The assignment is not made an assignment of part of a demand only, by the fact that the receiver holds the money subject to costs.

In bank. Application for bill of review. Thornton & Mersbach, for petitioner.

APPLICATION FOR WRIT OF REVIEW.

GAROUTTE, J. The facts set out in the petitioner's application are as follows: That one Horace W. Philbrook, upon the 15th day of April, 1890, commenced an action against the petitioner in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco upon a complaint stating, among other things: "That on the 24th day of January, 1889, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, a civil action was commenced by Edward Harrison, administrator, et al., against Mary J. Lynch et al., for the purpose of recovering from said Mary J. Lynch a certain lot of land, and of barring the other defendants of all right, title, and interest therein. That on the 24th day of February, 1889, a judgment was rendered in said action against the said defendants. That on the 27th day of March, 1889, and prior to the commencement of the action of Philbrook v. Garniss, the superior court appointed James R. Garniss (defendant herein) receiver, to receive, hold, and preserve, during the pendency of an appeal from said judgment, the rents of said lot of land. That prior to January 1, 1890, said receiver, as such, received the sum of four hundred and eighty dollars as rent of the property. That on the 8th day of November, 1889, said superior court granted a new trial in said cause, and upon the 11th day of December, 1889, rendered judgment in said action in favor of Mary J. Lynch, declaring her to be the owner of said lot of land and the money in the hands of the receiver. That on the 28th day of February, 1890, said Mary J. Lynch assigned to this plaintiff (Philbrook) all moneys belonging to her in the hands of said receiver.

er. That on the 7th day of March, 1890, the court settled the receiver's accounts, and allowed him as credits as such officer all of said $480, except the sum of $274.50, and directed him to pay said sum to Mary J. Lynch. That on the 10th day of March, 1890, plaintiff notified the receiver of the assignment, and demanded the payment to him of the $274.50, but he has refused to pay the same. Plaintiff prays for judgment," etc. Defendant answered this complaint with a general denial, and at the opening of the trial objected to the justice's court trying the action, upon the ground that it was an action in equity, and therefore the court had no jurisdiction. The objections were overruled, and upon trial the plaintiff obtained judgment as prayed for. The defendant appealed the case to the superior court, filed an amended answer, and at the commencement of the trial objected to the jurisdiction of the superior court to try the case, upon the ground that its jurisdiction in equity was original, and it had no appellate jurisdiction in such a case. The objections were overruled, and trial resulted in another judgment for plaintiff, as prayed for in the complaint. That on the trial of said case both the justice's court and the superior court exceeded their jurisdiction for the reasons abovestated, and petitioner has no remedy, except by this application.

It appears that the petitioner occupies the somewhat novel position of having appealed his case to the superior court upon questions of law and fact; then objecting to said court trying the case upon the ground of want of jurisdiction; and, upon that objection being overruled, taking the chance of an adverse verdict; and having lost that chance, then proceeding, by review, to this court to test the jurisdiction of the superior court. It seems the much better practice for petitioner would have been to directly attack the jurisdiction of the justice's court in some appropriate manner, rather than appeal the case to the superior court upon its merits. Indeed, if petitioner's contention is true, that the superior court had no jurisdiction to try the case upon appeal, because the justice's court had no jurisdiction to try the case at all, then it is difficult to see how the petitioner could secure a standing in the superior court upon appeal for any purpose; for after a case has been tried in the justice's court upon its merits, and an appeal is taken to the appellate court upon the law and the facts, or upon the law, (when a new trial is granted,) the cause is heard de novo in the superior court. Owing to the views we entertain upon the other branch of the case, it is not necessary to consider the question as to whether the conduct of the petitioner in appealing this cause to the superior court, upon the law and facts, creates such an estoppel against him as that he cannot be heard to object to the jurisdiction of that court to try the cause.

Petitioner contends that the complaint in the case of Philbrook v. Garniss shows an equitable cause of action of which the justice's court had no jurisdiction. Respondent insists that the complaint shows a claim for money had and received by defendant to plaintiff's use. A receiver may be appointed in an action of ejectment, after judgment, during the pendency of the appeal; and, reading the application of the petitioner by the very dim light thrown upon the question by the meager facts stated as to the character of the action of Harrison v. Lynch, it appears to be a proceeding in ejectment. We then find the petitioner appointed receiver, after judgment for the plaintiff, and pending proceedings for appeal, for the express purpose of collecting and preserving the rents of the land. Thereafter, the motion for a new trial being granted by the lower court, and upon the succeeding trial judgment going for the defendant, the powers and duties of the receiver were clearly at an end. "Though a receiver may be, and generally is appointed upon the application of one of the parties interested in the property which he is to preserve, his holding is not merely for the benefit of such party, or of any other party. It is the holding of the court for the equal benefit of all persons who may be finally adjudged by the court to have rights in it. Where, however, the rights of the parties are established, he is considered as holding for the benefit of the parties entitled to the property." Beach, Rec. § 252. The contention of petitioner that these moneys in his hands were a part of the judgment in the case of Harrison v. Lynch et al. cannot be sustained. Indeed, the necessity of a specific decree by the court, declaring them the property of defendant Lynch, was not required, as she was necessarily entitled to them by reason of the judgment in her favor as to the possession of the realty. If plaintiff had finally recovered in the action, he could have had no judgment against defendant Lynch for these moneys, for she never had possession of them. They were in the custody of the court. The amount was certain, and had been preserved by the receiver in specie, for the only purpose that it might be delivered upon the order of the court to the party who should finally recover in the action. The order of the court decreeing that this money was the property of Mary J. Lynch was not a judgment for the rents and profits of the realty; it was no money judgment whatever; it was no judgment upon which an execution could have issued against anybody. It was not a judgment against the plaintiff, and it was not a judgment against the receiver, for he was not a party to the suit. This decree, then, establishing the status of the funds in the hands of the receiver, was not a part of the judgment within the pleadings or the proof in the case of Harrison v. Lynch. Neither was the assignment by Mary J. Lynch to Philbrook of the moneys in the hands of the receiver an assignment of a part of a demand. She assigned her entire demand, amounting to $480. The mere fact that this money was held by the receiver, subject to a lien upon it for his fees and costs of receivership, and was thus charged with such costs, which he was entitled to deduct from the amount upon the settlement of his account, in no way affects the question of Mary J. Lynch's assignment of the entire demand. Her act in the matter was an entire, full, and complete as it was possible to make it, and it effected the exact result contended for by petitioner, for it obliterated the entire demand. What the assignee failed to obtain of the demand, Garniss, the debtor, secured for himself. Why should he be allowed to complain that this assignment was for a part of the demand, when at this very moment the balance of the demand is in his pocket, and his own property by a decree of the court. The rule that a court of law will not recognize an assignment of part only of an entire demand or judgment is based upon the reason that the liability of the debtor extends in favor of one person, and the law will not impose upon him the burden of being subjected to several suits or executions by different persons for fractional parts of the demand or judgment. In the case at bar, for the reasons already stated, this principle has no application. It seems clear that the petitioner held this money as money had and received for the benefit of Mary J. Lynch, and that the action of Philbrook v. Garniss was in assumpsit; an action at law, and not in equity; and was within the jurisdiction of the justice's court, and the appellate jurisdiction of the superior court. Let the application be denied. So ordered.

KLOSE v. HILLENBRAND et al. (No. 13,927.)

DEEDS—CANCELLATION—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to set aside a deed as obtained by fraud it was shown that the grantor, an old man of weak mind, was falsely advised by his attending physician, the grantee's father-in-law, that he was about to die, and that, in order not to delay certain transactions in connection with the land, he had better convey his interest therein to the grantee; but the instrument was to contain a clause by which it should not go into effect, unless he died of that illness. The deed was drawn without any such clause, however, and the grantee got possession thereof without the consent of the grantor, had it placed on record, and thereafter claimed title under it. Held, that the evidence warranted a judgment setting aside the deed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

Bishop & Watt, (John H. Durst, of counsel,) for appellants. Haskell & Meyer and Otto Tum Suden, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff, Klose, had judgment in this action that a certain deed of conveyance to a one-half interest in certain real property situate in San Francisco from him to one William Hillenbrand, of date the 25th of April, 1888, was procured by fraud and artifice; that it was null and void, and conveyed no interest of Klose to the property therein described; and that ever since that date the plaintiff had been, and is now, the owner of, and entitled to the possession of, an undivided one-half part or share of the lot of land described in the deed, with the improvements thereon. And further, that a conveyance from William Hillenbrand of the same property, by deed executed on the 21st of January, 1889, to his wife, Anna Hillenbrand, was executed in fraud of the rights of the plaintiff, and is null and void. It was further ordered and adjudged that the plaintiff be let in to the quiet possession, occupation, and enjoyment of the undivided one-half part or share of the lot of land and premises described in the judgment, and that the plaintiff recover his costs. From that judgment, and an order denying a new trial, this appeal is taken.

It appears from the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff that he was at the time he signed and acknowledged the deed to William Hillenbrand a person advanced in years, and of great weakness of mind, although not amounting to disqualification; that he made the deed without adequate consideration and without independent advice; that he was induced to make that instrument by an imposition practiced upon him on the part of Dr. Schmitz, the father of Anna Hillenbrand, who was the plaintiff's attending physician, in this: that Klose was informed by the doctor that he was dangerously sick, and that it would be better, in order not to retard the building of a house on the lot conveyed, which was then being erected by William Hillenbrand and Klose jointly, that he, Klose, should execute a deed to Hillenbrand of Klose's interest in the property, but that this instrument should have included in it a clause that it was not to go into effect unless Klose should die from his then illness, and should not be delivered or go into effect until after his death from such illness. But without any authority from Klose, after Schmitz obtained the deed in this way, Hillenbrand got possession of it, and placed it upon record. After Klose found this out he was uneasy, and asked to look at it, so that he could have it examined by a friend, presumably to see if his wishes had been carried out as promised. He was put off, however, from time to time, by the promises of Hillenbrand to deal fairly with him, and in good faith carry out the original design as understood by Klose, viz., that if he got well from the illness for which the father of Mrs. Hillenbrand was treating him the deed should be destroyed. But so far from drawing the deed as he agreed to, or delivering it as he promised, the physician of Klose violated both his agreements, with the knowledge and connivance of Hillenbrand and wife. The deceived and confiding old man brought this action after he found that, so far from keeping the promises made to him, these parties, bent on preserving their unjust advantage, had fully consummated it, as they supposed, by Hillenbrand conveying the property to his wife.

It is first contended for the appellants that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. We think that which was introduced by the plaintiff is ample for that purpose.

It is next contended that the complaint does not allege that the deed was to contain a clause that it was not to go into effect unless the plaintiff died from his then illness, but that the pleading only alleges that the clause was to be to the effect that the deed was not to go into effect until after the death of Klose, without reference to whether he died from his then illness or not. That, therefore, the evidence and findings are conflicting with the case made in the complaint. A careful examination of the pleading in question does not bear out this contention. It is manifest from the whole language employed, although the same is not couched in the clearest terms for that purpose, that the pleading as to that matter conforms to the findings and evidence. It is alleged in the complaint, and found to be a fact by the finding, "that said William Hillenbrand at once took possession of said deed from the hands of said Schmitz, [the doctor,] and caused the same to be recorded by said Schmitz in the office of the county recorder of the city and county of San Francisco, as though the same had been delivered to him by this plaintiff, when in truth and in fact the said deed has never been delivered to said Hillenbrand." The argument made in this connection by the appellants for a reversal of the judgment and order seems to be that this finding shows that the deed was delivered by Schmitz, and that he had the power confided to him to deliver it conditionally; that, although he used this power by violation of his promise to the plaintiff, yet it was a legal delivery, and hence the finding that there was no delivery conflicts with the fact which states that delivery was given by the possession taken by Hillenbrand from Schmitz. In other words, although Schmitz violated his promise not to deliver, yet this did not affect the delivery so far as Hillenbrand was concerned. We cannot conceive how such an act can accomplish the legal result claimed. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 527, 17 Pac. Rep. 689; Civil Code, § 1572. The allegation of the pleading and the finding show no authorized delivery to Hillenbrand, but a possession and a recording of the deed fraudulently obtained and made. But if we were to concede the specific points made by the appellants involving the pleadings and findings as being well taken, the judgment and order should not be reversed, as the pleadings, findings, and evidence all show this much, at the very least, viz.: That Klose made a deed that he did not intend to make; that he was old, sick, and of impaired intellect; that the instrument was made without any adequate consideration, and without independent advice, but, to the contrary, by intended and deceptive advice; and that he would have moved to set it aside in reasonable time but for the promises made him by William Hillenbrand; and that, as soon as he unwillingly discovered that he had been deceived by those he had reason most to trust, he sought through the courts to obtain redress. Under this state of facts, as we understand the rule in such cases, laid down in Richards v. Donner, 72 Cal.

210, 211, 13 Pac. Rep. 584, it would seem that no prejudicial error has been committed, and that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

McKEEN V. NAUGHTON. (No. 13,630.)

APPEAL FROM THE JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—FAILURE TO FILE BOND—ESTOPPEL.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 974, 978, the undertaking on appeal from a justice of the peace must be filed within 80 days from the rendition of judgment in order to give jurisdiction, and, where it is not filed in time, the judgment, on appeal, of the municipal court of appeals of San Francisco, to which it was transferred from the county court, is void.

2. The fact that the appellant therein resisted a motion to dismiss will not estop him to set up the invalidity of the judgment in an action involving title to land acquired at a sale thereunder.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

James F. Smith and Smith & Maurasky, for appellant. J. C. Bates, (Myrick & Deering, of counsel,) for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. Action to determine conflicting claims to certain real property. The appellant claims title to the land in controversy by virtue of a purchase thereof at a sale under an execution issued upon a judgment of the municipal court of appeals of San Francisco, in favor of one Harry Pateman against Robert McKeen and W. H. Norton, for the sum of $277.70, including costs. The action of Pateman v. McKeen and Norton was commenced in the court of a justice of the peace for the city and county of San Francisco, and judgment therein rendered on May 8, 1879, in favor of the plaintiff therein, and against the defendants in that action. On June 6, 1879, the defendants therein served and filed a notice of appeal from said judgment to the county court of said city and county, but no undertaking thereon was filed until June 9, 1879. The case was tried in the municipal court of appeals on September 24, 1879, and on that day said court rendered the judgment under which the appellant claims. No order was made by the county court transferring the case to the municipal court of appeals until after the latter court had given its judgment. But on November 11, 1879, such order of transfer was made, and which also directed that the same be filed nunc pro tunc as of June 14, 1879. It is claimed by respondent that this judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and that, therefore, no title passed under the execution sale mentioned, and this is the principal question for decision here. It is unnecessary to determine whether it was competent for the legislature, under the constitution then in force, to transfer to the municipal court of appeals a portion of the jurisdiction conferred by that constitution upon the county court, as it is clear that the municipal court of appeals never acquired any jurisdiction of the case of Pateman v. McKeen and Norton for other reasons. There was no attempt to take an appeal to the municipal court of appeals, and the attempted appeal to the county court was ineffectual. It is assumed that the undertaking given upon such attempted appeal was sufficient in amount, still the county court acquired no jurisdiction of the action, as the undertaking was not filed within 80 days after the rendition of the judgment in the justice's court. Code Civil Proc. §§ 974, 978; Coker v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 177. In the case just cited this court said: "To effectuate an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, three things are necessary, viz.: The filing of a notice of appeal with the justice, the service of a copy of the notice upon the adverse party, and the filing of a written undertaking; and all these things must be done within thirty days after the rendition of the judgment. Code Civil Proc. §§ 694, 978. All of these are jurisdictional prerequisites; none of them can be dispensed with, nor can any one of them be supplied, or, if fatally defective, be remedied, after the time limited in the statute; for, until all the prerequisites are completed, the appeal is not effectual for any purpose." This view of the law has been approved in the later cases of Hall v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 25, 8 Pac. Rep. 509, and Dutertre v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 536, 24 Pac. Rep. 284, and must be considered as the settled rule here. The act creating the municipal court of appeals did not attempt to confer upon it any other than appellate jurisdiction,—“the same power and jurisdiction in civil appeal cases as is possessed by the said county court.” Act April 1, 1878, St. 1877-78, p. 947. And it would seem that, in order to call into exercise this appellate jurisdiction in a given case, there must have been an effectual appeal taken in such case, either directly to such court or to the county court; and if in the case of an attempted appeal to the county court the action should in any manner be transferred, either by force of the statute referred to, or by order of the county court, to the municipal court of appeals, that court would not thereby obtain any greater jurisdiction of the cause than was possessed by the county court. The appeal to the county court in the case of Pateman v. McKeen and Norton being ineffectual for any purpose, for the reasons hereinbefore stated, it necessarily follows that the judgment rendered on such appeal in the municipal court of appeals was without authority, and therefore void.

2. It appears that there was a motion made in the municipal court of appeals to dismiss the appeal in the case of Pateman v. McKeen and Norton, on the ground that no appeal had been taken as required by law. The motion was denied. The appellant insists that thereby the respondent here is estopped from asserting want of jurisdiction in that court to hear and give judgment in the case. If it be assumed that the respondent resisted that motion, still we do not think that such action would estop him to question in this action the jurisdiction of that court. The matter of this alleged estoppel is not set out in the answer of the defendant, as it should be if relied upon as a defense. Clarke v. Huber, 25 Cal. 594; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 39. But, passing over this defect in the answer, the fact that the appellants therein resisted the motion to dismiss the appeal in that action cannot work the estoppel claimed. Every fact in connection with the attempted taking of the appeal was within the knowledge of the respondent therein, and, being chargeable with a knowledge of the law, neither he nor the appellant here, who stands in his place, can be heard to say that he was deceived by any contention of the appellants in that action, as to the law governing appeals from justices' courts, and involved in the decision of that motion. "The representation, in order to work an estoppel, must generally be a statement of fact. It can rarely happen that the statement of a proposition of law will conclude the party making it from denying its correctness, except when it is understood to mean nothing but a simple statement of fact." Bigelow, Estop. p. 572. There is nothing in this case which takes it out of this general rule. Judgment and order affirmed.

CONTRACTS—BREACH—JOINDER OF ACTIONS—PLEADING.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 427, subd. 1, there may be joined in a single action a claim for damages for defendant's breach of his obligations under a certain contract, and a quantum meruit for the performance by plaintiff of his obligations under the same contract.

2. Where the contract between plaintiff and defendant provides for the former's taking possession of land for three years, and the mutual performance of certain obligations during the whole term, and defendant, within less than a year, notifies plaintiff that he repudiates the contract, and turns him out of possession, plaintiff may sue at once for breach of contract without waiting for the time to perform the other undertakings.

3. Where plaintiff undertakes to irrigate the land thoroughly before April 1st, and defendant undertakes to construct an irrigating ditch, such ditch must be constructed before April 1st.

4. Though plaintiff undertakes to build a rabbit-tight fence to protect the vines he is to plant, performance is not due where defendant prevents his planting the vines.

5. After plaintiff has been turned out of possession he need not demand the deed for a portion of the land defendant contracted to make him before he brings an action for damages.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; C. H. MARKS, Judge.

Breckinridge & Peck and Law & Law, for appellant. J. W. Knox, R. H. Ward, and Baldwin & Campbell, for respondents.

FITZGERALD, C. This is an action for damages for breach of contract. Two alleged causes of action are separately stated in the amended complaint, in each of which the contract, which is in writing, is declared on in hæc verba, and contains in brief the following terms and conditions: On the part of plaintiff: (1) During the fall of 1888 to thoroughly plow, level, and put in good condition, to irrigate and plant in vines and trees, all of lots 49 and 50. (2) Before April 1, 1889, to thoroughly irrigate, cultivate, and plant one-fourth each of said lots in first-class Malaga raisin grape-vines, and the remaining three-fourths of each of said lots in first-class Muscat raisin grape-vines, and to plant around each of said lots, in the manner therein provided, such trees as the defendants should furnish for that purpose. (3) For three full years from date of contract, to irrigate, cultivate, prune, and in every way properly care for, and each year during said term replant at his own cost all of the vines and trees planted or set out by him on lots 49 and 50 which should die or fail to thrive during that time. (4) To protect for said full term of three years said vines and trees by a good rabbit-tight fence around each of said lots, with the right granted to plaintiff to remove said fence at the end of said term if he shall so desire. (5) To deliver to defendants at the end of said term of three years all of said lots 49 and 50, fully set out and planted in vines and trees as herein agreed, all of said trees and vines to be in good thrifty condition. (6) To immediately construct, white-wash, or paint a dwelling-house upon lots 71 and 72, and keep the same in good condition during the entire term. On the part of defendants: (1) To allow plaintiff to enter upon at once, and to use and possess, for three years from date of contract, for the purposes heretofore mentioned, all of lots 49 and 50. (2) To allow plaintiff to have the use and possession of all of lots 71 and 72 during the whole of said term for such purposes as he shall desire. (3) To furnish to plaintiff one-half of one full water-right from the Crocker-Huffman Canal & Irrigation Company, and to construct a canal or ditch from the nearest branch of said Crocker-Huffman Canal, along Hattley avenue, to and along one side of said lots 49 and 72. (4) On October 3, 1891, provided plaintiff shall have complied with all the terms and conditions on his part, to execute to plaintiff a conveyance of all of lots 71 and 72. Time is made the essence of the contract; and plaintiff and defendants bind themselves each one to the other for the faithful performance of all the covenants of the contract in the penal sum of $10,000 as liquidated damages to be paid by the failing party to the other. The complaint specifically alleges: (1) Performance or excuse of performance by plaintiff of each obligation resting upon him prior to the notice of repudiation by defendants. (2) Readiness and willingness to perform others. (3) Prevention of performance by defendants failing and refusing to dig the ditch and furnish the water. (4) That on June 10, 1889, while plaintiff was in possession of said land under said contract, and engaged in performing the covenants on his part to be performed, defendants notified plaintiff in writing that they, defendants, would not perform said contract on their part, and then and there prevented plaintiff from any further performance of the terms of said contract on his part; and that said notice has never been retracted. That plaintiff, within a reasonable time after receipt of said notice, removed and vacated, and defendants entered upon and took possession of said lands in said contract mentioned. There is also a general allegation of performance of all the conditions precedent on plaintiff's part to be performed, except in so far as he was prevented by the acts or omissions of defendants. Defendants demurred generally to the whole complaint and separately upon the same grounds to each cause of action therein stated, which demurrer was sustained by the court below, and, upon plaintiff refusing to further amend, final judgment was rendered in favor of defendants. The case comes here by appeal upon the judgment roll alone.

The first objection taken by the demurrer—that several causes of action have been improperly united—is disposed of by the statement that the separate causes of action stated in the amended complaint arose out of the express or implied terms and conditions of the same contract. In other words, the first cause of action stated is for damages for breach of the actual terms of the contract, with each item of damage separately and specifically alleged, and all summed up into one general allegation of damages. The statement of the second cause of action is on a quantum meruit, and particularizes each item of work and labor performed and materials furnished, and the reasonable value thereof. Several causes of action may be united in the same complaint, where they all arise out of contracts expressed or implied. Code Civil Proc. § 427, subd. 1. Under the second objection—that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action—several questions are raised, and such of them as are necessary for us to consider will be taken up and briefly disposed of in the order in which they are presented.

1. "The action is prematurely brought." The complaint shows upon its face that the action was brought subsequent to the written notice of the repudiation of the contract by defendants, when the plaintiff was not in default, and after he had removed from and vacated, and defendants had entered upon and taken possession of, the premises heretofore mentioned. This constituted such a breach as authorized the plaintiff to immediately sue without waiting for the time to arrive for the performance of the other conditions. Section 1440, Civil Code; Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 229; Bunge v. Koop, 48 N. Y. 225; Crist v. Armour, 34 Barb. 378.

2. Nor is there anything in the point contended for, that defendants had until October, 1891, within which to dig the ditch and furnish the water. This provision of the contract is susceptible, as we think, of but one construction, and that is that the ditch should be dug, and the water furnished, when the time for irrigation by plaintiff arrived, and this is fixed by the terms of the contract at a period prior to April 1, 1889. Chipman v. Emeric, 5 Cal. 49. Is not in point.

3. Nor is the point well taken that there is no allegation of performance or excuse for non-performance of the covenant to protect the trees and vines by building around lots 49 and 50 a rabbit-tight fence. The contract plainly shows that the fence was intended solely for the protection of the vines and trees, and until there were vines and trees to protect there was no necessity for the fence. The complaint alleges that the vines died (the trees never having been furnished) for the want of the water which the defendants agreed, but failed, to furnish. Performance of this covenant was not due; therefore not necessary to be excused. But admitting that it was, the allegation, "was ready and willing to irrigate, prune, cultivate, and in every way care for said vines and trees, as promised in said agreement," is sufficiently broad to cover this obligation. Bunge v. Koop, 48 N. Y. 225; Crist v. Armour, 34 Barb. 378; Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 229.

The only other point which we propose to notice, that the suit cannot be maintained because there is no allegation of demand for a deed, is equally as untenable as the others. Such demand was unnecessary. Why should the plaintiff be required to do that which the defendants have expressly notified him in writing that they would not do? The law does not require the performance of a useless act, and, when it is made to appear by the defendants' own act that the demand would have been refused, then they cannot be heard to object that no demand was made. Parrott v. Byers, 40 Cal. 614; Wood v. McDonald, 66 Cal. 546, 6 Pac. Rep. 452. While we are of the opinion that the first cause of action, as stated in the amended complaint, is not entirely free from defects, some of which might have been reached by special demurrer, yet, on the whole, we are satisfied that it states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In relation to the second cause of action, which is a statement on a quantum meruit, we have been unable to discover any defect whatever,—a position evidently concurred in by counsel for respondents, for they do not appear to have urged any very serious objection to it. If either cause of action state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, then the demurrer should have been overruled. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

SMITH et al. v. SMITH. (No. 13,887.)

VENUE—COUNTY OF DEFENDANT'S RESIDENCE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 392, 395, providing that actions to recover real property, or for the determination of any right therein, may be brought in the county where the real estate is situated, but "in all other cases" the action must be brought in the county of defendant's residence, a suit to compel the reconveyance of both real and personal property, and for an accounting of the rents and profits by defendant, and a personal judgment against him for the amount found to be due, must be brought in the county of defendant's residence, and not where the land is situated.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

Law & Law and Jas. H. Budd, for appellant. J. C. Campbell and P. W. Bennett, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. This action was commenced in Tuolumne county against the defendant, who was then a resident of the county of Merced. After the service of the summons upon the defendant, and at the time of his demurring to the complaint, he filed an affidavit of merits, and demanded in writing that the place of trial of the action be changed from Tuolumne county to Merced county, upon the ground that Merced was the proper county for the trial of the action, and supported his motion by an affidavit that at the time of the commencement of the action he was, and had been for many years prior thereto, a resident of the county of Merced. The motion was denied, and the defendant has appealed from the order denying the same. It is alleged in the complaint that in July, 1876, one D. G. Smith, under whom the plaintiffs claim, was the owner and in possession of certain real estate in Tuolumne county, and certain estate in Merced county, and certain personal property consisting of upwards of 26,000 sheep, together with horses, wagons, harnesses, and camp equipage, and was at the same time indebted to the defendant in the sum of $31,000, and to other persons in the further sum of $33,000; and that, "for the purpose of securing the payment of said indebtedness," it was agreed between said D. G. Smith and the defendant that said D. G. Smith "should deed by conveyance absolute on its face, but which in fact should be a mortgage, all his right, title, and interest in and to all of said real and personal property to the defendant, who was to carry on the business of said D. G. Smith, to-wit, that of sheep-raising, and pay from the proceeds of said business all the indebtedness of said D. G. Smith, and, when said indebtedness had been fully paid and discharged by the defendant, he was to reconvey all of said property, real and personal, and the increase thereof, to said D. G. Smith;" that "in furtherance of and in accordance with said agreement, and with the purpose and intent of complying with its terms and securing the payment of said indebtedness, said D. G. Smith executed and delivered to the defendant conveyances absolute on their face, but which were in fact mortgages, conveying all the aforesaid real and personal property to the defendant, and said property was then delivered to the defendant, and that the defendant has ever since been in possession thereof, and has had the use and received the proceeds and increase thereof, for the purpose of complying with the terms of said agreement." The complaint further alleges that "the defendant has received from said property, and from the proceeds and increase thereof, large sums of money which greatly exceed all that was necessary to carry on said business and pay the expenses thereof, and also to pay all the indebtedness of said D. G. Smith;" that the defendant ever since said conveyance to him "has had and now retains the sole and exclusive use, possession, and benefit of all of said property, and of all the proceeds and increase thereof." Upon this complaint the plaintiffs pray for a judgment against the defendant that it be decreed that the absolute conveyances aforesaid were and are mortgages, and that the indebtedness which they were given to secure has been fully paid, and the defendant convey said real and personal estate, together with the proceeds and increase thereof, to the plaintiffs, and that the defendant account to the plaintiffs for all of said real estate, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and all of said personal property, and the proceeds and increase thereof, and that plaintiffs have judgment against him for such sum as shall be found to be due upon such accounting, after satisfying such mortgage indebtedness.

It does not appear from the complaint whether the conveyance of the real estate was distinct from that of the personal property, or whether the conveyance of the real estate in Tuolumne county was by a separate instrument from that which conveyed the real estate in Merced county, the averment being that said D. G. Smith did execute to the defendant conveyances "conveying all the said real and personal property." Whether we construe this averment as an allegation that each conveyance included both real and personal property, or that one conveyance embraced only real estate, while the personal property was conveyed by another, is immaterial for the purpose of determining this appeal. Section 392, Code Civil Proc., provides that "actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as provided in this Code: (1) For the recovery of real property, of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property." Section 395, Id., provides that "in all other cases the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action."

The general spirit and policy of the statute is to give to the defendant the right of having all personal actions against him tried in the county of his residence. Provision is made for the trial of actions affecting real estate in the county where the land is situated, and for the trial of certain other designated actions in the county where the cause of action arose, but the general rule for the place of trial is prescribed in section 395 by the declaration that "in all other cases" the action must be tried in the county in which the defendant resides at the commencement of the action. This section is general and comprehensive in its terms, and embraces all other cases than those which are specified in the three preceding sections. It is intended to protect the defendant against the expense and inconvenience of being compelled to go to a distant county to defend himself against an action that might be commenced against him there, and is in accordance with the principles that obtain wherever the common law prevails, that the plaintiff, who would seek redress from a defendant, must seek it in the county where he resides. When, however, the subject-matter of the action is local, and the judgment which is sought is to operate directly upon that subject-matter, it is provided that the action shall be tried in the county where the subject-matter of the action is situated. This being an exception to the general rule, the conditions under which the exception is claimed must be clearly and distinctly shown. The plaintiff cannot, by uniting in his complaint matters which form the subject of a personal action with matters which form the subject of a local action, compel the defendant to have both those matters tried in a county other than that in which he resides. It is only when real estate alone is the subject-matter of the action that the provisions of section 392 can be invoked against a defendant who resides in a county different from that in which the land is situated. If, in his complaint, the plaintiff join with such a cause of action another which is not embraced in its provisions, or if he also seeks a remedy against the defendant upon matters which are not embraced within the provisions of this section, his action becomes one of those "other cases" provided for in section 395, which the defendant is entitled to have tried in the county of his residence.

It is evident, upon the examination of the complaint herein, that the primary object of the action is to obtain from the defendant an accounting of his transactions in carrying on the business of sheep-raising under the agreement of July, 1876, with a personal judgment against him for the excess that upon such accounting may be found to have been received by him above the amount required to discharge the indebtedness of his grantor, and that he reconvey the property to the plaintiffs. The basis of the plaintiffs' cause of action against the defendant is contained in their allegation that "he has received from said property and from the proceeds and increase thereof large sums of money, which said sums greatly exceed all that was necessary to carry on the said business and pay the expenses thereof, and also to pay all the indebtedness of said D. G. Smith, covenanted to be paid in said agreement." The "proceeds and increase" of the personal property are treated in the complaint as distinct from the "rents, issues, and profits" of the real estate. It is under this allegation that the plaintiffs demand an accounting from the defendant, and ask that they may "have judgment against him for such sum as shall be found to be due upon such accounting." An action for an accounting is a proceeding in equity, and is essentially a personal action. The defendant has the right under section 395, Code Civil Proc., to have such action tried in the county of his residence. The plaintiff cannot deprive him of this right by uniting in his complaint with such action a demand for an accounting for certain rents, issues, and profits alleged to have been received by the defendant from certain real estate situated in another county, and that he be adjudged to reconvey said real estate. Unless the cause of action set forth in the complaint falls wholly within the provisions of section 392, or of one of the two next succeeding sections, the provisions of section 395 prevail. In Ashurst v. Gibson, 57 Ala. 584, this principle was discussed. The statutes of that state provided that the complainant might file his bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage of real property in the county in which the real estate, or a material portion thereof, was situated. In that case a bill to foreclose a mortgage of real and personal property was filed in a county other than that in which the defendants resided. The court say: "The locality of the real estate and of residence alike confer jurisdiction, and the complainant may, at his pleasure, elect the one or the other jurisdiction. The right of election is limited to suits the the subject-matter of which is real estate, and does not embrace other suits having a different subject-matter. * * * Land must be the subject-matter, and the exclusive subject-matter, of suit, or the jurisdiction conferred by the act does not attach. Remedies must be pursued in the district of the residence of a material defendant, if land and personal property are the subject-matter of suit. Jurisdiction of the one cannot draw to the court jurisdiction of the other. A mortgage may embrace a very inconsiderable quantity of land of insignificant value, and personal property of very large value. It could not properly be said a suit for foreclosure or for redemption had for its subject-matter land. Its subject-matter is land and personal property, and in such a case it would contravene the spirit and policy of our legislation to subject parties to suit in the county in which the land is situated without the county of their residence." This case was cited with approval in the case of Le Breton v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 27, 4 Pac. Rep. 777, where it was held that an action against a trustee for an accounting on both real and personal property was properly brought in the county where the defendant resided. It was held in Baker v. Insurance Co., 73 Cal. 182, 14 Pac. Rep. 686, that an action for the purpose of procuring a reconveyance of land that had been conveyed by absolute deed as security for a debt, upon the averment that the debt had been paid, should be tried in the county where the land was situated. In that case the only issue presented was as to the right of a reconveyance after the payment of the debt, the court saying: "The land is the subject-matter concerning which the contest is waged, and it is situate in San Joaquin county." We do not intend to question the correctness of that decision, but we are not inclined to extend its doctrine so as to include an action for an accounting and a personal judgment thereon, brought against a defendant in a county other than that of his residence, simply because a portion of the property for which he has to account is land situate in that county. The order of the superior court denying the motion is therefore reversed, and it is directed to make an order changing the place of trial from Tuolumne county to Merced county.

FALK v. REIS, Treasurer. (No. 14,008.)

ELECTIONS—REGISTRATION—APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS.

1. Act Cal. March 18, 1878, (St. 1877-78, p. 299,) requires (section 6) the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco to pass on cases of alleged illegal registration on the precinct registers, brought before it by the registrar of voters, and (section 29) on the action of the registrar in cancelling names upon, or adding names to, the register, and is authorized to "appoint clerks or other assistants to the registrar," to enable him to ascertain the correctness of the registers. Section 12 authorizes the board to select all election officers "provided for by law." Held, that the board cannot appoint persons to advise or assist the board, in the selection and appointment of officers of election, or, independently of the registrar, to scrutinize the roll and detect fraud in registration.

2. Nor is such authority given the board by section 33, providing that all provisions for carrying out the registration and election laws shall be made by the board.

In bank. Application for mandamus.

Oliver P. Evans, for plaintiff. George Flournoy, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. Application for a writ of mandate, commanding the defendant, as treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, to pay to plaintiff certain audited demands held by him against said city and county. It appears from the petition that on September 6, 1886, the board of election commissioners for said city and county resolved "that an agent be, and he is hereby, employed and commissioned by the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, with such clerical assistance as may be necessary, not to exceed fifteen clerks to be appointed by this board, to take all necessary, active, and efficient measures to scrutinize the rolls and to prevent frauds in the present registration for the coming general election, and for the purpose of enabling this board to discharge its duties in connection with the appointment of precinct boards of registration satisfactorily. Said agent shall detail a sufficient number of clerks to assist the commission in the discharge of its duty in selecting said precinct boards, and that in this behalf the registrar is requested to furnish him and his assistants such information and facilities as will enable them properly to discharge their duties." On September 15, 1886, the said board by resolution employed the plaintiff, his assignor, Smith, and 14 others, "for the purpose of scrutinizing the roll and detecting fraud in the present registration, and also to assist and advise the present board of election commissioners in the selection and appointment of precinct boards of registration and officers in the general election." The defendant has demurred to the petition, and in passing upon this it is necessary to determine whether the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco were authorized by the act of March 18, 1878, (St. 1877-78, p. 299,) to appoint or employ petitioner and his assignor, Smith, to discharge the duties named in the resolutions already referred to. It is sufficient for the question in hand to say that by section 6 of this act the said board is required to pass upon such cases of alleged illegal registration upon precinct registers as may be brought before it by the registrar of voters, and by section 29 the said board must pass upon the action of the registrar in either cancelling names upon or adding other names to the precinct registers received by him from the board of precinct registration. And under this section it may also appoint clerks or other assistants to the registrar, to enable him to ascertain the correctness of such precinct registers. Schmitt v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 651. The said board is also empowered by section 12 of the act under consideration to "select all election officers provided for by law for said city and county, * * * and if the list furnished them by the registrar does not contain a sufficiency of names of respectable and fit persons for election officers, they must take measures to secure the names of proper persons." The resolutions under which the petitioner and his assignor were appointed show that such appointments were not made to assist the registrar in the discharge of any of the duties imposed upon that officer by section 29, already referred to, nor is it claimed in the petition that any such assistance was in fact rendered by either of them; therefore their appointment cannot be considered as specially authorized by that section.

Section 33, which provides that "all provisions for carrying out the registration and election laws in said city and county of San Francisco shall be made by the board of election commissioners, and demands on the treasury authorized or allowed by them for such purposes shall have the same force and effect as if authorized and allowed by the board of supervisors," does not, so far as concerns the question with which we are now dealing, add anything to the powers given said commissioners by the preceding sections to which we have referred. From this general reference to the powers conferred upon the board of election commissioners, by the act of March 18, 1878, we think it very clear that no express authority is conferred by that act on said board to appoint an agent for the purpose named in the resolution first quoted, or to appoint any person or persons to advise or assist said board in the selection and appointment of any officers of election, or, independently of the registrar, to scrutinize the rolls and detect fraud in the registration. And we think it equally clear that no such authority is given to said board by implication, as being incident to or appropriate, to be exercised in connection with any of the express powers conferred upon such board. Undoubtedly the purpose of the statute under consideration is, as stated by the attorney for petitioner and expressed in its title, "to regulate the registration of voters and to secure the purity of elections in the city and county of San Francisco;" but, for the purpose of effecting this, the act itself makes minute provisions for the appointment of all officers contemplated by it as necessary for its enforcement, and for the employment of all clerks and other assistants to the officers named in it, and assigns to each officer his appropriate duties. By this assignment the registrar of voters has devolved upon him the duty to "constantly inform himself, by examination and inquiry, as to the condition of the precinct registers, and the legality of the names therein, or demanding to be placed thereon, and shall see that none but legal voters are registered," and, to enable him to discharge this duty he is allowed a clerk "and such other clerical assistance as shall be found necessary, * * * to be allowed and authorized by the board of election commissioners of said city and county." Section 3, Act March 18, 1878. But these clerks are to be appointed by the registrar, and not by the board of election commissioners. Schmitt v. Dunn, supra. If, in the performance of his duty of making constant examination and inquiry into the proceedings touching registration, the registrar shall "have reason to believe" that in any particular case a person has been improperly registered, he is required to cite such person before the board of election commissioners, and it then becomes the duty of such board to pass upon the case thus presented, and substantially the same duty is devolved upon the board in approving or disapproving the act of the registrar in cancelling names upon or making additions to the precinct registers returned to him. It would seem that the law, in assigning the duties mentioned to the registrar, does not contemplate that the board of election commissioners should also be charged with the same duty of making a general and vigilant inquiry in relation to the matter of registration. Nor is it at all necessary that the board should have the authority to appoint persons to discharge the very duty which is plainly enjoined upon the registrar, in order that such board may obtain information to enable it to properly dispose of cases brought before it by the registrar for decision. The law evidently intends that, in a case thus brought to its attention, the board shall act upon such appropriate evidence as may upon the hearing be submitted to it by the registrar and the other party to the proceeding. It is also clear to us that the board had no implied authority to appoint the assignor of petitioner and the other persons named in the resolution of September 15, 1886, to assist the board in the selection and appointment of precinct boards of registration and other officers for the general election. The duty of appointing such election officers is, by the act under consideration, devolved upon the board of election commissioners, and the board was not authorized, as an incident to this, to employ any person to advise it in relation to the proper performance of this duty. What measures the board would be authorized to take to secure the names of proper persons to serve in such positions, if the registrar should neglect to furnish the list of names of persons possessing the necessary qualifications, as provided by section 11 of the act here construed, we need not consider, as it is not alleged that any such failure necessitated the action of the board now under review. In Falk v. Strother, 84 Cal. 545, 22 Pac. Rep. 676, and 24 Pac. Rep. 110, nothing was decided contrary to the conclusions announced here, the court, in that case expressly saying: "Whether or not the payment of the demand could be prevented or enforced at any other stage of its history is a question which does not arise here." Demurrer to the petition sustained, and judgment for the defendant, denying the application for the writ of mandate asked for in petition.

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1891.)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS — PAROL SALE OF LANDS BY AGENT WITHOUT WRITTEN AUTHORITY—TENANCY AT WILL.

1. A verbal contract by an agent for the sale of lands whenever the owner shall perfect his title thereto is invalid under the statute of frauds. Civil Code Cal. § 1624.

2. A contract for the sale of lands, made by an agent having no authority in writing, is invalid under the statute of frauds. Id. § 1624, subd. 5.

3. The entry on land under a verbal contract to purchase makes the person in possession a tenant at will.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; JOSEPH P. JONES, Judge.

Phillip Teare, for appellant. Wm. & Geo. Leviston, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial in an action of unlawful detainer. The plaintiffs allege that on or about the 1st day of May, 1886, they, by a verbal agreement and lease, leased and demised to the defendant certain premises now in his possession, to have and to hold at the will of the plaintiffs. That plaintiffs on the 7th day of January, 1888, terminated said lease by giving defendant a notice in writing to remove from the said premises within a period of one month from the said date; and on the 28th day of March, 1888, three days' notice in writing was given by plaintiffs to defendant, requiring and demanding of him possession of said premises, but defendant neglected and refused for the space of three days after said demand was served on him, and ever since has neglected and refused, to surrender possession of said premises; wherefore plaintiffs pray restitution thereof, etc. Each and every material allegation of the complaint is specifically denied by the defendant. And defendant, further answering, alleges that he entered into possession of said premises, and made valuable improvements thereon, under a verbal agreement with one Watson, an agent of plaintiff Carpenter, to purchase the same whenever said Carpenter had perfected his title thereto. Defendant further alleges that he has always been ready and willing, and is now ready and willing, to pay for said land the price which he agreed to pay therefor. Upon these issues the parties went to trial before a jury, which returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the restitution of the premises without damages, upon which a judgment was entered that the plaintiffs recover from the defendant the restitution of the possession of said premises. The contention of appellant is that he "did not occupy the premises as a tenant at will or for a term, but on a definite verbal agreement to purchase the land improved by him." A verbal contract for the sale of real property, or for an interest therein, is invalid; and, if made by an agent of the party sought to be charged, is invalid unless the authority of the agent be in writing, subscribed by the party sought to be charged. Civil Code, § 1624, subd. 5. Here there was no written agreement to sell by the owner of the property, or authority in writing to an agent to sell. The alleged agreement is doubly invalid.—(1) it was not in writing, (2) it was not made by an agent having authority in writing to make it. We think the entry and holding of the defendant under a void agreement constituted him a tenant at will. That being so, the record presents no error committed by the court which could affect the substantial rights of the parties. Judgment and order affirmed.

EXECUTORS—DISCHARGE—WIDOW'S ALLOWANCE.

Where a wife, because of separation from her husband, and not of the value of his estate, has been adjudged not entitled to an allowance for her support, she cannot sue to set aside a decree of final distribution discharging the executors, on the ground that property belonging to the estate was fraudulently excluded from the inventory and appraisement, since she is not affected by the decree.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

H. E. Highton, for appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. Most of the questions involved in this case were considered and passed upon in the case of the same title, reported in 78 Cal. 583, 15 Pac. Rep. 287. It is now further shown that one of the executors of Joel Noah's will, William H. Morris, died on the 1st of October, 1887; that the two surviving executors proceeded to settle up the estate; that on the 29th of November, 1887, they presented and filed their final account, with a petition praying that the account be settled and the estate in their hands be distributed; that upon the 12th of December following, after due and regular notice, the matter came on to be heard, and, no objections being made thereto, a decree in due form was made and entered, settling and allowing the accounts of the executors, and distributing all of the estate remaining in their hands; and that afterwards, on the 14th of May, 1888, a decree in proper form was made and entered, discharging the executors from all liability to be incurred thereafter by them. The appellant, as widow of Joel Noah, deceased, commenced this proceeding by filing in the superior court, on the 12th of June, 1888, her petition praying that the decrees, settling the final account of the executors and distributing the estate, be vacated and set aside, and that she as such widow be allowed out of the estate of deceased, for her support and maintenance, the sum of $100 per month, to take effect from his death, on the 28th of August, 1883. The petition sets out all the proceedings in the former case, and then, to show that the petitioner is now entitled to the relief prayed for, proceeds to state "that the inventory and appraisement of the property of said deceased, returned and filed herein on the 13th day of November, 1883, by the executors of said estate as aforesaid, was false and untrue, in this: That said inventory and appraisement did not include and set forth the following described property belonging to said deceased, to-wit, cash in the hands of the said William M. Morris, one of the executors, to the amount of $8,550; United States bonds in the hands of said William M. Morris, belonging to said deceased, to the amount of $10,000; cash on deposit in the London & San Francisco Bank, Limited, belonging to said deceased, to the amount of $20,000, which was drawn out of said bank by said Morris, after the death of said deceased, on a power of attorney, which was rendered void by the death of said deceased;" "that, when the said inventory and appraisement was returned to and filed in this court, the said William M. Morris, one of said executors, knew that the money and property described in the last preceding paragraph belonged to said deceased, and knew that the same should have been described, set forth, and included in said inventory, but the said William M. Morris, knowingly, deceitfully, and fraudulently, and for the purpose of deceiving and defrauding your petitioner and the court, did not disclose his possession thereof, and omitted to include the sums, or any part thereof, in said inventory in order to impose upon the court, and in order that the action and decision of this court might be influenced and prejudiced against your petitioner, and in order that the court might be made to believe that the estate of said deceased was smaller than it really was; and the said William M. Morris then and there, and thereafter, connived and conspired with the devisees under the will of said deceased to deceive and impose upon this court, by agreeing upon a secret and clandestine distribution of said money and property in the hands and under the control of the said Morris, as aforesaid, and the same was, in pursuance of said fraudulent, collusive, and clandestine agreement, thereafter distributed by said Morris to said devisees, without the knowledge or consent of this court." The petition also states that the petitioner did not learn of these facts until on or about the 5th day of May, 1886, and, that, notwithstanding she exercised all the diligence in her power in searching for and collecting testimony to establish them, she did not succeed, and could not have succeeded in doing so, until immediately before the 12th of December, 1887, and that it was impossible for her to cause to be prepared and filed a new petition, asking for an allowance, before the decree of distribution was made and entered. The executors demurred to the petition on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed for, or to any relief; and when the petition came on to be heard the executors, by their counsel, moved the court for a dismissal thereof, upon the ground that a decree of distribution had been duly given, made, and filed; that the executors had been discharged from all their liabilities as such executors; that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the petition; and also because the whole matter was res adjudicata. The court granted the motion and entered an order dismissing the petition. From that order this appeal is prosecuted. In Willis v. Farley, 24 Cal. 491, it appeared that an action was commenced to foreclose a mortgage against the property of an estate, and process was served on one Shirley as administrator, after the estate had been distributed and the administrator discharged. It was said: "When that action was commenced and the decree was entered there was no such administrator, and hence the whole proceeding was of no binding validity,—it was to all intents and purposes a nullity; for, by the discharge of the administrators, they were as completely separated from the business of the estate as if they had been dead; and J. M. Shirley had no right to appear in or be a party to any suit as the representative of the estate which had passed from his hands, and respecting which his authority had long before then wholly ceased."

It is claimed for appellant that that case is unlike this, and not in point, because here there was a direct application to have the discharge set aside on the ground that part of the estate had been concealed and kept back. But, under the circumstances shown, we fail to see how this fact can in any way aid the appellant. On the former appeal it was held that, under the statute, only those who were the immediate family of the deceased, and were by law entitled up to his death to look to him for support and protection, could claim any allowance for support out of the estate. And the court, after reviewing the authorities, said, (73

Cal. 589, 15 Pac. Rep. 290:) "It is enough to say that—since the appellant voluntarily made an agreement with her husband for separation, such as our law authorizes, received and enjoyed the benefits of the money paid for her support during the separation, and voluntarily continued to live apart from him without any attempt to set aside the agreement, or assume again the matrimonial connection, or even to demand further means for her separate support—the court below was justified in holding that the petitioner did not constitute the immediate family of the deceased, to whom was to be continued, during the settlement of the estate, the 'reasonable support' which the husband in ordinary cases is presumed to furnish his wife." As is readily seen, the decision did not depend upon the amount or value of the estate, but rested solely upon the fact that the petitioner, under the statute, was not entitled to the relief demanded. Now conceding, as claimed, that it was the duty of the court below, when informed under oath, even by a stranger, that a large part of the estate had been concealed and withheld from administration, to arrest all proceedings, until the truth or falsity of the assertion should be ascertained, and, if found to be true, to vacate its order of distribution and discharge, still appellant's rights were in no way affected by the action of the court, and she was not thereby "aggrieved." It results, we think, that the appellant's petition was properly dismissed, and we advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. O'BRIEN. (No. 20,767.)

ROBBERY—JURY—TRIAL—RECORD ON APPEAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Pen. Code Cal. § 1207, makes the judgment roll which will constitute the record of an action consist of the indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer, "a copy of the minutes of the trial," instructions, and a copy of the judgment. Held, that the return of the sheriff on the venue is not part of the record.

2. The fact that the sheriff's return on the venue shows two names of jurors summoned as "Garwin" and "Zena," and that two jurors who were sworn and served were "Ganivan" and "Zina," is no ground for reversing a judgment, where it is in no other way made to appear that all the jurors who sat at the trial were not summoned.

3. Failure of the court to inform defendant, as provided by Pen. Code Cal. § 1066, that if he desires to challenge any particular juror he must do so before the juror is sworn, is not ground for reversing the judgment, if it appears that defendant and his counsel were fully aware of his rights. Following People v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 269.

4. Defendant's affidavit that his trial was continued in his absence, and that he was not present at the trial of his co-defendant, shows no ground for reversal of judgment, under Pen. Code Cal. § 1181, providing that defendant is entitled to a new trial, "when the trial has been had in his absence, if the indictment is for a felony."

5. On indictment for robbery, a charge to find defendant "guilty or not guilty" is not erroneous, as withdrawing from the jury the right to determine defendant guilty of petit larceny only, if the evidence shows that, if guilty at all, he is guilty of robbery.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco, F. W. VAN REYNEGOM, Judge.

Carroll Cook, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The point presented by the brief of appellant's counsel is "that the defendant was tried by at least one, if not two, jurors who were never summoned as jurors in the case." The two jurors who are alleged to have sat upon the jury without being summoned were G. H. Ganiyan and Theodore Zina. Among the names of those duly summoned, the two which most nearly resemble the two above mentioned were "G. H. Garwin" and "Theodore Zena." How a person whose name was not upon the list of those summoned by the sheriff could be called, accepted, sworn, and permitted to sit as a juror in the trial of a case is not explained. Nor is it shown that the person who sat as a juror was not the person summoned, or that the apparent difference in the names was not caused by a clerical or typographical error. We think the return of the sheriff upon the venire constitutes no part of the record, and if not it is not properly before us. The judgment roll, which will constitute a record of the action, consists of "(1) the indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer; (2) a copy of the minutes of the trial; (3) the charges given or refused, and the indorsements thereon; and (4) a copy of the judgment." Pen. Code, § 1207.

No one will contend, we think, that the return of the sheriff upon a venire could be included in either of these enumerations, unless it be within the second, as a part of "the minutes of the trial." And, as the minutes of the trial are a memorandum of what takes place in court, they would not properly include the acts of the sheriff in the service of process. What he did would appear in his return upon the process, which would constitute no part of the minutes of the court. There is no definition of the minutes of a court that would include a sheriff's return upon the process placed in his hands for service. But, if it did constitute a part of the record, we are not prepared to hold that it would constitute a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment. It is not a ground for granting a new trial or arresting a judgment. People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137. Here a mere dissimilarity of names is alone relied on. In no other way is it made to appear that all the jurors who sat at the trial were not actually summoned. The point raised here may rest wholly upon a clerical or typographical error, which could not have affected or prejudiced in any manner the rights of appellant. Upon such a showing we could not, according to established principles, reverse the judgment.

is that "it appears by the record that at the time the judgment was pronounced the defendant was not informed by the court of the nature of the charge against him, or of his plea, or of the verdict of the jury." The recitals in the judgment show that the defendant was informed of all these things, and it nowhere appears in the record that he was not. This point appears to be based upon a misconception of the record. The Code provides that, "before a juror is called, the defendant must be informed by the court, or under its direction, that if he intends to challenge an individual juror he must do so when the juror appears, and before he is sworn." Pen. Code, § 1066. In the bill of exceptions we find the following: "The court, without instructing the defendant as to his right to challenge the jurors, proceeded to and did impanel a jury, said defendant, O'Brien, not offering to challenge and not challenging any of said jurors." It appears by the minutes of the court, which constitute a part of the record, that 12 persons, whose names are given, were drawn, sworn, and examined, and that six of them, whose names are given, were "peremptorily challenged by defendant," and three of them, whose names are given, by the people. This seems to conflict with the statement in the bill of exceptions, that the defendant did not challenge any of said jurors. We shall accept the statement in the minutes as true, and dispose of the point as a similar one was disposed of in People v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 262, in which the court said: "The next point in the case is that the failure of the court to instruct the prisoner upon his rights as to challenging jurors was error. It is true that section 1066 of the Penal Code does provide that 'before a juror is called the defendant must be informed by the court, or under its direction, that if he intends to challenge an individual juror he must do so when the juror appears and before he is sworn.' The object of this provision of the law is to protect the rights of the defendant in the matter of challenging jurors. He should be informed of the fact that, if he desires to challenge any particular juror, he must exercise that right before the juror is sworn; but it appears from the record in this case that the defendant's rights in this respect were fully understood by him and his counsel, and the privilege of challenging jurors was exercised to a large extent in the case. It is true that the court omitted a duty imposed by law, but it clearly appears that the defendant was not in any manner prejudiced by the error complained of, and, such being the case, the omission of the court in the matter referred to constitutes no sufficient ground for reversing the judgment. 'After hearing the appeal, the court must give judgment without regard to technical errors or defects, or to exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties.'" Pen. Code, § 1258.

One of the specified grounds of the motion for a new trial is the following: "That defendant was not present at every stage of the proceedings in said action." A defendant against whom a verdict has been rendered is entitled to a new trial "when the trial has been had in his absence, if the indictment is for felony." Id. § 1181. The defendant does not state in his affidavit that his trial was had in his absence, but states that he was not present at the trial of his co-defendant, Sullivan, and that his (O'Brien's) trial was continued when he was not present in court. The affidavit fails to show that the trial (his own trial) was had in his absence, and therefore fails to show any ground for a new trial, as the Code clearly excludes all other grounds than those enumerated in said section. People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137.

The court in its charge defined "robbery" as it is defined in the Penal Code, and then explained the fear, by means of which, if property is taken through its influence, will constitute the taking robbery. The contention of appellant's counsel is that there is no evidence of the existence of any such fear at the time of the alleged taking of the property in this case, and therefore that the verdict is contrary to the charge of the court and against law. We think there is some evidence tending to show that the taking of the property in this case was accomplished by means of both force and fear. As we view it, there is nothing in the definition of robbery as given by the court in its charge that was calculated to confuse the jury, and we think it is easy to determine from the charge the correct definition of the crime with which the defendant was charged. There is no misdirection in the charge, and we think the court charged the jury upon all matters of law necessary for their information.

The court in its charge instructed the jury that their verdict would be "guilty or not guilty." Appellant's counsel insists that it was error to so instruct the jury, because, he says: "The crimes of grand and petit larceny are both included in the offense charged against the defendant, and it was the province of the jury to determine from the evidence whether the elements which would constitute it the crime of robbery existed or not." The evidence all tended to prove that the defendant, if guilty of any crime, was guilty of robbery. People v. Madden, 76 Cal. 521, 18 Pac. Rep. 402. We are satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict, and that the court below did not err in denying the motion for a new trial on the ground that it was not. Judgment and order affirmed.

MILLER v. MAYO. (No. 13,978.)

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—LIENS.

1. Where Act Cal. March 18, 1885, authorizing the improvement of a street, provides that the expense incurred "shall be assessed upon the lots fronting thereon * * * in proportion to the frontage," a complaint in an action to foreclose a lien for such assessments, which alleges that assessment was made "on property benefited by such street improvement," is bad on demurrer.

2. Such act further provided "that the street superintendent shall thereupon cause to be conspicuously posted along the line of said contemplated improvement, at not more than three hundred feet in distance apart, but not less than three in all, or, when the work to be done is the improvement of an entire crossing, in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed, notices" of the contemplated improvement. Held, that where the improvement contemplated is the grading of the street for several blocks, posting notices at intervals of 300 feet is sufficient, though the improvement includes several crossings.

3. The property owner cannot object to the assessment by reason of the street superintendent's omission to approve the contractor's bond.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; J. W. ARMSTRONG, Judge.

Clinton L. White, for appellant. Frank D. Ryan, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to foreclose a lien for a street assessment upon real property of the defendant. A demurrer was filed to the complaint, which was overruled, and answer filed. Trial was had, resulting in a judgment for the plaintiff as prayed for. From that and an order denying a new trial the appeal is taken.

1. The demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. Section 7 of the act of March 18, 1885, under which the work was authorized, provides that "the expenses incurred for any work authorized by section 2 of this act * * * shall be assessed upon the lots and lands fronting thereon, * * * each lot or portion of a lot being separately assessed in proportion to the frontage." The complaint herein alleges "that, immediately after the completion of said street work, said street commissioner proceeded to and did make an assessment upon the property benefited by said street improvement." This was not a compliance with the statute, and, although it may be a fact that the lots and lands fronting upon the improvement were the only property which was benefited thereby, yet, for the purpose of alleging a cause of action, the complaint should have alleged that the assessment was made in the terms prescribed by the statute.

2. The board of trustees declared their intention to order Twelfth street, from J street to L street, to be improved by grading and graveling. This included the crossing of K and Twelfth streets. It is alleged in the complaint that, after the resolution of intention had been passed by the board of trustees, the street commissioner "caused to be conspicuously posted along said contemplated work more than three notices of said resolution, at less than three hundred feet in distance apart." The defendant, in his demurrer, objects to the sufficiency of the complaint in this respect. We think, however, that the complaint alleges a sufficient compliance with the statute. Section 3 of the act aforesaid provides that, after the resolution of intention has been passed, "the street superintendent shall thereupon cause to be conspicuously posted along the line of said contemplated work or improvement, at not more than three hundred feet in distance apart, but not less than three in all, or, when the work to be done is the improvement of an entire crossing, in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed, notices of the passage of said resolution." The appellant contends that, inasmuch as the work provided for included the crossing, it was necessary for the street superintendent to post the notices of the resolution not only at intervals of less than 300 feet along the line of the work, but also in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed. The statute, however, does not require such posting. The proviso in section 3. above quoted, "or, when the work to be done is the improvement of an entire crossing, in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed," is in the disjunctive, and is to be construed as being a separate direction from that with which it is connected. If the work ordered to be done "is the improvement of an entire crossing," then the notices of the resolution must be posted "in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed," but for any other work the direction is that the notices shall be posted "along the line of said contemplated work or improvement." In the present case "the line of the contemplated work or improvement" was Twelfth street from J to L, and the allegation in the complaint that the notices were posted along that line is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the statute.

3. The testimony offered at the trial sufficiently proved that the official grade of Twelfth between J and L had been established by proper authority.

4. The allegation in the complaint that the bond given by the plaintiff at the time of executing the contract had been approved by the board of trustees, instead of by the superintendent of streets, is immaterial in this action. A failure to execute a bond that should be satisfactory to the superintendent of streets might be a sufficient reason for the superintendent to refuse to enter into the contract with the contractor, but, after the work has been completed to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets, the property owner cannot object to the correctness of the assessment by reason of the omission on the part of the superintendent to approve the bond of the contractor. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the court below is directed to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the plaintiff to amend if he shall be so advised.

COUNTY BOARD—EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY.

The board of county commissioners have authority to employ counsel, other than the district attorney, to collect the money due to the county by the state for the support of indigent persons, and the choice of such counsel is a matter within their discretion, and cannot be reviewed.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; M. MARSTELLER, Judge.

F. A. Kelley, for appellant. Shinn & Masten, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. This action was instituted by the district attorney of the plaintiff, to recover from the defendants the sum of $416.25, money alleged to have been paid to them out of the plaintiff's treasury, without any authority of law, and 20 per cent damages for the use thereof, as provided in section 8 of the county government act. St. 1883, p. 300. The court below gave judgment for the defendants on demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiff appeals. The facts alleged in the complaint are in substance as follows. That the defendants were attorneys at law, residing in the county of Lassen and doing business therein as partners; that on the 6th day of July, 1889, the plaintiff's board of supervisors made and caused to be entered on its minutes an order which read as follows: "It is ordered that Shinn and Masten be, and they are hereby, authorized to collect all moneys now due to Lassen county from the state of California on account of keeping indigent persons, and that the auditor draw his warrant in favor of Shinn and Masten for fifty per cent, of all moneys collected by them;" that the order was made against the express wishes, advice, and consent of the district attorney, and that the latter asked the board for a reasonable length of time to examine into the question whether there was any money due the county from the state for the support of indigent persons, but the board unlawfully and wrongfully refused his request; that in pursuance of the order the defendants proceeded to collect from the state the moneys due the county for the support of indigent persons, and obtained therefor comptroller's warrants for the sum of $532.50, which they delivered to the county treasurer; and that, in payment for their services, the county auditor then drew his warrant on the county treasurer for the sum of $416.25, which sum was paid to them in full. And as ground for equitable relief, it is alleged that, at the time the order above referred to was made, the defendant Masten appeared before the board of supervisors, and stated to them that he did not know, but thought there might possibly be some money due the county from the state, for the support of indigent persons by the county; but as it was very uncertain whether anything could be collected, and there were considerable risks in such undertaking, if the board would enter into an agreement to allow and pay defendants 50 per cent. of all moneys collected, they would undertake the collection and get all they could; that these statements were falsely and fraudulently made, with intent to deceive and mislead the board, and did deceive and mislead and induce the board to make the order, when it would not otherwise have done so; that before that time the supreme court of the state had decided in the case of Yolo Co. v. Dunn that all of the counties were entitled to receive aid from the state for the support of aged persons in indigent circumstances, and that the defendants knew of that decision, and of the mode of procedure to obtain the money, but that the district attorney did not know of the decision till some time afterwards. In our opinion, the ruling of the court upon the demurrer was proper.

It is settled law that, where a county has legal business to be transacted, its board of supervisors may employ counsel, other than the district attorney, to transact the business, if in the judgment of the board the public interest will thereby be subserved. This is rested upon the ground that the district attorney may be incompetent, or sick, or absent from the county, or engaged in other business, so that he cannot attend to it, or the business to be transacted may be outside of the county. Smith v. Mayor, 13 Cal. 533; Hornblower v. Duden, 35 Cal. 670. Here the county had a claim against the state for its pro rata share of the money appropriated by the state for the support of aged persons in indigent circumstances. But the claim could only be enforced and the money obtained by preparing proper proofs and presenting them to the state board of examiners, and, after the claim should be audited and allowed, obtaining the comptroller's warrant for the same. This was business which might well have been supposed to require the services of a competent attorney; and to transact it the board of supervisors seems to have been authorized to employ counsel other than the district attorney, and to pay them such reasonable fee as might be agreed upon. Whether the board exercised good judgment in employing the defendants, and agreeing to pay them as it did, is a matter which cannot be considered here. Of course, supervisors have no right to waste or give away moneys belonging to the county, or to expend them otherwise than in the interest of the public. In a case like this, however, their judgment and discretion are not open to review by the courts. Hornblower v. Duden, supra. The matters set up in the complaint for the purpose of obtaining equitable relief add nothing material to that instrument. The Yolo County Case, referred to, was decided by this court on the 27th of September, 1888, (77 Cal. 133, 19 Pac. Rep. 262.) The defendants, doubtless, knew of that decision before the 6th of July, 1889, and it would seem that the district attorney ought to have known of it. The statements alleged to have been made by Masten to the supervisors were that "he did not know, but thought there might probably be some money due the county from the state for the support of indigent persons by the county." This might be true, notwithstanding he at the time knew of the decision in the case referred to; and in it and what follows we see nothing which necessarily deceived or misled the board. The case of Scollay v. County of Butte, 67 Cal. 249, 7 Pac. Rep. 661, cited and relied upon by the appellant, is not in conflict with what has been said. On the contrary, it approves and reaffirms the rule declared in Smith v. Mayor, and in Hornblower v. Duden, supra. It follows that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and we so advise.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

HEINLEN v. PHILLIPS. (No. 13,925.)

JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT — CERTIORARI — POWERS OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

1. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 53, subd. 2, limiting the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court in certain cases to controversies involving not less than $300, does not apply to an appeal from an order of the superior court granting a writ of certiorari to ascertain whether a justice's court had power to make an order annulling a judgment therein. Overruling Bienefeld v. Milling Co., 82 Cal. 425, 23 Pac. Rep. 1118.

2. A justice of the peace has no power to annul a judgment rendered in his court after a regular trial. Following Weimner v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. Rep. 849.

8. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 892, relative to justices' courts, provides that "when the trial is by the court judgment must be rendered at the close of the trial," but attaches no penalty or consequence to a violation thereof. Held, that such provision is merely directory, and that a judgment rendered by a justice six weeks after trial is valid.

McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. W. Cross, Judge.

G. A. Heinlen, for appellant. R. Irwin and B. C. Mickle, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court, made on certiorari, annulling an order of a justice of the peace by which a judgment previously rendered was set aside. The cause appears to have been submitted in the superior court upon the return made to the writ. At any rate there is nothing in the record before us to show that the return was controverted, and for the purpose of the present appeal it must be taken to be true. The material facts shown by the petition and the return are as follows: John Heinlen, the appellant here, brought an action in the justice's court of J. B. RUNYON, of Mussel Slough township, Tulare county, against the respondent, P. C. Phillips, to recover the sum of $150 for services rendered. An answer was put in, and a trial was had before another justice who was called in by Justice RUNYON to sit in his place. Both the parties were represented at such trial, and witnesses were sworn and examined. The case was submitted on December 16th, and on the 29th of the following January judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for $60 and costs. On the 20th of the following March the plaintiff moved the court to set aside this judgment. The motion was heard by Justice RUNYON, and was granted. The defendant then moved to have the order granting such motion set aside, but, failing in this, obtained a writ of certiorari from the superior court, which, after a hearing, annulled the order vacating the judgment. The appeal is from this order of the superior court.

1. A motion is made to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that, since the amount involved is less than $300, this court is without jurisdiction. And the case of Bienefeld v. Milling Co., 82 Cal. 425, 23 Pac. Rep. 1118, decided by department 2 of this court, sustains the position. But that case is in conflict with the prior decisions which, in the pressure of business, were overlooked, and we think it is best to return to the settled rule. The point was decided in Winter v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Cal. 269, which overruled a prior case. The opinion was delivered by SANDERSON, J., who said: "The jurisdiction of this court in proceedings of this character does not depend upon the amount in controversy. Our review does not embrace the merits of the action. We look into the case no further than may be necessary to ascertain whether it is a case in which the inferior tribunal, board, or officer from which it comes had jurisdiction, and, if not, whether there is any other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. For that purpose we may or may not have occasion to look to the amount in controversy, but not for the purpose of adjudicating the amount, or any question involving the right of either party to a judgment upon the merits." This case was approved and followed in Morley v. Elkins, 37 Cal. 456, and Palache v. Hunt, 64 Cal. 474, 2 Pac. Rep. 245. This would seem to be sufficient to establish the rule; and, as the department did not have before it the case mentioned, we think that Bienefeld v. Milling Co. must be overruled. The motion to dismiss is therefore denied.

2. Upon the merits we think that the judgment should be affirmed. The judgment rendered in the first instance was not by default, but after a regular trial; and it has been held that in such case the justice has no power to set it aside. Weimmer v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. Rep. 849. It is argued, however, that the first judgment in the justice's court was void because it was not rendered until six weeks after the case had been submitted. The provision of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows, (sec. 892:) "When the trial is by the court, judgment must be rendered at the close of the trial." It is to be observed that no penalty is prescribed, or consequence attached, to a violation of this section; and we think that if the legislature had intended that the delay of a day by the justice (for that would be a violation of the provision) should subject the parties to the expense of a retrial it would have said so in express terms. A similar but much stronger provision was enacted in relation to the district courts; but it was held to be merely directory. McQuillan v. Donahue, 49 Cal. 157. It is true that the superior court is a court of general jurisdiction, while the justice's court is one of limited jurisdiction. But the decision did not proceed upon the power of the court, but upon the intention of the legislature. The judgment is affirmed.

HAYS v. GLOSTER et al. (No. 13,790.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1891.,
CONSTRUCTION—TRUSTS—PAROL EVIDENCE—FRAUD.

In an action to have a trust as to certain real and personal property declared and enforced, plaintiff alleged that, being so far deranged that he was entirely incompetent to transact any business, he was induced to convey the property to defendant by his false and fraudulent representations that he would take care of and manage it, pay off plaintiff's debts, and then retransfer the property to plaintiff; that there was no other consideration; that defendant knew the representations to be false and untrue, and made the same with intent to deceive and defraud plaintiff. Held, that the facts alleged show a trust arising from fraud under Civil Code Cal. § 852, providing that trusts may be created by writing or "by operation of law," and parol evidence was admissible to prove the allegations tending to establish the fraudulent acts.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county; G. F. HARRIS, Judge.

Spencer & Raker and C. A. Raker, for appellant. Goodwin & Jenks and Ewing & Claflin, for respondents.

MCFARLAND, J. This action was brought for the purpose of having a trust as to certain real and personal property declared and enforced, and for an accounting, reconveyance, etc. An answer was filed, in which the material averments of the complaint were denied. There was no demurrer to the complaint,—probably because it did not appear that the alleged promises and undertakings of defendant D. M. Gloster, upon which the cause of action is based, were not in writing. But at the trial nearly all the evidence offered by plaintiff was excluded upon the grounds that the alleged trust was void under the statute of frauds unless in writing; that a written instrument cannot be contradicted or changed by parol evidence; and, generally, that the alleged trust could not be proven by parol testimony. A jury had been called to try some of the issues; but as plaintiff, under the rulings of the court, failed to get in any material evidence, the jury was discharged, and the court gave judgment for defendants, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. So that the question presented is practically this: Would the complaint have stated a cause of action if it had appeared on its face that the things averred as the basis of the alleged trust were not evidenced by writings? It is averred in the complaint (substantially) that on November 23, 1883, plaintiff was, and for a long time previous thereto had been, the owner in fee and in possession of certain described land, which, with the improvements thereon, was of the value of $10,000; and also a large amount of personal property on said land, consisting of horses, mules, cattle, hogs, wagons, plows, mowers, threshing-machine, and other farming implements, grain, hay, bacon, lard, household furniture, and other personal property, of the value of $10,000; that at said time plaintiff was in very poor health and in a feeble condition physically and mentally, and that his mind was, and for some time prior thereto had been, so far deranged that he was entirely incompetent to transact any business; and that the defendant D. M. Gloster well knew of plaintiff's said weakness and incompetency. It is further averred that at and before said November 23, 1883, said defendant made frequent visits to plaintiff at his home on said land, and frequently and falsely represented to plaintiff that he was plaintiff's special and warm friend; that plaintiff was being robbed and wronged by others, and that defendant was very anxious to befriend, protect, and aid plaintiff, and to take care of him in his feeble condition; that defendant falsely represented to plaintiff that he was worth $1,000,000, and could easily advance money to pay any debts then owing by plaintiff, and would do so if plaintiff would turn over his property to defendant, and requested and persuaded plaintiff to transfer all said real and personal property to defendant, and to let him into possession thereof jointly with plaintiff; that defendant promised and agreed "that if plaintiff would so transfer and let him, said defendant, into the possession of said property, he, the defendant, would protect and take good care of and preserve the said property, and would manage the same for plaintiff, and in plaintiff's interest, and out of the proceeds of said property he would pay plaintiff's debts; and that he would provide plaintiff a pleasant and comfortable home upon said property, and would take good care of the plaintiff in his then feeble condition, and would advance any money necessary for such purposes; and that when he had paid plaintiff's debts, and had so managed his business affairs as to relieve him from his then present embarrassments, he would retransfer all of said property to plaintiff." It is further averred that, induced solely by said false promises, representations, and pretenses, "and without any other or further consideration whatever therefor," plaintiff, on said 23d day of November, 1883, executed and delivered to said defendant D. M. Gloster a deed of conveyance of said real property and a bill of sale of all said personal property, and allowed defendant to take control of the same, and that defendant thereupon entered upon said land and took entire charge of all of said real and personal property; that from said date to the fall of 1887 defendant and plaintiff jointly occupied the dwelling-house upon said land; and that during said time neither said defendant nor his family made any effort to make plaintiff comfortable, or to restore his health, but, on the contrary, neglected and ill-treated him, and very poorly provided him with clothes and food, so that his health was thereby injured, and his chances for recovery greatly lessened. It is further averred that defendant afterwards fraudulently, and in violation of said trust and confidence, conveyed without consideration a part of said land to his daughter, Mary E. Gloster, and another part to Henry O'Toole, both of whom are made parties defendant; that said defendant D. M. Gloster has sold the principal part of said personal property, and converted the proceeds thereof to his own use, and has apportioned to his own use the rents and profits of all said real and personal property, and has never paid any of plaintiff's debts; and that he now repudiates said trust and all said promises, and claims to be the owner of all said property not yet sold free of all trust, and is now holding the same adversely to plaintiff. It is further averred as follows: "That all the statements and promises and representations made by the defendant D. M. Gloster to plaintiff as set out in the complaint were false and fraudulent, and said defendant D. M. Gloster knew said representations to be false and untrue, and the same were made by said defendant to plaintiff with intent to deceive and defraud said plaintiff, and thereby to obtain possession of plaintiff's property for the sole purpose of defrauding plaintiff thereof," etc. There is an averment that plaintiff did not discover the fraud until within three years before the commencement of the action; and there are also many other averments, in detail, of matters not necessary to be here mentioned.

We think that the matters set forth in the complaint, if true, constitute a cause of action, assuming that the alleged undertakings of defendant D. M. Gloster were not in writing. The case is not one to which the rules that a trust in real property must be in writing, and that a writing cannot be varied by parol evidence, apply. Trusts may be created by writing or "by operation of law." (Civil Code, § 852;) and trusts which arise from fraud, either actual or constructive, are not within that part of the statute which requires a trust to be declared by a written instrument. The averment in the complaint last above quoted is, we think, a sufficient statement that the promises alleged to have been made by defendant D. M. Gloster were made without any intention of performance, and therefore there was actual fraud within the meaning of the phrase "a promise made without any intention of performing it," as used in section 1572 of the Civil Code. But, if that were not so, we think that the other facts stated show a case of trust arising out of fraud within the authorities of Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 330, 19 Pac. Rep. 513; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. Rep. 689; Murray v. Dake, 48 Cal. 645; Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 481; and Newman v. Smith, 77 Cal. 22, 18 Pac. Rep. 791. See, also, Humphrey v. West, 40 Mich. 597; Tracey v. Sackett, 1 Ohio St. 55; Reid v. Burns, 13 Ohio St. 49. In some of the cases above cited there was a peculiar confidential relation, as that of husband and wife, parent and child, or attorney and client; but that was not the fact in all the cases. The case at bar is very similar to those of Humphrey v. West, Sandfoss v. Jones, and Broder v. Conklin, supra.

The alleged mental weakness of plaintiff is a matter to be seriously examined. Upon this subject the supreme court of Ohio, after a review and citation of authorities, say as follows: "Those who from imbecility of mind are incapable of guarding themselves against fraud and imposition are under the special protection of the law. The rule to be collected from all the authorities, I take to be this: Where there is imbecility or weakness of mind arising from old age, sickness, intemperance, or other cause, and plain inadequacy of consideration, or where there is weakness of mind, and circumstances of undue influence and advantage, in either case a contract may be set aside in equity."

As first above stated, the questions involved in this case arose on rulings of the court sustaining objections of defendants to evidence offered by plaintiff. The statement on motion for a new trial consists mainly of questions asked by plaintiff of witnesses, objections by defendants, rulings sustaining the objections, and exceptions by plaintiff, and of offers by plaintiff to prove certain facts, and objections to such offers sustained. It would be useless labor to notice all of such rulings in detail. They all seem to have gone upon the theory that plaintiff was bound by the terms of the deed and bill of sale, and could not prove the averments of the complaint by parol evidence. One or two examples of the rulings will be sufficient. While plaintiff was on the witness stand he was asked by his counsel,—referring to the time the deed was made: "What was the matter with your physical organization, whether you were sick, weak, or disabled?" The question was objected to by the defense as "irrelevant and immaterial," and the objection was sustained. Counsel for plaintiff then said: "We offer to prove that plaintiff at the time of the transfer set out in the complaint was of weak and unsound mind, and incompetent to transact business, on the 23d day of November, 1883. We offer to prove that defendant must have known of such mental weakness and sickness, and that he took advantage of such weakness and sickness to persuade plaintiff to such contract set out in the complaint. (Objected to as irrelevant and immaterial. Objection sustained. Plaintiff excepts.)" This ruling was erroneous. Again: "Question. What induced you to make that transfer of property? (Objected to as incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant; it appearing that the transfer was in writing, and expresses the inducement, and it is the best evidence what the inducement was.) The Court. That brings up the same question. The objection is sustained. (Plaintiff excepts.)" This ruling was erroneous. Again: "Question. State what consideration, if any, you received for turning over that property to defendant Gloster? (Objection as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. It is evidenced by the bill of sale itself. It is entirely irrelevant and immaterial whether there was any other consideration outside of the writing; the writing speaks for itself. It is the same thing you have been to work on twenty-four hours. Objection sustained. Plaintiff excepts.)" These examples show the general nature of the 25 specifications of error contained in the statement. Plaintiff sought in various ways—by questions put to witnesses and by offers of proof—to introduce evidence tending to prove the averments of his complaint; but he was prevented by the rulings of the court from doing so. His offers were not objected to because they were in the form of "offers to prove;" but because the things offered to be proven were inadmissible. It is possible that some of the evidence offered to be introduced was objectionable under the general rules of evidence; but the main basis of the rulings was that parol evidence was not admissible to establish the averments of the complaint. Therefore it is sufficient for the guidance of the court below on another trial to say generally that plaintiff is entitled to prove (if he can) the material averments of his complaint, his mental condition at the time of the transfer, the advantage taken of his mental weakness by defendant, and undue influence by the latter, the real consideration of the transfer, the condition of the property and the circumstances of the transaction, the alleged fraudulent acts of the defendant before, at the time of, and after the transfer, and all facts which reasonably tend to establish the alleged fraudulent acts; and these things may be proven by parol testimony, subject, of course, to the general rules of evidence. For the reasons above given the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

MORTGAGES—PAYMENT—PLEADING—EVIDENCE—DURESS.

1. A complaint alleged that, plaintiff and defendant differing as to the amount due upon a mortgage, defendant agreed that if plaintiff would pay the amount claimed by defendant to be due, and it afterwards transpired that the amount so paid was in excess of the amount due, defendant would repay to plaintiff such excess; and, further, that the amount so paid was more than was due, but that such excess had not been repaid. Held sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

2. Such complaint is not ambiguous or uncertain.

3. The following testimony given by plaintiff was insufficient to prove the agreement to repay: "The day the money was paid, * * * of course I was prepared to pay under protest. I went to [defendant] when I saw the mistake. * * * She agreed to come up here and see about it. * * * I notified her of the mistake, and she told me she would come up here and see" her agent, "and, if I was right, it would be right."

4. Where, in order to put an end to foreclosure proceedings, a mortgagor agrees to pay the amount due, together with interest, attorney's fees, and costs, but, a dispute arising as to the total amount due, he pays, under protest, more than he believes to be due, such payment is not under compulsion.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; JOSEPH P. JONES, Judge.

W. S. Tunning, for appellant. Smith & Murasky and F. Van Norman, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This action was brought to recover $427.50, alleged to have been paid in excess of the sum due from plaintiff to defendant upon a certain mortgage held by defendant upon the land of plaintiff. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $300, and defendant has appealed from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. The allegations of the complaint are that the defendant had a mortgage upon land of the plaintiff to secure the payment of $6,-

000, and interest thereon, and about February 21, 1887, defendant commenced an action to foreclose said mortgage; that in May, 1887, while said action was still pending, plaintiff being desirous of terminating said action and saving further costs to himself therein, and of liquidating and discharging his indebtedness to the defendant under said mortgage and said action, offered to pay to the defendant the mortgage money, interest, costs, and counsel fees due and payable thereunder; that all that was then lawfully due to the defendant by reason of the premises was the sum of $4,000 principal, and the sum of $2,127.50 interest, $150 counsel fees, and $25 costs, making in all $6,302.50, which defendant offered to pay, but defendant demanded $6,730; plaintiff protested against paying more than the said sum of $6,302.50, but said defendant refused to take less than said sum of $6,730, and agreed that she would recoup to plaintiff the difference between said sums, to-wit, the sum of $427.50, if it afterwards transpired that a mistake had been made in the calculation of principal and interest and costs aforesaid, that plaintiff thereupon paid to defendant said sum of $6,730, under protest as to said sum of $427.50. The plaintiff alleges that defendant did make a mistake of $427.50 in said calculation, and, although often requested by plaintiff to pay him said sum of $427.50, defendant has not paid the sum or any part thereof to plaintiff, wherefore he demands judgment forthwith. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground (1) that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) that it is ambiguous and unintelligible. The demurrer was overruled, and appellant claims that the court erred in overruling it.

The complaint, as we construe it, alleges in substance that, the plaintiff and defendant differing as to the amount due upon the mortgage, defendant agreed that if plaintiff would pay the amount claimed by defendant to be due, and it afterwards transpired that the amount so paid was in excess of the amount due, defendant would repay to plaintiff such excess. That was sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and we fail to discover any ambiguity or uncertainty in it. We think the demurrer was properly overruled. The defendant in her answer denies that she ever at any time agreed that she would recoup or repay to plaintiff any part of said sum of $6,730, or any sum of money in any event or for any cause; denies that said sum of $427.50, or any sum paid by plaintiff to defendant, was excess or in excess of the amount due defendant under said mortgage. Several other of plaintiff's allegations are denied in the answer. Among the particulars specified by appellant in which the verdict is not justified by the evidence is the following: "The evidence failing to show any agreement on the part of the defendant to recoup or repay to the plaintiff any sum of money, or any part of the amount claimed in the complaint in any event, the verdict should have been for the defendant." The evidence of the plaintiff in support of his allegation that the defendant agreed that she would recoup to plaintiff the difference between the sum of $6,302.50 and $6,730, to-wit, the sum of $427.50, if it afterwards transpired that a mistake had been made by defendant in her calculation of principal and interest and costs, is extremely meager. It is as follows: "The day the money was paid by Dr. Strentzel, of course I was prepared to pay under protest. I went to Mrs. Riley when I saw the mistake,—to her house; me and my son. She lived on Minnie street, and she agreed to come up here and see about it. This was in '87. I notified Mrs. Riley of the mistake, and she told me she would come up here and see Mr. Wittenmyer,—he attended to her business,—and if I was right it would be right." We think this evidence fails to prove any agreement of defendant to recoup or repay to plaintiff any sum of money whatever, in any event. Precisely what it does mean we will not undertake to explain. But it is insufficient to constitute an agreement of the kind alleged in the complaint, and that is all that we are called on to decide. It is only fair to respondent's counsel to state that his main contention is that the payment of the sum in excess of the sum which he admits was due, was under compulsion. That contention, in our opinion, is unsupported either by the allegations of the complaint or the evidence on the trial. We think the exceptions to the charge of the court were none of them well taken, and we do not discover any other errors than that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, for which a new trial should be had. For that error defendant's motion for a new trial should have been granted. Judgment and order reversed.

- DONLON v. JEWETT. (No. 14,334.)

COUNTIES—CLASSIFICATION—SALARIES OF COUNTY OFFICERS.

St. Cal. 1888, p. 299, § 162, divides counties into 48 classes: the thirty-ninth being counties having a population of 5,600 and under 6,000; the fortieth, those having 5,800 and under 5,600; the forty-first, those having 5,000, and under 5,300. By section 163 the salaries of the various officers of the several classes was fixed. By Act March 13, 1885, said section 163 was amended and divided into new sections numbered consecutively from 163 to 210. The salaries of the officers of said three classes were fixed, respectively, by sections 201, 202, and 203. St. 1889, p. 232, amends said original section 163 so as to define class 39 as counties having a population of 5,640 and under 6,000. It added a class,—39½,—defined as counties having a population of 5,000 and under 5,640. In all other respects, including the clauses defining classes 40 and 41, section 163 was re-enacted in precisely its original terms. A new section, numbered 201½, was inserted between sections 201 and 202, by which the salaries of officers of class 39½ were prescribed. Held, that the legislature did not intend to abolish classes 40 and 41, but merely to create a new class, which they intended to describe as embracing counties with a population of 5,600 and under 5,640.

In bank. Application for mandamus. Aylett R. Cotton, for petitioner. Black stock & Shepherd and H. L. Poplin, Dist. Atty., for respondent. M. E. Sanborn, amicus curiæ.

BEATTY, C. J. The petitioner is assessor, and the respondent auditor, of Ventura county, and it is the duty of the latter, prescribed by law, to draw his warrant at the end of each month for a monthly installment of the salary of the former. At the end of the month of January, petitioner demanded a warrant for his January salary, claiming that Ventura was a county of the thirty-ninth and one-half class, and that his annual salary as assessor of a county of that class was $3,200. But the respondent, being in doubt whether Ventura was, according to a correct construction of the statute, a county of the thirty-ninth and one-half class or of the forty-first class, in which the assessor's salary is less than $3,200, refused to draw his warrant on that basis. Thereupon this original proceeding was commenced here for a writ of mandate to compel the auditor to perform his supposed duty.

There is an entire agreement between the parties as to all matters of fact, and the only question in the case is one of statutory construction. Section 5 of article 11 of the constitution enjoins upon the legislature the duty of providing for a uniform system of county government, but for the purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers permits a classification of counties according to population. In pursuance of this provision an act was passed March 14, 1883, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of county and township governments," (St. 1883, p. 299, by which (section 162) the counties of the state were divided into 48 classes, according to their population as established by the federal census of 1880, the thirty-ninth, fortieth, and forty-first classes being defined as follows: "Counties having a population of five thousand six hundred, and under six thousand, shall belong to and be known as of the thirty-ninth class; counties having a population of five thousand three hundred, and under five thousand six hundred, shall belong to and be known as counties of the fortieth class; counties having a population of five thousand, and under five thousand three hundred, shall belong to and be known as counties of the forty-first class." Ventura, having a census population of 5,073, fell into the forty-first class.

By section 163 of the same act the salaries of the several county officers of the respective classes of the counties were fixed. By an amendatory act passed March 18, 1885, this section 163 was amended, and divided into new sections, numbered consecutively from 163 to 210. In this amendatory act the salaries of officers of the thirty-ninth class were regulated by section 201, those of officers of the fortieth class by section 202, and those of officers of the forty-first class by section 203. Another amendatory act was passed in 1887, (St. 1887, p. 178,) and finally, on March 16, 1889, the act was passed (St. 1889, p. 232) which gives rise to the present controversy. By this last amendatory act section 162 of the original act was so amended as to change the definition of the thirty-ninth class, and add a new class, numbered 39½. A new section, numbered 201½, was also inserted between sections 201 and 202, by which the salaries of officers of the thirty-ninth and one-half class of counties were regulated. By this amendment the definition of counties of the thirty-ninth class was changed so as to read as follows: "Counties having a population of five thousand six hundred and forty, and under six thousand, shall belong to and be known as counties of the thirty-ninth class." And the following definition was made of counties of the thirty-ninth and one-half class: "Counties having a population of five thousand, and under five thousand six hundred and forty, shall belong to and be known as counties of the thirty-ninth and one-half class." In all other respects, including the clauses defining the fortieth and forty-first classes, section 162 was re-enacted in precisely its original terms. The effect of this legislation was to produce a conflict in the terms of the statute, rendering it necessary to resort to construction in order to ascertain the intention of the legislature. The thirty-ninth and one-half class, by its definition, embraces all counties having a population of 5,000 and under 5,640,—that is to say, all counties formerly embraced in classes 40 and 41, and any county formerly embraced in class 39 with a population of 5,600, and under 5,640. By reason of the amendment to the definition of class 39, it is brought into perfect conformity with the definition of the new class, but the literal re-enactment of the clauses defining classes 40 and 41 creates the conflict; for, as above shown, they consist of counties having a population, respectively, of 5,300, and under 5,600, and of 5,000 and under 5,300; both of which classes are embraced in the definition of class 39½. Such being the terms of the statute, and the circumstances of its enactment in its present form, the petitioner contends that we must hold the intention of the legislature to have been to repeal the clauses defining classes 40 and 41, and to substitute for those classes, and a part of class 39, the newly-defined class, 39½. On the part of respondent it is contended that the intention was to preserve classes 40 and 41, and to make the new class consist of those counties only—formerly embraced in class 39—containing a population of 5,600, and under 5,640. It is certain that the legislature intended one thing or the other, but either construction of the statute convicts it of a blunder, and the question to be solved is whether the mistake consisted in the inadvertent use of the number 5,000 instead of 5,600 in defining class 39½, or in the re-enactment of the clauses defining classes 40 and 41.

The principle of construction relied on by petitioner in support of his contention is that in cases of repugnancy a later statute controls an earlier one; from which he argues that the clause defining 39½ being new, and those defining 40 and 41 being a mere republication of the terms of the original act, the former must govern. But in view of the constitutional provision prescribing the method of revising and amending statutes and sections of statutes, can we, for the purpose of construing an amendatory act, consider its new features as being later in point of time than those parts of the original which are merely republished? The constitution, art. 4, § 24, provides that "no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the act revised or section amended shall be re-enacted and published at length as revised or amended." The effect, and the only effect, of this requirement, is to compel the republication of so much, and so much only, of the old law as the legislature intends to continue in force along with the amendment, and it would seem that one object of the provision must have been to prevent conflict and repugnancy between the new and the old portions of the statute by requiring the incorporation of all amendments in the revised text of the statute or section amended; for, necessarily, the legislature by this method is compelled not only to scrutinize the amendment itself, but all other parts of the statute which are at the same time presented to view in their connected sequence; and we are not entitled to assume that the intention to enact the new portion was any more clear and distinct than the intention to modify its operation by the effect of such portions of the original act as have been thus deliberately preserved. The duty of a court is, therefore, to endeavor to construe the revised or amended act in the same manner it would construe a new and original piece of legislation,—viewing all its parts, giving to every part, if possible, some effect consistent with the whole, and as little as possible repugnant to other parts, "ut res magis valeat, quam pereat." If, however, it is found that there is an irreconcilable conflict between the amendment, and some portion of the old statute that has been preserved and republished in the revision, so that no effect can be given to one without destroying the operation of the other, and there is nothing else to indicate the probable intention of the legislature it might be necessary to hold that full effect is to be given to the amendment and the re-enactment of the conflicting portion of the original act treated as a mistake. It may be conceded that the cases cited by petitioner sustain his contention to this extent, but certainly they go no further, and in this case we think it not only unnecessary, but for many reasons inadmissible, to solve the difficulty in the mode suggested. If it had been the intention of the legislature to abolish the fortieth and forty-first classes, and to consolidate them, along with a part of the thirty-ninth, into a new class, the short and simple and obvious means of accomplishing such intention was to amend the clause defining class 39, as was done; to amend the clause defining class 40 so as to make it embrace all counties containing a population of 5,000 and less than 5,640, and to drop the clause defining class 41. In addition to this, it would only have been necessary to amend section 202, regulating the compensation of officers of class 40, with or without a repeal of section 203, which, even though not repealed, would have been left with nothing to operate upon. There was no need to resort to the use of a fractional number, (39 $\frac{1}{2}$.) to designate a new class if 40 and 41 were to be abolished, for in that case there were whole numbers enough and to spare, for the purpose of such designation. And so was it equally unnecessary to resort to the fractional number 20 $\frac{1}{2}$ to designate the section regulating the compensation of officers of the new class of counties. This is, to our minds, very conclusive proof that the legislature did not intend to abolish classes 40 and 41, but only to create a new class between 39 and 40, comprising one or more counties formerly included in class 39. Instead of being guilty of the elaborate and superfluous series of blunders imputed to it on the theory of petitioner, the legislature made the simple and comparatively natural mistake of using a wrong number in a single clause of the act,—the number 5,000, instead of the number 5,600, in the clause defining the new class, 39 $\frac{1}{2}$. This view affords a simpler and more probable explanation of the discrepancies in the statute than any other, and has the merit of satisfying the cardinal rule of construction which requires that some effect shall be given, if possible, to every clause of the contract, or substantive provision of a statute, consistent with its entire scope and object. And this view is corroborated by the fact that section 202, regulating the compensation of officers of the fortieth class, was not merely re-enacted, but was amended by the act we have been considering, so as to increase the salary of superintendent of schools from \$700 to \$1,500. If there was no intention to preserve the fortieth class, why this amendment?

Our conclusion is that Ventura remains a county of the forty-first class, and that the petitioner can claim only the salary provided for assessors in that class of counties. Writ denied.

CRIMINAL LAW—IMPRISONMENT TO ENFORCE FINE.

Since Pen. Code Cal. § 1205, providing for imprisonment in the county jail to enforce a fine, at the rate of one dollar a day, has been amended to provide that such imprisonment must not exceed the time for which defendant might be sentenced to imprisonment for the offense of which he has been convicted, defendant, convicted of simple assault and fined $500, cannot be imprisoned more than three months, which is the term of imprisonment fixed for the offense. Pen. Code Cal. § 241.

In bank. Application for habeas corpus.

L. E. Phillips, for petitioner. J. A. Hosmer, for the People.

PER CURIAM. On February 14, 1890, the petitioner was convicted of a simple assault in police court No. 2 of San Francisco, and sentenced under section 1205, Pen. Code, to pay a fine of $500, and in default of payment to be imprisoned in the county jail at the rate of one dollar for each day until the fine should be satisfied. The maximum of imprisonment for said offense is "not exceeding three months," (Pen. Code, 241,) although a fine of $500 may also be imposed. Under the sentence of fine imposed by the court, petitioner has already been in jail considerably over a year; and he contends that, for the purpose of enforcing the fine, he cannot legally be imprisoned longer than the maximum term of three months. The question has been presented to us heretofore, when there was some difference of opinion in regard to it. As the legislature, at its recent session, amended said section 1205 so as to expressly provide that imprisonment to enforce a fine must "not exceed, in any case, beyond the time for which the defendant might be sentenced to imprisonment for the offense of which he had been convicted," we think that former doubts on the subject should, in justice, be resolved in favor of the petitioner. It is ordered that petitioner, Frank Erdmann, be discharged from custody.

TEMPLE, C. Joseph Bauquier died, leaving an estate estimated at about $20,000. In his will he named his daughter, Mrs. Rode, executrix. Letters having been refused her, Frank Bauquier, a son of the deceased, the public administrator, and one Smith, severally applied for letters. At the hearing a contest was inaugurated between Bauquier and the public administrator. The court denied the application of Bauquier and Smith, and appointed the public administrator, and thereupon Bauquier took this appeal. An appeal had been previously taken by Mrs. Rode from the order denying her application to be appointed executrix. Since the submission of this case here, that order has been reversed, and thereby the right of Mrs. Rode to be appointed executrix apparently settled. The matters involved in this appeal, therefore, have become practically of little consequence. We think, however, it must be held in this case that it was error to hold that the fact that Frank Bauquier was prejudiced against his sister disqualified him to act as administrator. Therefore the order denying his application and appointing the public administrator should be reversed.

BELCHER, C. Fannie Carmody died intestate in the county of Sacramento on the 4th day of September, 1889. She left surviving her John Carmody, her husband, and five children of a deceased sister, of whom Niel Grant was one, but no issue, father, mother, brother, or sister. On the 24th of October, 1889, Niel Grant filed in the superior court of the county a petition asking that letters of administration on the estate of decedent be issued to him. In his petition he stated, among other things: "That said deceased left estate in the said county of Sacramento, consisting of real and personal property. That the value and character of said property, so far as known to your applicant, are as follows, to-wit: $800, or thereabouts, in Sacramento Savings Bank; real estate in California, value unknown; furniture and personal effects, value unknown." Two days later the surviving husband filed his petition for letters of administration on the estate. He stated in the petition, among other things: "That she [decedent] left estate in said county, which consists of an interest [it is claimed] in certain moneys in the Sacramento Bank, on deposit therein; that the value of said estate is unknown to said petitioner, and the same consists wholly of personal property." When the petitions came on to be heard, Carmody was called as a witness, and testified to certain facts which tended to show that during her last illness his wife made or attempted to make to him a gift of the money she had on deposit in the Sacramento Bank. He was then, on cross-examination, asked and answered certain questions as follows: "Question. Mr. Carmody, do you want to be administrator of Fannie Carmody's estate? Answer. Well, of course. I did not think when she made this assignment—she said there would be no need of an administrator. Those were the words she spoke. Q. Do you want to be administrator of your wife's estate? A. Yes, sir; of course. Q. Well, what estate did she leave? A. I do not know as she left any." Counsel for Grant then offered and read in evidence a complaint, filed by Carmody, on October 9, 1889, in an action instituted by him against the Sacramento Bank to recover the moneys deposited therein by Fannie Carmody. The complaint contained, among others, the following averments: "That on the 22d day of August, 1889, the said Fannie Carmody sold, transferred, conveyed, and delivered unto this plaintiff, by and with the consent of this defendant, the said bank-book, together with all the moneys as aforesaid deposited by her in said bank, and the plaintiff has ever since been and now is the owner and holder of said bank-book and of the moneys so deposited by her in said bank. That since the transfer as aforesaid, one Niel Grant, who asserts that he is a nephew of said Fannie Carmody, has notified said defendant not to pay said moneys to the plaintiff, and has demanded that the said bank pay the same to him, said Niel Grant, and has claimed and still claims to be the owner of said money so deposited, by reason of which claim, notice, and demand of said Niel Grant the said defendant is in doubt as to its rights in the premises, and as to whether or not the plaintiff is the true owner and holder of said book and moneys, and declines to pay the same to him unless it shall be determined by the judgment of this court that the plaintiff is such owner and holder," etc. The above was all the testimony introduced, and, as will be seen, there was nothing to show that there was any property of the estate, other than the bank deposits, or that there were any creditors of the estate. The court made the following finding: "That the petitioner, John Carmody, is incompetent to serve as administrator, and that he denies said deceased left any property or estate whatever; and the said John Carmody claims all the estate of said deceased; and the court finds that the said application of said John Carmody is made not in good faith, but for the purpose of obtaining possession of the estate of deceased for his own, and to deprive the heirs and creditors of said estate from any participation therein; and that said John Carmody is wanting in integrity in that regard." An order was accordingly entered, denying the petition of Carmody, and directing that letters of administration on the estate be issued to Niel Grant. From that order Carmody appeals.

The provisions of the statute, bearing upon the question, are as follows: "Administration of the estate of a person dying intestate must be granted to some one or more of the persons hereinafter mentioned, the relatives of the deceased being entitled to administer only when they are entitled to succeed to his personal estate, or some portion thereof; and they are, respectively, entitled thereto in the following order: (1) The surviving husband or wife, or some competent person whom he or she may request to have appointed; (2) the children; (3) the father or mother; (4) the brothers; (5) the sisters; (6) the grandchildren; (7) the next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of the estate." Code Civil Proc. § 1865. No person is competent or entitled to serve as administrator or administratrix who is "(4) adjudged by the court incompetent to execute the duties of the trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence, or want of understanding or integrity." Code Civil Proc. § 1869. "If the decedent leave a surviving husband or wife, and neither issue, father, mother, brother, nor sister, the whole estate goes to the surviving husband or wife." Civil Code, § 1888, subd. 5. It is clear from these provisions that Niel Grant was not entitled to succeed to any portion of the estate, and was therefore not entitled to letters; and it is equally clear that the surviving husband was entitled to the whole estate. In re Ingram, 78 Cal. 586, 21 Pac. Rep. 435. The finding that the surviving husband was incompetent to serve as administrator for want of integrity was evidently based upon the fact that he claimed the whole estate as his own, and the question is, was the finding justified? We do not think it was. There was nothing in the fact named which showed a want of integrity or disqualification. See Estate of Bauquier, ante, 178, (decided March 18, 1891.) We advise that the order appealed from be reversed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is reversed.

NOTICE OF APPEAL—PARTIES—DISMISSAL

Where an action of ejectment against several defendants is dismissed by plaintiff before defendants are served, or answer, and afterwards two of the named defendants file a cross-complaint seeking affirmative relief, which is dismissed on plaintiff's motion, it is not necessary for the defendants who joined in the cross-complaint to serve the other defendants with notice of appeal from the order dismissing it, as such other defendants are not adverse parties, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 940.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

Michael Mullany, (W. C. Burnett, of counsel,) for appellants. O'Brien, Morrison & Daingerfield, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that the necessary parties were not all served with notice of appeal. The action is, in form, ejectment, and several persons are named in the complaint as defendants. Before either of the defendants had been served with or had appeared, plaintiff's attorney filed with the clerk of the court a dismissal of the action. Afterwards two of the named defendants—Patrick Donohue and Mary Donohue—filed an answer, and also a cross-complaint, asking affirmative relief. Thereafter, on motion of plaintiff, the court made an order dismissing the action, with costs to defendants. From this order or judgment the said defendants Patrick and Mary Donohue appeal. They did not serve the other defendants with their notice of appeal; and for this reason respondent contends that the appeal should be dismissed. We do not think that the other defendants were adverse parties, within the meaning of section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They would be entirely unaffected by any judgment that might be rendered on appeal. The plaintiff in this action had a clear right to dismiss as to any of the defendants who had not been served, or who had not appeared and set up an adverse claim. None of the authorities cited by respondent cover the case at bar. If, on this appeal, the judgment of dismissal should be reversed as to the defendants who appeal, "it would still stand unreversed as to" either of the other defendants, "and therefore they would not be affected by a reversal." Randall v. Hunter, 66 Cal. 80, 10 Pac. Rep. 130. See, also, Williams v. Mining Ass'n, 66 Cal. 193, 5 Pac. Rep. 85. We think, therefore, that this present motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied. But, of course, nothing is determined here that will affect the questions which will arise at the hearing of the appeal. The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

HORTON v. GALLARDO. (No. 13,963.)

WRITS—SERVICE OF SUMMONS—AFFIDAVIT.

An affidavit of service of summons, which does not show that the person serving it was over 18 years old when he served it, is insufficient to prove service.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; WALTER VAN DYKE, Judge. Willis & Appel, for appellant. J. M. Damron, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against him by default, and his counsel makes the point here that the summons in the action was not served on him. The only evidence contained in the record from which the court could have found service of summons upon the defendant is the following affidavit, indorsed on the summons: "Office of the Sheriff of Los Angeles Co. I hereby swear that I received the within summons on the 26th day of February, A. D. 1890, and personally served the same on the 27th day of February, A. D. 1890, by delivering a copy and having this read to the defendant in person, being Y. Gallardo, the defendant named in said summons, by delivering to him, the said defendant, personally, in the city and county of Los Angeles, Cal., a copy of said summons, and a certified copy of the complaint in the action named in said summons, attached to said copy of summons. Dated this 28th day of February, A. D. 1890. J. S. CHADWICK." As this affidavit does not state or show that Chadwick was over the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged service of summons by him, it is insufficient to prove such service. Maynard v. MacCrelish, 57 Cal. 355; Howard v. Galloway, 60 Cal. 11; Well v. Bent, Id. 603; Doerfler v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 265. I think the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

BOARD OF HARBOR COMMISSIONERS OF PORT OF EUREKA v. EXCELSIOR REDWOOD CO. (No. 13,293.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LEGISLATIVE ACTS—DELEGATION OF POWER.

Under Pol. Code Cal. §§ 2568, 2569, subd. 6, empowering the board of harbor commissioners of the port of Eureka to make rules and regulations for the protection of navigation in Humboldt bay, and to impose penalties, not exceeding $500 for any one violation, for the violation of such rules, the harbor commissioners cannot impose a penalty, as its imposition is a legislative act, and the legislature cannot delegate such power to any other body.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; JOHN ELLSWORTH, Judge.

J. H. G. Weaver and J. N. Gillett, for appellant. S. M. Buck, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover a penalty of $500, imposed by the plaintiff upon the defendant for the violation of certain rules and regulations made by plaintiff. Section 2568, Pol. Code, provides that "the board of harbor commissioners of the port of Eureka are authorized and empowered to make such rules and regulations and take such action as may be necessary for the protection of navigation in Humboldt bay." Section 2569, subd. 6, provides: "Impose penalties for violation of such rules and regulations, not exceeding for any one violation the sum of five hundred dollars, to be recovered by action." Section 5 of the rules and regulations made by plaintiff in pursuance of the above sections of the Code imposes a penalty in the sum of $500 for the violation of certain of these rules. We do not believe the plaintiff has the power to impose a penalty as provided in the rule just mentioned. The imposition of a penalty is in the nature of a quasi criminal proceeding, as it only follows from the violation of some law. In U. S. v. Montell, Taney, 52, referring to the character and object of penalties, we find this language: "It is not damages, therefore, that are intended to be secured, but punishment intended to be inflicted upon those who are justly and properly responsible for any improper use of the vessel's register." * * * In other words, it is a fixed penalty imposed by law as a punishment for breach of duty enjoined by law, and must be treated as such," etc. The board of harbor commissioners is a creature of the statute, and purely an executive body, and the fixing and imposing of penalties are matters of which the legislature alone has cognizance. An act providing that, if a person does or does not do a certain thing, he shall pay a penalty of $500, is legislation; and it is a cardinal principle of representative government that the legislature cannot delegate the power to make laws to any other authority or body. Cooley, Const. Lim. 116, 139. Conceding that the legislature could delegate to the plaintiff the authority to make rules and regulations with reference to the navigation of Humboldt bay, the penalty for the violation of such rules and regulations is a matter purely in the hands of the legislature. The act of the legislature in fixing the maximum of such penalty is of no avail; the vice of the whole matter is in not itself fixing the penalty, and in delegating such legislative power to the plaintiff. Justice AGNEW, in Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 491, says: "The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things, upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government." And it would seem that the establishment of rules as to the navigation of Humboldt bay would be simply acts of executive administration which the legislature could delegate to the plaintiff as an executive body under the foregoing authority; but, when the executive body has made such rules and regulations, it has exhausted all the authority which the legislature had power to confer upon it. In the case at bar the legislature attempted to go further than in the case of Ex parte Cox, 63 Cal. 21. Under an act of the legislature approved March 4, 1881, the viticultural health officer, with the approval of the board of viticultural commissioners, was empowered to declare and enforce rules in the nature of quarantine to prohibit the importation of diseased vines, etc.; and further provided that any willful violation of these rules should constitute a misdemeanor. The petitioner, Cox, was discharged upon habeas corpus by this court, he having been convicted of violating certain of these rules and regulations. The court said: "For the purpose of local legislation, legislative functions may be conferred upon and exercised by municipal corporations; but the act before us is in no sense a conferring of powers for municipal purposes. The legislature had not authority to confer upon the officer or board the power of declaring what acts should constitute a misdemeanor." In that case the legislature delegated the power to the board to make the rules, but expressly provided in the act itself the punishment for the violation of such rules. But in the case at bar the legislature not only delegated the power to the plaintiff to make the rules and regulations, but went far beyond that, and attempted to delegate the power to the plaintiff to punish for the violation of such rules and regulations. This could not be done. Let the judgment be affirmed.

CITY OF PORTLAND v. KING.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS—TAKING COUNTY ROAD FOR STREET.

In a proceeding by a city to appropriate for a street a county road, and condemn defendant's reversionary interest, the admission of oral evidence of the proceedings of the county court, testimony as to the practicability of the route for city purposes, conjointly with opinions as to the value of the reversionary interest, permitting deeds of property adjoining the road to be read from the record entries, and instructions to the jury that the city having made street cuttings across it, so that travel is unsafe, is not an abandonment of the road, are not prejudicial to the substantial rights of defendant.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

Action by the city of Portland against A. N. King to take land for a street. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals and assigns as error: (1) The admission of oral evidence as to the orders made by the county court in granting an injunction in lieu of the record of its transactions. (2) Allowing respondent's witnesses to testify to the practicability of the route for city travel, and to testify as to the value of appellant's reversionary interest in the road. (3) Reading deeds to property adjoining the road from the entries on the county records. (4) Instructions to the jury that the city having gone upon a county road, and made cuts across it, so that travel was unsafe, is not an abandonment of the road, and no divestment of the right to use it in the public authorities.

J. C. Moreland and Killen, Starr & Thomas, for appellant. W. H. Adams, City Atty., and Raleigh Stott, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding by the city of Portland to appropriate for a street that portion of the Cornell county road from B to J street in the city, and to condemn appellant's reversionary interest, if any, therein. A trial before a jury in the court below resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellant for the sum of $2,500, from which he appeals, assigning as error the rulings of the court in the admission of testimony and instructions to the jury. The form of the proceeding has obviated the only difficult question that could arise in the case, and it may be conceded that the errors assigned are well taken, yet they could not possibly have been prejudicial to any substantial rights of the appellant, and we have no alternative but to affirm the judgment.

OURY et al. v. GOODWIN.

(Supreme Court of Arizona. Jan. 24, 1891.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—EXERCISE IN TERRITORIES—PUBLIC USE—IRRIGATION.

1. The territory of Arizona, though not possessing sovereignty, is clothed with authority to provide for the exercise of the power of eminent domain by the clause in the organic act which says: "The legislative power of this territory extends to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States."

2. To determine what is a public use authorizing the exercise of this power, cases and principles, rather than definitions, must be consulted.

3. It is well established by the weight of authority that in determining what is a public use, as contradistinguished from a private use, the peculiar physical conditions and necessities of the country are to be considered, and in some cases to determine whether the taking is for a public or private use.

4. That in the territory of Arizona the physical conditions are such, and the necessity for the use of water for irrigation so great and indispensable, as to authorize an act of the territorial legislature providing for the condemnation of right of way for ditches or canals by the agent of the territory for the use of 13 or less farmers (or ranchers) in a farming neighborhood.

5. That the taking in this case was for a public use, because in pursuance of a law general in its character and terms, and providing for the irrigation of vast areas of land that would otherwise be wholly worthless and uninhabitable.

Appeal from district court, Maricopa county.

A. Buck, for appellants. W. J. Kingsbury, for appellee.

GOODWIN, C. J. This is an action under title 22, "Eminent Domain," Rev. St. Ariz., act approved March 9, 1887, to condemn real estate of appellant for the purpose of a canal or ditch for irrigating purposes. The appellant contends—First, that the legislature had no power to pass the act; second, that the court, and not the legislature, must be the final judge of what is a public use, as distinguished from a private use; third, that the use in this case is private, and not public.

These are questions of the utmost importance in this territory, and have been presented and argued with ability commensurate with their importance. Was the act, "Eminent Domain," beyond the power and authority of the legislature, and therefore void? The organic law of Arizona provides: "The legislative power of this territory extends to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States. But no laws shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil. . . . The exercise of the power of eminent domain is certainly "a rightful subject of legislation." The various and imperative demands for the exercise of this power are so obvious as to preclude the idea that congress did not intend to confer it by the language used in the organic act. Public buildings, public roads, railroads, canals, water-works, sewers, gas, electric lights, and all the modern improvements of a public character are dependent on the exercise of this power. Not only is the exercise of the power of eminent domain a "rightful subject of legislation," but this power is implied from the negative. "But no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil." The primary disposal, it is needless to say, is the disposal of it by the government when it parts with its title.

The legislature has the power to determine and fix by what tenures lands in the territory shall be held, and under what forms titles shall pass, and who shall be the heirs at the death of the proprietor and pass other like laws. The purpose of the organic act was to transfer from congress to the territorial legislature the power that congress had to pass laws for the people of the territory upon "all rightful subjects of legislation." The territorial legislature is substituted for congress, and clothed with the power of congress, except that it may not pass laws interfering with the primary disposal of the soil, nor tax the property of the United States, nor tax the lands or other property of non-residents higher than the lands or property of residents. That congress had the power to pass an act providing for the exercise of the power of eminent domain in the territory no one will question. That it has delegated this power to the territorial legislature we think is quite clear. Cooley, Const. Lim. 650, says: "In the new territories, however, where the government of the United States exercises sovereign authority, it possesses, as incident thereto, the right of eminent domain, which it may exercise directly or through the territorial governments."

Was the property taken for a private or public use? The court below found that the property in question was sought to be condemned for a "use authorized by law," and was necessary for said use. The "statement of facts" is the evidence taken on the trial. It appears that the ditch in question is connected with the Tempe canal, and what is known as the "Southern Branch." Mr. Goodwin says: "Our branch is not an organization of its own. It is a part of the southern branch, in which Mr. Oury owns stock; it is a part of the same canal." He further states that: "The sanjero of the southern branch has charge of our canal; our canal is just a part of the southern branch." "The directors of the southern branch have control of our ditch as well as the southern branch; the whole business is under one set of directors." He further states that there are about 8,000 acres of land under the ditch, desert land, worthless without irrigation. He further mentions the names of 13 persons who own stock, and states that none of these shareholders own more shares than is necessary to irrigate their land, and that it was the intention to give each shareholder sufficient to irrigate his own land. That others besides these shareholders owned land within the boundaries marked and as covered by the canal. The ditch is owned by a joint-stock association, not a corporation. That about 1,000 inches of water was used through the canal, and the shareholders owned about 2,000 acres. The 1,000 inches of water run through the ditch was owned by the shareholders in the Tempe canal, and in the southern branch both. That 100 inches would be used to 160 acres, sometimes more. These facts, not contradicted, bear on the question of the use being a public use, or a purely private use. The other facts we deem it unnecessary to set forth, as the controversy arises on the facts above set out. The amended complaint alleges, among other things, that the "plaintiff is a resident of the territory of Arizona, county of Maricopa, and an agent of the said territory for the purpose hereafter mentioned, by virtue of title 22 of the Revised Statutes of said territory, and as such agent brings this suit against the defendants for the purposes mentioned aforesaid;" and in paragraph 4, in substance, "that plaintiff, J. C. Goodwin, Robert G. Goodwin, James McClintock, Robert J. Martin, James Gilliland, T. G. Cartledge, Fisher G. Baily, Douglas Lemon, Adams, and numerous other persons, farmers residing in the Missouri Flat neighborhood, county and territory aforesaid, are the owners of about 8,000 acres of arable and irrigable lands in said neighborhood, wholly valueless without irrigation," etc.; and prays "to condemn the land for the purposes mentioned in the complaint." The damages, as found by the court, amount to $124.50.

Do the facts of the case disclose that the use was a "use authorized by law,"—in other words, a public use, in the view of the law? There is no definition of a public use that has yet been formulated to which we can go as a certain criterion. To know what is a public use which authorizes the exercise of the power of eminent domain, we must have recourse to cases rather than definitions,—to uses that have been held to be public. There are certain uses about which there is no controversy. Property taken for state-houses, for court-houses, for school-houses, for public roads, and the like, which pass under the immediate control of the public authorities, are cases of clear and direct public uses. Property taken for railroads, canals, and the like have also been conceded to be taken for public uses. In this class of cases the property is not in the possession of or controlled by the officers or agents of the public. Private individuals own and control the property. The title to the property is not in the public, nor is the possession or control, as in the case of court-houses, school-houses, etc. The public use consists in the right of the people to transit and transportation at reasonable rates. The public receives a benefit and advantage in this: that a new and better means of travel and transportation is afforded. In other words, in this class of cases it is conceded that the property of the individual owner is properly and lawfully taken, because the general public receives a convenience and advantage, and a right to participate in the use. But there is another class of cases on an entirely different basis. In a number of the states where the physical conditions of the country offer inducements for the construction and erection of mills for grinding grain or sawing lumber, laws have been passed authorizing individuals and private companies to condemn mill-sites. These laws have been sustained in the states where they have been enacted, though questioned, criticised, and often the authority denied, outside of the jurisdictions where the benefits are enjoyed. Upon what principle or reasoning can these laws be sustained? The public do not participate in the title to the property condemned; nor in the possession or control; nor in the use direct, as in the case of railroads, canals, etc. The courts which have upheld these laws as constitutional rank among the first in the country. We refer to the following cases on this point, and other points in this case: Beekman v. Railroad Co., 22 Amer. Dec. 705; Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 507; Tide Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 518; In re Application for Drainage of Lands, 35 N. J. Law, 497; Hartwell v. Armstrong, 19 Barb. 166; Shaw v. Railroad Co., 16 Gray, 415; Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Mill Corp. v. Newman, 12 Pick. 467; Jordan v. Woodward, 40 Me. 317; Manufacturing Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 444; Ash v. Cummings, 50 N. H. 591; Hazen v. Essex Co., 12 Cush. 477; Harding v. Goodlett, 3 Yerg. 41; Hankins v. Lawrence, 8 Blackf. 266; Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532; Venard v. Cross, 8 Kan. 248; Thien v. Voegtlander, 3 Wis. 461; Higginson v. Inhabitants of Nahant, 11 Allen, 530; Commissioners v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234; County Ct. of St. Louis Co. v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175.

In Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 507, CLIFFORD, J., says: "Authority to erect dams across such streams for mill purposes results from the ownership of the bed and the banks of the stream; or the right to construct the same may be acquired by legislative grant, in cases where the legislature is of the opinion that the benefits to the public will be of sufficient importance to render it expedient for them to exercise the right of eminent domain; and, to authorize such an interference with private rights for that purpose, lands belonging to individuals have often been condemned for such purpose, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, in cases where, from the nature of the country, mill-sites sufficient in number could not otherwise be obtained; and that right is even more frequently exercised to enable mill-site owners to flow the water back beyond their own limits in order to create sufficient power or head and fall to operate their mills." Mill Corp. v. Newman, 23 Amer. Dec. 627, says: "But it is said the analogy fails when applied to laying bare the flats in order to get the water-power for mills, because the public have no right in respect to the manufactories, as they have to travel on the turnpike roads. But the public may be well said to be paid or compensated in the one as well as in the other case, and are benefited by the one improvement as well as by the other." Take the grist-mill established in this city as an example. Is it no benefit to have the corn ground near to the inhabitants, rather than at a distance? But you cannot compel the miller to grind your corn for the toll, as you may the proprietors of the turnpike to let you travel over the road for a toll. * * * For more than a century the mill-owners had the right to raise a head or pond of water by flowing the lands of others, paying the damage. In many such cases valuable meadows have been inundated, and thus private property has been taken without the consent of the owners, excepting only as they may be supposed to have consented to the laws made by the legislature. But for these 'Mill Acts,' as they are called, the mill-owner might have been liable for the damages as at common law, or the owner of the land might have removed the dam as a private nuisance. But under and in virtue of these acts the dam is protected. The owner of the land is thereby deprived of the entire dominion of his soil, because the public good required the sacrifice of his lands for a reasonable price. Now, we have nothing to do with the expediency of these various mill acts, but it is entirely apparent that the legislature have considered it for the public good to encourage the erection of mills, and have subjected the property of citizens to the control of mill-owners, they paying the damage. The principle is that the lands of individuals are holden subject to the requisitions of the public exigencies, a reasonable compensation being paid for the damage. It is not taking the property of one man and giving it to another. At most, it is a forced sale, to satisfy the pressing want of the public. Now, this is as it should be. The will or caprice of an individual would often defeat the most useful and extensive enterprises if it were otherwise." It is not claimed in the case just cited that the right of the general public to participate is the basis of the right to condemn. The resulting benefits are held sufficient, and are relied upon as justifying the exercise of this power.

In Scudder v. Falls Co., to be found in 23 Amer. Dec. 770, the court discusses what is a public use, and on what power of eminent domain is based. The case is stated in these words: "Whereas, the object of the present franchise is to create a water-power and erect thereon extensive manufacturing establishments. These will be under the control of individuals. The company will either build or lease. They may build for themselves or lease to whom they please, and they are under no obligation to let the public participate in the immediate profits of their undertaking. If to establish this as a public benefit, it is indispensably necessary that the public should have the privilege of participating in it directly and immediately, then the proposition is not made out, and the defendants have no authority. But is not this view too narrow? Can public improvements be limited within such a compass? May we not, in considering what shall be deemed a public use and benefit, look at the objects, the purposes, and the results of the undertaking?" In this case, decided as early as 1832, it was held that the use was public, and not private, because of the incidental benefits to the public. There was to be no participation by the public, only the incidental benefits. The court further says: "Nor is it [eminent domain] limited to private corporations whose sole object, or even whose primary object it is to promote the public good. Such corporations are not to be found. Private interest or emolument is the primum mobile in all. The public interest is secondary and consequential."

And again: "The ever-varying condition of society is constantly presenting new objects of public importance and utility, and what shall be considered a public use or benefit may depend somewhat on the situation and wants of the community for the time being." 22 Amer. Dec. 700. After referring to a number of cases wherein it has been held that "Mill Acts" are constitutional if the public have the right to participate, the court goes on to say: "But in many of the states the validity of statutes authorizing the condemnation of sites and the flowage of land, for the establishment and maintenance of mills and other manufactories, has been upheld on the broad ground, that, without regard to any actual right of the public in the use of them, they are of such public utility as to be in the nature of public improvements." Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532; Todd v. Austin, 34 Conn. 78; Oecum Co. v. Manufacturing Co., 35 Conn. 496; Grammell v. Potter, 6 Iowa, 548; Venard v. Cross, 8 Kan. 248; Harding v. Funk, Id. 315; Cogswell v. Essex Mill Corp., 6 Pick. 94; Fiske v. Farmingham Co., 12 Pick. 68; Mill Corp. v. Newman, Id. 467; Hazen v. Essex Co., 12 Cush. 475; Miller v. Troost, 14 Minn. 365, (Gil. 282); Manufacturing Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 444; Newcomb v. Smith, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 71; Fisher v. Horicon, 10 Wis. 351; Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 507, per CLIFFORD, J.

In 47 N. H. 456, this question is put: "Or, to put the question in a general form, is it of such general public advantage that the streams and waters of this state should be brought into practical use for manufacturing purposes that a private right standing in the way of the enterprise, designed to accomplish extended and connected improvements in the water of a large stream, * * * is taken for a public use when taken to advance such an enterprise and remove an obstacle to its success? The act authorizing the property taken was sustained by the court. In the case of Tide-Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 521, it is held that the right of eminent domain could be employed for the purpose of reclaiming large tracts of tide-water land, and based its decision on the ground that 'it is the resulting general utility which gives such an enterprise a kind of public aspect, and invests them with privileges which do not belong to mere private interests.' The case of Head v. Manufacturing Co., decided by the supreme court of the United States at the October term, 1884, (113 U. S. 16, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441,) is instructive on the subject of the 'Mill Acts' of many states, and does not deny their constitutionality, even in the instances where there is no pretense of a right on the part of the public to participate, except in the resulting benefits. The general mill act of New Hampshire authorized 'any person or any corporation' to erect a dam flowing the lands of others, paying the owners of land flowed damages to be assessed 'by a committee or a jury.' In that case, as in this, it was claimed that it was taking private property for private use, contrary to the constitution. The taking was held to be lawful, on the right of the legislature to make laws affecting such cases. When property in which several persons have a common interest cannot be fully and beneficially enjoyed in its existing condition, the law often provides a way in which they may compel one another to submit to measures necessary to secure its beneficial enjoyment, making equitable compensation to any whose control or of interest in the property is thereby modified."

But we desire to quote from this decision of the highest court in the land, and of so recent delivery, for the purpose of showing the strength of the authorities on the propositions involved in this case. First, the act which is sustained gives the right to "any person or any corporation" to flow the lands of others; that is, as held in many cases, to take them. Further it says: "General mill acts exist in a great majority of the states of the Union. Such acts, authorizing land to be taken or flowed in invitum for the erection and maintenance of mills, existed in Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, and North Carolina, as well as in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, before the Declaration of Independence, and exists to this day in each of these states except Maryland. * * * They were enacted in Maine, Kentucky, Missouri, and Arkansas soon after their admission into the Union. They were passed in Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida while they were yet territories, and re-enacted after they became states. They were also enacted in Pennsylvania in 1803, in Connecticut in 1864, and more recently in Vermont, Kansas, Oregon, West Virginia, and Georgia, but were afterwards repealed in Georgia. In most of these states their validity has been assumed without dispute; and they were never adjudged to be invalid anywhere until since 1870, and then in three states only, and for the incompatibility with their respective constitutions. "The principle objects, no doubt, of the earlier acts were grist-mills; and it has been generally admitted, even by those courts which have entertained the most restricted view of the legislative power, that a grist-mill which grinds for all comers, at tolls fixed by law, is for a public use. But the statutes of many states are not so limited either in terms or in the usage under them. In Massachusetts for more than half a century the mill acts have been extended to mills for any manufacturing purpose. And throughout New England, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, and many of the western states, the statutes are equally comprehensive." I have quoted thus fully because the expression is that of the supreme court of the United States, and as recent as 1884; and because it shows that these acts are not sustained as constitutional because of the right having been exercised before the adoption of the constitutions, though many cases place the right or power on that ground; and, further, because in my opinion the mill acts of the numerous states have far less foundation in public necessity or public utility than the water acts of Arizona, and because the similarity of the acts is apparent. Under the mill acts any person or corporation may take private property for their use, the benefits being the general and resulting benefits to the public. Under the water acts any person or corporation may take right of way for water. The mill acts are held valid where there is no participation by the public. Is it then necessary that there should be participation direct under the water acts, to obviate the objection of its otherwise being a private, and not a public, use? In some of the drainage acts of the various states and territories there is no participation. I am not unmindful of the fact that some cases place the lawfulness of both the mill acts and the drainage acts under the power of the legislature, expressed by the court in the case from which we have just quoted, viz., the right to compel owners of private and separate property to join with other owners of private and separate adjoining property to improve the same in invitum, as by a common ditch, party-walls, etc. In the case of the exercise of the power of eminent domain, the individual has a portion of his property taken for which ample compensation is made. In the case of a resort to the other power, as in the drainage acts or some of them, the part not taken may be sold at a sacrifice to pay assessment for the benefits. But there are many cases where the power must rest on the right of eminent domain, as where one man's land is flowed for the benefit of another man's mill; where a right of way is taken over one man's land for a ditch to drain the swamp lands of one or more of his neighbors. In all these cases the private property of the individual is taken, and it is of little concern to him under what particular power. If under the power of condemnation, he gets compensation for what is taken. If under the power to assess for improvement, a forced sale of all may result in a sacrifice of all. If the constitution cannot protect in the latter case, ought it to be invoked in the former to the detriment of the community, and against a general beneficial public policy, growing out of peculiar and extraordinary physical conditions of the country? The counterpart in principle to the proposition involved in this case is to be found in the drainage laws of various states, especially on the sea-coast. There it is to get water off the soil; here it is to get it on to and in the soil. What difference can there be in principle? Some of the cases base the lawfulness of the drainage acts on the plea (may we not say in many cases, pretext) of promoting the public health. Many other cases base the right on the broad ground of public benefit and utility. 22 Amer. Dec. 705. RODMAN, J., said, in sustaining the act to condemn: "If 'public utility' is synonymous with 'public use,' the case is still clearer. In many cases, therefore, it has been held that acts for the drainage of lands by the power of eminent domain, where the chief object was to improve the land and render it fit for human habitation and cultivation, were constitutional and valid." Tide-Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 518; In re Application for Drainage, 35 N. J. Law, 497; Hartwell v. Armstrong, 19 Barb. 166; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634. In the last case RODMAN, J., said: "It is well known that in the Atlantic section of this state there are hundreds of thousands of acres of what is called 'swamp land,' which from the flatness of their surface, and the filling up of the natural courses of drainage, if any ever existed, cannot be relieved of the water which ordinarily covers them, and made fit for human habitation and cultivation, except by cutting artificial canals from them into some convenient creek or river, which must necessarily pass through the intervening lands of the riparian proprietors. If these canals can be cut only by the permission of the owners of the banks of the necessary outlets, this vast area of fertile land must remain for ages an uncultivated and unpopulated wilderness, and it will be entirely valueless to those who bought it from the state on the faith of its laws. An act which aims to remedy so great an evil, affecting so many persons now living, and so many more in the future, must be deemed one of general and public utility. * * * Roads and aqueducts are classed together in the Institutes as servitudes of the same public character. In the swamps, which the act in question chiefly affects, the canals are more important than the roads, as they must always precede them."

In these cases water must be taken off the lands to fit them for habitation and cultivation. In Arizona water must be taken on the lands to fit them for habitation and cultivation. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 304, 10 Pac. Rep. 674, says: "And while the court will hold the use private when it appears that the government or public cannot have any interest in it, the legislature, in determining the expediency of declaring a public use, may no doubt take into consideration all the advantages to follow from such action; as the advancement of agriculture, the encouragement of mining and the arts, and the general, though indirect, benefits derived by the people at large from the dedication. It may be that, under the physical condition existing in some portions of the state, irrigation is not theoretically a 'natural want,' in the sense that living creatures cannot live without it. But its importance as a means of producing food from the soil makes it less necessary, in a scarcely appreciable degree, than the use of water by drinking it. The government would seem to have not only a distant and consequential, but a direct, interest in the use. Therefore a public use." Here the use of water for agriculture is held to be a public use. The same authority says: "We are only called on to say that sections of the Code which provide for taking water from riparian proprietors (on due compensation to supply farming neighborhoods) are constitutional and valid." In Barbler v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, (1884, Justice FIELD says: "But neither the amendment, [14th amendment to the constitution.] * * * nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes called its 'police power,' to prescribe regulations, to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity. From the very necessities of society, legislation of a special character, having these objects in view, must often be had in certain districts, such as for draining marshes and irrigating arid plains." "Special burdens are often necessary for general benefit, for supplying water, preventing fires, lighting districts, cleaning streets, opening parks, and many other objects." This was said in passing on and construing the constitutional provision, providing that no one shall be "deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." "Due process of law" was held to mean affecting all alike who were of the same class or similarly situated. Take the case of ditching or draining companies in interior states where there are swamp lands. The owners of the swamp lands are allowed to form ditching companies, and drain their lands and the lands of their neighbors, and assess their neighbors in invitum for the expenses incurred, and in some instances, as I have before said, selling at a sacrifice, the lands of their neighbors to meet the assessments. The ditches limited in some cases to little farming neighborhoods, comprising fewer in number than 13. No doubt these laws were first enacted on the theory of the general health, and may have been continued on that pretense long after everybody understood that the increased productiveness of the soil and the enhanced value of the lands constituted the primum mobile of the stockholders in the companies. These laws have been upheld in states where the judiciary might say it was a startling proposition to assert that one man might invoke the state's power of eminent domain to convey water over another man's land, paying him ample compensation therefor. In the one case a mere right of way, a slender strip of land, is taken,—is appropriated,—and compensation made therefor; in the other, a ditch or drain is made in invitum, and the benefits assessed by others, and must be paid or a forced sale result. Why should the first proposition be startling and the second accepted and approved?

In the state of Nevada it has been held that the law authorizing the condemnation of land to give access to mines, and to enable miners to carry on the business of mining, is constitutional. Mining Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 402. In Mining Co. v. Corcoran, 15 Nev. 147, it was held constitutional to authorize the condemnation of lands for the purpose of operating a mine. In Colorado, statutes have been passed authorizing the appropriation of water by individuals for irrigating, and also the right to condemn land for right of way for irrigation. Canal Co. v. Bright, 8 Colo. 144, 6 Pac. Rep. 142; Schilling v. Rominger, 4 Colo. 100. I refer to these Nevada and Colorado cases as authority direct on the question involved in this case.

An examination of these cases, the mill-site, the mining cases, the water cases, discloses the fact that the legislatures of various states have clothed private corporations and individuals with the power of eminent domain to make available the extraordinary natural resources within their borders. In a great number of these instances there is no participation by the general public, and the public use consists in the purely incidental benefits. The peculiar physical conditions, and the great benefit that would result to the general public, seemed to justify a public policy authorizing the taking of private property to promote the general welfare in such cases. In most states, and under ordinary conditions, laws like the mill-site acts, the dam acts, and the acts allowing land to be condemned to facilitate mining, and for irrigation, would not be passed, and might not be thought of sufficient public necessity and importance to be upheld if passed. The conflict in the authorities may be accounted for in the different conditions that exist in different states. The authorities are numerous that sites for manufacturing may not be condemned, though manufacturing is of great public utility, and promote the general welfare in a pre-eminent degree. But the reason given is that a sufficient number of sites can be had by purchase, and without the necessity of condemnation. But a different ruling prevails where manufacturing is done by water-power, and mill-sites are few, as we have seen in the cases before referred to.

All condemnation acts are predicated on the proposition that private ownership must yield to public necessity. "Public necessity" often means, as illustrated in the above instances, public convenience and advantage. We have many other instances of what "public necessity" means. Though telephones are of very recent invention, and reach the very limited few, their use is held to be a public necessity; in other words, public convenience and advantage,—sufficiently so, at least, to justify the exercise of the sovereign power of eminent domain. Natural gas, though limited to localities small in area, is held also to be a public necessity, and therefore to justify the exercise of this extraordinary power. Laws relating to the telephone and natural gas are good illustrations of the adaption of the law to the existing conditions, and the necessity for the enforcement of the doctrine that private property must yield, on compensation being made, to the public welfare. But recently both the telephone and natural gas were unknown, now both are necessary to the public use; that is, we submit to the public convenience and advantage. "Government must adapt itself to the existing condition and wants of society, or its efficiency is destroyed." Swan v. Williams, 2 Mich. 438. "This right of resumption [condemnation] may be exercised not only when the safety, but also when the interest, or even the expediency, of the state is concerned." Beekman v. Railroad Co., 3 Paige, 78. Property may be taken under power of eminent domain, where the use is merely amusement or recreation, as for public drives or parks. Higginson v. Inhabitants of Nahant, 11 Allen, 530; In re

Mount Washington Road Co., 35 N. H. 134; In re Bushwick Ave., 48 Barb. 9; County Court v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175; Commissioners v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234.

Speaking of the power of the state to exercise the right of eminent domain in behalf of railroads, Judge COOLEY says: "In such cases the property is not so much appropriated to the public use as taken to subserve some general and important public policy." Ryerson v. Brown, 35 Mich. 339. Chancellor Kent has written: "If the public interest can be in any way promoted by the taking of private property, it must rest in the wisdom of the legislature to determine whether the benefit to the public will be of sufficient importance to render it expedient for them to exercise the right of eminent domain, and to authorize an interference with the private rights of individuals for that purpose." 2 Kent, Comm. 340. I give due weight to the remark of Judge COOLEY that "it would not be entirely safe" to apply with "much liberty" the words "in any way;" and the further remark of Judge COOLEY that private property may not be taken "for objects which may merely tend to give an aspect of beauty," etc. I have looked into the various instances of the exercise of the right and power of eminent domain in the cases before cited, to ascertain whether it is necessary that the property appropriated should be actually appropriated to a direct public use, or to some use in which the general public might participate, as in the cases of railroads and canals, or whether the requirements of the constitution might not be met, if the use was in pursuance of some general and important public policy. In other words, may a state or territory, in view of its natural advantages and resources and necessities, legislate in such a way, exercising the power of eminent domain, that these advantages and resources may receive the fullest development for the general welfare, the laws being general in their operation? This territory is vast in extent, and rich in undeveloped natural resources. Mountains and deserts are not an inviting prospect, when viewed by a stranger in transit. But the mountains abound in the precious metals, gold and silver, "the jewels of sovereignty;" and the deserts may be made to "bloom and blossom as the rose." The one great want is water. With this resource of nature made available, the mountains and the deserts may be made to yield fabulous wealth, and Arizona become the home of a vast, prosperous, and happy people. But with water in this territory "cribbed, cornered, and confined" it will continue and remain the mysterious land of arid desert plains, and barren hill-sides, and bleak mountain peaks. The legislature of the territory, seeing what was apparent to all, adopted at an early day a policy,— "a general and important public policy." That policy was to protect against private ownership and monopoly the one thing indispensable to the growth, development, and prosperity of the territory,—the element that would serve to uncover the gold and silver hidden in the hills and mountains, and transform the desert into a garden. Section 22 of the bill of rights provides: "All streams, lakes, and ponds of water capable of being used for the purposes of navigation or irrigation are hereby declared to be public property, and no individual or corporation shall have the right to appropriate them exclusively to their own private use, except under such equitable regulations and restrictions as the legislature shall provide for that purpose." Section 3198, Rev. St., provides: "The common-law doctrine of riparian rights shall not obtain or be of any force or effect in this territory." Then provision is made for public and private acequias. Section 3201, Rev. St. Ariz.: "All the inhabitants of this territory, who own or possess arable or irrigable lands, shall have the right to construct public or private acequias, and obtain the necessary water for the same from any convenient river, creek, or stream of running water." Section 3202 provides: "Whenever such public or private acequias shall necessarily run through the lands of any private individuals not benefited by said acequias, the damage resulting to such private individuals on the application of the party interested shall be assessed by the probate judge of the proper county in a summary manner." These provisions were enacted early in the history of the territory, and probably existed as they are now when the territory was a part of old Mexico. The intention was to make the use of water, as much so as practicable, within the reach of all, and to guard it against monopoly by private ownership on the one hand, and against being hemmed in by the ownership of the adjacent land, liable to be acquired and held by speculators, on the other hand. The wisdom of this policy, under the physical conditions existing in the territory, must be apparent to every one. What better illustration could we have than the present case? Eight thousand acres of desert land can be brought under cultivation if the right of way can be obtained over intervening land; the value of the land taken is $124.50, which the owner of the land receives. What was the policy? Private ownership and monopoly of the streams, lakes, and ponds was prohibited. They were reserved for and dedicated to the people. To make the water of these streams, lakes, and ponds available, the right of way must be provided for ditches and canals over the lands of those who might become the owners of the soil on the borders of the streams or the margins of the lakes and ponds. Without this provision it is easy to see how a few individuals might throw themselves across the pathway of progress and development, by acquiring the lands on the margins of the streams and around the lakes and ponds. The water intended for the free and general use would be surrounded, hemmed in, and without a right of way available under the law the vast tracts of land lying on the outside must forever remain desert, or pay the tribute of extortionate and unconscionable demands. To prevent this, the laws above mentioned were enacted at the very beginning, and before titles were acquired. The laws of the territory, on the subject of water and water-rights, are not peculiar to this territory. Similar laws exist in Nevada, Montana, Colorado, Idaho, Dakota, and New Mexico. The legislatures of all these states and territories have by their enactments declared their belief in the constitutionality of these laws, and in none of them have the courts held otherwise. It is in the first instance for the legislature to declare what are public uses to which private property may be appropriated. If a law declaring such uses, and making provision for such appropriations, is not in contravention of some constitutional provision, it is the duty of the courts to recognize and enforce it. If there is a doubt as to its constitutionality; if not clearly unconstitutional, being the act of the law-making power and a co-ordinate branch of the government,—it is well settled that it is the duty of the courts to treat and enforce it as a valid law. If the law is unwise in its provisions, or oppressive in its operation, the power that created it must be looked to to repeal or modify it. In this case the proceeding is in the name of the territory of Arizona, by James C. Goodwin as its agent. It conforms to the requirements of the statutes, and is not in contravention of the constitution of the United States, or the organic act of the territory, or any act of congress. The judgment below is therefore affirmed.

SLOAN and KIBBEY, JJ., concur.

STATE ex rel. JOURNAL PUB. CO. v. KENNEY, Auditor.

(Supreme Court of Montana. March 28, 1891.)

STATE AUDITOR—DUTY TO ISSUE WARRANTS—APPROPRIATIONS.

1. Taxes levied for a fiscal year must be treated as revenue for that year, though they may not be collected and reach the treasury before the commencement of the following fiscal year, and are to be considered in determining whether the appropriations by the legislature provide for expenditures which exceed "the total tax provided by law," which is prohibited by Const. Mont. art. 12, § 12.

2. Where the legislature has made an appropriation for a claim against the state, and it has been examined, approved, and transmitted to the auditor by the state board of examiners, and the taxes levied for the year are less than the total appropriations, it is the duty of the auditor to issue his warrant on the treasurer for the claim. He cannot refuse on the ground that there is no money in the treasury for its immediate payment.

McCutcheon & McIntire, for petitioner.
Henri J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BLAKE, C. J. The affidavit of the relator states the following facts: The Journal Publishing Company is a corporation, and entered March 11, 1889, into a contract with the territory of Montana to do all the printing thereof, pursuant to law. The state, under this contract, is indebted to the relator in the sum of \$7,909.93, for printing for the territory and state. The accounts therefor were presented by the relator to the state board of examiners, and audited, approved, and allowed in said sum, and was by it certified and presented to the second legislative assembly. Said legislative assembly, by an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of all claims against the state approved by the state board of examiners, and reported to the legislative assembly," approved March 7, 1891, appropriated out of the funds of the state the sum of \$7,909.93 to pay this claim. A demand for the relator was made March 14, 1891, of the respondent, that as state auditor he should draw his warrant on the state treasurer for the amount of said claim. The respondent refused to draw any warrant therefor. The return does not deny any of the foregoing allegations, but contains the following averments: The assessed value of all the property within the state for the last fiscal year was \$112,000,000. The revenue of the state thus far for the fiscal year ending November 30, 1891, amounts to \$363,332.80. The revenue of the state from a license and property tax for the remainder of this fiscal year will not exceed \$70,000. The fiscal year of 1891 commenced December 1, 1890, and ends November 30, 1891. The taxes levied for this fiscal year, and not paid in by the county treasurers, and received by the state treasurer until the commencement of the fiscal year 1892, are carried upon the books of his office for the purpose of paying off all indebtedness for which appropriations have been made by the legislative assembly for the expenditures incurred in the fiscal year ending November 30, 1892; and the sums received after December 1, 1891, by the state treasurer, are credited upon his books as funds of the fiscal year 1892, and not for the year 1891. Between February 18, 1891, and March 7, 1891, the legislative assembly passed many appropriation bills, which obtained the approval of the governor in the order which is specified. The answer sets forth particularly the laws which are referred to, the dates of their approval, and the amount appropriated thereby, which exceeds \$640,000 for the fiscal year ending November 30, 1891. The appropriation bills which became laws before the act, supra, which includes the claim of the relator, appropriated for the fiscal year ending November 30, 1891, out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of \$558,412.36. The state treasurer has set apart for the purposes which are mentioned in the statutes, respectively, of the moneys so received, the entire sum in the treasury. And the answer further alleges: "That at the present time there is not any money in the state treasury that is available or applicable to the payment of the claim of this relator, nor subject to any warrant that might be drawn in favor of this relator for said claim. That since the 28th day of February, 1891, this resistant has drawn certain warrants upon the state treasury, and which have been paid in accordance with the provisions of the general laws, and in pursuance of the appropriations made in the acts last mentioned, in the total sum of \$95,207.30. That there now is a balance in the state treasury of \$268,125, so set apart as aforesaid. That this resistant has refused to draw his warrant in favor of the relator for the claim so presented, upon the ground that the last legislative assembly of the state of Montana have authorized expenditures and made appropriations for the fiscal year 1891, prior to the passage of [the act, supra.] heretofore referred to, which exceed the total tax then and now provided by law, and applicable to such appropriation and expenditure, and which exceed, in the aggregate of such total tax, the sum of \$100,000." The relator filed a demurrer to the answer, upon the ground that the facts therein stated did not constitute a defense. The act supra, which is referred to in the affidavit of the relator, contains the following provisions: "Section 1. That the sum of \$41,648.19 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the treasury, not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of claims against the state, approved by the state board of examiners, reported to the second legislative assembly. Sec. 2. That, in payment of said claims, the auditor is hereby directed to draw his warrant upon the state treasury in favor of the following persons, and for the following amounts." In this list the relator is named, and the amount is the same as that which is specified in the affidavit. The statute provides that "the last day of December in each and every year shall be the end of the fiscal year for territorial [state] purposes." Comp. St. div. 5, § 140. It is disclosed by the answer and admitted by the relator that the second legislative assembly appropriated for the fiscal year of 1891 the sum of \$640,000, and that a large part thereof, the sum of \$558,412.36, was embraced in laws which were approved prior to the act supra, under which the relator asserts his rights in this proceeding. The revenue, which has been received during this fiscal year, and which, it is estimated, will be received during the remainder thereof, amounts to the sum of \$433,332.80. The deficit seems to be the sum of \$217,000 or thereabouts. The respondent for this reason refuses to draw his warrant in behalf of the relator, and maintains that said legislative assembly has appropriated an amount in excess of the money in the treasury of the state, or which could be made available therefor during the fiscal year of 1891. The following section of the constitution is cited to uphold his action: "No appropriation shall be made or any expenditures authorized by the legislative assembly whereby the expenditures of the state during any fiscal year shall exceed the total tax then provided for by law, and applicable to such appropriation or expenditure, unless the legislative assembly making such appropriation shall provide for levying a sufficient tax, not exceeding the rate allowed in section nine (9) of this article, to pay such appropriations or expenditures within such fiscal year. * * * No appropriation of public moneys shall be made for a longer term than two years." Article 12, § 12. The opinion of the justices of the supreme court of the state of Colorado in Re Appropriation by General Assembly, 13 Colo. 316, 22 Pac. Rep. 464, considers similar constitutional provisions, and says: "It will be observed that appropriations and expenditures for ordinary purposes are legitimate so long as they do not exceed the total tax already provided by law, and applicable for their payment, or which may, within constitutional limits, be so provided for their payment within the proper fiscal year. * * * What we have said of the legislative department in respect to making appropriations or authorizing expenditures in excess of constitutional authority applies with equal force to the executive department in recognizing or dealing with legislation affecting the public revenue. If legislative acts, making appropriations in excess of constitutional limits, have unfortunately received the governor's signature instead of his veto, he should nevertheless withhold his approval from any and all vouchers relating to such unconstitutional appropriations. So, also, the auditor should refuse to draw any warrant therefor, and the treasurer should decline to make payment thereon. In reference to matters arising under enactments clearly unconstitutional, the unauthorized act of one government official is no justification or excuse for a similar act by another." It is obvious that the responsibility of the legislative assembly is of the utmost gravity. The ninth section, supra, declares that the rate of taxation of real and personal property for state purposes in any one year shall not exceed $2\frac{1}{2}$ mills on each dollar of valuation, whenever such property shall amount to one hundred million dollars. Article 12, § 9. By virtue of the power herein conferred, an act was passed by this legislative assembly, and approved March 4, 1891, which levied for the fiscal years of 1891 and 1892, respectively, the highest rate of taxation which was allowed, to-wit, $2\frac{1}{2}$ mills on each dollar of such valuation. "Any legitimate expenditure of the state," said the court in People v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 Pac. Rep. 608, "necessary to be provided for by state tax, is a state purpose, and the tax to be provided is a tax for a state purpose." We assume, what is not controverted in this hearing, that the acts of the second legislative assembly, supra, which are enumerated in the answer, and embody appropriations, are within this definition of the constitutional expression, "state purposes."

In performing the grave task of observing this restriction of the constitution, some difficult problems require solution. We again quote from the opinion. In re Appropriation by General Assembly, supra, which sheds considerable light upon this inquiry, and says: "We are asked what legal criterion is fixed by which it can be known, at the date of an act appropriating or authorizing the expenditure of money, whether such appropriation or expenditure will be in excess of the prescribed constitutional limits. We answer that there is no absolute criterion which can be relied upon in every instance and under all circumstances. The general assembly must, of necessity, exercise their own judgment in the first instance." It is also stated that the legislators must obtain all the information respecting the public revenue and probable expenses of the government which can be derived from the reports of officers and the testimony of other persons concerning these matters. It may therefore be reasonably presumed that the second legislative assembly of the state acted upon the knowledge within its command, that the valuation of the taxable property for the fiscal year 1890 was $112,000,000, and that this rate of taxation would yield a revenue of $280,000 per annum for the fiscal years 1891 and 1892. The aggregate of this sum and the above amount of $433,332.80 is $713,332.80.

The act concerning revenue, approved March 6, 1891, provides that the county clerk shall, on or before the first Monday of October, "deliver a copy of the corrected assessment book, to be styled, 'Duplicate Assessment Book,' to the county treasurer." Section 90. "Within ten days after the receipt of the 'Duplicate Assessment Book' the county treasurer must mail to each tax-payer the following notice: (1) Amount of taxes; (2) that taxes will be delinquent after the first day of September, and that, unless paid prior thereto, ten per cent. will be added to the amount thereof; (3) the time and place at which payment of taxes may be made." Section 96. "The treasurer of each county in this state shall be, by virtue of his office, collector of taxes therein." Section 185. "After December 1st of each year, all unpaid taxes are delinquent." Section 100. "On the first Monday in March, June, September, and second Monday in December, the county treasurer must settle with the county commissioners for all moneys collected for the state or county." Section 90. "Each county treasurer shall, at the expiration of every three months, render an account of and cause to be paid over to the state treasurer the amount of all moneys collected for state purposes, and shall complete the collection of all lists delivered to him; and at the expiration of each fiscal year, and at the expiration of his term of office, shall make final settlement with the county commissioners of his county, and shall report to the treasurer immediately thereafter a correct statement of the amount found due the state, and the county treasurer shall remit to him such amount." Section 183. It is apparent from these provisions of the statute that the taxes for state purposes become due and payable in the month of October, and that the county treasurers are the agents of the state in the collection thereof. They are required to settle their accounts at certain periods, and remit to the state treasurer the amount of the taxes which have been ascertained to be due. In complying with the requirements of the law, it is not possible for them to pay into the treasury of the state, before the end of the fiscal year, the amount of the taxes which have been levied and collected for that term. It is a safe assertion that a small part of such taxes, if any, will be received by the state treasurer during the fiscal year. It is the contention of the respondent that, under these conditions, the funds which will be realized from the levy of the taxes which have been authorized by the second legislative assembly for the year 1891 cannot be treated as revenue for that period; and that the same should be credited to the proper accounts of the fiscal year 1892, because they will be actually placed in the state treasury after the commencement of the last-named year. We dissent from this proposition. The section supra of the constitution does not use the terms "revenue" or "funds," but declares that "the expenditures of the state during any fiscal year shall not exceed the total tax then provided for by law." The mere circumstance that a brief delay occurs in the transfer of the money, which is the property of the state, to the official custodian thereof, does not touch the question. In Evans v. McCarthy, 42 Kan. 426, 22 Pac. Rep. 631, Mr. Justice VALENTINE for the court said: "But taxes, under a levy made by or for the state, certainly become proceeds for such levy long before they reach the state treasurer's office. They are proceeds of such levy as soon as they are paid into the offices of the various county treasurers of the state, and do not remain something else than proceeds until they reach the state treasurer's office. When they are received by the county treasurers they then become public funds, and belong to the state, and cannot then or afterwards be used for any other purpose than the purpose for which they were appropriated." The treasury of the state, in the eyes of the law, will be the recipient of the proceeds of said levy for the fiscal year 1891, to-wit, the sum of $280,000, before the end thereof. We conclude that this amount which has been estimated to be the revenue from the direct tax for the fiscal year 1891 should be held available to meet in the future, when collected, some of the appropriations which were made for the same time; and that the act, supra, for the relief of the relator and other parties, does not violate any clause of the organic law of the state.

The respondent insists that he cannot be required to draw his warrant for the relator unless there are funds in the treasury for its immediate payment. Our attention has not been directed to the words of any statute or the constitution which sustain this view, and the authorities express an opinion to the contrary. The same cases cover this and another proposition which has been examined. In State v. Hoffman, 35 Ohio St. 435, Mr. Justice WHITE, as the organ of the court, said: "There is no validity in the claim set up by the defendant that there is no money in the treasury of the city with which to pay the warrant, should one be issued. The duty enjoined on the defendant, as auditor of the city, to issue the warrant, is not made dependent on whether there is money in the treasury to pay the warrant. On ascertaining the amount that ought to be paid by the city, in the mode prescribed, he is directed to issue his warrant upon the city treasurer for the amount so ascertained, to be paid out of the general fund of the city, and the same is declared to be a sufficient voucher. The duty of paying the warrant is devolved on the treasurer, and whether he has funds or not with which to take up the warrant is no concern of the auditor in discharging the duties imposed upon him by the statute." In People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11, Mr. Chief Justice FRIED, for the court, said: "To an appropriation, within the meaning of the constitution, nothing more is requisite than a designation of the amount, and the fund out of which it shall be paid. It is not essential to its validity that funds to meet the same should be at the time in the treasury. As a matter of fact, there have seldom been in the treasury the necessary funds to meet the several amounts appropriated under the general appropriation acts of each year. The appropriation is made in anticipation of the receipt of the yearly revenues. It constitutes, indeed, the authority of the comptroller to draw his warrants, and of the treasurer, when in funds, to pay the same, and that is all." See, also, Evans v. McCarthy, supra; State v. Parkinson, 5 Nev. 15; Swann v. Buck, 40 Miss. 268; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. The act prescribing the duties of the state board of examiners provides that any person who has a claim against the state, and for which an appropriation has been made, shall present the same for its action. This statute derives its power from the constitution. Article 7, § 20. The seventh section of the act provides further: "If the board approve such claim, they shall indorse thereon, over their signatures, 'Approved for the sum of ——— dollars,' and transmit the same to the office of the state auditor, and the auditor shall draw his warrant for the amount so approved in favor of the claimant, * * * in the order in which the same was approved." But the respondent must investigate and decide in all cases according to the rules of interpretation which have been laid down in this opinion, whether the appropriations for the fiscal year have exceeded the limitations which have been prescribed by the constitution, and act accordingly. The relator has complied with the laws which have been enacted in pursuance of the constitution; the legislative assembly has made a lawful appropriation for the payment of his claim; and the state board of examiners has approved and transmitted the same to the respondent. It is therefore the legal duty of the state auditor to draw his warrant in favor of the relator for the amount of this claim. The demurrer must be sustained, and, as the respondent declines to file any other answer, it is ordered and adjudged that the peremptory writ of mandate issue according to the prayer of the affidavit.

DISTRICT JUDGES—COMPENSATION—APPROPRIATIONS.

Const. Mont. art. 8, § 14, declares that the legislative assembly may increase or decrease the number of judges in any judicial district. Act Mont. Feb. 27, 1891, provides that the district judges, whose offices may be established by the legislature, shall receive the same compensation as is now, or may hereafter be, provided by law for judges of the district courts. Const. Mont. art. 8, § 29, provides that district judges shall be paid quarterly a certain salary, and section 34 provides that all judges who have been elected or appointed are governed by the same provisions of the constitution. Held, that the constitution appropriates money for the salary of a judge appointed to fill an office subsequently created, and he is entitled to be paid, in preference to appropriations made for other purposes before his appointment.

Application for mandamus.

B. P. Carpenter, for relator. H. J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BLAKE, C. J. The relator prays that a peremptory writ of mandate be issued out of this court, commanding the state treasurer to pay a certain warrant which had been drawn by the state auditor under the following circumstances: The relator was appointed February 28, 1891, a judge of the district court for the first judicial district, and has discharged the duties of the office since that time. The salaries of the district judges of the state are payable quarterly, and one of such quarters ended March 31, 1891, at which time there was due to the relator the sum of $301.39. The state auditor then issued his warrant to the relator, drawn upon the respondent, for the said sum, in payment of said salary. The state treasurer refuses to pay this warrant, and in his answer sets forth these facts, which are conceded. The legislative assembly prior to the 5th day of March, 1891, at the second session thereof, appropriated by several statutes for state purposes the sum of $461,084. The moneys in the treasury of the state, being the sum of $148,400, have been set apart in accordance with certain appropriation laws, which are specified. The legislative assembly, by an act which was approved March 5, 1891, appropriated the sum of $20,000 to pay the salaries of the relator and other district judges who had been appointed in pursuance of statutes passed during said second session. At the date of the passage of the acts creating the office to which the relator was appointed, and providing for the payment of his salary, there was not, and has not been, any moneys in the treasury of the state applicable thereto. The respondent has paid the sum of $234,000 on account of the appropriations which are specified, and there remains unpaid the sum of $230,084. The constitution declares that "the legislative assembly may increase or decrease the number of judges in any judicial district." Article 8, § 14. By an act approved February 28, 1891, an additional judge was authorized for the district court of the first judicial district of the state, and the relator was appointed to the office. It was enacted February 27, 1891, that the district judges whose offices may be established by the legislative assembly, "shall receive the same compensation as is now or may hereafter be provided by law for judges of the district courts." There is no legislation of this character, but the salary has been fixed by the constitution in this section: "The judges of the district court shall each be paid quarterly, by the state a salary, which shall not be increased or diminished during the terms for which they shall have been respectively elected. Until otherwise provided by law, * * * the salary of the judges of the district courts shall be three thousand five hundred dollars per annum each." Id. § 29. It is further declared that "vacancies in the office of * * * judge of the district court * * * shall be filled by appointment by the governor of the state." Id. § 34. All judges of the district courts, who have been elected or appointed, are governed by the same provisions of the constitution. In the absence of any statute, they are entitled to receive from the state the salary which has been defined in the constitution section supra. We reaffirm the doctrine of State v. Hickman, 9 Mont. 370, 23 Pac. Rep. 740, that the language which has been quoted is an appropriation made by law.

The respondent admits the soundness of these legal propositions, but maintains that he cannot pay the warrant delivered to the relator by reason of other appropriations which were made before the act, supra, approved March 5, 1891. It is not claimed that there is any statute that controls this matter. The supreme court of the state of Colorado, in Re Appropriations by General Assembly, 13 Colo. 316, 22 Pac. Rep. 464, said: "In view of the examination we have given the subject, we are of the opinion that acts of the general assembly making the necessary appropriations to defray the expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the state government for each fiscal year, including interest on any valid public debt, are entitled to preference over all other appropriations from the general public revenue of the state, without reference to the date of their passage, and irrespective of emergency clauses." This view was entertained under conditions like those which confront us, with this essential difference: The constitution of that state does not regulate the amount of the salaries of the officers of the executive and judicial departments. The chief reason of the rule thus announced is the necessity of preserving the state, which is paramount to all other considerations. We recognize the force of this argument, but prefer to put this decision upon another ground. The appropriations which are embodied in the constitution have priority over any act of the second legislative assembly which relates to the disbursement of the moneys in the treasury. The rights of the parties are not affected by this act, supra, approved March 5, 1891, and the claim of the relator is supported by the fundamental law of the state. The appropriations which have been made for purposes for which the amounts are not expressed in direct terms by the constitution are necessarily subsequent in the order of payment to the salary of the relator. We are therefore of the opinion that the respondent has in his hands moneys which should be applied upon the warrant of the relator. It is ordered and adjudged that the peremp-tory writ of mandate be issued to the respondent according to the prayer of the relator.

CODE COMMISSION—SALARY OF CLERK—WARRANT OF STATE AUDITOR—FAILURE TO MAKE APPROPRIATIONS.

Const. Mont. art. 12, § 10, provides that no money shall be drawn from the state treasury except upon specific appropriations made by law. Held that, in the absence of an appropriation the state auditor properly refused to issue his warrant on the treasurer for salary due the clerk employed by the code commissioners, under 16th Sess. Acts Mont. p. 117, § 4, authorizing such commissioners to employ a clerk, and directing his salary to be paid monthly by the auditor on vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commission.

Application for mandamus.

Const. Mont. art. 12, § 10, provides that no money shall be drawn from the state treasury except upon specific appropriations made by law.

Wm. Blackford and Steve Carpenter, for relator. Henri J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BLAKE, C. J. The relator has applied to this court for a peremptory writ of mandate to be directed to the state auditor, and commanding him to draw a warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the relator for the sum of $150. It is shown by the affidavit and admitted by the respondent, that the relator was employed May 31, 1890, as the clerk of the code commission of the state, and has acted as such since that time; that he has not received his salary for the month of March, 1891; and that, upon a demand therefor, the respondent refuses to draw his warrant in any sum for the relator. The act under which the code commission was appointed contains this provision: "The said commissioners * * * are empowered and authorized to employ one competent clerk, who shall receive for his * * * services $150 per month. * * * The salary of the clerk of such commission shall be paid monthly by the auditor upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commission." St. 16th Sess. p. 117, § 4. No appropriation has been made for the payment of his salary for the period above mentioned, and the claim of the relator is founded upon the act supra. The case of State v. Kenney, 9 Mont. 389, 24 Pac. Rep. 96, is applicable to these facts, and the application for a peremptory writ of mandate must be denied.

IRRIGATION—SUIT FOR DIVERSION OF WATER—MEASUREMENT—INSTRUCTIONS—APPEAL—PRACTICE.

1. On appeal from an order overruling a motion for a new trial, made upon a statement of the case, under Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 298, providing that the statement shall specify the particular errors relied on, and, if no specifications are made, the statement shall be disregarded on hearing of the motion, the supreme court can only consider the specifications of error found in the record.

2. In an action for damages for diverting waters claimed by virtue of prior appropriation and use for purposes of irrigation, an instruction that the extent of the appropriation of water is determined by the capacity of plaintiff's "head-gate and ditches, and the quantity of water required" by him, to be measured as the statutes (Comp. St. Mont. p. 937, § 1262) provide, is not erroneous in making the test the head-gate, instead of what the ditch will carry.

3. The court instructed the jury that in determining the amount of water plaintiff was entitled to they should find the same in inches, measured in the manner provided by law for the measurement of water; and set out the law in detail in the charge. Held, that there was no error in striking out of the charge before giving it a clause that, in order to find the amount of water plaintiff was entitled to, the evidence and the jury's finding must conform to the measurements provided by the law, and, if the evidence did not, it was only speculative and uncertain, since such clause was mere repetition, and was on the weight of the evidence.

4. Defendants are liable for actual injury to plaintiff by their diversion of the water previously appropriated by him, though they may not have used the water continuously, and may have used it only for a short time.

Appeal from district court, Missoula county.

Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 238, provides the method of settling the statement if the motion for a new trial is to be made upon a statement of the case, and provides that when the notice for the motion designates as the ground of the motion the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, the statement shall specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient; and when the notice designates as the ground of the motion errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the moving party, the statement shall specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely. If no such specifications be made, the statement shall be disregarded on the hearing of the motion.

S. G. Murray and Robinson & Stapleton, for appellants. Geo. W. Reeves, Thos. C. Marshall, and Woody & Webster, for respondent.

HARWOOD, J. The appeal herein is from an order overruling defendants' motion for a new trial. The cause of action alleged by plaintiff is to the effect that defendants, during the year 1889, wrongfully diverted and deprived plaintiff of the use of 550 inches of the waters of Burnt Fork creek, claimed by plaintiff, by virtue of prior appropriation and use, for the purpose of irrigating plaintiff's tract of 320 acres of land situate in Missoula county. The relief demanded by plaintiff is: (1) The recovery of $2,000 damage alleged to have been sustained by reason of such wrongful and continued diversion of said water during the year 1889; (2) that defendants be perpetually enjoined from further interference with plaintiff's alleged water-right. A jury trial was had, which resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor, to the effect that he was entitled to 550 inches of the waters of Burnt Fork creek, as against all of the defendants; and that plaintiff had suffered damage in the sum of $1,535.88 by reason of defendants wrongfully depriving plaintiff of the use of said waters during the year 1889; which damage was apportioned against 12 defendants in divers sums, found by the jury, and set forth in the verdict. The grounds upon which a new trial is sought, as recited in the notice of intention to move therefor, are: "(1) Errors of law committed and occurring at the trial of said cause, duly excepted to; (2) insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict of the jury; (3) that the verdict is contrary to law, (4) excessive damages." Motion for new trial was made upon a statement of the case, and upon the hearing thereof was overruled. Thereupon defendants appealed from the order overruling the motion.

The points presented by appellants' brief for consideration here are far more numerous than the exceptions saved and the specification of error comprised in the record. We must confine our review to the record in this respect. Code Civil Proc. § 298. The first assignment of error met with in the record relates to certain instructions given by the court to the jury. It is contended by appellant's counsel that the court erred in giving a certain instruction as to points to be considered by the jury in ascertaining the quantity of water plaintiff was entitled to. The instruction cited and complained of reads as follows: "The extent of the appropriation of water is determined by the capacity of his head-gate and ditches and the quantity of water required by the appropriator for the uses for which it may be appropriated. In this action plaintiff seeks to establish his claim to the waters of Burnt Fork creek to the extent of 550 inches, measured as the statutes of Montana require, and which is hereafter given."¹ Appellants' counsel contend that "the test is not the head-gate, but what the ditch will carry." We perceive no force in this contention. The head-gate is in one sense a part of the ditch, and at the same time is so devised as to conduct the water through such an aperture as to indicate the dimensions of the volume. The court said to the jury in the instruction that the "capacity of the head-gate and ditches" must be considered in determining the quantity of water to which the appropriator was entitled. The sense in which the observation is made is obvious, and is free from error.

Appellants further complain of the modification of a certain instruction in the following respect: The court gave the jury an instruction as follows: "That in determining the amount of the water plaintiff is entitled to you are instructed to find the same in inches, measured in the manner provided by the laws of Montana for the measurement of water, and which is as follows." This instruction continues to give in detail and by illustration the unit of measurement of water appropriated, as provided by statute. Comp. St. p. 997, § 1262. So far no complaint is made against this instruction. But it appears that, as originally drawn, it contained a clause as follows: "In order for you to find the amount of water plaintiff is entitled to, the evidence and your finding must conform to the above manner of measurements, and, if the evidence does not, it is only speculative and uncertain." This clause was stricken out, and the instruction, as thus modified, was given. The striking of said clause out is assigned by appellants as error. In the same instruction the court had told the jury that in finding the quantity of water to which the plaintiff was entitled the same must be estimated according to the unit of measurement prescribed by statute. Language to the same effect had been used in the other instruction, quoted above. So that the portion of the clause stricken out which related to the unit of measurement by which the jury should estimate the quantity of water plaintiff was entitled to was only a repetition of what had already been given. The other part of the clause stricken out relates to the weight which the jury should give to evidence. We think that was properly stricken out. The jury were the judges of the weight to be given to evidence. The capacity of plaintiff's ditches and the dimensions of the head-gates were questions of controversy upon the trial. Some witnesses, after testifying as to their experience in measuring water for irrigating purposes, and their knowledge of the ditches in question, state they could not state the capacity of said ditches from their knowledge of the same and their experience in measuring water, and such testimony was allowed. Other witnesses testified to having measured the head-gates and examined the ditches for the purpose of estimating the capacity thereof, and stated to the jury the dimensions. The jury was then instructed as to the statutory unit of measurement which the jury should apply in estimating the plaintiff's water-right. The jury were the judges as to the weight of the testimony, and we think the clause in said instruction was properly stricken out, for the reason that all that it properly expressed had already been given; and that it contained expressions as to the weight due to evidence in the estimation of the jury, which was improper.

Appellants assign two other points, wherein they allege the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions asked for on their behalf, relating to the measure and manner of estimating damages resulting from diverting and depriving plaintiff of the water to which he claimed title. By a careful review of the instructions given, we find that the court embodied in the instructions given substantially all of the unobjectionable portions of the instructions mentioned which appellants proffered, and which were by the court refused.

Passing from assignments of error in relation to the giving and refusing to give instructions to the jury, we find that all other specifications set forth in the record relate to "particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict." Section 298, Code Civil Proc. These latter specifications assert in effect the propositions, which will be treated in the order stated, as follows:

1. That the evidence introduced on the part of plaintiff as to the capacity of his ditches was too uncertain to justify the finding of the jury in that respect; and that the evidence introduced on the part of the defendants as to the capacity of plaintiff's ditches "was certain and definite." A study of the evidence presented by the record shows that witnesses for the respective parties had made examinations and measurements of the plaintiff's ditches and head-gates, and stated to the jury the dimensions and capacity thereof. As often occurs in controversies, there is considerable difference in the statement of witnesses for the respective parties as to the capacity of plaintiff's ditches. It was the province of the jury to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and the weight of testimony and make a finding. It has often been announced by the court that where there is evidence to support the verdict the same will not be disturbed because there is conflicting testimony upon the subject. Lincoln v. Rodgers, 1 Mont. 217; Toombs v. Hornbuckle, Id. 286; Ming v. Truett, Id. 322; Travis v. McCormick, Id. 347; Territory v. Reuss, 5 Mont. 605, 5 Pac. Rep. 885; Ramsey v. Cattle Co., 6 Mont. 498, 13 Pac. Rep. 247.

2. That the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, because uncontradicted testimony on behalf of defendants showed that defendants did not continually use the water in controversy; but used the same only at certain specified periods of time, "and that defendant Julian used the same only three days altogether." As to defendant Julian, the record shows that only nominal damages were assessed against him. The admission as to his having used said water three days, if the same belonged to plaintiff, is sufficient, without question, to sustain the nominal damage assessed. But it is not to be inferred from the above observation that we held that such interference with the plaintiff's right to the use of water, without his consent, for that period of time, might not sustain a greater amount of damage than that assessed against defendant Julian. We do not understand that the period of time during which one's right is invaded and he is deprived of the exercise thereof is the only criterion by which the damage is to be estimated. The effect which necessarily resulted from the act is to be considered, and it would without doubt be correct to measure the damage according to the real injury wrought, rather than the time occupied by the wrongful act. These observations apply to the other defendants, as well as to Julian. The period of time during which defendants deprived plaintiff of the use of said water may have been all that was necessary to effect the loss that he complained of, and, if such effect was consummated by the wrongful act or resulted as a consequence thereof, the defendants would be bound to answer in damages therefor, notwithstanding there was some intermission of the wrongful conduct.

3. That the verdict awarding the plaintiff damage is not sustained by the evidence, for the reason that the evidence as to the amount of damage sustained by plaintiff, by reason of being deprived of the use of said water, was too indefinite and uncertain to justify the verdict of the jury in that respect. In this connection appellants specify that the proper measure of damage was the net profit which plaintiff would have realized from the production of his land had the same been irrigated, after deducting the expense necessarily involved in raising and marketing the same; "and there was no evidence before the jury as to the cost of seed, planting and hauling said crop to market, which items should have been deducted from the value of the crop." The record, as we read it, shows a state of facts contrary to appellants' assertions in the specification last mentioned. It appears from the record that plaintiff had appropriated his land for certain purposes by sowing and planting. Evidence was introduced on behalf of plaintiff tending to prove that, had defendants not interfered, and diverted said water belonging to plaintiff, he would have had enough to properly irrigate and bring to maturity the crops which he had planted, with a result as to harvest that season averaging with other crops of the same species on like quality of land, and under other like conditions, as would have existed as to plaintiff, had not defendants interfered and deprived plaintiff of said water. Evidence was introduced not only as to the value of all such crops as plaintiff had devoted his land to, but also as to the expense of planting, raising, harvesting, and marketing such crops. It appears that the case was reopened for the purpose of introducing evidence of such expenses. This testimony tends to prove the very items which appellants assert should have been in evidence before the jury. The court instructed the jury that in estimating damages they should "deduct the amount of expense necessary to mature, harvest, and prepare for market, and put on the market," such crops. This was in harmony with the proposition which appellants insist upon. It is unnecessary here to decide the question as to whether proof in detail of all such items should be required in such a case. If witnesses testify as to what amount of damage resulted from the destruction of a certain thing, measuring the damage in money, the witnesses are subject to all proper inquiries as to how they arrive at the value stated, as to whether or not expenses involved in connection with the subject have been considered in arriving at the value or damage stated, and all other pertinent inquiries would be proper; and, if a witness states a fact which is the result of considering several conditions to arrive at a truthful statement, is it not to be presumed that such conditions have been considered by the witness? At any rate, as before observed, the witness may be questioned as to whether or not he has considered in detail the conditions or circumstances which affect the fact stated. Ellis v. Tone, 58 Cal. 289. Counsel for appellants, in their brief, present a number of questions, which cannot be considered because no specification of errors in such matters is found in the record. Code Civil Proc. § 298. We have carefully considered all questions presented by counsel founded on the errors in law and particulars of insufficiency of evidence, set forth in the record, and find no error therein. The verdict of the jury appears to be fully sustained by the evidence. The order overruling defendants' motion for new trial is affirmed, with costs.

RORK v. BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF DOUGLAS COUNTY et al.

ERRONEOUS TAX CERTIFICATES—REFUNDING—RUNNING OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

1. Where a person holding a tax-sale certificate presents the same in proper time to the board of county commissioners of the county where it is issued, and asks for the refunding (payment back of the taxes, interest, etc.) of such certificate, and the certificate is so erroneous or irregular that the land or lot therein described ought not to be conveyed, the board should discover the errors or irregularities, and order the county clerk not to convey the land or lot. Paragraph 6099, Gen. St. 1889.

2. Paragraph 6099, Gen. St. 1889, does not affect materially any of the substantial rights of persons holding tax certificates issued prior to its adoption. The amendment simply gives new direction for the return of the money to the holder of erroneous or irregular tax-sale certificates.

3. A person cannot prevent the operation of the statute of limitations by delay in taking preliminary action incumbent upon him. Railroad Co. v. Burlingame Tp., 36 Kan. 628, 14 Pac. Rep. 271.

4. Where the owner of tax certificates, which are so erroneous or irregular upon their face as to be absolutely void, or where the tax proceedings in the public offices of the county show clearly that the tax certificates, on account of fatal errors or irregularities in the tax proceedings, are wholly void, the purchaser thereof, in order to refund the same, (obtain a return of his taxes, interest, etc.) must present them to the board of county commissioners within three years after the date of their issue.

Error from district court, Douglas county; N. T. STEPHENS, Judge.

On October 6, 1879, William E. Rork filed with the board of county commissioners of Douglas county his bill for the refunding of certain tax-sale certificates. On July 1, 1880, he filed an amended bill of particulars covering 30 items of claim. On November 3, 1880, the matter came up for hearing before the board of county commissioners, and the same was denied and rejected. Thereupon Rork appealed to the district court of Douglas county, and on December 1, 1880, filed his appeal-bond. The condition of his appeal-bond was as follows: "That whereas, William E. Rork, minor son and heir at law of Carrie L. Rork, deceased, by his next friend, W. S. Warner, has appealed from the decision of the board of county commissioners of the county of Douglas, made by said board on the 3d day of November, 1880, in the matter of certain items of his claim filed in the clerk's office of said county on October 6, 1879, specifically set out in his application, filed in said office on July 1, 1880, to the district court of said county: Now, if the above William E. Rork aforesaid, by his next friend aforesaid, shall prosecute faithfully his appeal, and pay all costs that may be adjudged against him, then the above obligation shall be void, else to remain in full force and virtue." At the April term of the district court for 1881, upon the application of Rork, G. W. Spaulding, administrator of the estate of Carrie L. Rork, deceased, was made a party defendant. On the 24th day of March, 1882, Rork filed an amended petition in which he alleged, among other things, "that he is the sole heir at law of Carrie L. Rork, deceased, and that Carrie L. Rork was in her life-time the owner of certain tax-sale certificates issued by the county treasurer of Douglas county to her and to her assignors, as purchasers of certain real estate, at tax-sales for delinquent taxes, as hereinafter particularly enumerated and set forth; and for his several causes of action he says, [here are set forth the various defects in said 30 tax-sale certificates.] And the said plaintiff alleges that the said G. W. Spaulding is the administrator of the estate of the said Carrie L. Rork, deceased, duly appointed by the county court of Outagamie county, in the state of Wisconsin, and qualified according to law; and the said G. W. Spaulding, as such administrator, has or claims some interest in the several tax-sale certificates, and the said plaintiff asks that he shall show his interest in or claim to the same, or any part thereof. Wherefore your petitioner prays this honorable court to order the county clerk of said county not to convey the several tracts and parcels of land hereinbefore described, (because of the alleged errors and irregularities set out,) under and by virtue of any of the sales, respectively, heretofore set out; and for such other and further order and relief in the premises as may be necessary to enable your petitioner to have refunded to him, by the county treasurer of said county of Douglas, the several amounts and sums of money hereinbefore mentioned, with interest as provided by law in such cases. And your petitioner will ever pray." On September 13, 1882, the board of county commissioners filed an answer to the amended petition, containing a general denial. On September 13, 1882, G. W. Spaulding, administrator of the estate of Carrie L. Rork, deceased, filed an answer in the nature of a disclaimer. Trial had at the October term of the court for 1882 before the court, a jury being waived. Evidence was offered tending to show that (1) the tax-sales were illegal and void, for there was included in each of the certificates a charge for advertising in excess of the fee paid by the county therefor, —this ground applied to all of the 30 causes of action; that (2) certain of the parcels of land had been previously sold to the county, for unpaid taxes and charges assessed thereto, and had not been redeemed from such prior tax-sales, nor sold by the county, nor had the tax-sale certificates issuable to the county been assigned prior to the time the refunding was applied for,—this ground applied to the causes of action from 1 to 15, inclusive; and that (3) certain of the parcels of land were not described on the tax-roll, nor on the tax-sale record, nor in the tax-sale certificates, with sufficient particularity to define what was sold, or intended to be sold, at the tax-sales under which the refunding was applied for,—this ground applied to the causes of action from 16 to 30, inclusive. After the evidence had all been produced, the cause was continued for argument from time to time until the April term of the court for 1884. On the 18th day of July, 1884, the court made a general finding in favor of the board of county commissioners, and entered judgment that plaintiff pay all the costs, taxed at $19.90. Subsequently the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled. The plaintiff excepted, and brings the case here.

O. A. Bassett, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Green and John Q. A. Norton, for defendants in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) It is contended upon the part of the defendants—First, that the petition of plaintiff filed in the court below does not state a cause of action in his favor against the board of county commissioners of Douglas county; second, that, if plaintiff ever had a cause of action against the board of county commissioners, it is barred by the statute of limitations. The amended petition of plaintiff contains 30 causes of action. They are all of the same general tenor. They allege—First, ownership of certificates; second, a sale of lands by the county treasurer of Douglas county, and issue of tax-sale certificates to purchaser; third, the illegality of the tax-sale certificates, and the facts showing why the tax-sales were illegal, to-wit, imperfect descriptions of land, illegal charges for advertising the land, and certificates outstanding in the county at the time of the sales. The petition closes as follows: "Wherefore your petitioner prays this honorable court to order the county clerk of said county not to convey the several tracts and parcels of land hereinbefore described, (because of the alleged errors and irregularities set out,) under and by virtue of any of the sales respectively hereinbefore set out, and for such other and further order and relief in the premises as may be necessary to enable your petitioner to have refunded to him, by the county treasurer of said county of Douglas, the several amounts and sums of money hereinbefore mentioned, with interest as provided by law in such cases." The tax-sale certificates described in the petition were signed and issued by the county treasurer of Douglas county in 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, and 1874. The statutes relating to the refunding the amount paid upon tax-sale certificates, when errors or irregularities are discovered, so that the land sold at the tax-sales ought not to be conveyed, are as follows: Section 120, c. 107, p. 1058; Gen. St. 1868; section 145, c. 34, p. 96, Sess. Laws 1876; section 145, c. 107, p. 2137, Gen. St. 1889. A careful comparison of these statutes will aid in determining the questions involved. St. 1868, p. 1058: "Sec.

120. * * * And if, after any certificate shall be granted upon such sale, the county clerk shall discover that, for any error or irregularity, such land ought not to be conveyed, he shall not convey the same; and the county treasurer shall, on the return of the tax certificate, refund the amount paid therefor on such sale, and all subsequent taxes and charges paid thereon by the purchaser or his assigns, out of the county treasury, with interest on the whole amount at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum." Laws 1876, p. 96: "Sec. 145.

* * * And if, after any certificate shall have been granted upon any sale, the county clerk shall discover that, for any error or irregularity, such land ought not to be conveyed, he shall not convey the same. And the county treasurer shall, on the return of the tax certificate with the refusal of the county clerk indorsed thereon, refund the amount paid therefor on each sale, and all subsequent taxes and charges paid thereon by the purchaser, or his assigns, out of the county treasury, with interest on the whole amount at the rate of ten per cent. per annum." Gen. St. 1889, p. 2137, par. 6999: "Sec. 145. * * * And if, after any certificate shall have been granted upon any sale, the board of county commissioners shall discover that, for any error or irregularity, such lands or lots ought not to be conveyed, they may order the county clerk not to convey the same; and the county treasurer shall, on the return of the tax certificate, with a certified copy of such order of the board of county commissioners, refund the amount paid therefor on such sale, and such of the subsequent taxes and charges paid thereon by the purchaser, or his assigns, as may be so ordered by the board of county commissioners, out of the county treasury, with interest on the amount so ordered refunded at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. * * *"

It is claimed upon the part of the defendants that the petition of plaintiff is insufficient, because the tax certificates can only be refunded under the provisions of the statute in force at the time of the tax-sales. This is the statute of 1868. This claim is answered adversely by the decisions of Commissioners v. Goddard, 22 Kan. 389, and Commissioners v. Faulkner, 27 Kan. 164. The amendments to the statute of 1868, by the statutes of 1876 and 1889, do not "affect any right which accrued under any prior statute, but simply give new direction for the return of the money." We think, if fatal errors or irregularities actually exist, so that the land or lot described in a tax-sale certificate ought not to be conveyed, and the certificate is presented in proper time, that it is the duty of the board of county commissioners to discover them, when their attention is especially called thereto, and that they have not the option to purposely refuse to discover such fatal errors or irregularities. Commissioners v. Goddard, supra.

The contention that the claim or claims of the plaintiff were barred by the statute of limitations is of much force. If not barred by the two-years statute of limitations, (paragraph 1676, Gen. St. 1889, then they were barred by the three-years statute of limitations. Section 18, subd. 2, Civil Code; Richards v. Board, 28 Kan. 326. The record shows that this action was commenced on October 6, 1879, and all of the tax-sale certificates were issued more than five years prior to that date. In Commissioners v. Goddard, supra, it is said that "a purchaser at a tax-sale is a mere volunteer in the payment of the tax. Buying, as he does, property from a person who is not the owner, such party comes strictly and rigidly within the rule of caveat emptor. He has the same means of knowing whether the proceedings relating to the assessment of the taxes, the tax-sale, and the issuance of the certificate are valid or not, as the county has, and he is bound to inquire whether the officers have authority to make the sale. As all the proceedings are matters of record, it is not only prudent for such a purchaser to examine into the matter for his own safety; but, if he fails to inform himself of the authority of the officers, he does so at his own risk, excepting that he may have his money refunded where the statute expressly makes such provision, if he pursues the remedy pointed out. The officers of a county can only act in accordance with positive law, and neither the board of commissioners nor the county treasurer can refund any moneys upon the failure of tax-titles, except as some statute requires it." In Sullivan v. Davis, 29 Kan. 28, it is said: "Except as limited and qualified by express statutory provisions, the rule of caveat emptor applies to all purchases at tax-sales, and if the public has nothing to sell the purchaser gets nothing; so, also, the risk of all mistakes is with the tax purchaser." It was decided in Railroad Co. v. Burlingame Tp., 38 Kan. 628, 14 Pac. Rep. 271, "that a person cannot prevent the operation of the statute of limitation by delay in taking action incumbent upon him." It was also said in that case that "to permit a long and indefinite postponement would tend to defeat the purpose of the statutes of limitation, which are statutes of repose, founded on sound policy, and which should be so construed as to advance the policy they were designed to promote." If the plaintiff could delay the presentation of his certificates to the board of county commissioners for five years, then he could delay for ten, fifteen, or any indefinite period of time. He should have presented his tax certificates to the board of county commissioners "for refunding" (for the return of his taxes, interest, etc.) before the expiration of three years after their issue. This he failed to do, and he also failed to allege any reason or excuse for his delay. In the case of Commissioners v. Young, 18 Kan. 440, the "error or irregularity" actually "discovered" by the county clerk was probably and presumably one of fact. It consisted in supposing that the land did not belong to the United States, and that it was taxable, while in fact the land did belong to the United States, and was not taxable. Such an "error or irregularity" is a mistake of fact. In that case, unlike this, the errors or irregularities in the tax certificates were not matters of record in the offices of the county clerk or county treasurer, and in that case, until the owner of the tax certificate had ascertained that the land belonged to the United States when it was taxed, he did not know, and could not have known, of any error or irregularity to be discovered. In this case the fatal defects in the tax certificates were known, or ought to have been known, by the owner of the same for more than five years before he took any preliminary or other steps to obtain a return of his taxes, interest, etc. In Richards v. Board, supra, it was necessary for the party to determine whether the Indian title to the lands had been extinguished,—a matter which he could not ascertain from the public records of the county, or from any records within his control. The liability of the county to refund the taxes is a statutory liability, and in order that it shall be liable the plaintiff was bound to take some action within a reasonable time, and he should have acted more promptly. Before the county could be made liable, the certificates must have been presented, and some act on its part committed, or some failure to perform some act imposed by law. But the plaintiff failed to act promptly or in any reasonable time. Railroad Co. v. Burlingame Tp., supra; section 18, subd. 2, Civil Code; section 188, Comp. Laws 1879; paragraph 6991, Gen. St. 1889. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—BENEFITS.

1. Where a right of way for a railroad is condemned through a tract of land, the owner's damages cannot be diminished by any benefits likely to accrue from the construction of the railroad to that portion of the tract not taken. Railroad Co. v. Ross, 40 Kan. 598, 20 Pac. Rep. 197.

2. Errors that are not prejudicial will not warrant the court in disturbing the verdict.

Error from district court, Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge.

Warner, Dean & Hagerman and I. J. Ketcham, for plaintiff in error. Alden & McGrew and Stevens & Stevens, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This was an appeal from an award made by commissioners appointed at the instance of the railway company to condemn lands of the defendants in error taken as a right of way for a railroad. In the district court the amount of the award was increased, and the railway company complain of the rulings and result of that trial. There are numerous errors assigned, but we find nothing substantial in any of them. It is insisted at length that the court erred in excluding from the consideration of the jury all benefits accruing to the land-owners by reason of the establishment of the road. It is conceded that, under the constitutional provision ordaining that full compensation shall be made to the landowner without regard to benefits, neither general nor special benefits can be deducted from the value of the land actually taken. But it is contended that this restriction does not extend to the residue of the land; and as to that the special benefits resulting from the construction of the road may be set off against the damages, and that the measure of damages done to the remainder of the land is its value after deducting benefits. This particular question has recently received the consideration of the court, and it determined that no benefit resulting from the construction of the road could be considered or deducted from the damages sustained by the land-owner. Railroad Co. v. Ross, 40 Kan. 598, 20 Pac. Rep. 197.

Complaint is made of several rulings of the court in sustaining objections to questions asked upon cross-examination. It came out during the trial that the defendants in error had offered to give a strip of land through their property for the purposes of a public street, upon certain conditions, and inquiries were made of several witnesses in regard to the conditions of the proposal, and the reason for its non-acceptance. In most cases the objections to the questions were properly sustained, because they were not proper on cross-examination. It is difficult to see the importance or materiality of such testimony, as it appears that the land was not given for a street, but still remained the property of the defendants in error when the condemnation proceedings were had; and, if there was any materiality in the testimony, it was subsequently fully developed by W. A. Simpson, who testified in behalf of the defendants in error as to the proposal, with all its conditions. The court also excluded testimony in regard to the action of some of the defendants in error in having the property stricken from the tax-roll upon the theory that it was a public street. As the land was not a public street, but belonged to the defendants in error, their action in that regard would not prevent them from recovering the value of their land appropriated by the railroad, and any damage done to the same. The court made no mistake in excluding the testimony. Some of the questions asked upon cross-examination, in regard to statements made to officers of the railroad company respecting the street, might properly have been answered, but they are not sufficiently material to warrant us in disturbing the judgment. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

KANSAS CENT. R. CO. v. BOARD OF COUNTY COM'RS OF JACKSON COUNTY.¹

ESTABLISHMENT OF HIGHWAY—CROSSING RAILROAD TRACK—DAMAGES.

Where a public highway is located and established across a railroad company's right of way, the railroad company is entitled to just compensation for all its necessary expenditures in constructing cattle-guards, and such other things as are required by the statutes to be constructed by the railroad company by reason of the highway. JOHNSTON, J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Jackson county, ROBERT CROZIER, Judge.

A. L. Williams, Charles Monroe, and R. W. Blair, for plaintiff in error. Rafter & Robinson, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. The present case, as made in the district court and brought to this court, is a model of brevity, containing only two pages as copied by a typewriter, and yet it contains all that is necessary to present the questions sought to be presented by the parties. It appears that the Kansas Central Railroad Company, which is the plaintiff in error and was the plaintiff below, is a railroad corporation of this state; that a public county road was legally laid out and established across its right of way; that at the time this was done the railroad was operated by the Union Pacific Railway Company, another duly-organized railroad corporation of this state, as lessee; that no notice was ever given to the plaintiff with respect to any of the proceedings for the establishment or creation of this highway prior to its creation, though a proper notice was given to the Union Pacific Railway Company with respect thereto. Within 12 months after the location of this highway the plaintiff filed with the board of county commissioners of Jackson county, which is the defendant in error, and was the defendant below, its application for damages claimed to have been sustained by reason of the location and opening of the aforesaid road, which application was in due form, and for an amount exceeding $150. The application was refused, and the plaintiff in due time appealed to the district court, where the case was tried before the court without a jury. "Upon the trial it was agreed by the parties that it would cost the plaintiff the sum of $150 to put in, at said crossing, the cattle-guards, fences, crossing planks, crossing signs, and whistle posts, as required by the laws of Kansas to be put in by the railroad company at every highway crossing of a railroad in the state of Kansas; and that, if the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages, judgment should be for $150. It was admitted by the parties on the trial that the plaintiff is a railway corporation, duly created and existing under the laws of the state of Kansas, and had lawfully condemned the right of way for and built and completed its railway at the place where this highway crosses its track prior to the location of such highway; that plaintiff's railway is operated by the Union Pacific Railway Company, a corporation duly organized, which is the lessee of the Kansas Central Railroad Company. It was also proved on the trial that no notice of the meeting of the viewers to lay out said road was ever served upon the plaintiff, or any of its agents, and that no copy of such notice was on file in the office of the clerk of Jackson county. All the facts hereinbefore stated were agreed upon by the parties at the trial." Upon these facts the court below found generally in favor of the defendant, and against the plaintiff, and rendered judgment accordingly; and the plaintiff, as plaintiff in error, brought the case to this court for review.

We think the court below erred in its findings and judgment. A railroad company's right of way is property; an estate in land; the dominant estate securing to the railroad company the exclusive right to the occupancy, use, and control of the property as against all persons except the owner of the fee; and the paramount right to such occupancy, use, and control, even as against him. Railway Co. v. Allen, 22 Kan. 285. In all cases where a railroad company procures its right of way under the authority of the state, in the exercise of its sovereign power of eminent domain, by what are usually termed "condemnation proceedings," the railroad company pays to the owner of the land the full value of all the land actually taken, and full and complete compensation for all the losses or damages which might result to the remainder of the owner's land, and both such value and compensation are paid by the railroad company irrespective of any benefit, or supposed benefit, which might result to the owner of the land from the construction or the operation of the railroad. Railroad Co. v. Ross, 40 Kan. 568, 20 Pac. Rep. 194; Interstate Con. R.T. Ry. Co. v. Simpson, ante, 393, (just decided.) And the railroad company in paying this value and for these damages always pays largely more in the aggregate than the land actually taken is worth,—sometimes 10 or 20 times more than it is worth. And while the railroad company procures its right of way through the intervention of the state in the exercise of its sovereign power of eminent domain, and procures the same ostensibly for public purposes—and land can never be taken under such power for any other than a public purpose,—yet the railroad company alone pays for such right of way, and sometimes, as before stated, pays an amount aggregating 10 or 20 times more than the land actually taken is worth. And, although the property is taken ostensibly for a public purpose, yet all the authorities agree that the railroad company, by procuring its right of way and paying for it, procures an actual, individual, private right,—an easement,—and an estate paramount to the rights or interests of all others except the right of the state to again subject the land to be taken under the power of eminent domain. The railroad company in such a case is the dominant owner, and the owner of the fee is only a servient owner. It therefore necessarily follows that any person who should interfere with the railroad company's occupancy, use, or control of its right of way, except with the authority of the railroad company, or in subversivity to its rights, or under the sovereign power of eminent domain, would be a trespasser liable to the railroad company for all damages that might result from the trespass. And it would also seem to follow that where the interference is under the sovereign power of eminent domain, and the railroad company sustains substantial loss from such interference, the railroad company would be entitled to just compensation for all such loss. Certainly, whenever the railroad company's right to the exclusive occupancy, use, and control of its right of way is interfered with permanently under the power of eminent domain, something is taken from the railroad company. Of course, it is not the fee in the land that is taken, for the railroad company does not own the fee, nor is the fee under our present laws ever taken from any one under the power of eminent domain. What is taken in such a case is a portion of the railroad company's exclusive right to the occupancy, use, and control of its right of way, a part of its easement, and making it a tenant in common with some other person, corporation, or the public. This is certainly a taking of something from the railroad company which is valuable. It is a taking of a portion of the railroad company's estate for which it has paid full and ample compensation, and for the taking of which it is entitled to compensation. Where a railroad company is compelled by condemnation proceedings to surrender the use of a portion of its right of way in part to another railroad company, all the authorities agree that something is taken from the railroad company, and that just compensation should be awarded to it. And nearly all the authorities agree that where the railroad company is compelled to surrender the use of a portion of its right of way in part to the public for a public highway, something is again taken from it for which it is also entitled to fair and just compensation. It is true that where a highway is established by proper authority across a railroad company's right of way without at all interfering with the company's use of its right of way, and without requiring the company to be at the expense of constructing crossings or cattle-guards, or erecting fences or signs or whistle posts, or being at any other expense or suffering any substantial loss, no compensation can be allowed; but, where any real or substantial loss is suffered or damage sustained, the railroad company may have adequate compensation. In Mills, Em. Dom. § 83, the following language is used: "Sec. 83. The laying of a highway across a railroad track is considered an additional burden in those states where the law imposes upon the railroad company the additional expense of erecting and maintaining signs at the crossings, or erecting and maintaining cattle-guards, and of flooring the crossings and keeping the planks in repair. These expenses, being directly imposed, must be paid for. In New York and Pennsylvania the laying of highways across the tracks of railroads may be done without compensation, and the railroad company may be compelled to make the necessary excavations, embankments, and bridges to safely accommodate the highway. This authority would not include the opening of roads through grounds used for necessary buildings, yards, etc., although it was suggested in Pennsylvania that a street might be opened through depot grounds, and that the wisdom of such action could not be questioned by courts." In Lewis, Em. Dom. § 491, the following language is used: "In New York a statute has been held valid which authorizes the laying out of highways over the tracks of a railroad without compensation, and although it compelled the railroad company to make the necessary excavations or embankments to take the highway across. This is put upon the reserved power to repeal, alter, or amend the incorporation acts. The act in question only provided for crossing the 'track' of any railroad, and it was not held to apply to grounds taken for a station house, etc., or to tracks used simply for storing cars. Substantially the same ruling has been made in Maine, though the right to repeal, alter, or amend the charter was not reserved. In other states it is held that, in such cases, the railroad company is entitled to compensation for taking its land for a highway subject to its right to use the same for railroad purposes, and to such a sum as will enable it to make and maintain the crossing, with suitable signs, cattle-guards, planking, etc. Nothing can be allowed on account of the possibility of the company being compelled to pay damages for accidents at the crossing, and evidence of what the company has paid for accidents at other crossings is incompetent. Nor can anything be allowed for the expense of ringing a bell at the crossing, nor in view of the contingency of its having to build a bridge." In Redf. R. R. (6th Ed.) *40, No. 13, the following language is used: "A railway corporation is entitled to damages for land taken by laying a public highway across its line, and for the expense of maintaining signs and cattle-guards at the crossing, and of flooring the same, and keeping it in repair; but not for any increased liability to accidents, for increased expense of ringing the bell, or its liability to be ordered by the county commissioners to build a bridge for the highway over the track. And in assessing damages, in such a case, no supposed benefits from an increase of travel on the railway can be set off against the company." In Pierce, R. R. p. 193, the following language is used: "The laying out of a highway across land of a railroad company which is used for a station, or for other purposes than a right of way, is a taking of its property entitling it to compensation. So, also, it is entitled to compensation where the highway appropriates lengthwise a part of its right of way. The laying out of a highway across the company's track, without further interference with it, is, however, not a taking of its property. The state, in authorizing the crossing, simply regulates and adjusts private rights with reference to public interests, and exercises its reserved police power. The crossing should be laid in a manner to cause as little injury as possible to the previous use, and the railroad company is entitled to compensation where the crossing is so constructed as to result in serious inconvenience." In 6 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 554, 555, the following language is used: "When a highway is laid out by the proper authority across a railroad company's right of way, this is not such a taking of property as entitles the company to damages; but where the company is required to erect sign-posts and maintain the crossing, there is in such case a taking for which compensation must be made. Where a railroad company constructs its track across a turnpike, compensation must be made to the turnpike company. The owner of property which abuts upon a highway cannot recover damages for the mere crossing of the highway by the tracks of the railroad; but, if his property is injured by change of grade made for the purpose of laying said track, he can recover. Where one railroad company is authorized to run its tracks over the land of another, this is a taking for which compensation must be made." Also, as in favor of the doctrine that railroad companies may recover compensation in such cases, see the following cases: Railroad Co. v. Plymouth Co., 14 Gray, 155; Crossley v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 325; Railroad Co. v. City of Detroit, 49 Mich. 47, 12 N. W. Rep. 904; Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641, 26 N. W. Rep. 159; Railway Co. v. Hough, 61, Mich. 507, 23 N. W. Rep. 532; Railroad Co. v. Deering, 78 Me. 61, 2 Atl. Rep. 670; Kansas City v. Kansas City Belt R. Co., (decided by the supreme court of Missouri, December 1, 1890,) 14 S. W. Rep. 808. The following cases possibly hold a different view: Railway Co. v. Sharpe, 38 Ohio St. 150; Railroad Co. v. President, 5 Lans. 461. In the case of Railway Co. v. Hough, supra, it was decided as follows: "Where a highway is laid out across a railroad, the railroad company is entitled to include in its damages to be paid by the township the expense of cattle-guards, fencing, and other outlays to complete the approaches, besides the cost of maintaining them; and a statute which imposes this expense upon the railroad company is in conflict with the constitutional provision forbidding the taking of private property without just compensation."

The principal objections urged against the right of the railroad company to receive compensation for its losses, in cases where a public highway is laid out across its track, are the following: First. It is claimed that the railroad company obtains its right of way through the intervention of the state, and by the exercise of the state's sovereign power of eminent domain, and therefore it must be presumed that the state reserves to itself the right, or, in other words, creates the right, to take a portion of such right of way at any time afterwards for any other public purpose, without any compensation to the railroad company. Second. It is also claimed that no substantial damages are suffered by the railroad company except by its expenditures in the construction of cattle-guards, fences, signs, etc.; and that the duty of constructing these things are imposed upon the railroad company under the police power of the state, and therefore that the railroad company cannot receive any compensation for their construction.

It is true the railroad company obtains its right of way under the authority of the state, and by virtue of the exercise of the sovereign power of eminent domain; but the railroad company pays for all the property which it procures, and the state pays nothing. Indeed, as a general rule, the railroad company pays vastly more than all the property which it actually receives is worth, paying not only the actual value of the land taken, but also all the damages supposed to result to that not taken; and all this without deducting anything for benefits received; and no one else pays anything. Of course, the state continues to hold the power to take the property again for some other public purpose, as for a right of way for another railroad company or for a public highway; for this power, that is, the power of eminent domain, is inherent in the state, inalienable, permanently existing, inexhaustible, and extends to all property, and the state could not deprive itself of such power by anything it might do. But there is nothing in law or in reason that would even intimate that the state would desire to retake the property for another public purpose without fair compensation to the railroad company, even if it could do so. When the state takes a portion of a railroad company's right of way for the right of way for another railroad company or for a highway, it takes it just as it takes any other private property, and the railroad company which suffers the loss should receive just compensation.

Whether the duty imposed upon the railroad company of constructing cattle-guards, fences, signs, etc., can be or is imposed upon it under the police power of the state, makes no difference in this case. If the highway should not be established across the railroad company's right of way, then it would not be necessary for any of these things to exist; but, if a highway is so established, then the duty under the statutes immediately springs into existence, requiring the railroad to so construct these things. The establishment of the highway is therefore the cause of all these additional burdens being imposed upon the railroad company. And must the railroad company bear these burdens and suffer these losses without compensation? Why should it be treated differently from others who have interests in real estate? All others having interests in real estate are entitled to compensation for losses resulting from the location of a public highway interfering with their free and rightful use of such interests. Commissioners v. Labore, 87 Kan. 480, 484,¹ et seq. And why should not a railroad company be entitled to compensation for losses in like cases? With reference to all the public highways existing at the time when the right of way for any railroad is procured, and which might affect the location of the railroad, the railroad company has notice, and therefore has notice with reference to what cattle-guards, etc., it must construct when it constructs its railroad; and it constructs its railroad with the understanding that it must make all the necessary expenditures for the construction of such cattle-guards, etc. But with respect to highways not already established when the right of way is procured, there can be no such understanding. We think a railroad company may recover, in a case like the present, for all expenditures it is required to make under the statutes by reason of the location of a highway across its right of way. With regard to notice, the notice to the Union Pacific Railway Company was no notice to the plaintiff. The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

1. JOHNSTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Greenwood county; A. L. L. HAMILTON, Judge.

A. M. Hunter and H. G. Jones, for plaintiff in error. Geo. R. Peck, A. A. Hurd, and C. N. Sterry, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. This case was tried in the court below on the following agreed statement of facts: "That the plaintiff is now, and for more than two years last past has been, a railroad incorporation duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Kansas. That during all of said time it has been the owner of a right of way for its railroad across a part of section 81, township 25, range 11 east, in Greenwood county, state of Kansas. That its ownership of the aforesaid right of way, was created by due and legal condemnation proceedings had by it to condemn a right of way through Greenwood county, Kan., for its railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the laws of the state of Kansas, and that its only interest in the land is that acquired by such condemnation. That during the time aforesaid it has had and maintained a railroad over said right of way, which has been in and still is in operation, and that during said time it has been in the actual possession of said right of way. That in September, 1885, a road or highway, known as the 'Wackett Road,' was duly surveyed and viewed across said right of way and railroad in accordance with the provisions of law, and under due and proper proceedings and orders had and made by and before the board of county commissioners of Greenwood county, Kan. That no notice of any kind or description of the meeting of said viewers, or of the view and survey of said road, was ever served upon the plaintiff, or any of its agents, and that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the meeting of said viewers. That no person representing the plaintiff was present at the meeting of said viewers, at the time they viewed and surveyed said road, and no claim for damages was presented to them on behalf of plaintiff. That at the October, 1885, session of the board of county commissioners, the said road was duly and legally laid out and established by due orders, of all of which plaintiff had no knowledge; and that thereupon the said board duly and legally ordered said road to be opened. That the first knowledge plaintiff ever had of the establishing of said road, or of any proceedings for the establishment of the same, was when it was ordered by the township trustee and road overseer to open the same across its right of way, and to build and establish a crossing for the same over its railroad, after the same had been ordered opened. That, in pursuance to such notice by the township trustee and road overseer, the plaintiff built a crossing for said road, over and across its track and right of way, at the necessary expense of $134, as follows:

For one new cattle-guard.....	$ 65 00
For moving old cattle-guard.....	30 00
For moving fences to connect cattle-guards with fences	19 00
For two drain-boxes.....	20 00

—That the viewers in viewing said road did not allow plaintiff any damages, and that within a year after the viewing of said road, and its establishment, the plaintiff caused a claim for its damages, as herein above stated, to be duly presented to the board of county commissioners of Greenwood county, Kan., at a regular session, for allowance. That the said board at such session refused to allow said claim in part or in whole, and rejected the same. That thereupon the plaintiff duly appealed from said action to the district court of Greenwood county, Kan., which said appeal constitutes this case. That, if the plaintiff is in law entitled to recover upon the facts stated, it is entitled to recover said sum of $134." The trial court rendered the following judgment: "And now, on this 5th day of March of the January term of this court, in 1888, the above cause having been submitted to the court on agreed statement of facts here on file, and written briefs filed by counsel on each side, and duly considered by the court, the court finds for the plaintiff; and it is hereby ordered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff recover of the defendant in the sum of $134, and the costs of this suit, taxed at $——, to which defendant duly excepted." All exceptions and a motion for a new trial were overruled, and the cause brought here for review.

The two questions discussed on each side are: First. Is a county liable in damages to a railroad company for laying out a public highway across its right of way, when that is an easement only? Second. Are the damages claimed too remote? This court has just decided, in a similar case,—that of Kansas Cent. R. Co. v.

Board of County Com'rs, ante, 394,—that, "where a public highway is located and established across a railroad company's right of way, the railroad company is entitled to just compensation for all its necessary expenditures in constructing cattle-guards, and such other things as are required by the statutes to be constructed by the railroad company by reason of the highway." An examination of the facts in each case will show that the only material difference in the proceedings in both cases is that in the one no notice was given to the railroad company either of the petition for or the order of the board locating the highway, and the first knowledge the railroad company had of the proceedings to establish the highway was when the township trustee ordered the railroad company to open the same across its track or right of way. In the other case the railroad was being operated by a lessee, and notice was given to the lessee, but not to the company that owned the railroad. With this difference, the cases are identical, and present the same questions. Guided by the case cited, it is recommended that the judgment of the district court of Greenwood county, in favor of the railroad company, be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered.

ROOT V. TOPEKA WATER SUPPLY CO.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. May 10, 1890.)

ACTION ON CONTRACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where a plaintiff proves a prima facie case, and there is no evidence on the part of the defendant rebutting said prima facie case, a judgment in favor of the defendant is erroneous, as being against the evidence.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Shawnee county; JOHN GUTHRIE, Judge.

H. C. Root and Wm. P. Douthitt, for plaintiff in error. Case & Moss and Hazen & Isehart, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. September 20, 1877, Hugo Felitz was the owner of lot 5, section 30, township 11, range 16, Shawnee county, Kan. October 5, 1881, he and his wife, Catherine Felitz, deeded an undivided one-half interest in said property to the Topeka Water Supply Company. January 26, 1882, said Hugo Felitz and wife deeded the remaining undivided half interest in said lot to the Topeka Water Supply Company. February 22, 1886, Hugo Felitz and wife entered into an agreement with H. C. Root and J. W. Campbell, whereby they agreed that, if said Root and Campbell would commence a suit to set aside the deeds made by Felitz and wife to the defendant, and prosecute said suit to a successful conclusion, as consideration for their services therein they would convey to said Root and Campbell an undivided half interest in lot 5, above described. Said contract was acknowledged by Felitz and wife, and immediately placed of record. March 1, 1886, Root and Campbell commenced a suit in the superior court of Shawnee county, in the name of Catherine Felitz, to set aside the deed from her husband and herself to the defendant. The petition in said case alleged, among other things—First, that the land conveyed by Hugo and Catherine Felitz to the defendant by said deeds was the homestead of said Felitz and wife; second, that Catherine Felitz had been adjudged insane, and was insane when she executed and acknowledged the deeds made by herself and husband to the defendant company; third, that said deeds were obtained from herself and husband by fraud practiced by the defendant; fourth, that said Catherine Felitz became well and restored to her reason in 1885. January 20, 1886, the defendant company demurred to the petition of the plaintiff in said superior court, but said demurrer was never heard. August 26, 1886, Catherine Felitz, without the knowledge or consent of her attorneys, Root and Campbell, filed in said court an order dismissing said suit. September 9, 1886, the court, pursuant to said order, dismissed said case at the cost of the plaintiff therein, Catherine Felitz. December 8, 1886, J. W. Campbell and wife conveyed to H. C. Root all their interest in said lot 5. Catherine Felitz never in any way compensated Root and Campbell for their services rendered under said contract with her and her husband. April 28, 1887, H. C. Root demanded of the defendant company a deed for the undivided one-half of said lot under his contract with Catherine Felitz, and the company refused to make said deed. April 29, 1887, H. C. Root commenced his action to compel the defendant, as the grantee of Catherine and Hugo Felitz, taking subject to his interest in said land, to carry out the agreement of Catherine and Hugo Felitz made with him. In this petition, among other things, he alleges that, pursuant to the agreement between Hugo and Catherine Felitz with himself and Campbell, he instituted proceedings in the superior court to set aside the deeds made by Catherine and Hugo Felitz to the defendant, and prosecuted said suit until it was dismissed; that said suit was dismissed by agreement; that the agreement upon which it was dismissed was that the defendant therein should pay the plaintiff in said case $390, and give her and her husband a life-lease of the land in controversy, and the plaintiff and her husband were to make a new and valid deed to said premises to the defendant, and dismiss the suit. The defendant herein demurred to the petition of the plaintiff below, which demurrer was overruled, and defendant answered, to which the plaintiff replied. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial. Motion overruled, exception allowed, and the plaintiff comes here alleging that the court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial, and in rendering judgment for the defendant, when under the evidence and the law it should have been rendered for the plaintiff.

missing the case therein, in which Catherine Felitz was plaintiff, and the Topeka Water Supply Company was defendant, and the effect of said judgment of dismissal upon the parties thereto and their privies. The plaintiff alleges that said judgment of dismissal was, under the circumstances under which he alleges it was made, an adjudication of the matters in controversy in favor of the plaintiff therein, Catherine Felitz,—she receiving all the fruits of a victory, and the defendant yielding the same; and that therefore he has a right to have specific performance of the contract of Hugo and Catherine Felitz with himself and Campbell enforced in this suit. Mr. Root furnishes an elaborate brief upon the character and effect of said judgment of dismissal, with a forcible argument, supported by numerous citations of authorities, while the defendant in its brief cites no authorities, and simply treats the authorities invoked by the plaintiff as not applicable to the case. It seems to us the defendant overlooked almost entirely the possible effect of the judgment of dismissal in the superior court, supplemented, as it was, by parol evidence showing, or tending to show, what the agreement between the parties to said suit was in connection with said dismissal. The plaintiff insists that said judgment of dismissal was a "dismissal agreed," and that such a judgment is res judicata, and the authorities cited go a long ways in that direction. If such judgment is res judicata, what was settled thereby? It is claimed by the plaintiff that the material allegations in the petition of the plaintiff in that case were settled; that it was settled that the land in dispute, lot 5, was the homestead of the plaintiff therein and her husband when they executed the deeds conveying said lots to the Topeka Water Supply Company; that said judgment settled the fact, as alleged in said petition, that Catherine Felitz was insane when she executed the said deeds conveying lot 5 to the Topeka Water Supply Company; and that the said Catherine Felitz was afterwards, to-wit, in 1885, restored to her reason. The record of the case in the superior court was admitted in evidence by the trial court, and thus became a part of the evidence to be passed upon in said court. Taking such record as it stood, unaffected by the parol testimony admitted in the case for the purpose of showing an agreement between the parties thereto, and we can readily understand how the trial court could have rendered judgment for the defendant, even conceding the dismissal was a judgment, and as such res judicata, and a bar, to the extent to which it went; for then such record would show a simple, voluntary dismissal of her case by the plaintiff. It then would be res judicata as to her rights therein, and a bar to any future claim by her to said property growing out of any right she at that time possessed, and probably a bar to the plaintiff herein, who claims under her and her husband. But when the dismissal, as shown by the record introduced, is affected by the parol testimony modifying said dismissal, and changing it from a simple voluntary dismissal by the plaintiff of her cause of action, at her own costs, to a "dismissal agreed," which is an adjudication of the matters in dispute between the parties by themselves, and such adjudication as so shown establishes the fact, even prima facie, that by such adjudication the defendant practically admitted the contention of the plaintiff and treated with her upon that basis, and no evidence was offered by the defendant to rebut the showing of the plaintiff in that regard, we fail to see upon what theory the trial court rendered the judgment it did. The plaintiff alleges that the judgment as rendered is against the evidence and the law. It seems to us, the plaintiff having made at least a prima facie showing, by the introduction of the record of the case in the superior court, and the parol testimony affecting and modifying it, that the judgment of dismissal in said court was a judgment of "dismissal agreed," and, there being no evidence to rebut such showing, that the claim of the plaintiff is well founded, that the judgment of the court below is against the evidence.

There are other questions in this case, but we do not care to discuss them. In sending this case back for a new trial, we prefer to let it go back affected by as few restrictions as possible; leaving the case open for a full and complete trial of all the questions raised in the case, and only suggest that it be tried by counsel with more care than before, and that in so important a case as the record here presents, with so many important questions involved, there should be findings of fact upon all the important questions raised by the pleadings.

Counsel for defendant argue in their brief that there is no evidence that the land in question was the homestead of Hugo and Catherine Felitz when they executed the deeds to the defendant company. We think they have overlooked the evidence in the case on that question. It is true there is not a great amount of evidence upon the question, but there is direct and positive evidence supporting the homestead allegation, and it is hardly rebutted by the uncertain and incomplete evidence that the premises are within the city limits, and contain more than is allowed by our homestead provision in a city. All the deeds describe the premises as lot 5, section 30, township 11, range 16, in Shawnee county, Kan., and there is no evidence that squarely places it inside the city limits. We are speaking of the evidence on this subject outside of the record of the trial in the superior court. Possibly that record itself settles the question, but as the case goes back, we do not care to pass upon that question. Counsel for defendant in their brief say there is no evidence of the insanity of Catherine Felitz. There is none except that which comes through the said record of the superior court; but possibly that is enough. It depends upon the effect given to the judgment of dismissal in the superior court, upon which hangs this entire case as the record is now made up. The defendant company did not offer the deed obtained by it from Hugo and Catherine Felitz, August 26, 1886, in evidence, and says in its brief that it did not in any way rely upon the title thus obtained. But that deed is in evidence in the case, and the evidence, as it now stands, shows that the defendant not only procured said deed for some purpose, but that it gave a valuable consideration therefor; and there is no explanation by the defendant as to the purpose in obtaining said deed, the real consideration therefor, nor as to whether said deed had any relation to the dismissal of the suit in the superior court by Mrs. Felitz. We recommend that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. On rehearing. H. C. Root, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Moss, J. D. McFarland, and Hasen & Isenhardt, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. This case was submitted to this court on briefs and oral argument, some time ago, and reversed. It is now here on a motion for a rehearing. When the case was before this court first, the question as to whether the plaintiff in error was privy to the judgment in the superior court of Shawnee county, in the case of Catherine Felitz v. The Topeka Water Supply Co., was not seriously argued, and did not receive the attention it was entitled to. The argument on the motion for rehearing made that the principal question in the case; and considered in connection with the determination of the case in the superior court, and the use made of the record in that case, and the trial of this case in the court below, we think it a very grave question. A careful examination of the question satisfies us that the contention of the defendant in error on this point is correct. The plaintiff in error is not privy to the judgment of the superior court in the case of Catherine Felitz against the Topeka Water Supply Company. Freem. Judgm. § 162; Hunt v. Haven, 52 N. H. 170; Dickinson v. Lovell, 35 N. H. 16; Flanders v. Davis, 19 N. H. 139, 149; Starkie, Ev. (9th Ed.) *328. The plaintiff in error had only a contingent, equitable interest in the land in controversy in said suit in the superior court. If that case had gone on to trial and judgment, and had been decided in favor of the Topeka Water Supply Company, Root would have taken nothing under his contract. If it had been decided in favor of Mrs. Felitz, that would have vested the title in her, and then the water company would have been ousted, and Root could have demanded specific performance of Catherine and Hugo Felitz. But the case did not go to trial and judgment in the superior court. The plaintiff in error contends it was settled out of court, and was dismissed in pursuance of said settlement, and a new conveyance taken by the water company from Hugo and Catherine Felitz.

The plaintiff in error claims that the relation between himself and the water company, growing out of the settlement and dismissal of the case in the superior court, is that the water company was the purchaser under this last deed of the land in controversy from Hugo and Catherine Felitz, with notice of his rights under the contract of Catherine and Hugo Felitz with the plaintiff in error and J. W. Campbell. Now, while Root is not privy to the said judgment in the superior court, yet he had an undoubted right in pursuance of his theory of the settlement and dismissal of said cause in the superior court, in an independent action for specific performance against the water supply company, as purchaser, with notice of his rights in the land in question, to introduce in evidence the record of the superior court, to show that he had complied with the contract with Hugo and Catherine Felitz; and we think he had a right to further use said record as evidence, in connection with the parol testimony supplemental thereto, and proof of the taking of a new deed by the company from Hugo and Catherine Felitz, to show a settlement of that case between the parties, whereby the company became, at that time, the purchaser of the land in question. Having introduced the contract under which he claimed, the record of the court, and parol testimony supplemental thereto, to show a compliance on his part with the terms of the contract between himself and partner with Hugo and Catherine Felitz, the new deed taken by the company from Hugo and Catherine Felitz as a part of the alleged settlement, the lease executed by the company back to Hugo and Catherine Felitz, proof of the value of said lease, and the payment of $390 in cash by the company to Hugo and Catherine Felitz at the time of said alleged settlement, it seems to us that the plaintiff in error showed such a prima facie case as, unexplained by any evidence on behalf of the defendant in error, entitled him to have it submitted to the jury. The defendant in error, in connection with its motion for rehearing, suggests that the opinion heretofore filed in this case holds that the judgment of the superior court is res adjudicata of the allegations of the petition in the case in that court to the effect that the land in question was a homestead; that Catherine Felitz was insane when she executed the deeds of 1881 and 1882 to the water company; and that her reason was restored to her before she signed the contract under which plaintiff in error claims, in February, 1886. This court did not intend to settle any question in the opinion heretofore filed, except that the plaintiff in the court below had made such a prima facie case as entitled him to a hearing before the jury. But, as we now hold that the plaintiff in error is not privy to the judgment in the superior court between Catherine Felitz and the water company, the defendant in error will not be embarrassed by anything growing out of any privity of relation on the part of Root with said judgment, and the plaintiff in error will be put on notice that in a new trial he must prove the allegations of his petition by such evidence as will satisfy the court and jury. It is recommended that the motion for rehearing be denied.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; VALENTINE, J., and JOHNSTON, J., concurring.

HORTON, C. J. I have serious doubts about the decision in this case, but, as a new trial is to be had permitting the parties to litigate pro and con every question involved in the pleadings without any prior order or judgment being conclusive or res adjudicata, I cannot perceive that the result reached can be prejudicial or harmful in any way.

It appearing from the record that the trial court found that John Hannon was the owner of the real estate in controversy, and as the evidence upon this point is not all preserved, we cannot say that the decision is contrary to the evidence. If Hannon has the title, the question of possession seems to be immaterial. Unless the contrary affirmatively appears, it will be presumed that the proceedings in the trial court submitted for review are regular. State v. English, 34 Kan. 629, 6 Pac. Rep. 761; *State v. The action was tried before the court and jury in McPherson county, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for $6,000 for the plaintiff. A number of errors are assigned, for which a reversal is asked. The undisputed facts in this case are that on the 5th day of December, 1887, a freight train, consisting of 27 or 28 cars, passed through McPherson between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, going east. The railroad track, in the limits of the city, is located about the middle of Simpson street, which runs east and west. Among the streets running north and south, and in the order named extending east, are Main, Ash, Elm, and Oak. As the train crossed the last-named street it whistled and stopped for the Rock Island crossing. The plaintiff, who was at that time seven years and two months old, was returning from school along Oak street, to his home, situated on the north side of the track from the school-house, which was located one block from the intersection of Simpson and Oak streets. The child was accompanied by some eight or ten boys and girls about his own age, going north along Oak street, on the sidewalk. As they reached the crossing they found the street obstructed by this freight train, and, according to the evidence of the plaintiff, it had been standing there about a minute, when he went up to the train, and one of his schoolmates said to him, "Let us climb over across and go home," and when that was said he started to climb over, and the train moved; that he caught hold of the rod or ladder by which the brakemen climb to the top of the cars before the train started; that the boy with him helped him to get onto the cars; and, after he got hold, the train moved. The movement of the train jerked him under the cars, and the wheels passed over his right leg, making amputation necessary below the knee. There was no flagman or gates at this crossing, which was one of the principal crossings of the city, which contained at that time a population of some 5,000. The special findings of the jury are as follows: "(1) Did the plaintiff, Chester Plaskett, take hold of defendant's train? Answer. Yes. (2) If yes, was the said train in motion and moving and being moved at the time plaintiff took hold of it? A. No. (3) Did the plaintiff attempt to get on the defendant's train while the same was in motion? A. No.

(4) Did the plaintiff know that there was danger in attempting to get on the defendant's train under the circumstances? A. No. (5) If your answer to the last question be 'no,' state fully the reason that he did not know of said danger. A. He was too young to know danger. (6) Was the defendant guilty of willful and gross negligence towards the plaintiff under the circumstances? A. They were guilty of gross negligence, not willful. (7) If yes, state fully in what such willful and gross negligence consists. A. In the trainmen knowing this place was frequented by school children, and not being on the lookout. (8) Was the defendant guilty of ordinary negligence under the circumstances? A. Yes. (9) If your answer to the last question be 'yes,' state particularly in what said negligence consisted. A. The trainmen not being at their proper places. (10) How many school children necessarily used the sidewalk and crossing where the accident occurred? A. From 40 to 60. (11) If you find for the plaintiff, how much damages do you allow him for physical pain and mental suffering? A. One thousand dollars. (12) How much do you allow—how much damages do you allow—plaintiff as the natural and probable result of the injury? A. Five thousand dollars. (13) How much do you allow plaintiff as exemplary damages? A. 00. (14) Did the acts of the plaintiff contribute to the injury? A. Yes."

The first, and perhaps the only, question for our determination in this case is whether the railroad company was guilty of any negligence, or violated any duty which it owed to this child, as it run its train through the city of McPherson. It is unnecessary for us to discuss the different degrees of negligence, for the reason that most courts of last resort, notably the supreme court of the United States, fail to recognize any negligence unless it be culpable. The findings of the jury upon which negligence is predicated in this case consisted in the fact that the trainmen knew that the crossing where the accident occurred was frequented by children going to and from school; that they were not on the lookout for persons crossing the track, or in proper position upon the train to prevent persons from climbing on the cars. These were the only findings imputing negligence to the defendant below. It was a proper precautionary measure for the company to stop its train at the crossing of another railroad, and one which the law recognizes. The evidence indicated that the train was running at a slow rate of speed through the city, and came to a full stop as it approached the Rock Island crossing and immediately started again. The engineer, fireman, and forward brakeman were on the engine, and looked to see that the track was clear. They did not see the plaintiff attempt to board the train. Can it be successfully claimed that the defendant owed a duty to this child to have men posted at proper intervals on top of the train to keep vigilant watch, and see that he did not attempt to climb upon its cars? While greater care is demanded in the operation of trains in populous cities than in sparsely settled districts through which a railroad may run, we do not think the law imposes any such a duty upon a railroad, even in cities. It would be difficult to conceive how a train could be successfully guarded so as to prevent persons from climbing onto the cars at crossings, or moving at a low rate of speed through towns and villages. But it is claimed that the railroad company did owe to this child the duty of active vigilance, to see that he was not injured; that the condition of things at the crossing in question, the population of the city, and the almost constant travel over the railroad track,—being but a block from the school-house, where seven or eight hundred children were in attendance; and the safety of these children demanded the utmost care and the greatest precaution upon the part of the company. It is doubtless true that this crossing was used a great deal by children going to and from school, and it therefore became necessary to exercise a great degree of care to prevent accidents; but the regulation of this and the other crossings rested primarily with the city authorities, and the failure to properly guard these crossings can hardly be charged as negligence upon the part of the defendant when no ordinance of the city required it. To uphold the verdict and judgment in this case, there must be some negligence chargeable to the railroad company. The tender years of the child may indeed excuse him from concurring negligence in this case, but his inability to contribute to the cause of the injury on account of his youthfulness cannot supply that negligence which the law says must exist before he would be entitled to recover damages. In a case not unlike this in many respects, this court has said: "In all courts culpable negligence consists in the failure to exercise the amount of care required, whether that amount be slight, ordinary, or great, and whether the corresponding degree of negligence be called gross, ordinary, or slight, or merely negligence. In the present case we take it that all the parties having any connection with said accident were required to exercise that degree of care and diligence which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances. This is ordinary care, and the failure to exercise it would be ordinary negligence, or culpable negligence, or, as some courts would say, merely negligent; and, if all the parties in this case exercised ordinary care, then no one was guilty of culpable negligence. Now, all negligence, to be culpable, necessarily implies the failure to properly perform some duty. Now, what duty did the railroad company owe to Charles W. Henigh which it did not properly perform? No relation existed between them. He was not a passenger, nor an employe, and had no business with the railroad company of any kind or character. He had no right to climb upon said car as he did, nor to touch it, nor even to go upon the company's premises. Technically, he was a mere trespasser, and the company owed to him no duty except such as it owes to trespassers in general, or except such as it owes to all mankind. We have heretofore held that all persons must use their property and conduct their affairs with reference to the rights of all other persons, and with reference to all known or anticipated surroundings, and that even trespassers have a right to expect that such will be done. Railway Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 690, et seq.; Railway Co. v. Brady, 17 Kan. 380, 384, et seq. And we will still adhere to this doctrine. But no person is bound to anticipate something which is not likely to occur, or to so conduct his affairs as to prevent accidents which are not likely to happen. This has reference where no specific duty exists, but only such general duties as all mankind owe to each other." Railroad Co. v. Henigh, 23 Kan. 347. See, also, the case of Railroad Co. v. Flinn, 24 Kan. 627. The principle decided in these two cases settles the question of the liability of the railroad company in this case. We do not think any wrong was shown upon the part of the defendant in error. We recommend a reversal of the judgment of the court below.

EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—REDUCTION OF VERDICT.

1. When a trial court, in an action to recover damages for the condemnation of a right of way taken for public use, arbitrarily reduces the amount of the verdict rendered by a jury from $3,337.08 to $2,539, and the record assigns no reason for such a reduction, and the record shows the jury adopted the highest and most extreme estimate of value, depreciation, and damage in the verdict returned, such judgment will be reversed, and a new trial granted.

2. While there may be cases where the trial court may properly reduce the amount of a verdict on account of some particular fact, or on some element of damage, or for some error in the computation, or when the reduction is occasioned by some other sufficient reason, the judgment may be upheld; yet the general rule is, when the damages returned by a jury are so excessive as to show the verdict was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, it will be set aside, and the questions in issue submitted to the judgment of another jury.

¹Petition for rehearing pending.

SIMPSON, C. This was an appeal to the district court of Montgomery county from the award of commissioners, who assessed damages for the right of way of the railroad company through the land of the appellant. The case was tried by a jury at the March term, 1888, and is brought here by the railroad company to reverse certain rulings made at the trial. The appellant claimed for the particular land taken; for damages to the entire tract; for the increased inconvenience in farming; for increased labor and expense in fencing and maintaining fences; for interference with the natural drainage; for causing an overflow of water on certain portions of the farm; for increased care, trouble, and expense in handling stock; for expenses incurred in constructing and maintaining proper crossings; for increased labor in handling crops growing thereon; for increased cost in cultivating land adjoining right of way; for damage to dwelling-house and outbuildings; for running immediately in front thereof and making a deep cut; for destruction of hedge and apple trees, and for depreciation in market value by increased exposure to fire from the operation of the road. Before the trial the railroad company tendered the sum of $1,185 and costs, which was refused. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the appellant for $3,327.08.

The jury returned answers to special interrogatories as follows: "Question. 1. How many acres of land does plaintiff own in section 30? Answer. One hundred and fifty-three acres. Q. 2. Does this acreage include one-half of the river? A. Yes. Q. 3. What was the fair market value per acre of this tract of land immediately before the right of way for the defendant was condemned across it? A. Fifty dollars per acre. Q. 4. For what particular purpose, if any, was this tract intended and used by plaintiff? A. Agricultural and stock-raising. Q. 5. How many acres of this tract were appropriated by defendant for its right of way, and what was its value? A. Seven and one-tenth acres, at $50 per acre." "Q. 7. Immediately after the railroad was laid out, and the right of way appropriated therefor across this tract of land in section 30, what was the fair market value per acre of the residue? A. Forty dollars per acre. Q. 8. What was the fair market value of the residue of this tract in section 30, in the aggregate, immediately after the condemnation and appropriation of their right of way? A. Five thousand eight hundred and thirty-six dollars. Q. 9. If you find any damage to this tract beyond the value of the land taken, state particularly the items of such damage and the amount of each item. A. Inconvenience and loss of time in cultivating and harvesting crops, $400. Q. 10. Do you find any damage to this tract in section 30 outside of the value of the land taken because of the inconvenience in handling stock; and, if yes, then how much, and is this amount included in your award? A. Yes. Amount, $200, which amount enters into our award. Q. 11. Do you award any damage to this tract for additional fences required to be built; and, if so, for what fences, and how much do you allow for that? A. No. Q. 12. Do you allow any damage to this tract of land in section 30, by reason of the railroad embankment obstructing the flow of water, thereby overflowing plaintiff's land outside of the right of way, and, if so, how much? A. No. Q. 13. If you find any damage resulting from such obstruction and consequent overflow, could it not be avoided by proper and sufficient openings through defendant's embankments? A. ———. Q. 14. Do you find any damage to this tract in section 30 by reason of inconvenience and loss of time in plowing, planting, cultivating, and harvesting upon the triangular pieces of ground on either side of the railroad; and, if so, how much do you find, and does that amount enter into and form a part of your award? A. Yes. Amount, $400. Item first, question 9. This amount enters into our award. Q. 15. What was the fair market value per acre of the 20-acre tract in section 36, immediately prior to the condemnation proceedings before referred to? A. Sixty dollars per acre. Q. 16. How much of this tract was appropriated by the defendant railroad for its right of way, and what was its fair market value at the time of such appropriation? A. One and sixty-three hundredths acres, at $60 per acre,—$97.80. Q. 17. How much of this tract is south and east of the right of way of the railroad, and what was its fair market value immediately after the condemnation proceedings and appropriation of the right of way? A. One and one-half acres. No value. Q. 18. What was the fair market value per acre of that portion of the 20 acres lying north and west of defendant's right of way immediately after the condemnation and appropriation of the strip to railroad purposes? A. Twenty-five dollars per acre. Q. 19. If you find that portion of the 20-acre tract described in the last question to have depreciated in value by reason of the appropriation of this right of way and construction of defendant's road, does any portion of that depreciation result from damage to the natural building spot, and, if yes, how much does this amount enter into and form a part of your award? A. Yes; $35 per acre on 17 acres; amount, $595. Q. 20. How much land does plaintiff own in section 25, south of the river, and east of the Southern Kansas Railroad? A. About 35 acres. Q. 21. What was the fair market value of this land per acre immediately before the right of way for defendant's railroad was condemned and appropriated through the tracts in sections 30 and 36? A. Fifty dollars per acre. Q. 22. What is the distance between defendant's railroad and the tract described at the nearest point? A. Two hundred and seventy-five feet. Q. 23. Do you find that the land owned by plaintiff in section 25 is or was in any way depreciated in value or damaged by reason of the condemnation and appropriation of the right of way for and construction of defendant's railroad through the lands of plaintiff in sections 30 and 36? A. No. Q. 24. If you should answer the last question in the negative, the following question need not be answered: What is the amount of such damage? State particularly the items thereof, and the amount of each of these. A. —. Q. 25. Do you allow any damages to any of the land described for smoke, dirt, noise, or jarring of ground, caused by passing trains; and, if so, does this amount so allowed enter into your award? A. No. Q. 26. In estimating the value of the land taken, do you include in it the value of any fencing which was then on the land taken for defendant's right of way? A. No. Q. 27. Do you allow damages to any of the land described by reason of increased danger of fire caused by the negligent escape of sparks and cinders from the locomotives of defendant in the operation of its road, and, if yes, does the amount allowed enter into your award? A. No. Q. 28. Which way does plaintiff's house front, and is there any public highway on that side of the 20-acre tract? A. South, and no highway. Q. 29. Do you allow anything for increased danger to stock, caused by the negligence of defendant's employees in the operation of its road; and, if yes, does that amount enter into your award? (Refused, and excepted to by defendant.) A. —. Q. 30. Do you allow anything for increased hazard to animals, teams, or stock caused by being frightened by defendant's trains of cars; and, if yes, do you include that in your award? A. —. (Refused and excepted to by defendant.) Q. 31. Was it a part of the plan of construction of the defendant's road across that tract in section 30 to put in an under-pass for stock, about 800 feet west of the river bridge? A. No; it not being shown on profile or map. Q. 32. Were the commissioners for the defendant's right of way informed of this plan by the engineer having in hand the construction of said road, and did they take it into consideration in their assessment of damages thereto? A. —. (Refused and excepted to by the defendant.) Q. 33. Are those plans being carried out in the construction of defendant's road across said tract in section 30? A. No evidence that it is. Q. 34. Do you take that into your consideration in your award, and assess your damage to that land on the theory that such pass is now or is to be made? A. No."

The following is a part of the final judgment of the court: "And the court finds from said general award of the jury, and their answers to the special questions, that the amount of plaintiff's damages for the actual value of the strip of land appropriated by the defendant, 100 feet wide, through plaintiff's premises, namely, all of the south-east quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) of section twenty-five, (25,) south of the Verdigris river, and east of the Southern Kansas Railroad, and the north half ($\frac{1}{2}$) of the north-east quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) of the north-east quarter of section thirty-six, (36;) all in township thirty-four (34) south, of range sixteen (16) east. Also all of lots ten (10) and eleven (11) and that portion of lot twelve (12) west of, and all of lots eight (8) and nine (9) south of the Verdigris river,—all in section thirty, (30,) in township thirty-four (34) south, range seventeen (17) east, in Montgomery county, Kansas; and for the consequential diminution in value of the remaining portion of plaintiff's said land in said sections thirty (30) and thirty-six (36) aforesaid, and for the value of buildings and other improvements on said last-named tracts of land, and for all other damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of defendant's appropriation of its said right of way through, upon, and across said last-named tracts, and the interest thereon from the date of the appropriation of said strip of land to be said sum to which the court reduced the award of the jury as aforesaid. It is therefore by the court considered, ordered, and adjudged that the said award of damages and assessment of the condemnation commissioners, from which the plaintiff appealed in this case, made to the plaintiff and against the defendant for its right of way of 100 feet wide through plaintiff's said premises, be revised, enlarged, corrected, and increased to said sum of \$2,589, and that the general award of the jury herein be modified, reduced, and decreased to said amount, which amount shall draw interest from the date of the award of the jury at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, which said amount, with interest as aforesaid, shall stand in the place and in lieu of the award of the said commissioners appealed from as aforesaid by plaintiff, and in the place of the award of the jury as aforesaid, and shall be paid by the defendant, its successors or assigns, to the plaintiff, the owner of said above-described premises, before the defendant shall appropriate said strip as aforesaid, and before it shall have the possession thereof; and plaintiff shall have and recover of and from the defendant herein the costs of this action as a personal judgment against the defendant, taxed at \$218.05, for which execution is awarded." The trial court denied a new trial, but reduced the verdict, against the consent of the land-owner, to \$2,589, and rendered judgment for that amount.

The land through which the railroad secured the right of way consisted of a large tract of rich bottom soil. The particular part injured by the location of the road and the construction of the track was south of the Verdigris river and east of the track of the Southern Kansas Railroad. The farm was used for stock and agricultural purposes. The evidence fairly shows that it was the best farm for general agricultural purposes in that neighborhood. The only questions that we can consider and that are fairly raised by the motion for a new trial and the record are: First, that the award is not sustained by sufficient evidence; second, that said award is in conflict with and against the special findings of the jury; third, that said award is excessive, and the damages appear to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice; fourth, errors of law occurring during the trial and excepted to at the time.

1. Considering these assignments of error in their order, it may be said of the first that there is some evidence to sustain the award.

2. There are some things in the record that tend to show that the jury were actuated by passion and prejudice. We are not unmindful of the fact that the general disposition of jurors in this class of cases is to award liberal compensation to land-owners for the land taken from their farms for railroad purposes, and, so long as that liberality does not run to excess, or is not caused by passion or prejudice, we will not interfere. But in this case there is hardly an item of depreciation, or an element of damage, but has been assessed by the jury at the very highest estimate placed upon it by the most extreme witness. A general average of the opinion of the various witnesses is the better rule, and generally results in substantial justice, and is a clear indication of the absence of passion or prejudice. Apart from the evident disposition of the jury to adopt the highest and most extreme estimate of value, depreciation, and damage, the action of the trial court reducing the award as returned by the jury from $8,327.08 to $2,589 is to be regarded as very suggestive of the fact that the jury was influenced by passion and actuated by prejudice in returning an excessive verdict. We have searched the record in vain to discover, if possible, the reason that induced or the motive that controlled the trial judge in the reduction of the verdict. It may have seemed to him, as it does to us, that, taking into consideration all the facts established by the evidence, the mere size of the verdict created a conviction that it was too large. If this is so, he ought to have set aside the verdict, and granted a new trial, rather than have attempted to substitute his judgment for that of the jury. The railroad company is entitled to have a fair estimate of damages made by an impartial jury, and we have grave doubts as to whether there has been a due observance of its legal rights in this respect. While it appears to us that the award of the jury is excessive, it is not the function of the court to say how much. The amount ought to be determined by a fair and impartial jury, without prejudice or passion. All we can do in such a case is to see that the jury, in making an award in a case like this, are not influenced by sympathy, feeling, or prejudice, and do not go beyond what is a fair compensation. Railroad Co. v. Brown, 26 Kan. 443. Going back again to the reduction of the verdict by the trial court, it does not affirmatively appear from the record that the sum of $738.08, that was deducted from the verdict of the jury, was on account of the jury taking into consideration some element of damage not existing in the case, or on account of some error in computation, or some other error occurring at the trial. According to the special findings of the jury, the value of the land taken and the damage to the remainder of the tract aggregated $2,596.80, and this sum comes very close to the verdict as modified by the trial court; but we cannot presume that all the other elements of damage—some of which were sustained by evidence at the trial—would be arbitrarily excluded. Hence the conviction grows stronger that the trial judge reduced the verdict because he thought that it was so excessive that it must have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice. It may be that cases will arise where the verdict and special findings will show some particular fact or some element of damage which would authorize the trial judge to reduce the amount thereof, and that in such a case the judgment rendered upon the reduced verdict would be allowed to stand but the general rule is, when the damages are so excessive as to show that the verdict is rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, it should be set aside, and the questions in dispute submitted to the judgment of another jury. The reason for this is that the parties are entitled to the judgment of a fair and impartial jury, and the judgment of the trial court ought not to be substituted for that of a jury; for, if such a rule would be recognized and maintained, the trial by jury in such cases would be practically denied. See the cases of Railway Co. v. Hand, 7 Kan. 380; Railroad Co. v. Cone, 37 Kan. 567, 15 Pac. Rep. 499; Steinbuechel v. Wright, 48 Kan. 307, 23 Pac. Rep. 560; Cassin v. Delauney, 88 N. Y. 178. Another very good reason for granting a new trial in such a case is that, when the verdict of a jury is tainted by passion or prejudice, the court cannot separate that part of the verdict that is so tainted from the other part, even in a case where the record shows that the prevailing party ought to recover. In this case it appears to us that the plaintiff below was entitled to a verdict for a sum in excess of that allowed by the award appealed from; but when we agree with the trial court that it ought to be reduced, that in fact the verdict was for too much, the only remedy that ought to be applied to this particular case is to grant a new trial. It is a case that comes peculiarly within the province of a jury to determine, and, as a matter of legal right, either party is entitled to a jury trial, and ought not to be compelled to abide by the judgment of a trial court. For these reasons we are compelled to reverse the judgment. The other errors assigned are serious, but, as the case must be reversed, it is not necessary to pass upon them, as they may not arise on another trial. It is recommended that the judgment be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

MECHANICS' LIENS—PLEADING—PETITION—EVIDENCE—TITLE OF DEFENDANT IN LAND.

1. Where, in a case for the foreclosure of a lien for material furnished, there is no allegation on the body of the petition that the contract to furnish materials was with the owner, but the petition refers to the lien statement as attached thereto, and as a part thereof, and said lien statement clearly shows the contract to furnish material was with the owner, held, that the petition sufficiently shows that the contract was with the owner.

2. A petition in such a case, which states that the plaintiff furnished lumber and materials to the amount of $537.93, sufficiently states the value of such lumber and materials without any further allegation of value.

8. Evidence examined, and held sufficient to sustain the finding of the court that the contract for furnishing material was with the owners of the land upon which the building was erected.

4. To obtain a lien for material furnished, under paragraph 4733, Gen. St. 1889, it is not necessary to show that the party to whom the material was furnished had a complete title when the contract for the material was made. It is sufficient if at that time he has equitable title.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Rice county; ANSEL R. CLARK, Judge.

A. M. Lasley, A. L. Perry, and Albert Perry, for plaintiff in error. C. F. Foley, for defendants in error.

STRANG, C. This was an action to foreclose certain mechanics' and material-men's liens. The Jarvis Conklin Mortgage Trust Company filed a cross-petition, setting up a cause of action on a note and mortgage against the defendants Byers and Tuttle, owners of the property described in the petition of the plaintiffs below, and claiming a lien upon the premises prior to the other liens sought to be foreclosed. The issue was thus joined between the parties claiming liens upon the property as material-men and mechanics on one side, and the holder of the mortgage lien on the other, to determine whose liens were first. The case was tried by the court, which found in favor of Sutton & Murphy against the owners of the premises for the amount of the material furnished by them; and for the defendant Tarr against them for the amount of his claim as a mechanic; and also in favor of the Jarvis Conklin Mortgage Trust Company against the same defendants for the amount of their claim. The court ordered a foreclosure and sale of the premises described in the petition and cross-petition. The court further found that the liens of Sutton & Murphy and J. W. Tarr were of equal rank, and superior to the mortgage lien of the Mortgage Trust Company, and ordered the proceeds of the sale to be applied first to the payment of the costs of the case; second, to the payment of the judgments of Sutton & Murphy and Tarr; and the balance, if any, applied to the payment of the judgment of the Mortgage Trust Company; and the overplus, if any, to be turned over to Byers and Tuttle, the owners of the premises. The Jarvis Conklin Mortgage Trust Company objected to the decree of the court, and excepted. They filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, upon which they bring the case here, and allege for errors, first, that the court erred in overruling the objection to the reception of evidence under the petition in the case upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The particular defect pointed out in the petition is an alleged failure to state therein that the contract for furnishing the material was made with the owners of the premises upon which the building was to be erected. There is no statement to that effect in the body of the petition; but the lien statement of the plaintiff is attached to its petition as a part thereof, and therein it is alleged that the contract was with Byers and Tuttle, and that they are the owners of the premises. We think this is sufficient as against a demurrer or general objection to evidence under the petition. There was no motion to make the petition more definite. The next complaint is that the petition does not allege that the materials furnished were of any value. The petition says the plaintiff furnished material amounting to $537.93, but does not add any further allegation of value. We think the statement that the plaintiff furnished material to the amount of $537.93 is a sufficient statement of value. The plaintiff says the court below ought to have granted a new trial because there was no sufficient evidence to sustain the judgment. If there was any proper evidence upon all the questions at issue, the judgment, under the rule of this court, should be affirmed. The particular failure of proof here alleged is that there was no evidence that the contract for the material furnished was with the owner or owners of the lots upon which the building was erected. The evidence shows that the contract was with J. F. Byers, and that the material was "charged to Byers, or to Byers and Tuttle." Byers and Tuttle were partners at the time the material was purchased, and it was purchased for the partnership. The partnership erected the building. The evidence upon the question of ownership was somewhat uncertain. But there was some evidence tending to prove that the contract was with the owners of the premises on which the building was erected; and, the district judge having found that it was sufficient, this court will not disturb such finding. It is also said that Byers and Tuttle were not the owners of the lots on which the building was erected at the time the material was contracted for. This contention is technically true. But Byers and Tuttle had examined and priced these lots, together with others belonging to the same party, before making the contract for the material in controversy. They intended buying some of the lots looked at and priced upon which to place the building subsequently erected by them. They had not notified the owner of the lots that they would take these particular lots, at the time when they contracted for the material, but they must have decided in their own minds, because Byers told Sutton where to deliver the lumber. The material-men commenced the delivery of the lumber on these lots a few days after they contracted to deliver it. Some of the evidence shows that the building was begun on said lots as early as the 21st of January, 1887, only a few days after the contract for material was entered into. Byers and Tuttle followed up their election to take the particular lots in controversy by completing their title thereto, and obtained a deed February 23, 1887. Paragraph 4733 of the General Statutes of 1889 provides that "any person who shall, under contract with the owner of any tract or piece of land, or with the trustee, agent, husband, or wife of such owner, furnish material for the erection, alteration, or repair of any building, improvement, or structure thereon, * * * shall have a lien upon the whole of said piece or tract of land, the building and appurtenances, in the manner herein provided for the amount due to him for such material." To obtain a lien under this paragraph we do not think it necessary that the person to whom the material is furnished should have a perfect title to the land upon which the building or improvements are to be erected at the time of making the contract for the material. It is sufficient if at that time he has equitable title. Byers and Tuttle perfected their title on February 23, 1887. The material was delivered in January, February, and March of that year. The parties who contracted for the material became the owners of the lots, and used the material in a building upon these lots; therefore the material-men have their lien as claimed. Seltz v. Railway Co., 16 Kan. 140; Phil. Mech. Liens, (2d Ed.) § 81. This case is different from Lumber Co. v. Schweiter, (Kan.) 25 Pac. Rep. 592, recently decided, because there the purchasers of the material had no legal or equitable estate in the lots upon which the house was erected. We do not, therefore, think the objection that Byers and Tuttle were not the owners of the land upon which the building was erected, and upon which the lien for the material was claimed, is good, especially as the mortgage lien did not attach thereto until several days after the title was complete in Byers and Tuttle, and after, as we believe under the law, the right of the material-men had attached thereto. We have examined the judgment of the court; and, while it is not as full and formal as it might, and perhaps should have been, we do not think there is any prejudicial error therein. We recommend that the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

EXCELSIOR MANUF'G CO. V. BOYLE et al.

LEVY OF EXECUTION—PRIORITY OF LIEN—RETURN OF SHERIFF—AMENDMENTS.

1. In a proceeding to determine and adjust the priorities of certain liens existing against the real property of a debtor, it was found that an execution had been taken out on the judgment first rendered within one year after its rendition, and levied upon land subject to a mortgage; but it was erroneously appraised by excluding the amount of the mortgage debt, and the execution creditor directed the sheriff not to advertise and sell under the illegal appraisal. The levy was made upon the whole estate, and not upon a mere equitable interest. Within the succeeding year other judgments were obtained, and the proceeding to subject the mortgaged land of the debtor to the payment of the liens, and to determine the respective priorities of the same, was begun and tried. Held, that the existence of a mortgage upon the land, or the illegal appraisal of the same, or the direction of the execution creditor to the sheriff not to advertise and sell under such appraisal, did not invalidate the levy, but the levy as made preserved the preference and priority of the lien of the judgment first rendered.

2. During the trial it was ascertained that the sheriff had neglected to sign his return made upon the execution, and the court allowed him to amend by signing his name thereto. Held not error.

3. In the answer of the judgment creditor who obtained the judgment first rendered, the fact that a levy had been made was not stated, and during the trial the court permitted him to amend and plead and prove the levy that was made. Held, that the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the amendment, and the fact that the amendment was not formally written out after it was allowed is not sufficient ground for a reversal.

F. L. Jones, for plaintiff in error. Clogston, Hamilton, Fuller & Cobbison, for defendants in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This is a proceeding to review an order of the district court distributing among the creditors of E. C. Boyle & Co. the proceeds arising from a judicial sale of the debtors' property. In 1885, E. C. Boyle & Co. were engaged in the hardware trade at Augusta, Kan., and were largely indebted to numerous creditors, among which were Deere, Mansur & Co. and the Excelsior Manufacturing Company. On November 16, 1885, Deere, Mansur & Co. obtained several judgments against E. C. Boyle, which in the aggregate amounted to over $1,200. Abstracts of the judgments were filed in the office of the clerk of the district court, and on November 3, 1886, and before any judgments were rendered in favor of the other creditors of E. C. Boyle, Deere, Mansur & Co. caused executions to be issued upon their several judgments, and in their behalf it is claimed that these executions were levied upon the real estate of E. C. Boyle & Co. on November 6, 1886. On December 20, 1886, two others of the creditors of Boyle recovered judgments against him, and during the January term, 1887, of the district court, the Excelsior Manufacturing Company and the remaining creditors recovered judgments against Boyle in the district court. Boyle was then the owner of real estate in the town of Augusta, upon which the executions of Deere, Mansur & Co. were claimed to have been levied, and against which there was a mortgage in favor of the Farmers' State Bank. On April 8, 1887, the Farmers' State Bank brought an action in the district court to subject certain real estate of E. C. Boyle to the satisfaction of their judgment, and to adjust and establish the priority of liens of the mortgagees and judgment creditors, and all the creditors claiming an interest in the real estate were made parties defendant. On July 15, 1887, a trial of this action was had, and the court found the dates of the rendering of the several judgments against E. C. Boyle, and also found that the mortgage lien of the Farmers' State Bank was a first and paramount lien on the real estate in question, and decreed a foreclosure and sale of the property, and that the proceeds of sale should be applied—First, to the payment of costs; second, to the satisfaction of the mortgage; and that the balance should be brought into court to await its further orders. The court did not at that time undertake to establish the priorities of the liens of the judgment creditors. In pursuance to the decree, the property was sold for $1,600. From this sum the mortgage lien of the Farmers' State Bank was paid, with costs, which left a balance in the hands of the sheriff of $651.20. On December 21, 1887, application was made to the court for a distribution of the surplus proceeds among the judgment creditors, according to their respective priorities. Upon the hearing of this application it was conceded by all that Deere, Mansur & Co. obtained a first judgment against E. C. Boyle, which was dated November 16, 1885, and that an execution was issued thereon November 3, 1886. They then offered in evidence their several executions issued on the date last named, and upon which they claimed that a levy had been made upon the real estate of Boyle. An objection was made to the reception of a certain execution, and the return of the sheriff, because it appeared that the return had not been signed by any one. Deere, Mansur & Co. then asked leave of the court to permit the sheriff to amend his return on the execution by signing the same, which the court allowed. A further objection was made because the answer filed by Deere, Mansur & Co. in the action did not show that a levy had been made, and also that the real estate was not subject to levy and sale upon execution, for the reason that the statutes provided another and different remedy. The court permitted the answer to be amended, but the amendment was never actually made. After hearing all the testimony, the court made an order of distribution, providing: First, for paying the costs of the action; second, for the satisfaction of the judgment of Deere, Mansur & Co., upon which execution was issued and levied upon the property sold; and, third, that the remainder should be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment of the Excelsior Manufacturing Company.

Did the court err in allowing the sheriff to amend his return and in permitting Deere, Mansur & Co. to amend their answer? The courts are vested with a large discretion in allowing amendments to process and pleadings, and unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion the ruling of the court will not be disturbed. The failure of the sheriff to sign his return to the execution is an amendable defect. The levy had been actually made, and it was proper to permit an amendment in conformity with the facts. There was no attempt to supplement or affect the levy, but the amendment related only to the evidence of the levy that was actually made; "and, generally, amendments are permissible when they simply run to perfecting the proof of a service which was in fact made." Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 834; Kirkwood v. Reedy, 10 Kan. 458. Neither do we think that the court abused its discretion in permitting the answer to be amended. The trial had not yet been completed, nor had the priorities of the several judgment creditors been determined. It was an equitable action, for the purpose of establishing priorities of the several liens existing against the Boyle property, and this question depended upon the time of the rendition of the judgments as well as upon whether they had been duly kept alive by the issuance and levy of executions. The Deere, Mansur & Co. judgment had been rendered long prior to any of the others, and it is admitted that an execution had been levied before the expiration of one year next after the rendition of their judgment. In their answer they had omitted to allege the levy, and the amendment showing this circumstance did not change the defense, nor can it be said that it was not in furtherance of justice. If additional time had been necessary in order that the plaintiff might contest the truth of the allegation, it might have been obtained upon application to the court; but no delay was asked, and we think no injustice was done in permitting the defendants to plead and prove the fact showing that their lien was prior and paramount to that of the plaintiff.

Some objection is made because the amendment to the answer was not written or actually made. Permission to amend was granted by the court, proof was offered, and the parties proceeded with the trial as if the answer had actually been amended. Under these circumstances, we will treat the answer as having been amended to conform to the facts shown. "A defect in the pleadings or proceedings which ought to have been corrected below by amendment will be disregarded here or considered as amended." Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 29 Kan. 514; Organ Co. v. Lasley, 40 Kan. 521, 20 Pac. Rep. 228.

The final contention is that execution was levied upon a mere equity of E. C. Boyle, which could not be sold by means of an ordinary execution. It is said that they should have employed the proceedings as directed by section 481 of the Civil Code; that the levy was made prior to 1887, when section 448 of the Civil Code was amended so that the mere interest of the mortgagor might be separately appraised and sold; and hence the officer could not sell the mere equitable interest, and the levy, as made, was ineffectual. The record, however, does not sustain the contention of the plaintiff below as to the facts. The return of the officer is that the levy was made upon the land itself,—upon the whole estate, and not upon a mere equity. It recites that the sheriff "did forthwith levy said writ upon the following described real estate of said debtor, situated in Butler county, in state of Kansas, to-wit, lots 9 and 11, in block 18, in the original town of Augusta, Butler county, Kansas." Prior to the amendment of section 448 of the Code, made in 1887, the sheriff could not take into account the fact that the land upon which he levied an execution was subject to a mortgage or other lien, as there was then no authority to have it appraised and sold subject to such liens. The fact that the land was mortgaged, however, did not prevent a levy upon the whole estate; and, if it was appraised and sold without reference to the incumbrances, the purchaser would acquire the title, subject, of course, to any lien or incumbrance that might exist against it. De Jarnette v. Verner, 40 Kan. 224, 19 Pac. Rep. 666. Under the levy that was made in this case, the property was erroneously appraised, subject to the mortgage that has been mentioned; and hence no valid sale could be made under the appraisal. But the error of the appraisers did not invalidate the levy, nor did the fact that the attorneys of the execution creditor directed the sheriff not to advertise and sell the land under the illegal appraisal destroy the levy, or postpone the lien of the judgment to that of the plaintiff in error. The execution, as we have seen, was taken out before the expiration of one year next after the rendition of the judgment, and levy was made upon the land itself, and not upon a mere equity, and thus the preference and priority of the lien was preserved. Smith v. Kimball, 38 Kan. 490, 13 Pac. Rep. 801. We find no error in the rulings of the district court, and therefore its judgment will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

PHENIX INS. CO. OF BROOKLYN V. WEEKS.

ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL—INSURANCE—PROOFS OF LOSS—WAIVER—APPLICATION—SUFFICIENCY.

1. A statement made by counsel for the plaintiff in stating the plaintiff's case to the jury considered, and held, that no material error was committed.

2. Where a fire insurance policy was issued by an insurance company, and afterwards the insured property was destroyed by fire, and the company then denied all liability on the ground that the policy was void, held, that by this denial the company in effect waived all its rights under certain stipulations in the policy requiring proofs of loss to be made, and giving the company 60 days thereafter within which to pay the loss; and a suit brought on the policy within less than the 60 days is not prematurely brought.

3. Where a local agent of a fire insurance company furnishes a blank application to a party seeking insurance, and the agent himself, who has full and complete knowledge of all the facts, fills up the blanks and informs the applicant that the same is done correctly, and the applicant believes him and signs the application, and afterwards a policy is issued thereon, and afterwards a fire occurs, destroying all the insured property, held, that the company cannot then claim that the insurance policy is void because of inaccurate or incomplete statements in the application.

4. Where the prayer of a petition asks for interest from a certain date the plaintiff cannot recover interest from a prior date.

Error from district court, Edwards county; J. C. STRANG, Judge.

This was an action brought in the district court of Edwards county on February 5, 1887, by James P. Weeks against the Phenix Insurance Company of Brooklyn, N. Y., upon a fire insurance policy issued by the defendant to the plaintiff on December 24, 1885, to recover for an alleged loss by fire of the insured property. The case was tried before the court and a jury on November 4, 1887, and the jury rendered the following verdict, and in answer to the following interrogatories made the following special findings of fact, to-wit: Verdict: "We, the jury, impaneled and sworn in the above-entitled cause, do upon our oaths find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at $2,660.42." Findings of fact: "Question 1. Is it not a fact that L. W. Higgins was local agent of the defendant at Kinsley, Kansas, at the time the policy sued on was issued? Answer. Yes. Q. 2. Is it not a fact that L. W. Higgins, as local agent of defendant at Kinsley, wrote the answers in the application for such policy, which plaintiff signed? A. Yes. Q. 3. Is it not a fact that L. W. Higgins, as such agent, at the time of the making of the application and issuing of the policy, had full knowledge of the fact that a part of the machinery in the building was for the purpose of grinding feed? A. Yes. Q. 4. If the jury answer the last question in the affirmative, they may state if it is not a fact that L. W. Higgins, as such agent, knew at the time he issued the policy sued on that the plaintiff intended to grind feed with the rollers in elevator A. A. Yes. Q. 5. Is it not a fact that the plaintiff informed L. W. Higgins fully and truthfully of all the facts in relation to there being a watchman at the mill prior to the writing down of the answers in the application concerning a watch and watchman? A. Yes? Q. 6. Is it not a fact that L. W. Higgins, as such local agent, with a full knowledge of all the facts as stated to him by plaintiff, in relation to watch and watchman, informed plaintiff that the answers which he (Higgins) wrote down to the questions in the application concerning a watch and watchman, were the proper answers to be made? A. Yes. Q. 7. Is it not a fact that when L. W. Higgins issued to plaintiff the policy sued on in this action, that he, as such agent, had full, complete, and exact knowledge of all the facts and circumstances connected with the question as to whether there was any watchman kept at the elevator, or not? A. Yes. Q. 8. Did the plaintiff make any false representations to L. W. Higgins concerning the risk prior to the issuance of the policy? A. The plaintiff read and signed the application attached to the answer, but prior to reading and signing it, he stated to the agent fully and truthfully all the facts and circumstances involved in any answer contained in said application, and the agent then wrote the answers which appear in said application. Q. 9. (erased.) Q. 10. Is it not a fact that defendant company, prior to the expiration of thirty days from the date of the fire, notified plaintiff that it would not pay him for any loss under the policy sued on? A. Yes."

Upon this verdict and these findings the court below, on November 5, 1887, rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the sum of $2,660.42, and costs of suit; and the defendant, as plaintiff in error, brings the case to this court for review.

H. M. Jackson, for plaintiff in error. C. M. Sterry, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J., (after stating the facts as above.) 1. The first claim of error made by the plaintiff in error is with reference to the original statement of the case of the plaintiff below, made by his counsel after the jury had been impaneled, and prior to the introduction of any evidence. Section 275 of the Civil Code provides, among other things, as follows: "Sec. 275. When the jury has been sworn, the trial shall proceed in the following order, unless the court for special reasons otherwise directs: (1) The party on whom rests the burden of the issues may briefly state his case, and the evidence by which he expects to sustain it." Counsel for plaintiff below, in his said statement, used the following, among other, language: "That, as I was stating to you, the reason that we make this proof to you is to show to you that an insurance company cannot issue a policy, take a man's money, and give him something in return which is absolutely worthless the moment it is issued,—not worth the paper it is printed on." Possibly a portion of this statement borders too closely upon an argument to come strictly within the provisions of the foregoing section of the Civil Code; but certainly no material error was committed. The insurance company did take the man's money, and did issue to him an insurance policy, and when the fire occurred it then claimed that the policy was and had always been absolutely worthless and void.

2. It is claimed that the action was commenced prematurely. By the terms of the policy sued on the loss was to be paid "sixty days after the proofs of the same required by the company shall have been made by the assured and received at the office in Chicago." The fire occurred December 4, 1886. Proofs of the loss were not made for more than 80 days afterwards, and this action was commenced on February 5, 1887, within less than 80 days after the proofs of the loss. Now, if the company had admitted its liability for the loss, or for any possible portion thereof, or probably if it had not denied its liability wholly and absolutely, its claim in this respect would be good; but after the fire occurred it then, and persistently afterwards, denied its liability utterly and absolutely, and denied it upon the ground that the policy itself was utterly null and void, and absolutely worthless. As before stated, the fire occurred December 4, 1886, destroying substantially all the insured property, which was worth vastly more than the amount of the insurance; and the company immediately had notice thereof. The local agent of the company, L. W. Higgins, had notice as soon as the fire occurred. The general agent at Chicago, Thomas B. Burch, and the adjuster, M. M. Hamlin, had notice very soon afterwards. Hamlin visited the locality where the fire occurred on December 15, 1886, and made some inspection and examination with reference thereto. On December 24, 1886, both Hamlin and Burch wrote letters to Higgins, denying the liability of the company, and in effect stating that the company would not pay anything on account of the loss. Hamlin's letter reads as follows: "Phenix Insurance Company, M. M. Hamlin, adjuster, Omaha, Neb. Omaha, Neb., December 24, 1886. L. W. Higgins, Esq., Kinsley, Kansas—Dear Sir: I am just in receipt of a letter from our Chicago office, same being in reply to my letter written from Kinsley; and if Mr. Weeks thinks now there is any boy's play about this matter, you can say to him, we deny liability. Our Chicago office is firm, decided, and in earnest, and we can afford to spend as much as Weeks boasts that he can, and then come out ahead. Personally, I regret the unfortunate combination, and regret that it should in any manner interfere with your business; but otherwise we are ready for conflict. Let it come. Yours, etc., M. M. HAMLIN." Burch's letter is too long to be given here. These letters were handed by Higgins to the plaintiff, Weeks, about December 27 or 28, 1886, and Higgins then informed Weeks that the company denied all liability, and would not pay anything on account of the loss. Proofs of loss were afterwards made, but not within 30 days after the fire. We think that the aforesaid denial of liability on the part of the insurance company for the alleged reason that the insurance policy was itself absolutely void was, in effect, a waiver of all its rights to require proofs of loss, and to have the time for it to make payment of that portion of the amount of the loss for which it was liable extended 60 days after such proofs of loss were made. Cobb v. Insurance Co., 11 Kan. 93, 97 et seq., and cases there cited. For this reason we do not think that the action was commenced prematurely.

3. We do not think that the claims of error numbered 3, 4, and 5, in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error, require any comment. None of them are tenable under the facts of this case. We shall therefore pass to the claim of error numbered 6, which is that the court below erred in refusing to give certain instructions to the jury. By this claim the plaintiff in error attempts to raise the question of the validity of the insurance policy. It claims that the insurance policy was at the beginning, and always has been, void because of the untruthfulness of the answers made by the plaintiff in his application for the insurance. It is claimed that the plaintiff insured his property as an elevator, when in truth and in fact it was a mill; and that he represented that he kept a watchman on the premises during nights, and that the watchman had no other duties to perform, when in truth and in fact he kept no watchman at all. With respect to the elevator, the question and answer, or rather the statements, in the application are as follows: "Name of elevator: Elevator A." With respect to the watchman, the questions, answers, and statements are as follows: "Watchman: Is a watchman kept on the premises during the night? Yes. Is any other duty required of the watchman? No." The facts affecting these questions are substantially as follows: The building was an elevator, containing steam-fixtures and machinery to operate the same, a corn-sheller, and some other articles named in the application; and also some machinery for grinding corn and other grain, which was not mentioned in the application. As to the watchman, the plaintiff, with eight or ten other business men of the city of Kinsley, employed a private watchman to watch their property during nights, including the property in question, and this watchman had no other duties to perform. The local agent had complete knowledge of all these matters, both with respect to the elevator and all its machinery and contents, and how it was used, and with respect to the watchman. Just before the application was made out and signed, the local agent went through all parts of the elevator building, and examined the same with all its contents, and he then filled up the application, he writing all the written statements therein, and all the answers to the questions therein contained, and then stating to the plaintiff that the questions were all properly answered, and the plaintiff believed they were, and then signed the same. The plaintiff did not make a single untruthful statement to the local agent. The evidence shows all these things, and the special findings of the jury show the most of them. We would further state in this connection that the application was originally a printed application furnished by the insurance company, with blanks therein, to be filled up before signing, and then signed by the applicant; and it contained not only the aforesaid questions for the applicant to answer, but it also contained the following, among other, statements: The party subscribing the application "hereby covenants and agrees to and with said company that the foregoing answers are true," etc., "and such answers or statements are to be always construed and accepted as forming and constituting a continuing warrant;" and the policy which was afterwards issued contains a statement that the application should "be considered a part of this contract and warranty by the assured." It was admitted by the defendant's answer, and also shown by the evidence "that L. W. Higgins was and is a duly-authorized agent appointed by the defendant at Kinsley, Edwards county, Kansas," but the exact scope of Higgins' agency is not shown. The policy also contained a provision that "the insurance may also be determined at any time, at the option of the company, on giving notice to that effect, and refunding a ratable proportion of the premium for the unexpired term of the policy. The answers and statements contained in the application were substantially true, although perhaps not as complete and exact as they should have been, but the company's agent at Kinsley knew all these things, and the company is bound to know what he knew; and yet the company took the applicant's money, issued to him the policy, and never canceled the same, although it had the power to do so at any time if it so chose. The company chose to let the insurance stand until the fire occurred, and then for the first time it claimed that the insurance was void. This does not seem like acting in good faith. Under the facts of this case we do not think that the policy is void. And in support of this view we would refer to the following cases decided by this court: Sullivan v. Insurance Co., 84 Kan. 170, 8 Pac. Rep. 112; Insurance Co. v. Pearce, 39 Kan. 396, 18 Pac. Rep. 291; Insurance Co. v. Barnes, 41 Kan. 161, 21 Pac. Rep. 165; Protective Union v. Gardner, 41

Kan. 397, 21 Pac. Rep. 238; Insurance Co. v. Hogue, 41 Kan. 524, 21 Pac. Rep. 641; Insurance Co. v. Gibbons, 43 Kan. 19, 22 Pac. Rep. 1010; Insurance Co. v. Gray, 43 Kan. 497, 23 Pac. Rep. 687.

4. As a seventh and last complaint the plaintiff in error claims as follows: "The verdict and judgment were excessive, and contrary to law. The petition claimed $2,500, with seven per cent. interest from February 4, 1887. Interest from February 4, 1887, to November 5, 1887, $131.72; principal, $2,500.00; total, $2,631.72." We think this claim of the plaintiff in error is correct. The jury calculated interest from the time of the fire, to-wit, December 4, 1886, while under the petition of the plaintiff below they should have calculated interest only from February 4, 1887, as the petition did not ask for any interest prior to that time. Civil Code, § 87, subd. 3; Green v. Dunn, 5 Kan. 254, 261, 262; City of Burrton v. Bank, 23 Kan. 390, 393. The judgment was rendered November 5, 1887, for $2,660.42. This, we think, is the only substantial error committed in the case. The judgment of the court below will be modified by reducing it from $2,660.42 to $2,631.72. All the justices concurring.

PARSONS WATER CO. V. HILL.¹

APPEAL.—REVIEW.—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW —CONTINUANCE — PLEADING — AMENDMENT—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

1. Where on the trial of a cause the plaintiff is permitted to amend his petition setting up a new cause of action, and the defendant does not object to it on that ground in the trial court, he cannot in this court assign the allowance of such amendment as error, and have the matter reviewed here, though he did object to the allowance of such amendment on other grounds.

2. Under the circumstances of this case, it was not an abuse of discretion on the part of the court to refuse a continuance of the case because of the amendment allowed to the petition.

3. Where an action is brought upon two promissory notes, and during the trial it is dismissed as to one of them without prejudice, and afterwards the plaintiff amends his petition, and claims the same amount as balance due on a settlement, and the pleadings show the settlement occurred more than three years before the petition was amended, it is error to overrule a demurrer to said petition which alleges that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations.

4. Evidence examined and held sufficient to support the verdict and judgment as to the first cause of action.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Neosho county; L. STILLWELL, Judge.

Kimball & Osgood, for plaintiff in error. Sluss & Stanley and W. H. Criley, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. In 1883 the defendant in error contracted in writing with the plaintiff corporation to build water-works in the city of Parsons, Kan., and was to receive as compensation therefor $100,000 worth of paid-up capital stock of said company, par value, and $50,000 worth, par value, of the mortgage bonds of said company, which stock and bonds were to be all the stock and all the bonds to be issued by said corporation. During the construction of said works the defendant in error did some extra work for the plaintiff in error, and, when the works were completed, or about completed, he presented to the directors of said corporation a bill for $1,177.35 for said extra work. The company thought the bill too much, and finally the parties agreed upon a settlement, the company promising to pay Hill the sum of $1,100 by giving him a note for said sum, due six months from the 1st day of the month of January, 1884. The water-works were turned over by Hill to the company. Soon afterwards Hill called on Mr. Kimball, the president of the corporation, reminded him that he had settled with the company, and that the company was to give him its note for $1,100. Kimball made and signed notes for the company for $400 and $700, respectively, and delivered them to Hill. Said notes were to be attested by the secretary of the company, Mr. McKim, but the $700 note was to be held for some work to be completed by Hill before it was to be attested by McKim. Hill presented the $400 note to McKim, who attested it. Afterwards he presented the $700 note to McKim for attestation. When McKim got possession of the note he took it to Mr. Kimball, and showed it to him, who thereupon wrote across the face of the note, "Not good until countersigned by McKim," and then directed McKim not to countersign it. McKim returned the note to Hill, having refused to countersign it. Afterwards, on November 18, 1886, Hill brought suit against said corporation on said notes, declaring upon the $400 note for his first cause of action, and upon the $700 note for his second cause of action. The company answered by general denial; and also alleged that Hill had never completed the water-works, and had so defectively constructed them, so far as he had progressed with the work, that the company had been compelled to spend large sums of money—specifying the same—to complete said water-works, and make them comply with the specifications which were a part of the contract for the construction of the works, and demanded judgment against Hill for a large sum. Hill replied, denying generally the allegations of the answer, and specially alleged the completion of the works according to the terms of the contract, inspection and acceptance of the works by the company, and the undertaking of the company to pay him $1,100, and that the notes sued on were executed to cover said $1,100. On the trial of the case, when the $700 note was offered in evidence, the company objected to its reception as evidence, for the reason that the paper offered in evidence as the note of the corporation had never been executed by said corporation. The objection was sustained, and thereupon the plaintiff dismissed his second cause of action,—the one founded upon said $700 note,—without prejudice, and the case proceeded until the defendant below had introduced his evidence, and the plaintiff below had offered his rebuttal evidence, and was about to rest his case, when the said plaintiff, before resting his case, asked leave to amend his petition so as to conform his allegations to the facts proved, which leave was granted, and the petition was so amended as to state a cause of action for the $700 as due on settlement between the parties January 13, 1884. The defendant below objected to the amendment, and when it was allowed asked a continuance upon the ground that the company was not ready to try the case on the amended petition; but no showing was made, and the court refused to continue the case. The company then demurred to the second count in the petition, for the reason that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and, if any cause of action was stated, that it was barred by the statute of limitations. The demurrer was overruled. The defendant then answered this amended petition, substantially repeating its answer to the original petition. The defendant then introduced evidence as to said cause of action, and rested, and the plaintiff rebutted. The jury rendered a general verdict for the plaintiff below in the sum of $1,071.71. Motion for a new trial was overruled.

The first matter to which the attention of the court is directed is the alleged error arising from the action of the court in permitting the plaintiff below to amend his petition during the trial. The plaintiff in error claims that the amendment introduced a new cause of action, and the amendment was therefore erroneous. The defendant below objected to the allowance of the amended petition, but the objection was in the nature of a demurrer, and stated that the second count of the petition as amended did not state a cause of action, and, if it did, the cause of action so stated was barred by the statute of limitations. There was no objection upon the ground that the amendment introduced a new cause of action into the case, and therefore that matter cannot be reviewed here. The next complaint is based upon the refusal of the court to continue the case at the request of the defendant corporation on the statement of its attorney that it was not ready to proceed with the trial on the amended petition. The plaintiff below introduced no new evidence in chief after amending his petition. The defendant below introduced evidence under the amended petition directed to the second cause of action, and the plaintiff presented a little rebuttal evidence thereto, and rested. The original suit involved a cause of action for the same $700 declared on in the amended petition. It is true it was originally declared on in the form of a promissory note, while in the amended petition the note was abandoned, and the amount was claimed as a balance due on settlement; but the alleged note declared on in the original petition represented the same $700 due on the settlement declared on in the amended petition. The defendant below had notice from the commencement of the suit that the plaintiff below claimed the $700 the same as he did the $400. The case of the plaintiff below was tried in chief with the claim for the $700 in the case, and the record shows that the evidence all the way through the case related as much to the $700 claimed in both the original and amended petitions as it did to the $400 claim in the original petition. It cannot be said, then, that the defendant below was in any sense surprised by the amendment. Under such circumstances, and with no showing for a continuance by the defendant company, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion by refusing to continue the case.

The next allegation of error presented by the plaintiff is the action of the court overruling the defendant's demurrer to the amended petition in the court below. The demurrer alleged that the cause of action stated in the second count of the petition as amended was barred by the statute of limitations. The settlement between Hill and the water-works company, out of which the claim arises, was had on the 13th day of January, 1884. The amended petition in the case was filed July 21, 1887. It will be seen that, if the three-years statute applies, it had run before the amendment was made, and the cause of action therein stated was barred, unless something had occurred to place the matter within the statute. Does the three-years statute apply? The plaintiff's claim is for a balance due on settlement. The cause of action is not founded on a written agreement. It is an open account,—balance due on settlement. The three-years statute applies to such claims. The defendant in error argues that when the amendment was made it related back to the commencement of the suit, and by operation of law was thus brought within the statute. We do not think the statute can thus be avoided. If it can, there is nothing but the statute in relation to amendments to prevent any cause of action barred by the statute of limitations from being brought within the limit of the statute by amendment whenever another cause of action is pending between the same parties which was commenced before the statute had run against the new cause of action. Suppose the plaintiff below, on the same day that he dismissed his second cause of action, had instituted a new suit therefor,—which he could have done, and probably should have been required to do,—there would then be no question but that, if the statute had run at the commencement of said suit, it would be too late, and the cause of action would be barred. So, where a plaintiff during the trial of his case ascertains that he cannot recover on one of the causes of action in his petition, and thereupon dismisses his case as to said cause of action, but afterwards is permitted to renew the same in another form, we think such renewal of his cause of action, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned, is the commencement of a new action, and, if the statute has run against said cause of action when said amendment and renewal are allowed, the cause of action therein set up is barred. The defendant in error also claims that the cause of action set up in the amended petition is founded upon the contract between the parties for the erection by him of the water-works. Here is where the difficulty in this matter, so far as the defendant in error is concerned, is found. The plaintiff below might have brought his action, so far as this cause of action is concerned, and, indeed, so far as both are concerned, upon the contract, setting up the contract, and then alleging the settlement under it, in which case the five-years statute would have applied, and no part of the case would be barred. But the plaintiff below simply brought his action upon two promissory notes. There was nothing in the petition referring to anything as a foundation for the cause of action therein stated except the notes sued on. During the trial the plaintiff therein dismissed his second cause of action without prejudice, and subsequently renewed it in a different form, and basing it upon a balance due on settlement. In any view that we are able to take of this case the statute has run against the cause of action set up in the amended petition. We have examined the authorities cited by counsel for the defendant in error, but fail to find anything therein to support the position assumed by counsel.

The fourth and fifth complaints were settled by the verdict of the jury. Each depended upon the evidence, which was conflicting upon all questions involved in these complaints. The verdict of the jury, therefore, is conclusive thereon.

The last error assigned is founded upon an alleged erroneous instruction given by the court to the jury. We do not think it possible, under the circumstances of this case, for the jury to have been misled by the technical error on the part of the court in using the word "defendant" instead of the word "plaintiff," in its instructions to the jury, when speaking of laying the mains. The fact that the plaintiff, instead of the defendant, laid the mains was too well understood by the jury for them to be misled by a slip of the tongue in referring to the parties or a party to the suit.

The plaintiff claims that the court, in its instruction referring to the amount of mains required by the ordinance to be laid in the city, left out the words "in said city," so that it did not appear from the instruction that the six miles of mains required by the ordinance to be laid must be laid in the city. While the court left out the words "in the city," yet the court used the following language: "And if you believe from the evidence that the defendant [plaintiff] laid six miles of pipe at places designated," etc. With the ordinance which required the six miles of pipe to be laid in the city in evidence, this language of the court was equivalent to saying: "If you find six miles of pipe was laid in the city, then, so far as this feature of the contract is concerned, you would be justified in finding the plaintiff had complied with the same." At any rate we do not think there is any material error in the instruction complained of. It is recommended that the case be reversed as to the second cause of action, and affirmed as to the $400 and interest on same.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

HAYNER et al. v. TROT et al.*(Supreme Court of Kansas. April 11, 1891.)CLAIMS AGAINST DEBENT'S ESTATE—PLEADING.

1. Where a claim presented to a probate court for allowance alleges that the debtor therein named owes the party presenting the claim the sum of $377.62, for commissions paid on the sale of machines, for which notes were taken that are uncollectible, and copies of said notes are attached, showing the amount of the same, and the amount of the commissions paid thereon is also shown, and said claim is verified, and has attached thereto contracts which provide that, when commissions have been paid on notes that are uncollectible, they shall be refunded, held, that such claim is good against a demurrer, and that the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer thereto was erroneous.

2. Under our statute, which provides that claims presented to the probate court for allowance shall be heard summarily, and without the form of pleading, it is not a proper practice to interpose a demurrer to a claim therein.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Geary county. M. B. Nicholson, Judge.

Thomas Dever, for plaintiffs in error. J. R. McClure, for defendants in error.

STRANG, C. The plaintiffs filed a claim in the probate court of Davis, now Geary, county against the defendants for $377.62. The defendants demurred to the statement of the claim as filed, which demurrer was sustained. The plaintiffs excepted to the action of the court in sustaining said demurrer, and took the matter to the district court on error. The district court affirmed the action of the probate court, and the plaintiffs come on up to this court with a transcript, asking that the whole matter be reviewed and corrected here.

There are two questions involved in this matter. The first is whether the statement of the claim filed by the plaintiffs in error in the probate court was sufficient to require the said court to consider it. While the claim as presented to the probate court is not well stated, and in fact is defectively stated, we do not think it is so defectively stated as not to amount to a statement of a claim at all; and, if it amounted to a claim at all in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants, it was good against a demurrer. We therefore think the district court erred in affirming the action of the probate court in sustaining the demurrer to said claim.

The second question involved in the case is one of practice. The plaintiffs in error contend that, under our statutes requiring matters of this kind to be heard summarily and without pleading, there is no such practice as interposing a demurrer to a claim filed in the probate court. Gen. St. 1889, par. 2878, reads as follows: "The probate court shall hear and determine all demands in a summary way, without the form of pleading, and shall take the evidence of competent witnesses, or other legal evidence." The statute contemplates that the court will hear the evidence in support of the claim without any pleadings. With this provision of law in our statute-book we do not think it a proper practice to file a demurrer to a claim presented in the probate court. The statute seems to contemplate the presentation of claims in this court by the owners thereof without the aid of an attorney at law, and that the court shall investigate the claims in a summary way, without any pleadings that require the skill of an attorney at law in their preparation. Once recognize the practice of filing pleadings in this court, and the contemplated simplicity of hearings therein will be lost in the maze of technicalities. We think it is better to proceed in the manner pointed out in the statute. It is recommended that the judgment of the district court be reversed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered: HORTON, C. J., and VALENTINE, J., concur.

JOHNSTON, J. I concur in the conclusion that the statement of claim filed by plaintiffs was sufficient to invoke the consideration of the court, and to overcome the demurrer that was filed against it, and for that reason I concur in the judgment of reversal. I see no objection, however, to the interposition of a demurrer, or motion,—the name is immaterial,—challenging the sufficiency of the claim which is filed. The statute requires that any person presenting a demand against an estate must set forth in writing, not only the amount of his claim, but the nature of the same; and, if it is founded on a written statement or account, a copy of the same must be filed with the demand; and the court cannot then allow the demand, unless the claimant make an oath or file an affidavit with the claim, stating to the best of his knowledge and belief that he has given credit to the estate for all payments and offsets to which it is entitled, and that the balance claimed is justly due. Gen. St. 1889, pars. 2868, 2872. Although a formal pleading is not required, these provisions of the statute must be complied with in order to invoke the jurisdiction of the court, and the investigation and allowance of the demand. When the claim presented does not come up to these essential requirements, the court may, in my opinion, upon motion or demurrer, determine the insufficiency of the statement of demand, and dismiss the proceeding, unless the proper amendment is made. When the nature of the claim is stated as the statute requires, and it manifestly appears that it is not a valid claim against the estate, or that it is one that is not allowable by the probate court, what is the necessity or propriety of proceeding further? I see no impropriety in challenging the sufficiency of the statement of demand at the outset by a demurrer or motion, before witnesses are subpoenaed and needless costs are incurred.

CITY OF WELLINGTON v. TOWNSHIP OF WELLINGTON et al.(Supreme Court of Kansas. April 11, 1891.)

DIVISION OF TOWNSHIPS—ASSETS—CONDITIONS IN DEED—TOWN HALL—CITY FORMED FROM TOWNSHIP—RIGHTS IN TOWN PROPERTY.

1. When small portions of an original township are from time to time detached to aid in the formation of new townships, the portions of the original township thus detached, in the absence of legislative provisions to that effect, retain no interest in or claim to the public property of the original township not situate in any of the portions detached.

2. A deed conveying town lots to a municipal township, its successor or successors, for the consideration of "one dollar and the enhanced value of lots that are owned by the grantor that lie in the vicinity of the herein granted lots," for the express purpose of erecting a township hall, vests the absolute title to the lots in the township, but places a limitation on the manner of the use of said lots.

3. When, under such a conveyance, the township raises money by taxation, and erects a town-hall on the lots, and the hall is used solely and distinctly for public purposes connected with the administrative powers of the municipality, it is public property, subject to legislative control, and not the private property of the corporation under a proprietary power.

4. When a city of the second class is created out of territory wholly within the limits of a municipal township, the title to two town lots in said city, which were conveyed by the owner thereof to such municipal township, its successor or successors, when said city of the second class was a city of the third class and a part of said township, for the express purpose of erecting thereon a township hall, and a township hall had been erected thereon by the expenditure of money raised by taxation on all property of the township, vested in the city of the second class as the legal successor of the township. The case of Board of Education of Kansas City v. School-Dist. No. 7 of Wyandotte Co., ante, 13, distinguished. (Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Wm. A. McDonald, A. E. Parker, and C. Everest Elliott, for plaintiff in error. George, King & Schwinn, James A. Ray, L. B. Kellogg, and Haughey & McBride, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. The material facts are that on or before the 5th day of September, 1873, all the territory embraced in the present city of Wellington, the township of Wellington, and a portion of that embraced in each of the other defendant townships, constituted one single township, known as "Wellington Township." On that day one Henry H. Davidson, being the owner in fee-simple of certain real estate, conveyed to the said township of Wellington lots 11 and 12, in block 53, in the original town (now city) of Wellington. A part consideration for said conveyance was the agreement of the township of Wellington to build upon said lots a township hall by the 1st day of June, 1874. That, after an extension of time by mutual agreement the hall was built, and the title to the lots became absolute in the township of Wellington. On the 24th day of February, 1874, a portion of the original township of Wellington was detached and made a part of the township of Jackson. On the 22d day of February, 1876, another portion was detached, and made a part of the township of Seventy-Six. On the 3d day of January, 1876, another portion was detached, and made a portion of the township of Osborn. On the 30th day of August, 1879, another portion was detached, and made a part of the township of Downs. On the 14th day of February, 1880, the city of Wellington, that before that time had been a city of the third class, was incorporated as a city of the second class, but was composed entirely of territory that had belonged to the township of Wellington. The township hall was included within the limits of the city of Wellington as a city of the second class, and has been used by the city of Wellington ever since its organization as a city of the second class as a town-hall. The deed of conveyance from Davidson to the township of Wellington recites that it is made "in consideration of the sum of one dollar and the enhanced value of lots that are owned by the said grantor that lie in the vicinity of the herein granted lots, to the said grantee, for the express purpose of erecting a township hall on herein described real estate." The lots are granted "to the township of Wellington, its successor or successors." The lots are described as being in the late town, now city, of Wellington. At the date of this conveyance Wellington was a city of the third class, and a part of Wellington township. This action was commenced by the city of Wellington, a city of the second class, alleging that the city of Wellington was in the actual possession and occupancy of said property, and was the owner in fee-simple thereof; that the defendants each and all claimed to have an interest therein; and that such claims constituted a cloud on the title of the city, etc. It ought to have been stated, at the proper place, that the costs and expenses incurred in the purchase and improvement of these lots were contributed by the tax-payers of Wellington township, as it was constituted on the 5th day of September, 1873. Each of the defendants demurred to the petition of the city of Wellington, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, because it did not show that the city was the owner of the property in controversy. These demurrers were sustained by the trial court, and the questions presented by them are here for review.

1. Some preliminary questions were discussed by counsel. It was claimed that there was not attached to the petition in error any authenticated transcript containing the judgment or final order of the court, and hence that the petition in error ought to be dismissed. The clerk of the district court of Sumner county attaches to the petition and exhibits, to the bond for costs, to the præcipe, to the summons, to the demurrers, and to the judgment, a separate certificate under the seal of the court, stating that each of these papers is a true, full, and complete copy of the originals as they remain on file in his office in the foregoing case, the same being duly entitled. The better and the usual practice is for the clerk to attach at the end of a transcript a general certificate to the effect that the foregoing is a true, full, and complete transcript of the pleadings and judgment; but, as each pleading and the judgment is properly certified, we have no doubt but that in this particular case, being a judgment on demurrer, and the only necessary papers being the pleadings and judgment showing the exception to the ruling, the transcript is sufficient to review the ruling below.

It is also insisted that as the record presented shows only that this case came on for trial before Hon. R. B. SHEPARD, a member of the bar of this court, and does not show that he was selected in any manner known to the law as a judge pro tem. for the trial of this cause, this court will not review the proceedings. The record does recite this: "And the hearing and trial heretofore having been submitted to the said R. B. SHEPARD, Esq., by and with the consent of all of said parties, plaintiff and defendants, who appeared herein by their respective counsel." Now, this is one of the modes prescribed by statute for the selection of a pro tem. judge. Paragraph 1866, Gen. St. 1889. It is true that the record does not designate the attorney selected to try the cause as judge pro tem. but it does recite that he is a member of the bar of that court, and that he was agreed upon to try the cause by all the parties in interest, and that the regular judge was disqualified to try the case because he had been of counsel. Apart from all this, no question was raised in the court below as to the power or authority of the judge pro tem. to hear the case, but all parties consented thereto, and therefore such question cannot be raised for the first time in this court. This is expressly decided in the case of Higby v. Ayres, 14 Kan. 331, and this is a stronger case, because this record affirmatively shows that the judge of the district court of Sumner county was disqualified.

2. The principal question to be determined by the demurrers filed to the petition in this case is, when territory is detached from an original municipal township to aid in the formation of four additional townships, and when a city of the second class is created within the remaining limits of the original township, how do these detachments and this creation affect the title to lots, and a township hall erected thereon, owned by the original municipality, and built by taxes levied on the property of the original township, but situated within the limits of such city of the second class, and within its limits when it was a city of the third class, and a part of the original municipality? So far as the briefs of counsel and our own research are concerned, there is no statutory rule to determine this controversy, without it be chapter 62 of the Session Laws of 1889. In the case of Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 92 U. S. 307, decided in 1875, Justice CLIFFORD, speaking for a unanimous court says: "Sixty-five years before the decree under review was rendered, a case was presented to the supreme court of Massachusetts, sitting in Maine, which involved the same principle as that which arises in the case before the court. Learned counsel were employed on both sides, and PARSONS was chief justice of the court, and delivered the opinion. First he adverted to the rights and privileges, obligations and duties, of a town, and then proceeded to say: 'If a part of its territory and inhabitants are separated from it by annexation to another, or by the erection of a new corporation, the former corporation still retains all its property, powers, rights, privileges, and remains subject to all its obligations and duties, unless some new provision should be made by the act authorizing the separation.' Windham v. Portland, 4 Mass. 339. Decisions to the same effect have been made since that time in nearly all the states in the Union where such municipal subdivisions are known, until the reported cases have become quite too numerous for citation. Nor are such citations necessary, as they are all one way, showing that the principle is one of universal application. Concede its correctness, and it follows that the old town, unless the legislature otherwise provides, continues to be seised of all its lands held in a proprietary right, continues to be the sole owner of all its personal property, is entitled to all its rights of action, is bound by all its contracts, and is subject to all the duties and obligations it owed before the act was passed effecting the separation." This was said in a case wherein Laramie county brought an action against Albany and Carbon counties to compel them to contribute their just proportion to an indebtedness incurred when these two counties were a part of Laramie county, they having been established wholly out of territory included within the limits of Laramie county. This case is cited with approbation by this court in the case of Commissioners v. Bunker, 16 Kan. 498, Justice VALENTINE saying: "Now, in all cases, as we understand the law, where the legislature divides a county without making any legal provision for a division or apportionment of the debts or property thereof, the old county pays all the debts and takes all the property."

Territory was detached from the township of Wellington as follows: On the 24th day of February, 1874, the N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of congressional township No. 33, range 1 W., was detached and made a part of Jackson township. On February 22, 1876, the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of township 31, range 1 W., was detached and made a part of the township of Seventy-Six. On January 3, 1876, the E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of township No. 32, range 2 W., was detached and made a part of the township of Osborn. On the 13th day of August, 1879, the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of township 33, range 2 W., was detached and made a part of the township of Downs. At and during the times when these various parts of territory were detached from the township of Wellington, and aided in the formation of other townships, section 3, c. 142, Laws 1873, was in force, which provided: "All real estate heretofore and hereafter detached by a change of boundary lines from any county or township, wherein any bonds shall have been previous to such change of boundary lines legally authorized and issued by a vote of the electors of such county or township, shall be subject to taxation for the payment of such bonds, and the interest thereon, in the same manner as though no such change of boundary lines had been made." This is still the law. See paragraph 439, Gen. St. 1889. It is alleged in the petition in this case, and of course admitted by the demurrers, that the money for the purchase of the lots and for the erection of the town-hall was raised by taxation; and it is not alleged or shown that any bonds have been issued or were now outstanding. Under the cases of Commissioners v. Bunker, 16 Kan. 498; Chandler v. Reynolds, 19 Kan. 249; Craft v. Lofinck, 34 Kan. 369, 8 Pac. Rep. 359,—this section of chapter 142 of the Laws of 1873 only applies in cases where bonds have been legally issued before a change of county or township boundaries. The fair implication arising from this legislative action is that, when a part of a township is detached, it is relieved of all obligations of the municipality from which it is taken, except in the simple instance of bonds having been legally issued when it was a part of that township. No bonds having been issued by Wellington township, the principle that, unless by the act authorizing separation some division of property is declared, the original municipality retains all the property, applies in this case in favor of Wellington township, and the townships of Seventy-Six, Osborn, Downs, and Jackson have no interest or claim to any part of the lots and township hall in controversy.

Counsel for the defendants in error insist that, as this is an equitable action, the plaintiff in error is in no attitude to claim relief, because, among other reasons, the property is public property, and their clients have equities in it to the extent of their contributions to the purchase and improvements thereof. A very brief statement will dissipate these foggy mists of error. Counsel represent separate and distinct municipalities, and the petition shows that small portions of the territory embraced within the original township of Wellington were at various times annexed to the townships of Seventy-Six, Osborn, Downs, and Jackson. Possibly these townships were created after this transaction, but, be that as it may, it is perfectly clear that by no possibilities could these organizations, as public corporations, have any equitable claims on the property in controversy, because some of the land and a few of the people of their respective townships at one time were situate and resided within the limits of Wellington township, and contributed by taxation to the improvement of it. It is true that the people in these townships who paid a part of the taxes might by such payment have acquired a moral obligation against the original township, which by legislative action might have ripened into a legal demand, but it would accrue to these people, and not to the municipalities. So that neither a fair application of legal principles nor a generous appeal to equitable considerations give these municipalities any claim or interest in the property. This conclusion is abundantly sustained by numerous adjudicated cases, and, while there may be found a few cases that seem to hold a contrary doctrine, the very great weight of authority establishes the principle applied. See, among other cases, those of Town of Depere v. Town of Bellevue, 31 Wis. 120; Town of Milwaukee v. City of Milwaukee, 12 Wis. 93; Crawford Co. v. Iowa Co., 2 Chand. (Wis.) 14; Hampshire v. Franklin, 16 Mass. 76; North Yarmouth v. Skillings, 45 Me. 133; Veazie v. Howland, 47 Me. 127.

3. This narrows the controversy down to the city of Wellington and the township of Wellington, and invokes the application of other principles. It will be observed that at the time the town of Wellington became a city of the second class, it was composed of territory that had been exclusively within the boundaries of the township of Wellington after certain portions of that township had been annexed to the other townships, and constituted a part of Wellington township. This inquiry arises on this state of facts: When a city of the second class is created out of the territory of a municipal township, and the public property of the township is situated within the boundaries of such city, which municipality owns the property? In the absence of legislative regulation, the presumption is that the legislature did not consider that any regulation was necessary. Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514. It is said in this case: "Where there is no legislation on the subject, the old corporation owns all the public property within its limits, and is responsible for all debts of the corporation contracted before the separation, nor has the new municipality any claim to any portion of the public property except what falls within its boundaries, and to that the old corporation has no claim whatever;" and cites in support the cases of Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 92 U. S. 307, and Bristol v. New Chester, 3 N. H. 524. It is further said in the case of Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith "that it is not a case where the legislature creates a new town out of the territory of an old one, without making any provision for the payment of the debts antecedently contracted, as in that case it is settled law that the old corporation retains all the public property not included within the limits of the new municipality, and is liable for all the debts contracted by it before the separation took place." The case of School Tp. of Allen v. School Town of Macy, 109 Ind. 559, 10 N. E. Rep. 578, was one in which, prior to the incorporation of the town of Macy, it constituted a part of the township of Allen, and constituted a greater part of school-district No. 1 in that township. The school township had purchased a tract of land, received a conveyance therefor, and had erected a school-house thereon. When the town of Macy was incorporated this land, and the school-house thereon, which had been used exclusively for school purposes, were situated wholly within the territorial limits of said town of Macy; but the school township of Allen was claiming the exclusive control and ownership of said school-house, and the land upon which it was situated, asserting the right to sell and dispose of it without the consent of the school town of Macy. The school town of Macy commenced an action to quiet its title to said land and school-house, and that the township be required to convey said tract of land to it for school purposes. In Indiana an incorporated town is as much a distinct municipal corporation for school purposes as is a civil township. The court say, in affirming a decree of the court below in favor of the town of Macy: "There cannot be, at the same time, within the same territory, two distinct municipal corporations exercising the same powers, jurisdictions, and privileges;" citing Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 184. "When the town of Macy was incorporated and was organized as a school corporation, it became the successor of the school township of Allen in all educational matters connected with the public schools within its territorial limits, and, as a necessary consequence, the jurisdiction which said school township had theretofore exercised was thereafter entirely excluded. It was held in the case of School-Dist. No. 1 v. Richardson, 23 Pick. 62, that when a township abolishes its existing school-districts, and forms new ones, the title to the school-houses then in existence vests in the new districts in which they happen to fall. This case was followed in School-Dist. No. 6 v. Tapley, 1 Allen, 49, and this authority has been expressly or impliedly recognized in Carson v. State, 27 Ind. 465; State v. Shields, 56 Ind. 521; and School Town of Leesburgh v. Plain School Tp., 86 Ind. 582. These conclusions were in accordance with the general principles governing the use, occupation, and control of public property situate within the territory, which has been transferred to a new governmental jurisdiction." In the case of City of Lynn v. Inhabitants of Nahant, 113 Mass. 433, it is expressly decided that lands held by a town, by virtue of being within its municipal boundaries, necessarily, upon the division of the town by the general court, were held in like manner by the town within whose limits they fell upon division, unless the general court expressly provided otherwise. One of the earliest, and possibly the earliest, case which directly involved this question is North Hempstead v. Hempstead, 2 Wend. 110. The town of North Hempstead was created out of the territory of the town of Hempstead, which owned certain land, and the question in dispute was as to the ownership of that part of the land that fell within the limits of the new town of North Hempstead, and the unanimous opinion of the court of errors was that the new town was entitled to hold in severalty the public property that fell within its limits.

We have carefully examined all the cases cited in both briefs, and some in addition thereto. A very great majority of these cases are devoted to a discussion and application of the principle that when a part of a township is annexed to another, or is detached to form a new township, the old municipality retains the property, and is liable for the debts, without other provision is made by the act of separation. Very few reported cases adjudicate the question as to which municipality is entitled to the public property that falls within a city created out of a township, because, as a rule, the legislature has made provision for an equitable division. The strongest case that can be found in the books in favor of the defendant in error (the township of Wellington) is that of Parish of West Carroll v. Gaddis, 34 La. Ann. 928; but, like many of the other cases, the point embraced in the controversy was not precisely the same as here, but the general observations of the court in the course of the argument were to the effect that the township of Wellington would retain all the property. We have examined the case of Board v. East Saginaw, 45 Mich. 257, 7 N. W. Rep. 808, and find it very largely controlled by statutory considerations. The case of People v. Trustees, 86 Ill. 613, is one in which the president of the board of education of the city of Chicago claimed that, because the boundaries of the city had been extended so as to include a small portion of a country school-district, they were entitled to a part of the revenues arising from school section No. 16, that remained wholly within the limits of the country school-district, and his claim was denied. The later case of McGurn v. Board, (Ill.) 24 N. E. Rep. 529, (decided in May, 1890,) turns entirely upon statutory provisions. It may be fairly said that in every case in which the question was a controlling one, and it was free from statutory control, it has been held that, in cases of a new and different municipality carved out of a municipal township, the public property falling within its limits belongs to the new.

4. We take note of the distinction made in the brief of counsel for the township of Wellington between the governmental character of a municipality and its proprietary powers. In its governmental character the corporation is made by the state a local depository of certain limited and prescribed political powers, to be exercised for the public good of the state rather than for itself. In its proprietary character the theory is that the powers are not supposed to be conferred chiefly from considerations connected with the government of the state at large, but for the private advantage of the compact community which is incorporated as a distinct legal personality or corporate individual. This distinction is well founded, and upon it is based the doctrine that, as to property acquired under such powers, and as to contracts with reference thereto, the corporation is not to be regarded as a public one, to the extent that the legislative power over it with reference to such property is omnipotent. In the long list of authorities cited by Judge Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations, sustaining this distinction, we do not find that it exists anywhere, except in cities, and from its nature it must only apply to large cities, and in these it seems to be confined to property held by cities not absolutely necessary for the transaction of the public business, but for revenue, improvement, and development, such as bridges, wharfs, and structures of that character. It seems clear to us that the property in question was used solely and distinctly for a public purpose, and was a necessity of the municipal existence, because it had to have a place at which to transact the public business, and was not of that character that fell within the proprietary power of the township. Neither can it be claimed that the township of Wellington held this property in trust for specific uses. But the conveyance by Davidson to the township contained a limitation of the manner in which the property should be used. Curtis v. Board, 43 Kan. 138, 23 Pac. Rep. 98. Neither do we think that the possession and use of the lots, and the building thereon by the city of Wellington for public purposes, would depart from the express purpose of the conveyance so as to create any forfeiture of the estate. A city of the second class, for its mayor, common council, police judge, marshal, and other officers, has more use for a town-hall than a township can have, and the use by both is so similar that it does not appear that there is any substantial departure from the literal terms of the grant. In fact, the conveyance expressly provides for the same use, both by the township and its successor, and, as we have said, the use can only differ in degree, and not in character.

5. There is another question arising on the facts in this case that seems to be more controlling in its operation than the one just discussed. The conveyance made by Davidson to the township of Wellington was of lots in the town of Wellington, which at that time was a city of the third class. This conveyance was made for the consideration "of one dollar, and the enhanced value of lots that are owned by the grantor that lie in the vicinity of the herein granted lots." The conveyance was made to the township of Wellington, "its successor or successors," and it is made for the express purpose of erecting a township hall. The city of Wellington, as a city of the second class, has become the successor by operation of law of all the territory embraced within the boundaries of the city. This succession embraces the exercise of all the powers of taxation even for county purposes, of local legislative powers which are granted to such cities, for all educational purposes, for election purposes, and for all local administrative powers known to the law. We have already seen by a quotation from Dillon on Municipal Corporations, and it is a philosophical proposition, that there cannot be, at the same time, within the same territory, two distinct municipal corporations, exercising the same power and jurisdiction. Hence the control of these lots must vest entirely in one or the other of these municipalities. Beyond all question, these lots, and the buildings thereon, are no longer a part or parcel of the territory of Wellington township, and are a part of the territory of the city of Wellington. Has the township of Wellington the legal attribute of owning real estate, even for a public purpose, outside of its territorial limits? It will not be claimed that such power exists except by express legislative enactment. It would seem that the city of Wellington, as successor of Wellington township, became invested by the express terms of the conveyance with the legal title to the lots in dispute. That at the time of the conveyance such succession was in the contemplation of the grantor, and that the words "successor or successors" were used in anticipation that Wellington, then a city of the third class, and a part of the township, would eventually grow into such proportions that its legal identity would be separated from the township, and by the operation of the natural laws of growth and development it would emerge into a distinct and separate municipality. There can be no question but that the city of Wellington is the legal successor, so far as the territory within its limits is concerned, of the township of Wellington. Curtis v. Board, 43 Kan. 138, 23 Pac. Rep. 98. As such successor, it takes the lots and the buildings thereon, subject to the limitation in the manner of their use.

6. In the recent case of Board of Education of Kansas City v. School-Dist. No. 7 of Wyandotte Co., ante, 13, some expressions in the opinion are in conflict with this decision. That was a purely equitable action, its object being to restrain the officers of school-district No. 7 from any interference with the control by the board of the school-house. It seemed to us then that the cases of Helzer v. Yohn, 37 Ind. 415, and Reckert v. City of Peru, 60 Ind. 473, were in point and were controlling. It will be noticed by a critical examination of these cases that the decisions were largely controlled by the fact that only a portion of the school-district was taken into the city of Indianapolis in the one case and into the city of Peru in the other; and hence the court concluded that it would not be equitable to grant the relief prayed for. The distinction between these cases and that of School Tp. of Allen v. School Town of Macy, 109 Ind. 559, 10 N. E. Rep. 578, is clearly stated in the latter case, and, as we think, it is just the difference between Board of Education v. School-Dist. No. 7 of Wyandotte Co. and the case we are now considering. There is this marked difference between the cases: This is an action to quiet title under the Code by a party who for many years has been in the exclusive possession of the property, claiming to be the holder of the legal title. The Wyandotte County Case was one in which a party claimed to be entitled to possession by virtue of an extension of the boundaries of the city, but whose right of possession was denied, and it was sought to settle the title by injunction; and the universal rule is that to prevent interference of possession and control by injunction the party applying for the provisional remedy must hold the title. The real question in that case was, who owned the school-house and the ground upon which it was built? and this question ought not to be determined on a motion to vacate a temporary injunction. Be that as it may, we are now of the opinion that the city of Wellington is the legal successor of the township of Wellington, so far as this property is concerned, both by operation of law, by the express terms of the conveyance, by the necessity of a municipality having jurisdiction of property exclusively within its limits, and by the fact that no power is given to townships by the statutes of the state to hold real estate outside of its limits, as it cannot be used when so situated for any public purpose of the township, and it cannot be subjected to the free and unrestrained possession and control of the authorities of the township without collisions with the authority of the city.

7. Attention is called to an act of the legislature, being chapter 62 of the Laws of 1889, which it is claimed disposes of the interests of these various municipalities on equitable principles. This act reads as follows: "An act to provide for the apportionment of public property in Sumner county, Kansas, by a sale of lots eleven and twelve, in block fifty-three, in Wellington, Kansas, and apportion the proceeds of the same among the townships of Seventy-Six, Downs, Osborn, Jackson, Wellington, and the city of Wellington, in said county. Preamble: Whereas, that in 1873 the present city of Wellington, the present townships of Wellington, Seventy-Six, Osborn, Downs, and Jackson were one single township, known as 'Wellington Township,' in Sumner county, Kansas; and whereas, while said city and townships so composed one township, there was purchased by said township lots eleven (11) and twelve, (12,) in block fifty-three, (53,) in Wellington, Sumner county, Kansas, and erected upon the same, at a cost of ten thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine dollars and seventy-nine cents, ($10,829.79,) a township hall, now known as the 'Old Court-House,' and whereas, since the erection of said building the city of Wellington has been organized into a city of the second class, and then (there) has been detached from the territory of the original township of Wellington the territory now making the townships of Seventy-Six, Osborn, Downs, Jackson, and the city of Wellington; and whereas, the proportional part of said cost of erecting the said township hall which was contributed by the present city of Wellington was $4,928.83, by the present township of Seventy-Six was $814.76, by the present township of Osborn was $625.10, by the present township of Downs was $251, by the present township of Jackson was $595.99, by the present township of Wellington was $3,614.11; and whereas, there still remains in the treasury of the township of Wellington, of said sum contributed towards the erection of said building, the sum of $678.69; and whereas, the legal title to said building and lots is in the township of Wellington: Therefore, Section 1. Be it enacted by the legislature of Kansas, that the sheriff of Sumner county, Kansas, shall, within thirty days after this act takes effect, proceed to have advertised, appraised, and sold, in the same manner as is now provided by law for selling real estate under order of sale from the district court, lots eleven (11) and twelve, (12,) in block fifty-three, (53,) in Wellington, Sumner county, Kansas, and make a report of said sale to the district court of said county and state, in like manner as is now provided by law in sales of real estate as far as applicable. Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of said district court to confirm the sale mentioned in this act, if the same is made in accordance with this act, and order the sheriff of Sumner county, Kansas, upon the payment into court the purchase money, a deed to the purchaser, which deed shall be in all respects binding, and confer upon the purchaser a full and complete title in fee-simple to said lots eleven and twelve, in block fifty-three, in Wellington, Kansas. Sec. 3. The district judge of said court shall, by an order under his hand, direct the clerk of the district court to disburse the sum realized from the sale of the lots named in this act, among the following named municipalities in Sumner county, Kansas, and in the proportion as follows: To the township of Seventy-Six, that per cent. of the proceeds of sale that $814.76 is of $10,829.79; to the township of Osborn, that per centum of the proceeds of the sale that $625.10 is of $10,829.79; to the township of Downs, that per centum of the proceeds of sale that $251 is of $10,829.79; to the township of Wellington, that per centum of the proceeds of sale that $3,614 is of $10,829.79; to the township of Jackson, that per centum of the proceeds of sale that $595.99 is of $10,829.79; and to the city of Wellington, that per cent. of the proceeds of sale that $4,928.83 is of $10,829.79; provided, that shall said judge find that any part of the moneys contributed towards the erection of the building mentioned in this act has not been disbursed by the township of Wellington, then the sum so found to remain with said township shall be deducted from said township pro rata. Sec. 4. The purchaser of said lots shall have all unpaid rents, and is hereby empowered to maintain an action in any court of competent jurisdiction for the same. Sec. 5. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the official state paper."

Discarding the preamble, and considering the body of the act only, it may be at first said that it is doubtful if the legislature can decide a case pending in the courts, and if, when there is a controversy about the title to real estate, the legislative branch of the state government can declare the title to be vested in one or the other of the litigants. In the second place, if force and effect is given to this act of the legislature, the express purpose of the conveyance by Davidson to the township and its successor is not only defeated, but compliance with its terms is rendered impossible. As we have remarked elsewhere, the manner of the use of the property is expressly limited by the language used in the deed of conveyance, and the absolute sale of the property as directed by this act of the legislature is in violation of that use or manner of use. This act provides that the property shall be sold, and that a sheriff's deed shall be made to the purchaser that will vest in him the absolute fee-simple title to the same. This is not a proper exercise of legislative power, in any view, and cannot have the effect to make any final disposition of this property contrary to and in violation of the avowed purpose and express object of the grant. It follows from all these considerations that we are constrained to recommend that the judgment of the district court of Sumner be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrers.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

INTERSTATE CONSOLIDATED RAPID TRANSIT RY. CO. V. EARLY.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — GRADE OF STREETS — DAMAGES.

1. A city has the right to establish the grade of its streets, and it is only when the grade is changed after being once established that damages can be allowed therefor to property owners. Paragraph 562, Gen. St. 1889.

2. Where a street-railway company is permitted by a city to construct its road in a street of the city and upon the established grade thereof, such road, with permission of the city, may cut down or grade the street so as to bring it to the established grade. In doing so the railway company acts for the city, and in bringing the street, or any part thereof, to an established grade, it is not liable to adjoining lot-owners on account of cutting down or grading the street, if the grading is done in a good and workman-like manner, and confined wholly within the street.

Error from district court, Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge.

On the 25th day of January, 1887, L. J. Early commenced his action against the Interstate Consolidated Rapid Transit Railway Company to recover $3,000 because of the construction of a double-track railway on Sixth street in Kansas City, Kan., whereby it was alleged that the ingress to and egress from plaintiff's premises on Sixth street were destroyed. Trial had before the court with a jury. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and assessed his damages at $500. They also made and filed the following special findings of fact: "(1) If you find for the plaintiff in any sum on account of construction and operation of a railroad by the defendant on Sixth street in front of plaintiff's premises, how much of such sum do you find to arise exclusively from the grading done by the defendant on said street? Answer. $500. (2) State whether the ingress to or egress from the plaintiff's premises on the Sixth-Street side thereof has been wholly destroyed by the construction and operation of defendant's railroad. A. It has. (3) State whether the ingress to or egress from plaintiff's premises have been simply made temporarily less convenient or permanently destroyed by the construction and operation of defendant's railroad. A. Permanently destroyed. (4) State what you find was the value of plaintiff's property immediately before the defendant began the construction and operation of its road. A. Three thousand six hundred dollars. (5) State what you find to be the value of plaintiff's property immediately after defendant began the construction and operation of its road. A. Three thousand one hundred dollars. (6) State whether or not the rental value of plaintiff's property has been increased by the construction and operation of the defendant's road. A. Unable to answer, as there are no buildings." The railroad company filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled. Judgment was entered upon the verdict. The railroad company excepted, and brings the case here.

N. A. Loomis and Warner, Dean & Hageman, for plaintiff in error. Hale, Fife & Craig, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) This was an action brought in the court below by L. J. Early against the Interstate Rapid Transit Railway Company to recover damages to certain lots owned by him in Kansas City, in this state, on account of the construction of its railway on Sixth street in front of his property. Soon after, because of the consolidation of this and other companies under the name of the Interstate Consolidated Rapid Transit Railway Company, an amended petition was filed. Trial had before the court with a jury. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff below for $500 and costs. The railway company excepted, and brings the case here. Sixth street in the old city of Wyandotte, (now Kansas City, Kan.) between Minnesota avenue and the south end of Sixth street, is a public street, varying in width at various places. It was the chief street in the old city connecting the north and south ends. In some places, between Minnesota avenue and Orville street, Sixth street was as wide as 90 feet, but in front of the property of Mr. Early it is somewhat difficult to determine the exact width of the street. Upon his part it is claimed to be 45 feet only, while Mr. McAlpine, one of his witnesses, testified that the street at that point was from 60 to 80 feet wide. It had been traveled a great number of years. The city had improved it somewhat by making a cut in front of this property, varying at the north-west corner thereof to the south-west corner from two to eight feet. It left the property well situated for residence or business purposes. In 1884 and 1885 ordinances were adopted authorizing the railway company to construct its road on Sixth street. There was no grade in front of the property of Mr. Early until after these ordinances were passed. The ordinances that authorized the railway company to construct its road on the street fixed the official grade of the street. These ordinances provided for the construction of a double-track railway past the property in controversy upon the street at the established grade thereof. Mr. Early owned a number of vacant lots upon Sixth street in the old city of Wyandotte at the time the railway company built its road thereon. The lots face west, and corner upon Orville street. The railway runs past these lots in a north and south direction. The city having failed to bring Sixth street to grade as by the ordinances it had agreed to do, the railway company proceeded in April, 1886, to do the grading; and, as the railway was to be built, according to the terms of the ordinance, upon the street at the established grade thereof, the company was obliged to grade so much of the street in front of Mr. Early's property as was necessary for the construction and operation of the road. In October, 1886, the railway company commenced the operation of its trains past his property. Late in 1886 this action was commenced. Upon January 25, 1887, the amended petition was filed. The grade that the railway company made in front of this property was about 18 feet deep at the south line of the property, and varied as it went north, until it was something like 7 or 8 feet at the north line. The cut made in front of the Early property was about 30 feet wide at the top and about 23 feet wide at the bottom. A double-track railway was constructed in the street. The tracks take up about 15 feet, although it is claimed that from the ends of the ties of the road about 22 feet of the street are occupied. The jury, in their special findings, stated that they assessed the damages of the landowner at $500, and that these damages were allowed solely on account of the grading done by the railway company. In grading Sixth street for the construction of the street railway the company acted for the city. They held a position, as it were, of a contractor for the city. The city established the grade, and, under the statute, had the right to do so. Gen. St. 1889, par. 562. It is only when the grade of a street, alley, lane, or avenue within a city is changed after being once established that damages can be allowed the property owners which may be caused by the change of grade. Of course the railway company, in grading Sixth street under authority from the city, was compelled to cut down the street in front of the Early property, but it had the lawful right to do that. This cutting or grading of necessity, to some extent destroyed plaintiff's means of ingress and egress from the street, because by cutting the street, or a part of it, down to its established grade, it left the Early property above grade, or higher than the street. The railway company ought not to be held liable because the city failed to grade the street to its full width at the time the company constructed and put in operation its railway. The trial court so instructed the jury. It is possible from the evidence that there was a temporary obstruction of the street on account of the failure of the railway company to properly construct its road and track, but the jury did not allow damages for any act of omission or commission of this kind. Then, again, the railway company had a reasonable time after grading the street to construct its tracks and road-bed, and to put in macadam or ballast. This case is not like Railway Co. v. Twine, 23 Kan. 585; Railroad Co. v. Andrews, 26 Kan. 702, and 30 Kan. 590, 2 Pac. Rep. 677,—because the real complaint in this case is that the damages were caused by cutting the street down to the established grade required by the city. It is almost impossible to tell what, if any, permanent damage the Early property will suffer on account of the construction of the street railway until Sixth street is brought to grade. If the grading was properly done in a good and workmanlike manner, and confined wholly within the street, Early cannot recover because in cutting the street down to grade his lots are left elevated or above grade. The jury hearing this case do not seem to have fully understood this rule. They were not clearly or sufficiently instructed upon this point; hence the erroneous verdict. As to Railroad companies occupying streets, see Railroad Co. v. Larson, 40 Kan. 301, 19 Pac. Rep. 661; Railway Co. v. Cuykendall, 42 Kan. 234, 21 Pac. Rep. 1051; Railway Co. v.

Smith, 44 Kan. —, 25 Pac. Rep. 623; and Railway Co. v. Mahler, 41 Kan. —, ante, 22. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial. All the justices concurring.

HARDY et al. v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF NEWTON.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—CANCELLATION OF NOTES—INJUNCTION.

In an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of real estate, the cancellation of the notes given in payment of such purchase, and to restrain the purchaser of said notes from collecting the same, all of the parties interested in the transaction should be made parties to the action, either as plaintiffs or defendants; and held, that an injunction should not be granted to restrain the purchaser of such notes from collecting the same if it appeared from the petition of the plaintiffs that they had a plain and adequate remedy at law.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Bowman & Bucher and James McKinstry, for plaintiff in error. Brown & Kline, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. The plaintiffs in error, with W. K. F. Villa, originally brought this action against S. Lehman, A. B. Gilbert, and the First National Bank of Newton, in the district court of Harvey county. The plaintiffs alleged various fraudulent acts upon the part of the defendants Lehman and Gilbert and others, whereby they were induced to associate themselves with the defendants named and others in the purchase of some real estate, to be platted as an addition to the city of Newton; that a corporation was organized under the name of the "Harvey County Investment Company," and certain land purchased and conveyed to said company; that each member of the association paid in cash the sum of $1,000, except Villa, who paid his entire share in cash, amounting to $2,800. The other members of the association executed notes for the balance of the unpaid interest in said company, and these notes, with the cash paid in, were used to pay for the land purchased. It was further alleged that these notes were delivered to Lehman and Gilbert, who occupied the position of president and secretary, respectively, of the investment company; and that they sold them to the First National Bank, of which Lehman was president, and Gilbert was cashier, and the bank had knowledge of the alleged fraudulent transactions; that the bank had brought suit against the plaintiffs, as makers of some of the notes, and was proceeding to collect the same. The plaintiffs asked for a judgment against Lehman and Gilbert for $8,800, and for a rescission of the contract of purchase of the land, and that the bank be enjoined from collecting the notes sued upon until the final determination of this action, and, if the plaintiffs should recover in this suit, that the injunction be made perpetual. To this petition the bank demurred, and the same was sustained by the court, upon the grounds that there was a misjoinder of different causes of action, a defect of parties plaintiff and defendant, and that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the bank. One of the plaintiffs, Vila, then voluntarily dismissed his action as to all the defendants, and the other plaintiffs dismissed their action as to the defendants Lehman and Gilbert, leaving the First National Bank the only defendant; and the record is brought to this court by the plaintiffs in error, who ask a reversal of the decision of the district court in sustaining the demurrer of the bank to the petition. We think the demurrer was properly sustained. A rescission of the original contract for the purchase of the land was asked, and all the parties interested should have been joined as plaintiffs or defendants. The corporation was not even made a party. Again, we are of the opinion that if the bank had notice through its president and cashier of the alleged frauds, as plaintiffs contend, then the plaintiffs would have a good defense against the two notes sued on, which suit was attempted to be enjoined by this action. We might assign another reason why the decision of the district court should not be disturbed. The plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed their action against all of the defendants except the bank. They were seeking a judgment against the other defendants, and asked the court to restrain the bank from collecting its notes until the alleged claims of the plaintiffs against these defendants could be adjudicated. They then placed it beyond the power of the court to settle the question sought to be litigated by dismissing the principal defendants, but still insist that the bank should be restrained from prosecuting its action against them. We know of no rule which requires such an interposition upon the part of a court of equity. Legal rights should be left to the decision of a legal forum, and, in the absence of special circumstances warranting the interposition of the extraordinary aid of courts of equity, such courts will not interfere to protect a purely legal right properly triable at law. High, Inj. § 29; Wooden v. Wooden, 3 N. J. Eq. 429. We recommend an affirmance of the judgment of the court below.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

MARTIN.

TRANSACTIONS WITH AGENT—LIABILITY TO PRINCIPAL—PLEADING—VERIFICATION OF ANSWER—NEW TRIAL—SURPRISE.

1. If one deals bona fide with an agent as owner, without knowledge of his agency, and has no good reason to know of such agency, he is justified in treating the agent as the owner, and the payment of the purchase price to him with a pre-existing debt will be a defense to an action by the owner for the value of the goods and merchandise.

2. Under the provisions of section 108 of the Civil Code, an account, to be duly verified by aff-avit, must be sworn to positively. Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. 124.

3. If a plaintiff finds himself unprepared to meet the defendant's evidence, he should ask at the trial for time to meet it. Generally this will be allowed upon such terms as may seem just; but if this is not allowed he always has it in his power to dismiss his action without prejudice, which will leave him at liberty to sue again for the same cause of action. He cannot, as a general rule, be permitted to take the chances upon the evidence to which he does not object, and, when judgment is rendered against him, obtain a new trial, simply because he was surprised at the evidence presented.

Hayward & Griffith and F. H. Foster, for plaintiff in error. Thomas W. Heatley, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. This was an action by the Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Company against Joseph Martin upon an account for boots and shoes, amounting to $791.47 and interest. The answer of the defendant set up: First, a general denial; second, payment; third, payment by E. M. Sharp, deceased; fourth, a counter-claim for $400. A jury was waived, and trial had before the court. A general finding was made for the defendant, and judgment rendered in his favor for costs. The plaintiff excepted, and brings the case here.

A preliminary question is presented upon the record. On the 26th of November, 1887, the motion for a new trial was overruled, and the plaintiff was given 60 days to make a case for this court. The defendant was given 20 days thereafter to suggest amendments, and the case was ordered to be settled upon 5 days' notice. The 60 days would have expired January 26, 1888. On the 21st of January, 1888, the plaintiff was given until the 10th of February, 1888, to make and serve its case. This was done on the 1st day of February, 1888. The attorney for the defendant accepted service of the case, expressly stating, however, "No waiver." The case was settled and signed on the 15th day of February, 1888. Under the order of the 26th of November, 1887, the defendant had 20 days after the service of the case on the 1st day of February, 1888, in which to suggest amendments. The case made was signed and settled before that time had expired. Within the decisions of Railway Co. v. City of Fort Scott, 15 Kan. 435; Weeks v. Medler, 18 Kan. 425; and Railway Co. v. Roach, Id. 592,—it is doubtful if the case made can be considered. "It nowhere appears that the judge considered any amendments, or that any were suggested, or that counsel had none to suggest, or that they had waived in any manner their right to suggest them." Railway Co. v. Roach, Id. Even if we consider the case in this court upon its merits we cannot reverse the judgment rendered. Where there is a general finding and judgment of the court, the judgment must stand if there is evidence to support it. Major v. Major, 2 Kan. 337; Ulrich v. Ulrich, 8 Kan. 402; Railway Co. v. Kunkel, 17 Kan. 145; Bentley v. Brown, 37

Kan. 14, 14 Pac. Rep. 431; Peacock v. Boyle, 41 Kan. 492, 21 Pac. Rep. 588.

It appears from the evidence presented in the trial court that the Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Company sold boots and shoes at Kansas City, Mo., through one E. M. Sharp, who acted as their agent from the summer of 1884 until his death, in 1885. The defendant testified that he bought the boots and shoes the 1st day of April, 1885, of E. M. Sharp, and denied that he ever received any bill or statement of the boots and shoes from the plaintiff until more than a year after he had bought and paid for them. He also testified, among other things, as follows: "Question. Did you know one E. M. Sharp during his life-time? Answer. Yes. Q. Where was he doing business? A. In Kansas City, Mo., and in this city. Q. What was his business? A. He was in the boot and shoe business, as commission broker; an agent in various ways; handling boots and shoes. Q. Have you examined this statement here [handing witness paper] of the plaintiff in this case, and marked 'Exhibit A,' and dated October 1, 1885? A. Yes, sir. Q. State to the court whether or not you ever purchased that bill of goods from the plaintiff in this case, the Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Company. A. I did not. Q. State whether or not at any time you received from the plaintiff in this action any statement of any kind for any bill of goods—that one or any other. A. I never did. Q. When was the first time that you had any knowledge that they made any claim against you,—what time of year was it? A. I can't give the exact date. It was in the fore part of the summer or spring of this year,—1887. Q. Where have you been living during the time since April, 1885? A. In this consolidated city. Q. And in Armourdale? A. Yes, sir. Q. State whether or not you ever purchased any goods directly or indirectly from the plaintiff in this case. A. I never did. Q. You spoke a minute ago about Mr. Sharp doing a commission business over in Kansas City, Mo., there. What do you know about it? A. Well, I was employed by him, and was in his room and business during the time—most of the time. Q. What sort of business did he carry on? Tell the court what he done in regard to buying and selling. That is what I want to get at without leading you. A. Well, his plan, as near as I can state to the court, was to buy goods wherever he could find anything that he thought was a bargain,—take the agency, or buy the goods outright and sell, or order the same as any other commission man,—the wholesale boot and shoe houses. Q. He had a store in Kansas City? A. Yes, sir. Q. State how the goods were received there when he bought them in the east from parties,—when they were received. A. The goods were billed to E. M. Sharp from Tripp and Moore and Chicago houses, and two or three eastern houses. I can't, without a little time, think of all the places that he got goods from. He bought goods sometimes in Kansas City, from W. W. Kendall—it was then—and bought goods from Victor B. Buck. Q. When he bought them, where were the goods put? A. They were put in this store-room,—405 Delaware street. Q. When the goods were there, what did he do in the way of selling them? A. Sold them the same as any other wholesale jobbing house did; billed the goods and collected the pay for them. Q. State what the fact is in regard to that,—whether E. M. Sharp, doing business there, became indebted to you in any way? A. Yes. Q. In what sum? A. Well, I can't state exactly; between $800 and $1,000. Mr. Sharp kept the books, and had the books in his possession when he died, and I have never been able to get hold of them. Q. Did Mr. Sharp pay you then in any way? A. Mr. Sharp paid me by selling me a bill of goods. Q. Now, then, what time of the year was that? A. In April,—the first of April, 1885. Q. Now, then, tell the circumstances under which they were sold and delivered to you. A. Mr. Sharp's health failed, and he was not able to run the business. The business was getting down. He called me to his bedside one day. He was able to write and keep his books, but not able to go down town. To balance accounts he sold me about $800 worth of boots and shoes. Q. Well, what did he do with them? A. Delivered them to me. Q. What did you do with them? A. I took them to Armourdale, and opened a retail boot and shoe shop down there. Q. Were those the only goods you ever got from any body in Kansas City that year,—was it or not? A. No, sir; I bought goods from Kendall, and I bought goods from Thomas. Q. I will ask you, did you ever buy in that year any goods from the plaintiff in this action? A. No, sir."

"If the purchaser of property does not know that he is dealing with an agent of the owner, and has not good reason to know it, he is justified in treating the agent as the owner; and payment of the purchase price to him will be a defense to an action by the owner for the amount." Windmill Co. v. Thorson, 46 Iowa, 181; Peel v. Shepherd, 58 Ga. 365; Pratt v. Collins, 20 Hun, 126; Frame v. Coal Co., 97 Pa. St. 309. It is familiar law that if one deal bona fide with an agent as owner, without knowledge of his agency, he may set off any claim he may have against the agent in answer to the demand of the principal. Story, Ag. §§ 420, 421; 2 Kent, Comm. 632, where numerous authorities are collected. See, also, Benj. Sales, § 1103, p. 959. It is claimed, however, that if the defendant did not know that the Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Company owned the boots and shoes which Sharp sold to the defendant, he had good reason to know it, and therefore that the defendant could not pay for the property by writing off a debt due to him from Sharp. Phillips v. Reitz, 16 Kan. 396; Kurtz v. Miller, 26 Kan. 314; Gollober v. Martin, 33 Kan. 252, 6 Pac. Rep. 267; Henderson v. Creamer, 39 Kan. 679, 18 Pac. Rep. 926. If the trial court had found that the purchase by Sharp from his principal was fraudulent, or if the court had found that the defendant had good reason to know that Sharp did not own the boots and shoes sold to him, then the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover; but the general finding is against the plaintiff, and we cannot say that it is wholly unsupported by the evidence. As there was evidence to sustain the finding and judgment of the trial court in every essential particular, we cannot now reverse the judgment simply because it does not seem to be sustained by a preponderance of the evidence. Railway Co. v. Salmon, 14 Kan. 512. It is also claimed that the trial court committed error in not striking the answer from the files and rendering judgment upon the petition or account sued on. It is said that the account was verified by affidavit, and, as the answer was not verified, there was no issue to try. Section 108, Civil Code. An examination of the record shows that the petition was not duly verified within the provisions of the statute. It was not sworn to positively. Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. 124. Finally, it is claimed that the plaintiff was surprised by the evidence offered by the defendant, tending to show that he did not know that in buying the boots and shoes he was dealing with an agent of the plaintiff, and had no good reason to know it. It is also said in this connection that there is a variance between the evidence and the answer. The plaintiff did not object or except to any of the evidence offered by the defendant. If he had done so, the court might have permitted the answer to be amended upon such terms as were just. If the plaintiff was surprised at the evidence offered, he could have asked for a continuance, or could have dismissed his action, and afterwards commenced a new one to recover the amount claimed. He saw fit to take his chances with the court upon the evidence as it was presented. He must therefore be held to abide the result. 3 Grah. & W. New Trials, 964-968. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

CITY OF NEW KIOWA v. CRAVEN.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CITY PRISON—INJURIES RECEIVED BY PRISONERS—LIABILITY OF CITY.

1. The case of La Clef v. City of Concordia, 41 Kan. 323, 21 Pac. Rep. 272, followed.

2. Neither paragraph 1013, Gen. St. 1889, nor paragraph 3552, Gen. St. 1889, compels a city of the third class to keep and maintain a city prison which shall be comfortable, suitable, and healthy. Paragraph 1013 gives a city marshal authority to keep all persons arrested in the city prison, county jail, or some other suitable and safe place. Paragraph 3552 concerns county jails only, and has no application to city prisons or jails.

Error from district court, Barber county; C. W. ELLIS, Judge.

Sample & Long, for plaintiff in error. W. S. Denton and T. S. Brown, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. On the 28th day of September, 1886, Thomas Craven, the husband of Mrs. Kate Craven, was arrested in the city of New Kiowa, in Barber county, by the city marshal, for being drunk in the streets of the city, and also for using indecent and profane language. He was taken to the city prison by the marshal in the afternoon of the 28th of September, and confined in the jail until about 9 o'clock the next morning. On the 9th of October, 1886, he died. Subsequently Mrs. Kate Craven, his widow, was appointed administratrix of his estate, and on the 3d day of December, 1886, she brought her action against the city of New Kiowa, a city of the third class, to recover the sum of $10,000. She alleged that the city prison was a small wooden building, poorly ventilated, dark, filthy, and uninhabitable; that the city of New Kiowa failed to properly ventilate the prison, or provide a bed for persons confined therein to sleep; that on account of the exposure and confinement in the prison, together with being compelled to breathe the poisonous air thereof, her husband, Thomas Craven, contracted a violent disease, of which he afterwards died. Trial before the court with a jury. The jury found a verdict for $1,000 against the city, and judgment was entered thereon. The city excepted, and brings the case here. It is contended on the part of the city that the case of La Clef v. City of Concordia, 41 Kan. 323, 21 Pac. Rep. 272, is decisive against the right of any recovery by the plaintiff below. In that case it was decided that, "where a person is confined in a city prison, upon a conviction for disturbing the peace and quiet of the city, the city is not liable for damages for injuries sustained by such person by reason of the bad character of the prison, or the negligence of the officer in charge of the same." On the part of plaintiff below it is insisted that the La Clef Case is not conclusive. It is stated that there are statutes making it the duty of a city of the third class, to which class the city of New Kiowa belongs, if it undertakes to keep and maintain a city prison, that it shall be comfortable and safe. The only statutes referred to by counsel for plaintiff below in support of their assertion are as follows: Paragraph 1013, Gen. St. 1889, which reads: "The marshal shall be chief of police, and shall at all times have power to make arrests, with or without process, or order the arrest of all offenders against the laws of the state, or of the city, by day or by night; to keep all persons arrested in the city prison, county jail, or other proper place; to prevent their escape until a trial can be had before the proper officer; and to execute all processes issued by the police judge, and delivered to him for that purpose." And paragraph 3552, Gen. St. 1889, which provides: "All prisoners shall be treated with humanity, and in a manner calculated to promote their reformation. Juvenile prisoners shall be kept, if the jail will admit of it, in apartments separate from those containing more experienced and hardened criminals. The visits of parents and friends, who desire to exert a moral influence over them, shall, at all reasonable times, be permitted." Neither of these statutes makes it the duty of a city of the third class to keep or maintain a comfortable and safe city prison. Paragraph 1013 gives a city marshal authority to keep all persons arrested in the city prison, county jail, or other proper place. By this statute no duty is imposed upon the city. Paragraph 3552 is a part of the statute concerning county jails, and has no application to city prisons or jails. Notwithstanding this statute, it was decided in Pfefferle v. Commissioners, 39 Kan. 432, 18 Pac. Rep. 506, that "a county is not liable to the inmates of its county jail for negligently permitting such jail to become and remain in such a bad condition that the inmates thereof become sick and diseased." If a county is not liable under this statute for negligently permitting its jail to become and remain in a bad condition, certainly it cannot be claimed that this statute, which was adopted to control county jails, and not city jails, will make a city liable for negligently permitting its jail to become and remain in an unhealthy condition. It would be illogical and unjust to hold that a statute concerning county jails, that did not and could not make counties liable for failing to keep a comfortable and safe county jail, shall be so construed as to make cities liable for failing to keep a comfortable and safe city jail. Upon the evidence presented upon the trial, the plaintiff below was not entitled to recover. See, also, Peters v. City of Lindsborg, 40 Kan. 654, 20 Pac. Rep. 490. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings, in accordance with the views herein expressed. All the justices concurring.

CHICAGO, I. & K. R. CO. v. TOWNSDIN.

COSTS—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—TENDER OF JUDGMENT—REFUSAL.

1. After a land-owner appeals from the award of commissioners appointed to condemn real estate for the right of way of a railroad company, the proceeding in the district court becomes a civil action, and the railroad company may offer, under the provisions of section 528 of the Civil Code, to confess judgment for a part of the amount claimed; and if the land-owner refuses to accept such confession of judgment in full of his demands, and upon the trial does not recover more than was so offered, he must pay all the costs of the railroad company incurred after the offer.

2. Where an offer is made in court to confess judgment, under the provisions of section 528 of the Civil Code, and subsequently a larger offer is made by the defendant, yet, if the first offer is not withdrawn and the plaintiff does not recover more than was first offered, he must pay all the costs of the defendant incurred after such offer.

Error from district court, Cloud county; E. HUTCHINSON, Judge.

The Chicago, Iowa & Kansas Railroad Company instituted condemnation proceedings for a right of way over William S. Townsdin's premises. The commissioners assessed his damages at $149.75. He appealed to the district court. The jury assessed his damage at $194.90, and judgment was entered thereon, with the costs. The railroad company contends that Townsdin should be taxed with the costs, under section 528 of the Civil Code. That section reads: "After an action for the recovery of money is brought, the defendant may offer in court to con-less judgment for part of the amount claimed, or part of the causes involved in the action; whereupon, if the plaintiff, being present, refuse to accept such confession of judgment in full of his demands against the defendant in the action, or having had such notice that the offer would be made, of its amount, and of the time of making it, as the court shall deem reasonable, fail to attend, and on the trial do not recover more than was so offered to be confessed, such plaintiff shall pay all the costs of the defendant incurred after the offer. The offer shall not be deemed to be an admission of the cause of action, or the amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, nor be given in evidence upon the trial." The case came on for trial at the April term of the court for 1885. After the impaneling of the jury, but before any witnesses had been sworn, or any evidence offered, the railroad company offered in open court to confess judgment for $206.25, with accrued costs, which offer was in writing, and filed with the clerk, and (omitting title) was in words and figures as follows: "Now comes the above-named appellee, and offers in writing to allow judgment to be taken against it for $206.25, with accrued costs. F. W. STURGES, Attorney for Appellee." This was indorsed by the clerk as filed June 11, 1885. The offer was refused, and the cause proceeded to trial, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $327. This verdict was set aside with the consent of Townsdin, and a new trial granted. The case came on for trial on August 18, 1885, but before any witnesses had been sworn, or any evidence offered, the railroad company made a second offer in open court to confess judgment for the sum of $300 and accrued costs, and which offer was also in writing and filed with the clerk, as in the first instance. Townsdin refused this offer, and the trial to the jury resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff of $292.67½. This verdict was set aside, and a new trial granted. The case was for the third time called for trial on March 1, 1886, to a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff of $458.19. This time the railroad company objected to the verdict, and filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and judgment entered upon the verdict. Upon this judgment error proceedings were prosecuted in this court, which resulted in a reversal of such judgment. Railroad Co. v. Townsdin, 38 Kan. 78, 15 Pac. Rep. 889. The case came on for trial for the fourth time on March 6, 1888, to a jury, and resulted in a verdict for Townsdin of $194.90, and this time the railroad company filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled by the court, and judgment was rendered on the verdict in favor of Townsdin for "the sum of $194.90 as and for his damages, and that the award be so corrected, and, further, that Townsdin have and recover of and from the railroad company his costs herein expended, taxed at $220.75." The railroad company excepted and filed its motion to retax the costs, which, as amended, reads: "Now comes the above-named appellee, and moves the court to retax the costs herein by taxing to appellant all costs incurred after the offer to confess judgment for $206.25, made June 11, 1885; or, if this be refused, then all costs after the offer to confess judgment for $300, made August 18, 1885." This motion was overruled. The railroad company excepted, and brings the case here.

W. W. Guthrie and Kennett & Peck, for plaintiff in error. L. J. Crans, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The Chicago, Iowa & Kansas Railroad Company commenced proceedings for the condemnation of a certain strip of land owned by William S. Townsdlin for railroad purposes. Townsdlin was dissatisfied with the award of the commissioners, and appealed to the district court. Upon the final trial he recovered the sum of $194.90. Subsequently the trial court ordered the assessment of the commissioners to be corrected in accordance with the verdict, and rendered judgment in favor of Townsdlin and against the railroad company for the costs, taxed at $220.75. As the railroad company offered in open court to confess judgment for a larger amount than that recovered by Townsdlin upon the final trial, and as he refused to accept the offer, its contention is that Townsdlin must pay all of the costs incurred after the offer. Section 528, Civil Code. The condemnation proceedings originally instituted were special only, not an action in the district court. After the appeal was taken, the proceeding was turned into an action to be heard, tried, and disposed of as other actions in the district court. While the judgment did not pass the title to the land, nor to the right of way, it did determine the amount which the railroad company was required to pay to the owner of the land or to the county treasurer for his use to secure the right of way. The judgment for costs in such an action is rendered in the form of an ordinary personal judgment. Technically, the language of section 528 of the Civil Code does not embrace proceedings in condemnation, because it refers to actions "brought for the recovery of money;" but the spirit and intent of that section does apply where an appeal is taken from the award of damages. Fuller v. Wells, 42 Kan. 551, 22 Pac. Rep. 561. In such a case the trial court may require new pleadings to be filed, and damages are properly allowable for the actual value of the land taken by the railroad company, and for the consequential diminution in value of the land not taken. In Seymour v. Cooper, 26 Kan. 539, the exemption statute was construed to apply to the personal services or earnings of a debtor in attachment or garnishment proceedings. The statutes do not anywhere in express terms create such an exemption, and yet an exemption was declared in such a case, because within the evident spirit and intent of the legislature. The offer of the railroad company on June 11, 1885, was $206.25 with accrued costs. The making of its subsequent offer did not waive or set aside its first offer, and therefore, as the verdict and judgment were less than the first offer, Townsdlin cannot recover any costs after June 11, 1885. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, with the direction to the court below to retax the costs in accordance with the views herein expressed. All the justices concurring.

O'BRIEN et al. v. BUGBEE et al.

TITLE TO MAINTEIN EJECTMENT—INDIANS—DESCENT OF REAL PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

1. In an action in the nature of ejectment, the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of the title of the defendant, who has the actual possession of the real estate.

2. In 1860, under the tribal organization of the Shawnee Indians, the descent of real estate was cast in accordance with the custom and decision of that tribe.

3. Where a plaintiff relies upon title to real estate alleged to be cast by descent upon his grantor in accordance with the custom and decision of an Indian tribe, he must establish the custom or decision of the tribe as to descent or distribution at the time of the death of the former owner or possessor, from whom he claims his grant or inherited the property.

4. Where a plaintiff brings his action in the nature of ejectment against a defendant in the actual possession of Indian land properly patented to a member of the Shawnee tribe, (now deceased,) under the provisions of a treaty between the United States and the Shawnee Indians, concluded on the 10th day of May, 1854, and the act of congress of March 3, 1859, and such defendant claims color of title and possession under a deed from the chiefs of the tribe, approved by the secretary of the interior, the prior possession of such Indian land by the plaintiff is not sufficient for him to recover upon as against such a defendant, if such plaintiff fails to show any title or other right of possession on his part.

Error from district court, Johnson county; J. P. HINDMAN, Judge.

On the 7th of July, 1887, John J. O'Brien commenced his action against Thomas Bugbee, Henry Cresswell, John C. McCoy, Sr., Charles Elliott, Frank M. Lyon, W. W. Harris, John C. McCoy, Jr., Jo Smith, and David Updegraff, in ejectment, and also for partition of the following described real estate, situated in Johnson county: The W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, of section 1, and the E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 2,—all in township 12, of range 23, (207.44 acres.) The defendants Thomas Bugbee, Henry W. Cresswell, and John C. McCoy, Sr., filed their separate general denials. David Updegraff, in his separate answer, claimed to be the owner of an undivided one-half of said land. Trial had before the district court without a jury at its May term for 1888. The court made the following special findings of fact:

"(1) That on the 28th day of December, 1859, the lands in controversy, to-wit, the west half of the north-west quarter, and the north-east quarter of the north-west quarter, of section 1, and the east half of the north-east quarter of section 2, all in township 12, of range 23 east, in Johnson county, Kansas, (200 acres,) were duly patented by the United States of America, through the then president, unto Polly Manture, a member of the tribe of Shawnee Indians. The said patent, upon its face, restricts a sale by the said patentee of said lands, without the approval of the secretary of the interior of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may from time to time prescribe.

"(2) That said Polly Manture and George Buchanan, a white man, were duly joined in marriage in the spring of the year 1855, in Johnson county, Kan., and thereafter had born to them a daughter named Sally Buchanan, and that said George and Polly Buchanan cohabited as husband and wife until her death, and they never had any other child or children.

"(3) That said lands were taken actual possession of by said Polly and George Buchanan as early as the year 1857, and were improved and cultivated by him until his death.

"(4) That Polly Manture Buchanan died intestate on the farm, in the year 1860, seised in fee of the lands and tenements in controversy, and that George and Sally Buchanan survived her, and that said George Buchanan died thereon in the year 1879.

"(5) That Sally Buchanan married one Gottlieb Zeigler, a white man, in said county, on September 20, 1874, and cohabited with him, on said farm as his wife, until the 9th day of December, 1874, when she died intestate, without child or children, her husband and her father, George Buchanan, surviving her, and then residing on the lands in controversy.

"(6) That in the year 1861 said George Buchanan intermarried with a widow named Ophelia Maria Gibbs, (sometimes called and known as Maria Gibbs,) who had a son named Marow Gibbs by a former husband. By this wife the said George Buchanan had no child or children, and they all remained on said lands and cultivated same until the death of George Buchanan. George Buchanan and she cohabited as husband and wife from that period until his death, leaving her surviving him.

"(7) That on the — day of August, 1879, said George Buchanan died, leaving a last will and testament, wherein and whereby he devised all the lands and tenements in controversy unto the said Marow Gibbs, in fee-simple, which last will and testament was afterwards duly probated in the probate court of Johnson county, state of Kansas, and his widow, the said Ophelia Maria Buchanan, (formerly Gibbs,) in writing, and in due form of law, relinquished in the said probate court all her rights under the said will, and under the law in such case made and provided, and consented in writing to the said devise of all said lands and tenements unto her son, Marow Gibbs, who remained in possession with his mother, the Widow Buchanan, and he cultivated the said lands and tenements until the year 1883, when said McCoy took possession of all said lands and tenements.

"(8) That said Marow Gibbs and wife on the 9th day of February, 1883, for value received, duly conveyed all said lands and tenements unto John J. O'Brien, the plaintiff in the action; which deed was duly recorded in the proper office on the 26th day of February, 1883.

"(9) That on the 10th day of June, 1875, the said Gottlieb Zeigler (claiming to be the heir of Sally Zeigler, deceased, formerly Buchanan) duly conveyed all said lands and tenements unto James H. McCartney for value received, which conveyance was duly recorded in the proper office on the 10th day of January, 1878.

"(10) On the 5th day of August, 1875, the said Gottlieb Zeigler duly conveyed all said lands and tenements, for value received, unto David Updegraff, one of the defendants in this action; which conveyance was duly recorded in the proper office on the 5th day of August, 1875.

"(11) On the 21st day of March, 1876, the said James H. McCartney, for value received, duly conveyed all his interest and estate in and to said lands and tenements unto the said David Updegraff; which said conveyance was duly recorded in the proper office on the 14th day of June, 1876.

"(12) That the said George Buchanan, from 1855 to 1862, was seen at the payhouse every year; and that the United States government paid the annuities in those years to the tribe in gold and silver coin, and that Buchanan always paid in gold and silver, to the Shawnee Indian post trader, his yearly store account, immediately after said payment of annuities.

"(13) That prior to the year 1868 the tribe of Shawnee Indians had no written law of their own, regulating or governing the descent, distribution, and inheritance of lands and tenements from deceased Shawnee Indians, who died possessed of their head-rights, allotments under the treaty of May 10, 1854.

"(14) That from 1864 up to the year 1868 the tribe of Shawnee Indians operated under the laws of Kansas relative to and governing the descent, distribution, and inheriting of the lands of individual Shawnees, deceased, by the council and chiefs adopting for the tribe the said laws of Kansas.

"(15) That on April 2, 1866, George Buchanan and his wife (née Gibbs) conveyed, by deed duly acknowledged, for the sum of $640, (as appears in the deed to Joachim Rathjen,) parcel of the lands in controversy, to-wit, south-east quarter of north-east quarter of section 2, and the south-west quarter of the north-west quarter of section 1, (80 acres,) all in township 12, on range 23, in Johnson county, Kan., and which said conveyance was duly recorded on April 2, 1866; and which deed recites that it was made, executed, and delivered by said George Buchanan, as sole heir at law of Polly Manture, deceased, and which deed is not approved by the secretary of the interior.

"(16) That afterwards the said Joachim Rathjen duly conveyed all his estate in and to said eighty acres, for value received, unto John C. McCoy, one of the defendants in this action, and which said deed was duly and forthwith recorded in the proper office.

"(17) I find, as a further fact in the case, that the following instrument was delivered to John C. McCoy on the 3d day of February, 1882, pertaining to the lands in controversy, to-wit: 'Union Indian Agency, Muscogee, Indian Ter., February 3rd, 1882. We, Charles Bluejacket and Charles Tucker, (chiefs of the Shawnee tribe of Indians, late of Kansas, now of the Indian Territory,) parties of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) in hand paid by John C. McCoy, party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do grant, bargain, sell, and convey unto the said John C. McCoy, and to his heirs and assigns, forever, the following described tract, piece, or parcel of land, situate in Johnson county, state of Kansas, to-wit: The west half of the north-west quarter, and the north-east quarter of the north-west quarter, of section (1) one, and the east half of the north-east quarter of section 2, all in township No. (12) twelve, range No. (23) twenty-three east, and being the same land patented to Polly Manture, a deceased member of Shawnee tribe,—to have and to hold the said above-described pieces or parcels of land, together with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, unto the said John C. McCoy, his heirs and assigns, forever, in terms of general warranty. In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals the day and year above written. CHARLES BLUEJACKET. [Seal.] CHARLES TUCKER. [Seal.] Attest: J. GORE, EMILY D. TUFTS. Union Agency, Indian Territory—ss.: I, John D. Tufts, United States Indian agent for the Union Agency, Indian Territory, hereby certify that Charles Bluejacket and Charles Tucker, the grantors named in the within instrument of writing, personally appeared before me, and signed the same in my presence, and acknowledged the execution thereof as their free act and deed, for the purposes therein expressed. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this third day of February, 1882. JOHN D. TUFTS, United States Indian Agent,—which was afterwards submitted to the secretary of the Interior for approval, and by him approved, as appears from the following indorsement thereon: 'Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs. October 24th, 1882. The within deed from Charles Bluejacket and Charles Tucker, Shawnee chiefs, for lands of Polly Manture, to John C. McCoy, is respectfully submitted to the secretary of the Interior for his approval. H. PIERCE, Commissioner. Department of the Interior, October 27, 1882. The within deed is hereby approved. M. H. JOSLYN, Acting Sec'y. Filed for record and recorded at 12 M., November 13, 1882, in Book 43, page 595. R. E. STEVENSON, Register of Deeds. By J. A. STEPHENSON, Deputy.'

"(18) On the 24th day of January, 1887, the said John C. McCoy and wife duly conveyed all said lands and tenements, for the sum of $14,662.50, unto Thomas Bugbee and Henry W. Cresswell, which said conveyance was duly recorded in the proper office on the 28th day of January, 1887, and the said Bugbee and Cresswell have been in actual possession of all said land and tenements by their tenants, ever since March 1, 1887; the said McCoy then taking a mortgage thereon for a large portion of the purchase money; said McCoy being in actual possession of all said lands and tenements from March 1, 1883, until the said March 1, 1887.

"(19) That said John C. McCoy occupied the said 200 acres in controversy, and enjoyed the rents, issues, and profits thereof, from the 1st day of March, 1883, until the 1st day of March, 1887, and that the rental value of said land and tenements for and during said period was and is of the sum of $1,000.

"(20) That said Bugbee and Cresswell occupied, used, and enjoyed the rents, issues, and profits of said 200 acres in controversy from the 1st day of March, 1887, until the present time, and that the rental value thereof during said period was and is the sum of $500.

"(21) In the year 1861, and while James B. Abbott was the United States local agent for the tribe of Shawnee Indians in Kansas, the said tribe of Indians, through its chiefs and councilmen, adopted orally the written laws of the state of Kansas, then in force, relating to the descent, distribution, and inheritance of real and personal property, and thenceforth, until said tribe left the state, the said laws were their guidance; and that prior to said period the said tribe of Indians had no law, written or unwritten, nor any custom or usage of their own, regulating the descent, distribution, and inheritance of real property of which any member of the tribe dies seised."

Upon the findings of fact the court rendered judgment against the plaintiff John J. O'Brien and in favor of all the defendants excepting David Updegraff. O'Brien and Updegraff excepted and bring the case here.

A. Smith Devenney, for plaintiffs in error. F. R. Ogg and Peak, Yeager & Bull, for defendants in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) This was an action in the nature of ejectment. John J. O'Brien claims to be the owner of and entitled to the immediate possession of 200 acres of land in Johnson county. David Updegraff, one of the defendants, in his separate answer claims to be the owner of and entitled to the immediate possession of an undivided one-half of the land. Thomas Bugbee and Henry Cresswell claim both title and possession. Polly Manture, a Shawnee Indian woman, was the common source of title. The land was patented to her by the United States on the 28th day of December, 1859, as her allotment under the provisions of a treaty between the United States and the Shawnee Indians, concluded on the 10th day of May, 1854, and the act of congress approved March 3, 1859. This patent contained the following restriction upon the alienation of the land by Polly Manture and her heirs, to-wit: "Have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Polly Manture and to her heirs, the tracts of land above described, but with the stipulation, prescribed by the secretary of the Interior under the act of congress aforesaid of March 3, 1859, that the said tract shall never be conveyed by the grantee or her heirs without the consent of the secretary of the interior for the time being." In the spring of 1855 Polly Manture was joined in marriage to one George Buchanan, a white man, in Johnson county, in this state. Buchanan and wife took actual possession in 1856 of and improved the lands, and cultivated them until their deaths, respectively. They had one child born unto them, named Sally Buchanan, who married Gotlieb Zeigler. Polly died on the farm in 1860, leaving surviving her a husband and the child, Sally. Buchanan remained on the farm, cultivated it all, except a few acres he used for pasture; what he did not use he leased to others. After the death of his wife, Polly, he married a widow by the name of Gibbs, with whom he continued to live upon the land until August, 1879, at which time he died, leaving a will, which was probated, by which he attempted to bequeath all of the land to Marow Gibbs, son of his last wife by a former husband. George Buchanan had no children by his last wife. The plaintiff John J. O'Brien claims the land through a conveyance from Marow Gibbs and wife, dated February 9, 1883, and recorded February 26, 1883. Gibbs was a white man. Sally Buchanan, the only child of Polly and George Buchanan, was married to Gotlieb Zeigler, a white man, in 1874, and died within three or four months after her marriage, leaving no issue, and without having disposed of her interest in the land. Gotlieb Zeigler conveyed an undivided one-half of the land to James H. McCartney on the 10th day of June, 1875, and David Updegraff claims this undivided one-half through a conveyance from McCartney. On the 2d day of April, 1866, George Buchanan and his then wife conveyed 80 acres of the land in controversy to Joachim Rathjen, who afterwards conveyed the same to the defendant John C. McCoy, Sr. Neither the will of George Buchanan, nor any of the conveyances above mentioned, were approved by the secretary of the interior. On the 3d day of February, 1882, Charles Bluejacket and Charles Tucker, chiefs of the Shawnee tribe of Indians, in consideration of $1,500, by deed of general warranty conveyed all the lands to John C. McCoy, Sr., which deed was on the same day duly acknowledged before John D. Tufts, United States Indian agent, and on the 27th day of October, 1882, was approved by the secretary of the interior, and recorded in the records of the county of Johnson on the 13th day of November, 1882. The defendant John C. McCoy, Sr., on the 3d day of March, 1883, took possession of the land under the two last-mentioned deeds, and continued in the uninterrupted possession thereof until he conveyed the same through his sons on the 1st of March, 1887, in consideration of the sum of $14,662.50, to the defendants Thomas Bugbee and Henry W. Cresswell, and delivered possession thereof to them, and Bugbee and Cresswell have continued in the possession of the land until the present time. The trial court decided against O'Brien and Updegraff, and in favor of Bugbee and Cresswell. The former excepted, and complain of the judgment of the court.

The 200 acres in controversy are known as "Shawnee Indian Lands," and are included in the 200,000 acres or more ceded by the United States government to the tribe of Shawnee Indians by treaty of May 10, 1854, between the government and the Indians. See 10 U. S. St. at Large, p. 1053. One of the articles of the treaty provides for the issuing of patents to the several members of the tribes and "heads of families," as follows: "Congress may hereafter provide for the issuing to such Shawnees as may make separate selections, patents for the same, with such guards and restrictions as may seem advisable for their protection therein." By an act approved March 3, 1859, congress authorized the secretary of the interior to issue patents to certain Indians, including the Shawnees, "under such conditions and limitations, and under such guards and restrictions, as may be prescribed by the secretary."

The principal question in this case is, was descent cast upon George Buchanan, the husband, and upon Sally, the child, when Polly Buchanan, née Manture, died in 1860, in possession of the land? The trial court made the following special findings of fact: "In the year 1861, and while James B. Abbott was United States local agent for the tribe of Shawnee Indians in Kansas, the said tribe of Indians, through its chiefs and councilmen, adopted, orally, the written laws of the state of Kansas then in force, relating to descent, distribution, and inheritance of real and personal property, and thenceforth, until said tribe left the state, the said laws were their guidance; and that prior to said period the said tribe of Indians had no law, written or unwritten, nor any custom or usage of their own regulating the descent, distribution, and inheritance of real property of which any member of the tribe died seised." "That from 1864 up to the year 1868 the tribe of Shawnee Indians operated under the laws of Kansas relative to and governing the descent, distribution, and inheriting of the lands of individual Shawnees, deceased, by the council and chiefs adopting for the tribe the said laws of Kansas." James B. Abbott, United States local agent for the tribe of the Shawnees from June, 1861, to 1868, testified upon the trial that some time in the year 1868 he understood that the Shawnee tribe passed a resolution about descents, distributions, and inheritance of Shawnee lands differing from the laws of the state of Kansas. In view of the evidence, and the findings of the trial court, it cannot be said that at the time Polly Buchanan, née Manture, died, the laws of Kansas concerning descent or distribution of the lands of the Shawnee tribe had any operation; nor can any presumption be indulged in that the customs or laws of the Shawnees in this matter followed the Kansas law, or were similar to it. The evidence and the findings are against any such presumption. In Brown v. Steele, 23 Kan. 672, it was said: "That it appearing that the tribal organization (of the Shawnee Indians) was still recognized by the political department of the United States government, under the decision of the supreme court of the United States in the Case of Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, the descent is cast, not under the Kansas law, but in accordance with the Shawnee law and decision." Sally Zeigler, née Buchanan, died in 1874, and there is no evidence or finding showing, or tending to show, that the laws of Kansas concerning descent or distribution had any operation among the Shawnee tribe at that time. As O'Brien, in order to have any title or possession to the land in dispute, must have established heirship or title to the land in George Buchanan, he is not entitled to recover the land, or any part thereof, if he failed to make satisfactory proof thereof. The same may be said concerning the alleged title of David Updegraff, who claimed through a conveyance from Gottlieb Zeigler, who married Sally Buchanan, even if we assume that Sally Zeigler, née Buchanan, inherited anything from her mother, Polly Buchanan, née Manture. In the Case of Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, Mr. Justice Davis, for the court, said "This people [the Shawnees] have their own customs and laws by which they are governed. Because some of these customs have been abandoned, owing to the proximity of their white neighbors, may be an evidence of the superior influence of our race, it does not tend to prove that their tribal organization is not preserved. There is no evidence in the record to show that the Indians with separate estates have not the same rights in the tribe as those whose estates are held in common. Their machinery of government, though simple, is adapted to their intelligence and wants, and effective, with faithful agents to watch over them. * * * It may be that they cannot exist much longer as a distinct people in the presence of the civilization of Kansas, 'but, until they are clothed with the rights and bound to all the duties of citizens,' they enjoy the privilege of total immunity from state taxation. * * * While the general government has a superintending care over their interests, and continues to treat with them as a nation, the state of Kansas is estopped from denying their title to it. * * * As long as the United States recognizes their national character, they are under the protection of treaties and the laws of congress, and their property is withdrawn from the operation of state laws."

At the time that this action was brought, Bugbee and Cresswell were in the actual possession of the land. John C. McCoy, Sr., under whom they claim title, took actual possession on the 3d day of March, 1883. Therefore the defendants, through themselves and their grantors, had been in possession of the land when this action was brought for more than four years. It is elementary that a party seeking to recover possession of real property must do so upon the strength of his own title, not upon the weakness of the title of his adversary. Therefore, as there is no evidence in the record showing, or tending to show, that George Buchanan or Sally Buchanan inherited any interest in the land from Polly Buchanan, née Manture, the judgment of the trial court refusing possession to O'Brien and Updegraff, who claim through these parties, must be sustained. O'Brien and Updegraff claim that George Buchanan and Sally Buchanan were the heirs at law of Polly Buchanan. On the other hand, Bugbee and Cresswell claim that, by the law and decision of the Shawnees, the title escheated to the tribe, and therefore that the chiefs of the tribe had full authority to execute, with the approval of the secretary of the interior, the deed of February 8, 1882, to John C. McCoy, Sr. The burden of proof in this matter was upon O'Brien and Updegraff. They ought to have shown that in 1860, at the death of Polly Buchanan, the descent was cast upon George Buchanan or Sally Buchanan, or both, under the law and decision of the Shawnee tribe. This was not done. The law or decision of a country, a state, or an Indian tribe may make any person an heir. An heir at law is simply one who succeeds to the estate of a deceased person under the statute of a country, a state, or the decision of an Indian tribe. McKinney v. Stewart, 5 Kan. 384; Delashmutt v. Parrent, 40 Kan. 641, 20 Pac. Rep. 504; Caldwell v. Miller, 44 Kan. 12, 23 Pac. Rep. 946; Brown v. Steele, 23 Kan. 672.

The probabilities are, from some of the evidence offered, that under the law and decision of the Shawnee tribe of Indians in force in 1860, when Polly Buchanan died, and in force in 1874, when Sally Zeigler died, that, as George Buchanan and Gottlieb Zeigler were white men, they could not inherit from either Polly Buchanan or Sally Zeigler, and that after the death of Polly Buchanan and Sally Zeigler no one, excepting the Shawnee tribe or their chiefs, or the government, could confer legal title to the land upon any one. But this was not established, unless we indulge in presumptions. In the absence of any evidence tending to show the law or decision of the Shawnee tribe of Indians relating to descent or distribution of lands in 1860, we cannot say what person, if any, succeeded to the estate of Polly Buchanan, deceased. It is shown by the record that Bugbee and Cresswell hold under a deed from the chiefs of the Shawnee tribe, dated February 8, 1882. This deed was approved by the secretary of the interior on October 27, 1882. If any presumptions are to be indulged in, as the general government has the superintending care over the interests of the Shawnee Indians, and as their property is withdrawn from the operation of the state laws, we might presume that the deed of February 8, 1882, approved by the secretary of the interior, was made in accordance with the Shawnee law, and conferred title. We need not go that far in this case. Clearly, John C. McCoy, Sr., and his grantees were not and are not trespassers upon the land. John C. McCoy, Sr., took possession of the land on the 3d day of March, 1883, after he had obtained his deed from the chiefs of the Shawnee tribe, and after it had been approved by the secretary of the interior, and properly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in Johnson county; therefore his possession was with color and claim of title. His grantees, including Bugbee and Cresswell, held and now hold possession, with color and claim of title. Even if the chiefs of the Shawnee tribe, with the approval of the secretary of the interior, could not confer title, we think it is clearly evident, from the control that the government exercises over the Shawnees and their lands, that they had authority, with the consent of the secretary of the interior, to give John C. McCoy, Sr., possession of the land, in the absence of proof showing that any other person had any legal title, or the right of possession. The case of Douglas v. Ruffin, 38 Kan. 530, 16 Pac. Rep. 783, in this view, does not militate against the judgment of the court below. The case of Hale v. Wilder, 8 Kan. 545, has no application, because this court held in that case that the secretary of the interior was not authorized to approve a deed to the land therein referred to. Neither O'Brien or Updegraff are, or have been, in the possession of the land, and both have failed to establish better title than Bugbee and Cresswell, who are in actual possession. Neither can O'Brien or Updegraff claim any title under the statute of limitations on account of the possession of their grantors, or the parties through whom they claim, because the title or possession of Polly Manture was so restricted and limited that adverse possession could not give title without the consent of the secretary of the interior. Again, the deed from George Buchanan to Joachim Rathjen, who quitclaimed to John C. McCoy, Sr., on the 12th of August, 1881, counts for nothing. It was never approved by the secretary of the interior, and was void; therefore neither McCoy nor his grantees are estopped by any recitations therein contained. 7 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 5, note 2; Merriam v. Railroad Co., 117 Mass. 241; 3 Washb. Real Prop. p. 106. Further, if George Buchanan had inherited, under the Kansas laws, one-half of the land, free from the restrictions of the patent, 80 acres of it would have gone to John C. McCoy, Sr., under his deed of April 2, 1866, although not approved by the secretary of the interior, as he did not die until August, 1879. O'Brien only claims from Marow Gibbs under the will of George Buchanan. Clearly, Buchanan's deed of April 2, 1866, is as valid to 80 acres as his will of 1879 to any other part. So, upon any legal view of the case, O'Brien has no claim or title to 80 acres of the land in dispute. But the actual possession of all the land being in Bugbee and Cresswell under color and claim of title, and their right of possession not having been overthrown by any facts disclosed in the record, the judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

DRINKWATER et al. v. SAUBLE.

APPEAL — REVIEW OF VERDICT — ABATEMENT OF NUISANCE — HEARING — JOINDER OF CAUSES.

1. It is the duty of the supreme court, if it can, to give such a construction to the findings of the trial court and the jury, and to the general verdict of the jury, as will harmonize them, and make them support the judgment.

2. An action to abate a mill-dam for the reason that it causes injury to the property of an upper proprietor is an action to abate a nuisance, and is an equitable remedy, and the trial may be before the court, or before a jury, or before a referee, or a part before one and a part before another, as the court, in its discretion, may determine.

3. A plaintiff in an action upon a cause of action for damages arising from injuries to his land occasioned by the overflowing of the same with water caused by the wrongful construction and use of a mill-dam, may unite with such cause of action a cause of action to abate the mill-dam, or to perpetually enjoin its use, so far as its use is wrongful and a nuisance.

4. The evidence, the findings of the court and jury, the general verdict of the jury, and the judgment of the court considered, and held, that no material error as against the rights of the plaintiffs in error was committed.

Error from district court, Chase county; FRANK DOSTER, Judge.

Sanders & Rees and Rightmire & Radcliffe, for plaintiffs in error. Madden Bros. and John Martin, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action commenced in the district court of Chase county on February 3, 1888, by David Sauble against O. H. Drinkwater and P. P. Schriver, to recover damages for alleged injuries to the plaintiff's land, alleged to have been caused by the erection by the defendants in October, 1886, of a mill-dam across the Cottonwood river to the height of 10 feet, and causing the water therein to rise upon the plaintiff's land to the height of 5 feet above its ordinary and natural height, and thereby causing the alleged injuries; and the plaintiff also asked for the abatement of the dam to the extent of 5 feet from the top. The defendants answered, alleging that the dam complained of was the mere replacement of a former dam which had been in existence and maintained by them for more than 15 years prior to the erection of the new dam under a parol agreement between themselves and the plaintiff's grantors; and that the new dam was not higher than the old one, and did not cause the water to flow back further or to rise higher on the plaintiff's land than the old one did. The plaintiff replied by filing a general denial. A trial was had before the court and a jury, and the jury rendered the following verdict, and in answer to interrogatories made the following special findings, to-wit: Verdict: "We, the jury impaneled and sworn in the above-entitled case, do upon our oath find for plaintiff, and assess his damages at $60." Special findings: "(1) What was the height of the old dam when first constructed, and up to January, 1870? Answer. Eight feet. (2) What was the height of the new dam when this suit was brought? A. Eight feet eight and one-half inches. (3) Was not the new dam erected 68 feet lower down on the riffle from where the old dam was located? A. Yes. (4) What was the amount of fall between the old and the new dam? A. Six inches. (5) Did the water, while the old dam was in use, for the new mill pass through the old flume of the old mill where the wheel stood when in use for the old mill, and go directly into the flume of the new mill? A. Yes. (6) What is the difference in inches in the height of the floor of the flume between where the wheel stood in the old mill and where it stands now? A. About six inches. (7) What was the distance from or difference between the head-water to tail-water on the old dam from 1868 to 1881, at fall of dam? A. About eight inches. (8) What is now the distance from or difference between the head-water and tail-water at the new dam when at fall of dam? A. Seven feet eight and a half inches, according to evidence. (9) With an ordinary stage of water in the river, does the new dam cause dead water further up the river than the old dam did when in good order? If so, how much further up the stream? A. Yes, to first clause. No definite testimony to the last clause." The court also made the following finding, to-wit: "It was further considered, ordered, and adjudged by the court that said new mill-dam constructed by said defendants was built in continuation of the old dam, and that the new dam is and was eight inches higher than the old dam, and that said new dam be taken down and abated by said defendants to the height of eight inches from the top of said dam." Upon this verdict and these findings the court below rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants for $60 damages, and for the abatement of the dam to the extent of eight inches from the top; and the defendants, as plaintiffs in error, bring the case to this court for review.

Two principal questions are involved in this case: First. Did the defendants, by building and maintaining the old dam as they did, acquire a right to build and maintain a new dam of the same capacity as the old one, or, in other words, one that would back the water or cause it to rise upon the plaintiff's land as high as the old one did? Second. If the defendants did acquire any such right, then did they depart from the same by constructing the new dam in such a manner as to cause the water to flow back further or to rise higher upon the plaintiff's land than was done by the old dam? Without deciding the first question, we shall pass to the second one, to-wit: If the defendants had a right to erect and maintain a new dam, did they construct the same in accordance with such right? No claim of error is made with regard to anything that occurred in the court below prior to the rendering of the verdict and the making of the special findings by the jury; and no objection was urged as against such verdict and findings at the time when the same were rendered and made, nor until a motion for a new trial was filed. The objections now urged against them are as follows: It is claimed that they are not supported by sufficient evidence; that the special findings are inconsistent with each other and inconsistent with the general verdict; that they do not mean what the court below and the jury evidently believed they meant; and that they are not sufficient to uphold the judgment actually rendered in the case. Objections are also urged against the finding made by the court itself. It is claimed that such finding is not supported by the evidence, and is contrary to law, and that the court had no power to make it. It is true the findings of the jury are not as intelligible as they might be, and as to the seventh there must be some mistake; but still, with regard to all the material findings made by the jury, we think they are capable of being harmonized with each other and with the general verdict, and substantially with the finding made by the court itself; and, taking all the findings and the general verdict together, we think they support the judgment; and it is our duty to give to them such a construction, if we can, as will harmonize them, and make them support the judgment. Bevena v. Smith, 42 Kan. 250, 251, 21 Pac. Rep. 1064, and cases there cited; Railway Co. v. Fray, 43 Kan. 750, 759, 23 Pac. Rep. 1039, and cases there cited; Nichols v. Weaver, 7 Kan. 373; Simpson v. Greeley, 8 Kan. 586; Railway Co. v. Ritz, 33 Kan. 404, 6 Pac. Rep. 533. The general verdict is a finding in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants upon all the issues in the case. It is therefore virtually a finding that the new dam is higher than the old one was; that it causes the water to flow back further and to rise higher upon the plaintiff's land than the old one did; and that the plaintiff was injured and damaged by reason thereof and by the wrongs of the defendants. It was also found specially by the jury that the new dam is 8 feet 8½ inches high, and that the old dam was only 8 feet high; that the new dam causes the water to flow back further up the river than the old dam did; and that the plaintiff was thereby damaged to the amount of $60. Evidently the jury intended to find that the new dam, in altitude, measuring from the same level, was 8½ inches higher than the old dam was; and the court itself found that the new dam was 8 inches higher than the old dam was, and ordered that the new dam should be abated to that extent. An action to abate a mill-dam for the reason that it causes injury to the property of an upper proprietor is an action to abate a nuisance, and an action to abate a nuisance, as well as an action to enjoin a nuisance, is an equitable remedy. Gould, Waters, § 555; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1359. And in all actions of an equitable character the trial may be before the court, or before a jury, or before a referee, or a part before one and a part before another, as the court, in its discretion, shall determine. Civil Code, §§ 266, 267; Hunt v. Spencer, 20 Kan. 126; Hixon v. George, 18 Kan. 253, 256, 257; Carlin v. Donegan, 15 Kan. 495; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344, 346, 347, 4 Pac. Rep. 262, and cases there cited. The court below undoubtedly had the right to make the finding which it did; and upon all the findings, as made by the court and jury, we cannot say that the judgment rendered by the court is erroneous; nor can we say that such findings are not supported by sufficient evidence. There seems also to be a claim that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, but evidently there is not. A plaintiff in an action upon a cause of action for damages arising from injuries to his land occasioned by the overflowing of the same with water caused by the wrongful construction and use of a mill-dam may unite with such cause of action a cause of action to abate the mill-dam, or to perpetually enjoin its use, so far as its use is wrongful and a nuisance. Akin v. Davis, 11 Kan. 530. Some slight errors have intervened in this case, as before intimated, but no substantial error has been committed as against the rights of the plaintiffs in error. There was evidence introduced that tended to show that the new dam causes the water to rise upon the plaintiff's land much more than eight inches higher than the old dam caused it to rise. The judgment of the court below will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

PARKER v CITY OF ATCHISON.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — CHANGE OF STREET GRADE — DAMAGES.

Where a city of the first class changes the grade of one of its streets, an abutting lot-owner will be entitled, under the statutes, to any damage which he may suffer thereby; and in a suit therefor the jury may take into consideration the condition of the plaintiff's property, the street and the grade, and also the market value of the property before and after the grading; and where his property is injured in value, the measure of his damages will be the difference in the market value brought about by reason of the change of the grade; but where the property is not injured in value by reason of the change of the grade he will not be entitled to recover anything.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Atchison county; W. D. GILBERT, Judge.

W. W. & W. F. Guthrie, for plaintiff in error. W. R. Smith and H. C. Solomon, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. This proceeding in error in this court is founded upon an appeal by James W. Parker to the district court from the action of the appraisers denying to him damages claimed by him to have been caused by a change of the grade of a portion of Sixth street in front of his property, in the city of Atchison. Parker was the plaintiff in the district court, and is the plaintiff in error in this court; while the city of Atchison was the defendant in the district court, and is the defendant in error in this court. The plaintiff's supposed right to damages is founded solely upon the provisions of section 18, c. 37, of the Laws of 1881, (Gen. St. 1889, par. 562,) which section reads as follows: "Sec. 18. The mayor and council shall have the power to establish by ordinance the grade of any street, alley, lane, or avenue within the city; and when the grade of any street, alley, lane, or avenue shall have been so established, or shall have been heretofore established, and the grade thereof accepted by the council, such grade shall not be changed until declared necessary by resolution by a three-fourths vote of all the council elected, and not then until the damage to property owners, which may be caused by such change of grade, shall have been assessed by three disinterested appraisers, who shall be appointed by the mayor, with the consent of the council for that purpose, who shall make such appraisal, and file their report under oath with the city clerk, within twenty days after receiving notice of their appointment from the city clerk; and the city clerk shall give notice to interested property owners by publication in the official paper of the city for at least ten days prior to the assessment of damages, which notice shall specify the names of the appraisers, the time when they will meet to make such appraisal, and the name of the street between the points wherein such change of grade is to be made, and the amount of damages so assessed shall be deposited with the city treasurer, subject to the order of said property owner or owners, or their agent or agents, before any such change of grade shall be made; and any person feeling himself aggrieved by such amount of damages may appeal therefrom within ten days after confirmation of said report by the council, by serving a written notice upon the mayor, or, in his absence, the acting mayor, or, in his absence, the city clerk, of such intention to appeal to the district court, and by executing a bond to the city, conditioned to faithfully prosecute such appeal to a final determination thereof, and to pay all costs so incurred in case such appellant does not recover a judgment greater than the damages awarded by said appraisers. The taking of such appeal shall not operate in any manner to prevent the change of said grade; and the cost and expense of changing the grade of said street and grading the same shall be paid by the city." The case was tried before the court and a jury, and a verdict and judgment were rendered in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff brings the case to this court.

The facts of the case are substantially as follows: The plaintiff owned and owns lots numbered 11, 12, 13, and 14, in block numbered 39, in that part of the city of Atchison known as "Old Atchison." The lots lie west of Sixth street, north of Main street, and south of an alley which runs east and west through the middle of the block. The ground occupied by the lots is low when compared with the surrounding land, the stream called "White Clay Creek" running through such lots, and a portion of the lots occupying its bed. The grade of Sixth street was changed in 1887, and was increased in height from nothing at the alley at the north-east corner of the plaintiff's property to 12 feet 9 inches at the north line of Main street and at the south-east corner of the plaintiff's property, the object of this change of grade being for the purpose of constructing a viaduct over Main street and over a large number of railroad tracks. The work was commenced in March, 1887, and was completed some time in the summer of 1887; and the viaduct was completed and opened for travel in April, 1888. At the line between the plaintiff's land and Sixth street, a retaining wall of great thickness and of solid masonry was built. A portion of the wall, about 13 or 20 inches in thickness, was built with the consent of the plaintiff upon the plaintiff's land, and it was built in such a manner that it could be used by the plaintiff in making improvements upon his land. Evidence was introduced on the trial to show how the plaintiff's land lay, how the grade and the viaduct were constructed, of what materials they were constructed, the value of the plaintiff's property immediately before the grading was done, and also the value of his property afterwards; and these things were taken into consideration by the jury. The case, however, was tried upon the theory as stated by the court to the jury in the following instruction, which reads as follows: "(4) In determining the amount of damages plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action, if any, you will ascertain from the evidence the market value of lots 11, 12, 13, and 14, described in plaintiff's petition, immediately prior to said change of grade, and their market value immediately after said change of grade, and if you find that their market value was less after said change of grade than before, then the difference in such values would be the amount plaintiff would be entitled to recover of the defendant in this action, and you should give him a verdict for that amount; but if you should find that the market value of said lots was as great or greater after said change of grade as before, the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover, and you should return a verdict for defendant." We would think from the evidence that the plaintiff's property was in fact of much greater value after the change of the grade and by reason thereof than it was before. But it is claimed by the plaintiff that nothing should be taken into consideration in determining the amount of his recovery except that which would tend to cause injury or inconvenience; that nothing should be taken into consideration which would tend to make the property more valuable or more convenient for use; that all evils, inconveniences, disadvantages, and losses caused by the change of the grade should be carefully brought together, massed and aggregated, and he allowed damages for the whole of the same; while all the benefits, conveniences, advantages, and gains should be carefully excluded from all consideration. We think the plaintiff is wrong. In making the change of the grade the city took nothing from the plaintiff. The fee in the street was and is in the county, in trust for the use and benefit of the public in general; and the exclusive control of the street, with the right to the exclusive control thereof, was and is in the city. It is true that a portion of the retaining wall 18 or 20 inches in thickness was built upon the plaintiff's property upon the east side of lot numbered 14; but it was so built with the consent of the plaintiff, and it now belongs to the plaintiff, and is a benefit to his lots, instead of being an injury thereto. Except for the statute above quoted, the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover anything under any circumstances, even if the change of the grade had injured him; and with the statute, we do not think that he can recover where the change of the grade has really and actually benefited him. As to another point in the case, see the case of City of Topeka v. Martineau, 42 Kan. 387, 22 Pac. Rep. 419. We think the case was tried in the court below upon the right theory, and that no material error was committed in the case, and therefore the judgment of the court below will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

HOWELL et al. v. HOUGH et al.

NOVATION—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER—POWERS.

1. A person for whose benefit a promise to another, upon a sufficient consideration, is made, may bring an action in his own name on the contract against the promisor, but he cannot be compelled to act upon or accept such contract.

2. The appointment of a receiver by the district court secures to that court the power to control all controversies affecting the property which the receiver has obtained possession of.

3. Where H., J. & Co. contracted with B., H. & Co. to turn over sufficient accounts or notes received from them to satisfy a claim of $1,000 due from B., H. & Co. to a bank, and the bank refuses to receive the accounts or notes in payment of its claim against B., H. & Co., H., J. & Co. are excused from turning over the accounts or notes by the refusal of the bank to act upon or accept the contract until the bank or its assignees make a demand therefor; and where such demand is made by the assignees of the bank, or parties holding under the bank after a receiver has been appointed to take possession of and collect the accounts or notes turned over by B., H. & Co., H., J. & Co. are relieved from complying with such demand, because the accounts or notes are at the time of the demand in custodia legis. After the receiver is appointed, the assignees, or the parties interested, if they have any right or claim to the accounts or notes, must make their application for their part thereof to the district court which appointed the receiver and has the control of such accounts and notes.

Error from district court, Atchison county; W. D. GILBERT, Judge.

On the 16th day of January, 1885, the firm of Buzan, Hough & Co., of Wetmore, Nemaha county, was indebted to Howell, Jewett & Co., of Atchison, to the amount of $5,300, and interest, for five accepted drafts dated in January 1885. At this time the firm of Buzan, Hough & Co. was running a lumber business at Wetmore, and had succeeded the firm of Buzan, Hazeltine & Co., under an arrangement by which the new firm guaranteed to pay and assumed the debts and liabilities of the old. At the time named a representative of the firm of Howell, Jewett & Co. went from Atchison to Wetmore, and took from Buzan, Hough & Co., and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co., a bill of sale of the lumber in their yards, and an assignment of their accounts and notes, under an arrangement that the same were to be applied in payment of the indebtedness due from Buzan, Hough & Co. and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. to Howell, Jewett & Co., to the amount as above stated. At the same time the following written assignment was executed and delivered: "Wetmore, Kansas, Jan. 16th, '85. We this day assign and set over to Howell, Jewett & Co. all accounts and notes due and to be due, as shown in Exhibit A; also all other accounts and other evidence of debts due to us. The above assignment and transfer is made to secure said Howell, Jewett & Co. for five accepted drafts dated January, 1885, and aggregating $5,300, and interest. Howell, Jewett & Co. hereby agree to turn over sufficient accounts or notes to satisfy the claim of the Nemaha County Bank for ($1,000.00) one thousand dollars, and H. H. Lynn for ($2,000.00) two thousand dollars and interest, and to pay to the creditors of Buzan, Hough & Co. and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. the balance collected on the accounts and notes after the claim of Howell, Jewett & Co. is satisfied. [Signed] BUZAN, HOUGH & CO. BUZAN, HAZELTINE & CO. Witness: H. J. JEWETT." At the date of this agreement the firm of Buzan, Hough & Co. was indebted to the Bank of Nemaha County for $1,021.40, and the indebtedness was evidenced by a promissory note in words and figures following, to-wit: "$1,021.40. December 11th, 1884. Sixty days after December 19th, after date, we promise to pay to the order of J. H. Johnson, cashier, at the Bank of Nemaha County, ten hundred twenty-one and 45-100 ($1,021.45) dollars, value received. Interest at twelve per cent. per annum until paid. BUZAN, HOUGH & CO. W. P. BUZAN, H. A. HOUGH, T. J. WOLFLEY, and A. M. HOUGH. No. 4059. Due Feb. 17-20." Howell, Jewett & Co. received $9,578.19 in notes and accounts. They realized from the proceeds of these, before the garnishment of them, from creditors, $1,400, and before the commencement of this action, $6,000. On the 10th day of January, 1888, A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley commenced their action against Howell, Jewett & Co. to recover $1,048.63, claiming that they had contracted on January 16, 1885, for a valuable consideration, to satisfy the note of Buzan, Hough & Co. to the bank of Nemaha county, which was payable February 17, 1885; that A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley were sureties upon that note, and that they were entitled to recover from Howell, Jewett & Co. the amount thereof. Trial had before the court with a jury. The jury returned a verdict for Hough and Wolfley against Howell, Jewett & Co., for $1,021.40, and also returned the following answers to questions submitted: "Particular questions of fact on the part of plaintiffs: (1) What amount in cash had the defendants realized from the notes and accounts transferred to them under the said contract of January 16, 1885, up to the time that garnishment proceedings were commenced against the defendants? Answer, $1,400. (2) How much in cash had the defendants received as the proceeds of such notes and accounts prior to the commencement of this action? A. $6,000. (3) Were the plaintiffs accommodation sureties for the makers of said Nemaha County Bank note? A. Yes. (4) Were the plaintiffs compelled by legal proceedings at the suit of the said bank to pay off and satisfy said note to said bank? A. Yes. (5) Did the plaintiffs in fact pay off and satisfy such note to the said bank prior to the commencement of this action? A. Yes. (6) What amount, in addition to the principal debt of said note, were defendants compelled by legal proceedings to pay by way of costs for the satisfaction of such note? A. $50. (7) Were said Buzan, Hough & Co. and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. insolvent after the transfer of such notes and accounts to defendants of date January 16, 1885? A. Supposed to be. (8) Up to the commencement of this action, had the defendants obtained to their own use the benefits of all the notes and accounts transferred to them of the said date, January 16, 1885, so far as then realized upon? A. Yes. (9) Have the notes and accounts transferred to defendants of date January 16, 1885, been held and controlled by the defendants for their use and benefit, in so far as same have not been realized upon? A. Yes. Particular questions submitted by the defendants: (1) Was the plaintiff T. J. Wolfley a member of the firm of Buzan, Hough & Co.? A. No. (2) Did the cashier of the Nemaha County Bank refuse to receive from Howell, Jewett & Co. notes and accounts to be applied in satisfaction of the claim of the bank? A. Yes. (2) Did the cashier of the Nemaha County Bank refuse to receive from Howell, Jewett & Co. notes and accounts to be applied in satisfaction of the claim of the bank? A. Yes. (3) About the time the notes became due, did the cashier of the Nemaha County Bank state to John Stowell, the defendants' agent, that the bank would not receive notes and accounts from the defendants, for the reason that he considered the securities on them good? A. Yes. (4) Were Howell, Jewett & Co. garnished in three cases soon after they came into the possession of the notes and accounts? A. Yes; and not until they had collected $1,400." The defendants filed a motion for judgment upon the findings, which was overruled, and they also filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled. Judgment was entered for the plaintiffs, and against the defendants, for the amount of the verdict. The defendants excepted, and bring the case here.

W. W. & W. F. Guthrie, for defendants in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley brought their action against Howell, Jewett & Co. upon a written agreement dated January 16, 1885, entered into between Howell, Jewett & Co., Buzan, Hough & Co., and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. In this written agreement, Howell, Jewett & Co., agreed to turn over sufficient accounts or notes received by them from Buzan, Hough & Co. to satisfy $1,000 and interest on a note held by the Nemaha County Bank, dated December 11, 1884, payable 60 days after December 19, 1884, and executed by Buzan, Hough & Co., and also by A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley. A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley claimed in their petition that they were sureties upon the note; that they had been sued thereon; and that judgment had been rendered against them, which they satisfied. They further alleged that they were entitled to enforce the written agreement of January 16, 1885, against Howell, Jewett & Co., because the firm had realized from the accounts and notes large amounts of money; and had refused, although a demand had been made upon them, to turn over sufficient accounts and notes to satisfy $1,000 and interest on the note given to the Nemaha County Bank. Hough and Wolfley recovered from Howell, Jewett & Co. upon the trial $1,021.40 and costs. The defendants below excepted, and bring the case here.

It appears from the findings of the jury that after the execution of the contract of January 16, 1885, the cashier of the Nemaha County Bank said to an agent of Howell, Jewett & Co. that the bank would not receive accounts or notes from them to satisfy the note of December 11, 1884, or any part thereof, because he considered the sureties upon the note good; that the cashier refused to receive from Howell, Jewett & Co. any accounts or notes to satisfy the claim of the bank, and that Howell, Jewett & Co. were garnished in three cases by the creditors of Buzan, Hough & Co., or Buzan, Hazeltine & Co., soon after they came into the possession of the accounts or notes mentioned in the contract of January 16, 1885, but, before being garnished, they collected on the accounts or notes $1,400. It also appears from the record that on the 29th day of April, 1885, in an action then pending in the district court of Nemaha county, wherein the Wetmore State Bank was the plaintiff, and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. and other parties were defendants, that a receiver was appointed to take charge of the accounts and notes turned over to Howell, Jewett & Co. by Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. and Buzan, Hough & Co. On the same day, in an action then pending in the district court of Nemaha county, wherein Jacob Haish was the plaintiff, and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. were the defendants, the same person who was appointed receiver in the action of the Wetmore State Bank against Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. was also appointed the receiver in the Haish action to take charge of and collect the same accounts and notes referred to in the petition in this case. The accounts and notes were directed to be collected by the receiver, and from the proceeds thereof it was ordered that there should first be paid the claim of Howell, Jewett & Co. against Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. and Buzan, Hough & Co.; second, the claim of the Wetmore State Bank against Buzan, Hazeltine & Co., and the claim of Jacob Haish against Buzan, Hazeltine & Co., according to their respective priorities. It also appears from the record that the receiver, who was appointed in both actions to take charge of the accounts and notes, has not yet been discharged. The offer of Howell, Jewett & Co., to the Nemaha County Bank to turn over accounts or notes to the bank to satisfy $1,000 and interest on the note of December 11, 1884, was made about the time the note became payable. The judgment upon the note of December 11, 1884, was rendered on the 29th day of April, 1885, but Hough and Wolfley did not pay or satisfy any part thereof until after that time. They obtained a transfer or assignment of this judgment on October 3, 1887. The demand made by A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley upon Howell, Jewett & Co., to turn over sufficient accounts or notes to satisfy the claim of the Nemaha County Bank for $1,000 and interest, which they had satisfied, was not made until after the transfer or assignment of the judgment to them. This, of course, was long after the receiver had been appointed and had taken possession of the accounts and notes.

Upon the trial, Howell, Jewett & Co. asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: "(1) The jury are instructed that as a receiver had been appointed on April 29, 1885, in the district court of Nemaha county, to take charge of the accounts and notes formerly belonging to Buzan, Hough & Co., that the possession of the receiver of the accounts and notes took the same out of the control of Howell, Jewett & Co., and placed them in the hands of the court, and, after the receiver took possession of the accounts and notes, the defendants were excused from any failure to deliver or tender any part of the same to the Bank of Nemaha County. (2) The jury are instructed that it can make no difference in which case the receiver was appointed; his possession of the accounts and notes could not be disturbed by Howell, Jewett & Co., or any other person, so long as he was acting as such receiver. (3) The jury are instructed that it is admitted in this case that John Stowell was appointed receiver in the district court of Nemaha county on the 29th of April, 1885, in the case of Jacob Haish v. Buzan, Hough & Co.; that he took charge of the accounts and notes formerly belonging to Buzan, Hough & Co.; and that he has never been discharged, and is now the duly acting and qualified receiver in said case." The court refused to give these instructions, but instructed the jury that: "If you believe from the evidence that the note described in plaintiffs' petition was executed as therein stated, and that the Nemaha County Bank brought suit against the plaintiffs as sureties on the note, and that plaintiffs, by reason of being sureties on the note, were required to pay the same; and you further believe from the evidence that Buzan, Hough & Co. and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. assigned and set over to Howell, Jewett & Co., on the 16th day of January, 1885, all accounts and notes due and to be due, and also other accounts and other evidences of debt due to them, and that by such assignment Howell, Jewett & Co. agreed to turn over sufficient accounts or notes to satisfy the claim of the Nemaha County Bank for $1,000, as claimed in plaintiffs' petition; and you further believe from the evidence that Howell, Jewett & Co. have in no manner paid plaintiffs their claim sued on, or that Howell, Jewett & Co. have not turned over to the Nemaha County Bank, or to J. H. Johnson, as cashier of the bank, sufficient accounts or notes to satisfy the claim of the Nemaha County Bank for $1,000, or that the defendants have never tendered to the bank or to the cashier sufficient accounts or notes to satisfy the claim,—you will return a verdict for the plaintiffs, unless you further believe from the evidence that John Stowell was appointed as receiver by the district court of Nemaha county, and as such receiver took charge of the accounts and notes assigned to Howell, Jewett & Co. by Buzan, Hough & Co. and Buzan, Hazeltine & Co., before the defendants had realized anything from the accounts and notes. In such case you will return a verdict for defendants."

The court below seems to have tried this case upon the theory that Howell, Jewett & Co. were obligated by the agreement of January 16, 1885, to pay to the Nemaha County Bank $1,000 and interest in money, and that, as they had collected on the accounts and notes turned over to them more than that amount before the appointment of the receiver, they were liable to Hough and Wolfley. Such is not the proper construction of the contract of January 16, 1885. "It is unquestionably true that in this state a person, for whose benefit a promise to another upon a sufficient consideration is made, may maintain an action on the contract in his own name against the promisor." Burton v. Larkin, 38 Kan. 246, 13 Pac. Rep. 398. Therefore, under the contract of January 16, 1885, the Nemaha County Bank could have made a demand upon Howell, Jewett & Co. for sufficient accounts or notes to satisfy its claim against Buzan, Hough & Co., of $1,000 and interest, but it was not obliged to accept or act upon the contract of January 16, 1885, and it could not be compelled to act upon or accept that contract. When the bank refused to receive any accounts or notes from Howell, Jewett & Co., that firm was not compelled to pay money in place of the accounts or notes, and was excused or relieved from turning over to the bank any accounts or notes until a notice or demand was given to or made upon them. Such notice or demand was not given or made until after the appointment of the receiver in the several actions pending in the district court of Nemaha county. Then it was too late to make a demand upon Howell, Jewett & Co. for the accounts or notes, because, after the receiver was appointed, the accounts and notes were in custodia legis. After the receiver was appointed, A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley ought to have made their claim for the accounts or notes to satisfy the judgment rendered upon the note of December 11, 1884, to the district court of Nemaha county, not to Howell, Jewett & Co. "The appointment of a receiver does not determine any right, or affect the title of either party, in any manner whatever. He is the officer of the court, and truly the hand of the court. His holding is the holding of the court from him from whom the possession was taken. He is appointed on behalf of all parties, and not of the plaintiff or of one defendant only. His appointment is not to oust any party of his right to the possession of the property, but merely to retain it for the benefit of the party who may ultimately appear to be entitled to it." Ellicott v. Warford, 4 Md. 85; High, Rec. pp. 2, 3. In Bank v. Simpson, 22 Kan. 414, it was said that "the appointment of a receiver of the effects and property of the partnership in the action of Simpson against Crippen, by the court below, secured to that court the power to control, at its discretion, all controversies which affected the property placed in his custody. It thereafter had the right to take to itself all such controversies, and compel parties to proceed nowhere else than in its own forum." Railroad Co. v. Smith, 19 Kan. 229. The instructions prayed for by the defendants below concerning the possession of the accounts and notes by the receiver ought to have been given to the jury; and the instruction concerning the receiver which was given, in view of the facts disclosed by the record, was misleading, and therefore erroneous.

It is suggested on the part of the plaintiffs below that, as the appointment of the receiver by the district court of Nemaha county was consented to by Howell, Jewett & Co., and the other parties to the actions, that Howell, Jewett & Co. are not excused or relieved from complying with the demand of Hough and Wolfley. The proceedings in the actions in the district court of Nemaha county of the Wetmore State Bank and Jacob Hulah against Buzan, Hazeltine & Co. and other parties are not void, even if made with the consent of the parties to the actions. Unless those proceedings were without jurisdiction or fraudulent, they are binding upon all parties. It is not shown that these proceedings were without jurisdiction or fraudulent. We must therefore consider them valid.

A great many other questions were discussed upon the oral argument, and are also referred to in the briefs; but as the evidence clearly shows that the Nemaha County Bank refused to act upon or accept the contract of January 16, 1885, and as it is undisputed that the receiver was appointed to take charge of the accounts and notes in controversy on the 29th of April, 1885, before A. M. Hough and T. J. Wolfley had made any demand, or had the right to make any demand, upon Howell, Jewett & Co., for the accounts or notes, it is unnecessary, in view of what has already been said, to pass upon these questions. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed. All the justices concurring.

ADAMS v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. CO.

KILLING STOCK — FARM CROSSINGS — TRESPASSING ANIMALS.

1. A land-owner whose farm is divided by a railroad is entitled to necessary crossings; and where the railroad company fences its track through his farm, and constructs gates in the fences at such crossings for the accommodation of the land-owner or his tenant, the duty rests upon him to keep the gates closed, and, if he neglects to do so, and his animals pass through them upon the track and are killed, without the negligence of those operating the trains, the railroad company is not liable for the loss.

2. In such a case, where the animals of a third person jump into the inclosure, and are wrongfully upon the premises of such land-owner, and then pass through the gate and are killed by a train, without the negligence of those in charge of the same, the owner of such trespassing animals is entitled to no greater rights than the land-owner, and cannot recover from the company.

Error from district court, Shawnee county; JOHN GUTHRIE, Judge.

J. M. Adams brought an action against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company for the value of a mule, which, it is alleged, was killed by the engine and cars of the railroad company at a point on the road which was not inclosed by a good and lawful fence. The case was tried with a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and assessed his damages at $125, and awarded $25 as attorney's fees. The jury also returned the following findings of fact in answer to special questions submitted to them by the defendant: "(1) Did not the animal of said plaintiff which was killed go from plaintiff's premises into Judge Carey's premises and from thence onto the right of way of defendant railroad company; and was it not in the night-time? Answer. Yes. (2) Was not the fence between the plaintiff's land and Judge Carey's land, at the place where the animal in question went upon Judge Carey's land, in a defective condition? A. Yes. (3) How did the animal in question get from the plaintiff's land onto Judge Carey's land? A. By jumping the fence. (4) At the time of the accident, was not the defendant's road or right of way inclosed with a good and lawful fence, and a gate at the crossing to Judge Carey's land, good and sufficient to keep animals, such as mules, off from said right of way, if said gate were closed? A. Yes. (5) How did the animal in question get from plaintiff's premises onto the right of way or track of the railroad company? A. Through the open gate. (6) Was not the gate through which the animal in question is supposed to have gotten upon the right of way of defendant placed in the right-of-way fence separating Judge Carey's land from the railroad, and at a private crossing, and placed there to be used by Judge Carey and his tenants in crossing said right of way to different portions of his farm? A. Yes. (7) Who opened the gate, and left the same remain open, last, prior to the escape of the animal through the same, prior to the accident? A. No evidence. (8) How long prior to said accident had said gate remained open? A. The larger portion of a week. (9) How was the animal killed, or what caused the accident? A. By the locomotive or cars of the defendant. (10) Was the defendant guilty of culpable negligence causing the injury and the death of the animal in question? A. Yes. (11) If you answer the last question in the affirmative, state in what such negligence, if any, consisted. A. In not using more diligence in keeping the gate shut. (12) Was said animal permitted to go upon Judge Carey's premises by leave or license of Judge Carey or his tenants? A. No evidence. (13) If you answer the last question in the affirmative, state when such leave or license was given, and by whom. A. No evidence." Upon a motion of the railroad company, the court rendered judgment in its favor on the special findings of the jury, and gave judgment in favor of the railroad company for its costs. The plaintiff complains of the ruling of the court in holding the special findings to be inconsistent with the general verdict, and in giving judgment thereon for the company.

H. H. Harris, for plaintiff in error. Geo. R. Peck, A. A. Hurd, and Robert Dunlap, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The railroad company is liable for injuring or killing animals in the operation of its railroad at any points on its road which might be but are not fenced; but in the present case the railroad company had inclosed its road at the place where the mule went upon the railway and was killed with a good and lawful fence, fully sufficient to have prevented the mule from going upon the road. The railway ran through Carey's land, and the fences had been provided with gates, so that he and his tenants might pass from one portion of the farm to the other. The mule which was killed went through a gate which had been left open by some one, but it does not appear that the gate was opened by the railway employees. There was no evidence to show who left the gate open before the killing of the mule, but as the crossing and gates were provided for the accommodation of the land-owner, to be opened and closed at his convenience, the presumption, if any arises, would be that he or his tenants left it open. It is the statutory duty of the railroad company to make and maintain sufficient and secure fences on either side of its railroad, and if it fails to erect a sufficient fence it is liable for animals killed, without proof of negligence on the part of the company. But where it has built a good and sufficient fence, with suitable and sufficient gates at the necessary crossings, it has performed its statutory duty, and nothing more is required except to maintain the inclosure. Where the railroad separates the different parts of the farm, the land-owner is entitled to drive-ways and farm crossings, in order to enable him to go from one portion of the farm to another. (Railroad Co. v. Kregelo, 32 Kan. 608, 5 Pac. Rep. 15;) and in order to utilize such crossings it is necessary that gates should be placed in the fences erected by the railroad company. Having provided gates at these crossings for the convenience of the land-owner, whose duty is it to keep the gates closed? He may open the gates as often as his convenience or necessities may demand. When he may desire to open and use the gates, or how long it may be necessary that they should remain open, the employees of the railroad company cannot know. As he may open and close them at his convenience, and without the knowledge of the company, he must, in the nature of things, be held responsible for the closing of the gates. The making of crossings and the placing of gates in the fences, so that the crossings may be used, is of no advantage to the company. They only increase the hazard and expense, and doubtless the company would prefer that the fences were without gates or openings. But the land-owner is entitled to necessary crossings, and cannot be deprived of their use by the company. As he may use them at will, in the absence of the employees of the railroad company, the gates are within his control, and the duty of keeping them closed must rest on him. To place upon the railroad company the responsibility of keeping the gates closed would require that an employee of the company should be stationed at every crossing to see that the land-owner performed the implied obligation resting upon him of closing a gate provided for his special benefit. This would be an impracticable and unreasonable burden, and was manifestly not within the contemplation of the legislature. If the fence provided by the railroad company was defective, or the gate and its fastenings insufficient, then a different rule would apply; but in this case the sufficiency of the fence constructed by the railroad company and the gate which it provided is not questioned. We think it is clearly the duty of the land-owner or his tenant to close the gates and keep them closed; and, if he neglect to do so, and his stock is killed or injured, without the negligence of those operating the trains, the railroad company is not liable. If the owner of the land, who is responsible for the closing of the gate, could not recover, does Adams, whose mule broke into Carey's inclosure, occupy any better position? It appears that the fence between plaintiff's land and Carey's was defective, and that the mule jumped into Carey's inclosure in the night-time, and went through the gate constructed for the use and accommodation of Carey upon the railroad track, and was killed. As his mule was a trespasser upon the Carey farm, and as the injury and loss occurred through his negligence and wrong, he is entitled to no greater rights than Carey would have, and is not entitled to recover. The case of Railroad Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 340, is a case directly in point; and, although the authority of that case has been questioned in the later cases, we think it contains the better reasoning, and correctly decided the law. See, also, Harrington v. Railroad Co., 71 Mo. 384; Binicker v. Railroad Co., 83 Mo. 660; Hook v. Railroad Co., 58 N. H. 251; Railroad Co. v. Etzler, (Ind.) 19 N. E. Rep. 615, and 21 N. E. Rep. 466; Railroad Co. v. Shimer, 17 Ind. 295; Railroad Co. v. Mosier, (Ind.) 17 N. E. Rep. 109; Railroad Co. v. Rollins, 5 Kan. 167; Railway Co. v. Methven, 21 Ohio St. 586; Eames v. Railroad Co., 96 Mass. 151. We think the district court reached a correct conclusion, and therefore its judgment will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

BRADY v. BANTA et al.

HOMESTEAD—RIGHTS OF WIDOW AND CHILDREN—PARTITION—SECOND MARRIAGE.

1. Where real estate is occupied by a man and his family as a homestead at the time of his death, and afterwards by his widow and children, and the widow marries again, the homestead may be partitioned between her and the children.

2. When real estate descends to a widow and children as a homestead, and such widow marries again, but with her children continues to occupy said real estate as a homestead, the marriage of said widow does not destroy the homestead character of said real estate so as to subject it to the payment of the debts of the decedent.

A. M. Lasley, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Brinkerhoff, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. This was an action brought by Emma J. Banta, formerly Emma J. Brady, wife of Milton C. Brady, deceased, against Robert M. Brady, John E. Brady, Everitt M. Brady, and Cora M. Brady, minor children of Milton C. Brady, to partition the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 20, township 20 S., of range 6 W. John A. Brady, the plaintiff in error, who was the owner and holder of certain mortgages executed by Milton C. Brady and Emma J. Brady during the life-time of Milton C. Brady, which are liens upon said land, became a party to the suit to foreclose his mortgage. Said John A. Brady was also, at the time of the bringing of said suit in partition, the owner of certain unsecured claims against the estate of Milton C. Brady, deceased, which had been presented and allowed by the probate judge of Rice county in favor of said John A. Brady, and against said estate, for which he also demanded judgment against the estate of Milton C. Brady, deceased. J. W. Brinkerhoff was the owner and holder of a mortgage executed to him by Emma J. Banta before the institution of the suit in partition. The case was tried on the 26th of January, 1888, before the court without a jury, upon the following stipulations:

"Comes now the plaintiff, by Brinkerhoff and Brinkerhoff, her attorneys, and A. M. Lasley, attorney for John A. Brady, one of the defendants herein, on this 26th day of January, 1888, the case having been regularly called for trial, and for the purpose of the trial of this case it is agreed and stipulated that the facts in this case are as follows, except that evidence of John Bland and plaintiff is also to be used to show facts: (1) That on the 1st day of April, 1881, Milton C. Brady and Emma J. Brady, the plaintiff herein, were husband and wife, and were owners of the following described real estate situated in Rice county, state of Kansas, to-wit: The north-east $\frac{1}{4}$, sec. 20, T. 20 S., R. 6 W. 6th P. M., and that on that date the said Milton C. Brady and wife gave two mortgages on said real estate, one to the American Freehold Mortgage Company of London, Limited, to secure a note of \$800, given by them to said mortgage company of that date, and one to secure a note of \$4.16 given by them to W. T. Nicholas; that the mortgage to secure the \$800 note was a first mortgage lien, and the mortgage to secure the \$4.16 note was a second mortgage lien. (2) That the plaintiff and Milton C. Brady lived together as husband and wife until the 18th day of September, 1883, upon the above-described real estate as their homestead, when the said Milton C. Brady, the then husband of the plaintiff died, leaving the plaintiff herein his widow, and Robert M. Brady, John E. Brady, Everitt Brady, and Cora Brady, his children and minor heirs at law, who are still minors, the oldest of whom is now eight years old, and living with the plaintiff. (4) That on the 1st day of February, 1885, the plaintiff herein married one of the defendants herein, viz., J. N. Banta; and that they have lived together as husband and wife upon said real estate from that time until the present. (5) That the estate of the said Milton C. Brady was administered upon, and that he had no other real estate than that mentioned above; and that his personal estate was duly administered, and his debts paid so far as the property would pay them. (6) That the defendant herein, John A. Brady, is and was a brother of Milton C. Brady, now deceased. (7) That the \$800 note and mortgage to secure the same, and the \$4.16 note and the mortgage to secure the same, were duly assigned to John A. Brady, he paying valuable consideration for the same; these mortgages were on the land above described. (8) That there is now due the said John A. Brady on the \$800 note \$400 with interest at 12 per cent. from the 4th day of April, 1886; and that there is now due the said John A. Brady \$4.16, and interest thereon at 12 per cent. from the 4th day of April, 1886; and that said John A. Brady paid the taxes on said real estate to the amount of \$30.07, and that that amount is due him with interest at 12 per cent. from the 23d day of November, 1886; and that the said John A. Brady, the defendant herein, is entitled to a foreclosure of said mortgages as a first and second lien, on said real estate for the above specified amounts and interest due. (9) That John A. Brady, the defendant herein, purchased claims against said estate of several parties as follows: Of Skiles and Wirshing, on January 25, 1884, \$123.58; A. Minser, \$2.55, on August 12, 1885; J. Hanna & Co., \$95, August 11, 1885; J. H. Smith, \$23.31, February 6, 1884; P. C. Magoffin, \$30, August 12, 1885; H. J. Konantz, \$15, August 12, 1885; W. G. Elliott, \$25, October 29, 1883; Landis and Hollinger \$116.35. That the said John A. Brady made proof of said claims in the probate court of Rice county, Kansas, against the estate of the said Milton C. Brady, August 18, 1885, and the same was allowed against said estate, and entered in said probate court as claims against said estate, proved according to law. That the amount of said claims, principal and interest, to date is \$546.16; and that the same has never been paid, or any part thereof. (10) That the administrator of the estate of Milton C. Brady had made his final settlement with the probate court prior to the beginning of this action, and that all the property formerly belonging to the said Milton C. Brady has been administered except the above described real estate." Together with certain evidence upon which the court found the following additional facts: "In addition to the facts agreed to in the stipulations the court finds from the evidence that plaintiff and her minor children have continued to reside upon the premises in question ever since the death of plaintiff's former husband, and that they have at no time abandoned the same and still continue to reside thereon." Upon the above facts, as stipulated by the parties, and found by the court, the court made the following conclusions of law: "As conclusions of law the court finds the land in question is subject to be partitioned in this action; that John A. Brady has a lien upon the premises under his mortgage for \$493.49; that said mortgages may be foreclosed in this action; that the marriage of plaintiff with defendant N. J. Banta does not render said premises liable to John A. Brady's claims under the allowance made therefor by the probate court, and that he has no lien on said premises for said claims; that the homestead right of plaintiff and her minor children to said premises is not divested by reason of such marriage of plaintiff with defendant N. J. Banta."

On the above facts and conclusions of law the court held that John A. Brady was entitled to recover of and from the plaintiff Emma J. Banta the sum of $493.49, and that said sum was a first lien upon the premises described in her petition, and gave him, John A. Brady, a judgment for said sum against said Emma J. Banta, with interest thereon at 12 per cent. The court also ordered the land sold at the end of six months, unless Emma J. Banta should pay said sum of $493.49, with interest and cost; and ordered the proceeds of said sale to be applied as follows: First. To the payment of the costs in the case. Second. To the payment of said sum of $493.49 and interest thereon to John A. Brady. Third. The residue, if any, to be paid to said plaintiff and the other defendants as follows: Emma J. Banta one-half, Robert M. Brady one-eighth, John E. Brady one-eighth, Everitt Brady one-eighth, and Cora M. Brady one-eighth. The court also rendered judgment in favor of J. E. Brinkerhoff against Emma J. Banta and J. N. Banta for $153 and interest at 12 per cent., and made said judgment a lien on the interest of Emma J. Banta and J. N. Banta in the real estate in controversy, subject to the lien of John A. Brady thereon. The court further ordered that, if Emma J. Banta should pay said judgments, interest, and costs, within six months from the day of the judgment, a writ of partition should issue dividing the land, one-half to Emma J. Banta, and one-eighth each to Robert M. Brady, John E. Brady, Everitt Brady, and Cora M. Brady. The defendant, John A. Brady, objected to the conclusions of law and the judgment rendered in the case, and filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled.

The first point the plaintiff in error calls the attention of the court to is embodied in the following question: When a husband, residing upon land, his homestead, dies, leaving a widow and children, and the widow afterwards marries, but with her children first, and afterwards with her children and second husband, continues all the time to reside on and occupy said homestead, does the land continue the homestead of said family, and, as such, remain exempt from debts and liabilities of the deceased husband after the marriage of his said widow, or does it cease, upon said marriage, and because thereof, to be the homestead of the family, and become subject to the debts of the deceased husband like other lands? A solution of this question involves a construction of paragraph 2593 of the General Statutes of 1889, which paragraph reads as follows: "A homestead to the extent of 160 acres of farming land, or of one acre within the limits of an incorporated town or city, occupied by the intestate and his family at the time of his death as a residence, and continued to be so occupied by his widow and children after his death, together with all the improvements on the same, shall be wholly exempt from distribution under any of the laws of this state, and from the payment of debts of the intestate, but shall be the absolute property of the said widow and children: Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to any incumbrance given by the consent of both husband and wife, nor to obligations for the purchase of said premises, nor to liens for the erection of improvements thereon." The contention of the plaintiff in error is that the marriage of the widow destroys the homestead character of the land constituting the homestead of her former husband and herself, and by operation of law removes the exemption of the land from the debts of the first husband, which this section gives to a homestead, notwithstanding the former wife and her children by her first husband have continuously resided on and occupied the land since the death of the former husband and father. We do not think this position is tenable. There is no express provision in the statute supporting the contention of the plaintiff in error. The whole contention so far as this statute is concerned, is based upon a mere inference arising from the use of the word "widow" therein. We do not think the legislature, by the word "widow" in this paragraph, intended to say that the mere marriage of the widow of a decedent should operate to destroy the homestead character of the home left her and her children by the former husband. Such marriage must be accompanied by some other act, as abandonment, by her going to live with her husband elsewhere, to affect the homestead character of the home left her by her deceased husband. The section would mean exactly the same if it read, "and continued to be so occupied by his former wife and children after his death." Instead of reading as now, "and continued to be so occupied by his widow and children after his death." If it read thus, there would be no contention that the marriage of his former wife would affect the homestead character of the home. But suppose the marriage of the widow in this case did affect the homestead as to her, could it be said that it also deprived the children of their homestead interest in the land left them as a homestead by their deceased parent? Clearly not. If the widow should marry, and then abandon the homestead, to live with her husband elsewhere, she would undoubtedly lose her homestead right therein; and so she would if she should abandon the homestead without marrying; but in either event her act would not deprive the children, who stuck to the homestead of their deceased father after his death, of their homestead rights therein. We do not think the marriage of the widow of the decedent, where she with her husband continues to occupy the homestead the same after marriage as before, operates to remove the provisions of the homestead law exempting it from the debts and liabilities of the deceased debtor. In Vandiver v. Vandiver, 20 Kan. 501, this court uses the following language: "No good reason exists why the homestead of the intestate, 'towards which the eye of the creditor need never be turned,' in the life-time of the debtor, shall, upon his death, be liable for claims of creditors when continued to be occupied by the widow or children of such debtor." That was an action for partition of a homestead, and the exact question we are discussing in this case was not in that case; but, as bearing upon the question involved herein, we quote the following in addition to what is quoted above from the opinion in that case: "We are not called upon now to determine the nature of the occupancy after the death of a debtor to exempt the homestead from the payment of his debts; but certainly the requirement of 'occupancy' should be liberally construed, so as to favor the beneficial purposes of these sections of the law." Exemption laws of all kinds are to be liberally construed in favor of the purpose for which they were enacted. Mallory v. Berry, 16 Kan. 295; Rasure v. Hart, 18 Kan. 340; Donmyer v. Donmyer, 43 Kan. 444, 23 Pac. Rep. 627; Bank v. Warner, 22 Kan. 537.

The second inquiry relates to the distribution of the homestead. Was the order of the court in relation to the partition thereof erroneous? We answer in the negative. The statute expressly provides for such an order. Gen. St. 1889, par. 2596, reads as follows: "If the intestate left a widow and children, and the widow again marry, or when all of said children arrive at the age of majority, said homestead shall be divided, one-half in value to the widow, and the other one-half to the children." See, also, Vandiver v. Vandiver, 20 Kan. 501; Hafer v. Hafer, 36 Kan. 524, 13 Pac. Rep. 821.

We think the third inquiry of the plaintiff in error is answered by the answer to the first. If the marriage of Emma J. Brady with J. N. Banta did not destroy the homestead character of the home left by the intestate to his widow and children, it follows that said homestead remained exempt from the debts of said intestate so long as occupied by his former wife or children, except so far as those debts were made liens thereon during the life-time of said intestate. The court below seems to have dropped into an error in requiring Emma J. Banta to pay the whole of the judgment of John A. Brady. His mortgages were a lien upon the whole of said homestead. Emma A. Banta succeeded to only a one-half interest therein, while the children of the intestate succeeded to the other one-half interest therein. The judgment of John A. Brady should be against the whole of said homestead, and be paid by the widow and children in proportion to their interest therein. The judgment should be so modified, and in all other respects it is recommended that it be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

HALSTEAD LUMBER CO. v. SUTTON et al.

BREACH OF CONTRACT—FAILURE TO DELIVER GOODS SOLD—DAMAGES—OBJECTIONS TO JUDGMENT.

1. It is the duty of a party who has suffered an injury from the non-performance of a contract to take reasonable measures to make the injury or damage for which he intends to hold the other party liable as light as possible.

2. Upon the breach of a contract to deliver merchandise, the vendee, as a general rule, is entitled to recover as damages the difference between the purchase price and the market price at the time and place of delivery, together with interest.

3. Under special circumstances, as where merchandise is purchased for a particular purpose, and to be delivered at a specified time, and where it cannot be purchased in the market at the place of delivery, and these facts are known to the vendor, the general rule of damages would be inadequate to compensate the vendee for a delay or a non-delivery of the merchandise, but in such a case he would be entitled to recover the actual loss directly and naturally resulting from the default of the vendor.

4. A party complaining that the general finding and judgment of the court includes elements of damage not warranted, or that the court adopted an incorrect measure of damages, should obtain special findings or some statement or ruling of the court, showing the considerations upon which the judgment rests; and held, that the record in the present case does not properly present these questions for review.

Error from district court, Rice county; ANSEL R. CLARK, Judge.

A. M. Lasley, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Brinckerhoff and C. F. Foley, for defendants in error.

JOHNSTON, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover from defendants a balance claimed to be due for lumber sold and furnished to defendants. The defendants alleged payment in full as a first defense, and for the second and third defenses counter-claims were pleaded. The cause was tried without a jury, and the court found the balance unpaid upon the lumber furnished was $204.40; that the lumber, however, was not delivered in accordance with the contract of sale; and that defendants, who had contracted to furnish the lumber purchased to certain other parties, were compelled to pay damages in consequence of plaintiff's failure, and that they were damaged by the delay and non-delivery of the lumber in the sum of $171; and the court adjudged that plaintiff recover the sum of $29.40. Plaintiff is dissatisfied with the amount awarded, and comes here asking a reversal, but the condition of the record is such that a satisfactory determination of the principal question discussed cannot be made. The plaintiff objected to the introduction of any evidence under the second count of the answer, and upon the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. In brief, the count alleges that defendants contracted to deliver certain lumber at Lyons, Kan., for a certain purpose, and at a specified time, but that they failed to deliver it at the time agreed upon, nor until a long time afterwards, whereby defendants suffered loss and damage to the extent of $150, which they asked might be allowed as a counter-claim against any amount recovered by plaintiff. The principal objection urged is that the count showed an acceptance of the lumber at a later time than that agreed upon, and that this acceptance is a waiver of the objection to deliver according to the contract. The allegations in the count, however, do not bear out the claim. It is not alleged that there was an acceptance by the defendants of the lumber furnished, and, even if the count contained such an allegation, it would not constitute a waiver. The defendants, who were regularly engaged in the lumber business, could accept the lumber when it arrived, and still recover for any actual loss suffered by them which was the direct result of the plaintiff's failure to deliver according to contract. The acceptance and use of the material lessened the injury of the defendants, and correspondingly reduced the plaintiff's liability for its failure. The testimony in the case discloses that the lumber was of such a character as could not be procured in the market at Lyons, and that the owners of the buildings for whom it was contracted were daily incurring expense and loss by the plaintiff's failure to provide the lumber at the time specified. It was the duty of the defendants, therefore, to make the injury as light as possible by taking and using the material upon its arrival. To have returned the lumber to the plaintiff would not have lessened the damages which had already accrued, but would have aggravated the injury, and enhanced the plaintiff's liability.

In the third count it is alleged, in substance, that one car-load of lumber, agreed to be furnished by the plaintiff for a certain purpose, of which the plaintiff was informed, was never delivered, by reason which defendants were obliged to enter the market and purchase the lumber at an advanced price, and were thus compelled to pay the sum of $54.53 more than the price at which plaintiff had agreed to sell and deliver the same, and that the price which the defendants paid for this lumber was the reasonable market price; and this amount they set up as a counter-claim.

The objection that there was no allegation that plaintiff refused to furnish the lumber according to contract, or that defendants may possibly have directed plaintiff not to deliver the lumber, is unsubstantial, and requires no notice. It appears that this part of the purchase could be supplied from the local market, and when the plaintiff failed the defendants, as was their duty, went upon the market, and purchased the lumber at the market price, and thus prevented additional loss and injury. Under the general rule they were entitled to recover the difference between the contract price and the market value of the lumber at that time, together with interest. The allegations of the count were certainly sufficient to overcome the objection that was made against it.

The objection principally discussed by plaintiff in error is that the court adopted an incorrect measure of damages, and that the testimony did not sustain the general finding and judgment that was rendered. It cannot be ascertained from the record what elements of damage were considered by the court in arriving at its judgment. There were no instructions, and no special findings were asked or made, to indicate the elements considered by the court, and which controlled its judgment. In order to properly raise the question in this court, the plaintiff should have obtained special findings; but without these, or some statement from the court showing the elements which enter into its judgment, we cannot intelligently examine the question attempted to be raised. The testimony tends to show that the lumber was contracted for for a special purpose; that it was of a character which could not be supplied from the local market; that the plaintiff specially agreed to deliver the lumber at a stated time and for a particular purpose, and that the loss which occurred was within the contemplation of both parties; that the defendants again and again prompted the plaintiff to hurry up the delivery, and informed it that the delay would occasion injury for which plaintiff would be held liable, but that they would endeavor to lessen the damages as much as possible; that after this time plaintiff sent tracers and telegrams, and made other efforts to find and deliver the lumber, which it was bringing from Arkansas, but which for some reason was delayed. There is testimony that some of the damages arose from a shortage in the quantity claimed to have been furnished; some of it, from the advanced price paid for the car of lumber which was never furnished. There is testimony in regard to the loss suffered from the delay and idleness of the men who were engaged on the building, but who could not proceed without the lumber, which plaintiff had not yet delivered; and also testimony of the length of time that the owners of the buildings were deprived of their use through the fault of plaintiff; and testimony of the rental value of the buildings during this time of delay. There is also testimony tending to show that defendants were prompt and diligent in staying the injury; and, considering all of the testimony, the amount of damages allowed to defendants is quite reasonable. The elements of damage, however, which were considered by the court, and upon which its judgment rests, we cannot determine. The facts are such as to take the case out of the general rule of damages, which limits the recovery to the difference between the contract price and the market price. There are special circumstances disclosed in the record which bring the case within the doctrine of Richardson v. Chynoweth, 26 Wis. 656, where it is stated that "there may be cases where parties contract for articles with reference to use or sale on some particular occasion, and where, by reason of want of time, or their situation in respect to the market, they would, on a failure to receive them on the contract, be unable to supply themselves for that occasion, in which this general rule of damages would wholly fail to compensate for the actual loss. In such cases, time is of the essence of the contract. It would be like a contract to complete at a given time a ship designed to be employed in a particular trade, or a house to be occupied, or an engine to run a particular mill or manufactory. In such cases where the contracting party is advised of the special purpose of the thing to be completed, and of the damage that would naturally accrue from failure to complete it at the specified time, and in view of this expressly stipulates to furnish it at a given time, there is no reason why he should not be responsible for such damage as is the direct natural result of his failure, even though beyond the mere difference between the contract and market price." See, also, Shepard v. Gas Co., 15 Wis. 318; Messmore v. Lead Co., 40 N. Y. 422; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489; Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 319, (Gil. 117;) 2 Suth. Dam. 488-493. Under the special circumstances of this case, the defendants were entitled to full compensation for the loss actually sustained, and which was the probable and proximate result of the plaintiff's default. Although we cannot say from the record what items and elements were considered by the court in making up its judgment, we think there is sufficient evidence to sustain the judgment that was rendered. The other objections are not sufficiently material to require attention, and, as we find nothing in the record that would warrant a reversal, the judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

All the justices concurring.

CAIN BROS. CO. v. WALLACE.

AUTHORITY OF AGENT—EVIDENCE—SPECIAL FINDINGS—INSTRUCTIONS—IMPEACHMENT OF VERDICT BY JURY.

1. When a corporation carries on the business of buying and shipping grain through an agent, and the authority of such agent to purchase grain in wagon-load lots upon inspection is conceded, it is competent to introduce evidence to show the inspection and purchase of grain by such agent, to determine the scope and authority of his agency, and to ascertain whether the purchase of certain grain sued for was within the fair scope of his authority as the agent of such corporation.

2. Special findings examined, and found to be supported by evidence, and not inconsistent with the general verdict.

3. Instructions given to a jury should be taken and considered together as an entirety.

4. Statements of a jurymen of what took place during the trial of an action, made after the rendition of the verdict and the separation of the jury, and not under oath, are simply hearsay evidence, and it is not error for the trial court to overrule a motion for a new trial, based upon affidavits of such hearsay statements.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Atchison county; W. D. GILBERT, Judge.

W. W. & W. F. Guthrie, for plaintiff in error. H. M. Jackson, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. This action was commenced in the district court of Atchison county, by B. F. Wallace, against Cain Bros. Company, to recover the sum of $978.65 as a balance claimed to be due him for wheat sold to the defendant. The petition alleged "that on or about the 20th day of October, A. D. 1886, the defendant, Cain Brothers Company, was and still is a corporation, duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Kansas, and as such was doing business in divers counties of said state of Kansas as a buyer, seller, and shipper of grain; and that on or about said October 20, 1886, and for a long time prior and also subsequent thereto, one R. B. Buck was the duly-authorized and acting agent of said defendant company in the matter of making contracts for and in buying and shipping of grain in behalf of said company in the county of Jewell and in the state of Kansas, and that on or about said 20th day of October, A. D. 1886, said defendant, by and through its duly-authorized and acting agent, R. B. Buck, upon examination, inspection, and test of the certain grain then belonging to and the property of this plaintiff, contracted with this plaintiff for the purchase of a large quantity of wheat then in the possession of the plaintiff, to be delivered on board of cars at Jewell City, Kansas, near the place of business of said defendant company at said Jewell City, and thereafter, and under and by the terms of said contract, and between the said 20th day of October, A. D. 1886, and the 6th day of November, A. D. 1886, this plaintiff delivered to said defendant on board the cars at said Jewell City 5,310 bushels and 55 pounds of wheat, for which the said defendant, by and through its said acting and duly-authorized agent, contracted, promised, and agreed to pay to this plaintiff the price and sum of 50 cents per bushel, or $2,655.45. That of said sum said defendant paid to this plaintiff the sum of $1,676.80, and the balance due to plaintiff thereon is $978.65." To this petition the defendant answered by a general denial, and, as a second defense, alleged "that, although said R. B. Buck was in the employ of the defendant at the said time, he was not then or at any other time the duly-authorized and acting agent of the defendant in the matter of making contracts for and in buying and shipping grain on behalf of defendant;" and then denied specifically the contract for the sale of wheat by plaintiff, and alleged what was claimed by defendant as being the contract in relation thereto, alleging in brief that the contract was to ship the grain to Atchison, to be delivered and graded at Atchison; and then alleged that said wheat was not of the grade represented and contracted for, and that for that reason the said grain was shipped to St. Louis and other markets and sold, and the proceeds, accounted as $788.65, paid to plaintiff in full settlement thereof; and for a further defense set up a counter-claim for $250 damages by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to perform his contract. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $728. A motion for a new trial was overruled. Judgment was rendered for the amount of the verdict and costs, and the defendant brings the case to this court.

1. The first assignment of error is the introduction of evidence, upon the part of the plaintiff, to show the authority of R. B. Buck to make the contract alleged in plaintiff's petition. It was conceded that the defendant opened its business in Jewell City about the 1st of September, 1886, for the purpose of buying grain, and that Buck was in charge of such business, and authorized to purchase grain under certain restrictions. The evidence complained of tended to prove Buck's authority to make the contract claimed by plaintiff, by showing that he inspected, received, and paid for different lots of wheat, as brought to defendant's warehouse. We think the evidence was competent. The authority of the agent was not in writing, so as to make the scope of such authority a question of law for the court. Buck was the recognized agent of the defendant, so that the question was not whether the relation of principal and agent existed, but what was the scope of the agency? The fact and scope of an agency may be determined not alone by what the principal may tell the agent to do, but also from what he knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care might know, as to what the agent is doing. It has been said: "In most cases, if not in all, the question of agency is a matter of fact, which it is the province of a jury to determine upon, under the instructions of the court; and if the testimony tends to prove that the person acting as agent had authority from his principal to do the act, then it is manifest that the court cannot exclude from the jury the act itself, without overstepping the law of its duty, and assuming to determine a matter which belongs to the jury, to-wit, the authority of the agent to do the act. The correct rule is this: If there is no proof whatever tending to prove the agency, the act may be excluded from the jury by the court; but, if there is any evidence tending to prove the authority of the agent, then the act cannot be excluded from them, for they are the judges of the sufficiency and weight of the evidence." McClung's Ex'rs v. Spotswood, 19 Ala. 165; Brett v. Bassett, 63 Iowa, 340, 19 N. W. Rep. 210; Thomp. Trials, § 1370; Jacobson v. Poindexter, 42 Ark. 97; Kingsley v. Fitts, 51 Vt. 414.

2. The plaintiff in error claims that the special findings of the jury are against the weight of the evidence, and therefore must be set aside, and a new trial ordered. It is insisted, in support of this claim, that plaintiff had delivered all of his wheat raised in 1886 from the thresher, excepting about 200 bushels, prior to October 20, 1886, and amounted to 1,524 bushels, together with a crop of oats raised in the same year, amounting to $683.25 for wheat, and $178.25 for oats; making a total of $861.50; and from this state of facts it is argued that the plaintiff's crop of wheat raised in 1886 could not have been in the consignment shipped between October 25th and November 12th, and that a certain item of $441.63 could not have been for the 1886 wheat, but for the crop of 1885; and, also, that the sum of $1,347.08 was paid on account of the wheat crop of 1885; and that, therefore, there could not be a balance, as the jury found, of $670.09 on account of the 1885 crop. According to the evidence of the plaintiff, he delivered about 5,700 bushels of wheat to the defendant, and had received payments at different times aggregating $2,650.15, and that the grain sold amounted to $2,655.45, so that, according to his own evidence in the first instance, he had been paid for his grain. The production of a check for $361.50 and a draft for $500, with the plaintiff's indorsements seemed to confirm the defendant in its position. This matter, however, was explained to the apparent satisfaction of the jury. It was shown that the plaintiff had sold a lot of wheat and oats which he had received from some of his neighbors, and it had been delivered to the defendant, and paid for by a draft for $500 and a check given by Buck upon a local bank in Jewell City for $361.50, and had no connection with grain sued for; and having been settled for, had doubtless passed out of the mind of the plaintiff until the transaction was recalled by the production of the draft and check.

The plaintiff in error calls attention to the inconsistency between the answers to questions numbered 4 and 6 and the answer to No. 7 of plaintiff's series of questions. We think the answers can be very easily reconciled by the fact that they referred to two different sales,—4 and 6 had reference to the wheat which had been sold and settled for, and 7 related to the last wheat delivered. Keeping in mind the two transactions, which were separate and distinct sales, we think there is some evidence to support the series of special findings submitted by the plaintiff, and that they are not inconsistent. The findings in the defendant's series of questions and answers plaintiff in error claims are equally wrong, and says that No. 3 finds this wheat not inferior to No. 2, and calls our attention to the evidence in regard to the official inspection at Atchison. The finding was as follows: "Was the wheat sued for in this action greatly inferior in quality to that contracted by the plaintiff to be delivered to defendant? Answer. No." This finding is not subject to the objection made by the plaintiff in error. Objection is made to the fourth finding, that Atchison inspection was not intended, and the argument is urged that Buck had received 1,524 bushels of wheat upon his own inspection, and counsel ask why was the grain inspected in Atchison, if it was not to be delivered there. The claim of the plaintiff was that the inspection and delivery was at Jewell City, and the defendant insisted that the contract called for Atchison delivery and inspection. The jury found with the plaintiff, and there was evidence to support the finding. We have carefully examined the evidence bearing upon the other special findings complained of, and, without mentioning each specially, we think they are not subject to the strictures placed upon them by counsel, and are not unsupported by evidence. The next complaint of counsel is the jury's refusal to answer this special question: "Did the defendant in good faith cause the wheat, the subject of this action, to be inspected, and thereafter make disposition of the same? Answer. Unable to say." No objection was made to the answer when the jury returned with the general verdict, and the error cannot now be considered. Arthur v. Wallace, 8 Kan. 267; Railway Co. v. Pointer, 14 Kan. 52.

Our attention is next called to the general charge of the court, and complaint is made that it is misleading, particularly instructions numbered 6 and 7. In these instructions the court said to the jury that if they found that the agent had such authority, and made the contract as alleged by plaintiff and stated in the first of the instructions, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the difference between the aggregate amount of wheat so delivered under the contract and the amount paid thereon, not exceeding $672.06, with 7 per cent. interest from the time of the delivery at Jewell City; that if they should find that the contract was made between the plaintiff and defendant, as stated in the first and sixth instructions, it would not be necessary for them to consider the counter-claim of the defendant. The delivery of the wheat was admitted, and there was no controversy over the amount. We see no error in these instructions, taken in connection with the balance of the charge. "Instructions should be read and construed in connection with one another and as a whole, and where detached sentences which, standing alone, might seem inaccurate, are so qualified by other portions of the charge as to fully state the law of the case, and not calculated to mislead, they afford no ground for reversal." Railroad Co. v. Andrews, 41 Kan. 383, 21 Pac. Rep. 276.

4. The last assignment of error urged is the misconduct of the jury. This claim is supported by the affidavits of two of the members of the corporation as to what one of the jurors told them after the trial had been concluded and the jury discharged. Statements made by a juror after the trial, and not under oath, are not competent evidence. They would simply be hearsay, and, when the testimony of the juror himself is not offered, should not be considered. Sharpe v. Williams, 41 Kan. 56, 20 Pac. Rep. 497; Gottlieb v. Jasper, 27 Kan. 770. We recommend an affirmation of the judgment.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

CADY V. CASE.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Malone v. Murphy, 2 Kan. 250; Wiley v. Keokuk, 6 Kan. 94,—and other similar decisions of this court, holding that, whenever the elements of fraud, malice, gross negligence, or oppression mingle in the controversy, the law allows the jury to give what is called exemplary or vindictive damages, followed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Cloud county; E. HUTCHINSON, Judge.

Deck Houston and Kennett & Peck, for plaintiff in error. Pulsifer & Alexander, for defendant in error.

PER CURIAM. The principal question discussed in this case upon the argument was whether exemplary damages ought to be allowed in any civil action, and we are asked to re-examine this question, and reverse the prior decisions of this court permitting exemplary or vindictive damages. Our own decisions for a long time have established that, whenever the elements of fraud, malice, gross negligence, or oppression mingle in the controversy, the law allows the jury to give what is called exemplary or vindictive damages. We could not depart from this doctrine now without overruling all of the prior decisions of this court upon this subject, and we are not willing to do so. In the case of Malone v. Murphy, 2 Kan. 250. (in 1864,) it was said that "we would rather adopt the compensatory theory, believing it to be more nearly logically correct; but the other having been long established, recognized, and acted upon by enlightened courts, we are not disposed to change it, where a change would make no difference in results. In giving this rule to juries in cases the details and circumstances of which are calculated to inflame their passions, the court should be very careful to indulge in no loose expressions which would indicate that the feelings of the jury were in any manner to influence their action." In Wiley v. Keokuk, 6 Kan. 94. (in 1870,) it was said that "these instructions raise the question, so much discussed of late by writers upon law, as to whether such damages as are called 'exemplary,' 'vindictive,' or 'punitive' ought ever to be allowed. We content ourselves with following the current of authorities, and decide that the instructions go no further than such authorities warrant. If the law is wrong, let the law-making power correct it. The rule, as laid down by the court below, has already received the sanction of this court. Malone v. Murphy, 2 Kan. 250. The whole subject is discussed pro and con, and the authorities referred to, in 2 Greenl. Ev. § 253, and note, and sections 254, 255; and Sedg. Dam. (4th Ed.) p. 533, and note. And after all this discussion the supreme court of the United States decide the law as laid down in these instructions. Mr. Justice GRIER, delivering the opinion of the court, well says: 'If repeated judicial decisions for more than a century are to be received as the best exposition of what the law is, the question will not admit of argument. By the common as well as by the statute law, men are often punished for aggravated misconduct or lawless acts, by means of a civil action, and the damages inflicted by way of penalty or punishment, given to the party injured.' We have no doubt that such is the law. Whether it be founded in sound reason or not is not so much our province to say as to determine if it be law. The writer hereof believes it to be not only good law, but founded on sound principles, and beneficial in its application. It often furnishes the only restraint upon a bad man, who cares little for his neighbor's character, his person, or his property. The party injured pursues the wrong-doer to punishment when society is too careless to do so." These decisions have since been followed in the cases of Hefley v. Baker, 19 Kan. 9; Titus v. Corkins, 21 Kan. 732; Jockers v. Borgman, 29 Kan. 109; Winstead v. Hulme, 32 Kan. 568, 4 Pac. Rep. 994; Railway Co. v. Rice, 38 Kan. 403, 404, 16 Pac. Rep. 817; Clark v. Weir, 37 Kan. 98, 14 Pac. Rep. 533; West v. Telegraph Co., 39 Kan. 83, 17 Pac. Rep. 807; Manufacturing Co. v. Boyce, 36 Kan. 351, 13 Pac. Rep. 609; the other questions discussed are disposed of by the following cases: Towardin v. Nutt, 19 Kan. 282; City of Wyandotte v. Gibson, 25 Kan. 242; Rose v. Hayden, 35 Kan. 107, 10 Pac. Rep. 554, and cases there cited; Relley v. Haynes, 38 Kan. 262, 16 Pac. Rep. 440; Bryan v. McNaughton, 38 Kan. 98, 16 Pac. Rep. 57; Woods v. Hamilton, 39 Kan. 70, 17 Pac. Rep. 335. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

BRECHER V. IRELAND et al.

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES — SALE OF LAND — JUDGMENT AGAINST VENDOR.

1. Where an action is commenced upon a note and to foreclose a mortgage on real property given to secure the note, and the mortgagors are made parties defendant, and they file an answer or cross-petition alleging that one B., who is not referred to or mentioned in the petition, has purchased the real property and assumed the payment of the mortgage, and subsequently, upon the præcipe of the defendants, B. is personally served with a summons in the case requiring him to answer the petition on file, it is error for the court, in his absence, and without any pleadings having been filed by him, to render against him a personal judgment, when the petition does not state any cause of action against him, or mention or refer to him.

2. The case of Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. 414, distinguished.

Error from district court, Lyon county; CHARLES B. GRAVES, Judge.

C. N. Sterry, for plaintiff in error. Kellogg & Sedgwick, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. On the 26th day of March, 1888, A. C. Ireland filed his petition in foreclosure against C. V. Holmes, Olive P. Holmes, E. N. Evans, and Mary M. Evans, to recover the sum of $450 upon a promissory note executed by C. V. Holmes to him, and asking to foreclose a mortgage given by C. V. and Olive P. Holmes to secure the note. The petition alleged that the defendants E. N. Evans and Mary M. Evans had some inferior, adverse interest in the mortgaged premises. A summons was issued on the petition and personally served upon each defendant. On the 1st of April, 1888, the defendants C. V. and Olive P. Holmes filed in the cause an answer and cross-petition. The answer, among other things, alleged that on the 23d day of January, 1887, C. V. Holmes and wife executed and delivered to E. A. Beecher a conveyance of the mortgaged premises; that, as a part of the consideration for the conveyance, E. A. Beecher assumed and agreed with them to pay the note or indebtedness secured by the mortgage. At the May, 1888, term of the court, an order was made for E. A. Beecher to be made a party defendant, and on the same day a præcipe for a summons was filed by the attorney for the defendant C. V. Holmes, and on this præcipe a summons was issued, which was served upon E. A. Beecher personally, and which required him to answer the petition of the plaintiff. At the September, 1888, term of the court, without any amendment to the petition, and without E. A. Beecher having ever appeared, A. C. Ireland recovered judgment against E. A. Beecher and C. V. Holmes for the sum of $510, and obtained a decree to sell the mortgaged property, and to make any deficiency off the property of E. A. Beecher. Afterwards, and at the same term of the court, Beecher appeared specially, and moved to set the judgment aside. This motion was overruled, and he brings the case here. The petition which E. A. Beecher was required to answer by the summons personally served upon him did not contain his name, nor were there any allegations therein sufficient to sustain or uphold any personal judgment against him. Short v. Noon-er, 16 Kan. 220; Neitzel v. Hunter, 19 Kan. 221. It was therefore error for the court, as to Beecher, to do more than render a decree for the foreclosure of the mortgage, and a sale thereof to satisfy the judgment, costs, and expenses. Counsel for the plaintiff below cite Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. 414, and allege under that decision that Beecher was required to take notice of all the pleadings on file at the date of the issuance of the summons served upon him. In that case it was decided that, when the original summons is served upon a defendant, he is in court for every purpose connected with the action, and is bound to take notice of every subsequent step taken therein. It was further held in the case that the defendant, having been served with a summons to answer the petition, was bound to notice the answer or cross-petition subsequently filed by a co-defendant. This case is somewhat different. The defendant was called upon to answer a petition which did not state any cause of action against him or refer to him in any way, and no subsequent answer or cross-petition was filed after the issuance of the summons served upon him. It was admitted on the hearing of his motion that the defendant E. N. Evans, at the commencement of the action and during its pendency, was the owner of the mortgaged premises by purchase from

Beecher, subject to the mortgage. Therefore, if the petition had alleged these facts or any cause of action against Beecher, or if his attention had been called to the answer or cross-petition of C. V. and Olive P. Holmes by any subsequent order or notice personally served upon him, he could have had the judgment rendered so as to have made Evans personally liable before execution could issue against either himself or the Holmeses. We have already held in several cases that, if a defendant has been personally served with a summons, the petition cannot be materially changed without notice when the defendant is in default or is absent. Haight v. Schuck, 6 Kan. 192; Alvey v. Wilson, 9 Kan. 401; Railroad Co. v. Van Riper, 19 Kan. 317. We are unwilling to extend the case of Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. 414, and therefore think that the trial court committed error in rendering a personal judgment against Beecher, in view of all the circumstances attending this case. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings. All the justices concurring.

NORDMARK et ux. v. NYSTROM.

APPEAL—JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT.

No appeal lies from the judgment of a justice of the peace in an action of replevin tried with a jury, where the value of the property replevied, and the amount claimed as damages for its detention, taken together, do not exceed the sum of $20.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Republic county; E. HUTCHINSON, Judge.

A. D. Wilson, for plaintiffs in error. A. B. Wilder, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This was an action of replevin, brought by Gust. Nystrom before a justice of the peace, for the recovery of personal property from Charles Nordmark and Mrs. Charles Nordmark, which was described by him as follows: "Four old turkeys, (one gobbler and three hens,) of the value of 75 cents each; twenty young turkeys, of the value of 40 cents each; and all of the aggregate value of $11." He alleged that the property was wrongfully detained from him, and that the damage for the wrongful detention was $8. The property was taken by an officer upon an order of delivery, but was returned to the defendants below upon the execution of a redelivery bond. The cause was tried with a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, Nystrom, finding the right of property in him, and that the value of the same was $11, and assessed his damages for illegal detention at 60 cents. Judgment was rendered upon the verdict, and an appeal was taken by the Nordmarks to the district court. There a motion was made to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that the cause had been tried by a jury, and that the amount involved did not exceed $20. This motion was sustained and the appeal dismissed, and this ruling is assigned for error.

Did an appeal lie from the judgment of the justice of the peace, which was that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the property, or the sum of $11, the value thereof, in case a return could not be made, and that he recover the sum of 60 cents as damages for illegal detention? The Justices' Code (section 120) provides for an appeal from the final judgment of a justice of the peace in all cases except where it is otherwise specially provided. Then section 132 of the act provides that no appeal shall be allowed "in jury trials where neither party claims in his bill of particulars a sum exceeding $20." It is claimed that the action of replevin does not come within the provision quoted, because the primary thing in question is the recovery of possession, and not the value of the property or the damages for its detention. While the gist of a replevin action is the wrongful detention, and the purpose is to obtain the return of the property, or, in case a return cannot be had, a recovery of the value of the same, together with damages for the wrongful detention, yet it is essential that the value of the property in controversy should be stated. It is expressly provided that the action shall not be brought until an affidavit is filed, containing, among other statements, the actual value of the property; and, when several articles are claimed, the value of each article shall be stated as nearly as practicable. Section 56. In this way the amount in controversy or which is claimed by the plaintiff is disclosed. The affidavit may stand and be treated as the bill of particulars, and serve as the pleading under which proof is offered; and it is also provided that the value of the property stated in the affidavit shall fix the jurisdiction of the justice as far as such value is concerned. Section 62. Where the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, and he fails to prosecute his action to final judgment, the defendant may have a jury impaneled to inquire into the right of property, and his right of possession to the property taken; and if satisfied that the defendant was entitled to the property at the commencement of the action, or is entitled to the possession at such time, they shall find accordingly, and further find the value of such property, or the value of the possession thereof, and also damages for withholding the same. Section 63. It is further provided that in all cases where the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, and the jury shall find for the defendant, either that he had the right of property or the right of possession, they shall also find the value of the property or the value of the possession, (section 64;) and the judgment in such case shall be for the return of the property, or for the value thereof, or the value of the possession of the same, in case a return cannot be had, and for damages and costs, (section 65.) Then, again, "when the property claimed has not been taken, the action may proceed as one for damages only, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to such damages as may be right and proper." Section 67. When an action is brought by a mortgagee to recover chattels given by him as security, only the amount of his special interest is involved in the controversy, and the payment of the amount by the mortgagor or other interested person discharges the lien and defeats the right of possession. It will thus be seen that the value of the property in controversy is a leading consideration from the inception of the action of replevin until the rendition of the final judgment, and in some cases it is the primary thing in dispute. The amount claimed, or the value of that which is claimed, is shown throughout by the pleadings and proceedings; and we are inclined to the opinion that the action comes fairly within the spirit and purpose of the provision limiting appeals where the amount in controversy is not more than $20, and there has been a jury trial. This question has been suggested, but never decided, by this court. Miller v. Bogart, 19 Kan. 117. The case of Martin v. Armstrong, 12 Ohio St. 548, is referred to as an authority in favor of the right of appeal; but the Ohio Code, under which the decision was made, does not require a statement of the value of the property in the affidavit for replevin, and this omission is one of the principal considerations upon which the decision rests. In Kansas, as we have seen, the value of the property must be stated in the affidavit, and this affidavit may stand as the pleading in the case. Under a somewhat similar provision limiting appeals in Vermont, it was held that the value of the property replevied, together with the damages demanded for its taking and detention, is the amount in controversy, which determines the right of appeal, and that, where the sum of these did not exceed $20, the action was not appealable. Fisk v. Wallace, 51 Vt. 418; Andrews v. Baker, 59 Vt. 656, 10 Atl. Rep. 465. See, also, Cobhey, Rep. § 1246. The amount in controversy in the present case was $19, being the value of the property, which was $11, and the damages claimed, which was $8; and therefore the court correctly ruled that the case was not appealable. The judgment dismissing the appeal will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

Error from district court, Ottawa county; M. B. NICHOLSON, Judge.

HORTON, C. J. This was an action brought in the court below by the widow and minor children of John Hazleton, deceased, against James C. Reed, executor of the last will of Henry Rickett, deceased, and other parties, to enforce an alleged contract for the conveyance of certain real estate executed on the 9th of March, 1883, by John Hazleton and Henry Ricket. Henry Ricket died on the 15th of September, 1883. John Hazleton died on the 9th of April, 1888. Upon the part of the plaintiffs it is claimed that, within the terms of the contract, Ricket was under obligation to make such provisions by deed or will as would vest the title to the land in Hazleton; that the mere method or form adopted for this purpose cannot be held to be material, so that the intention of the parties is carried out; that it is the duty of the court to ascertain the intention of the parties with reference to the subject-matter of their agreement, when that can be done; that it was the intention of both Ricket and Hazleton that the land should become the property of the latter upon the former's death; and therefore that the district court erred in sustaining the demurrer of the defendants, upon the ground that the petition did not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action. The written memorandum of the alleged contract was under consideration by this court in the case of Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321, 15 Pac. Rep. 177. The facts of this case, together with a copy of the memorandum, are recited in full in the foregoing case, and need not be repeated here. In the former opinion handed down it was said: "Under the view which we take of this instrument, it will be unnecessary to examine the nature of a contract of bargain and sale, and a covenant to stand seised to the use of the grantee, which are discussed in the briefs filed in this action. We believe that it ought not to be placed in either of those classes of conveyances. * * * This article of agreement does not contain any of the usual operative words of a conveyance, with the possible exception of this clause: 'After the death of said Henry Ricket, of the first party, the right and title of the land in question shall vest in the said John Hazleton, of the second party.' That provision has no present operation, and could be revoked by the grantor at any time. It was testamentary. * * * The old man wisely kept possession and control of his home, to prepare for the possible change in the feelings of himself and Hazleton. Hazleton was not without recourse if he had performed services for which he had not been paid. He could have presented his claim against the estate, and the courts were open to aid him in obtaining his dues." This disposes of the case. In Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. St. 126, on the 22d of November, 1849, the father, John Scott, executed an instrument to his son, John W. Scott, purporting to convey his farm. The consideration for the execution of the instrument was the natural love and affection which the father had for his son, and also an agreement from the son that he was to live with the father, assist him in his work on the land, and maintain the mother during her natural life, if she survived her husband. The instrument contained the following provisions: "Excepting and reserving, nevertheless, the entire use and possession of said premises, unto the said John Scott and his assigns, for and during the term of his natural life; and this conveyance in no way to take effect until after the decease of the said John Scott, the grantor." The son commenced to live with his father upon the land mentioned in the instrument, but after a time they quarreled. The father turned the son out, and on the 26th of February, 1861, made a will revoking the instrument executed to his son, which had been put upon record in the proper county. The chief justice of the court, in construing the written instrument from John Scott to his son, John W. Scott, said: "We see nothing in the covenant of warranty to change our construction of the operative words of the grant. As these words were expressly limited to take effect only after the death of the grantor, they were necessarily revocable words. The doctrine of the cases is that, whatever the form of the instrument, if it vest no present interest, but only appoints what is to be done after the death of the maker, it is a testamentary instrument. It signifies nothing that the parties meant to make a deed instead of a will. If they have used language which the law holds to be testamentary, their intention is to be gathered from the legal import of the words they have employed, for all parties must be judged by the legal meaning of their words." In Leaver v. Gauss, (Iowa,) 17 N. W. Rep. 522, Leaver and wife executed to Gauss an instrument somewhat in the form of a deed, but it was provided therein that it should take effect only after the death of himself and wife. It is claimed that a valuable consideration was paid therefor by Gauss. One of the provisions of the written instrument was "that the grantee is to take no estate during the lives of the grantors." In that case it was held that "a deed which recites, as one of its express provisions, that 'the grantee is to take no estate during the lives of the grantors,' is testamentary in its character, and, even if consideration was paid for it, may be revoked; no present estate subject to a life-estate being created thereby." In Sperber v. Balster, 66 Ga. 317, August Kohler executed a written instrument purporting to convey to Sophestina Sperber 650 acres of land, in consideration of services rendered him by Sophestina as a nurse. The instrument provided "that it should have full effect at his death." The chief justice of the court said in that case that "it is wholly unnecessary to cite cases or invoke precedents in construing a paper like this, with a view to get at his meaning in respect to the time when he intended title, right, property, to pass out of himself into the object of his bounty. It is enough to lay down the universal principle, embodied in our Code, § 2395, which is in these words: 'No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a will; and in all cases, to determine the character of an instrument, whether it is testamentary or not, the test is the intention of the maker, from the whole instrument, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances. If such intention be to convey a present estate, though the possession be postponed until after his death, the instrument is a deed; if the intention be to convey an interest accruing and having effect only after his death, it is a will." So reading the instrument, we construe it to be clearly a will; at all events, we all hold that such is the better legal view of it." In Kinnebrew v. Kinnebrew, 35 Ala. 628, it was decided that "an instrument under seal, in form a deed of gift, by which the grantor, in consideration of the natural love and affection for the grantee, who was his grandson, and the present payment of five dollars by the grantee, conveys to the latter, by the words 'do by these presents give and grant a slave, and fifteen hundred dollars in cash, to be paid to him out of my [grantor's] estate at my death, by my executor or administrator,' held a deed of gift as to the slave, but as to the money a purely voluntary executory trust, which a court of equity would not enforce as an instrument inter vivos, but which was valid and operative as a will." On the part of the plaintiff counsel refer with great confidence to the case of Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101. In that case an arrangement was made by Mrs. Green with her brother to take his daughter, her own niece and godchild, and make her her heir at her (Mrs. Green's) death. Subsequently she promised that if the niece would come and live with her, (Mrs. Green,) and would be a daughter to her and nurse and take care of her the remainder of her life, all that she had should be hers (the niece's) at her (Mrs. Green's) death. The niece, Nancy A. Sutton, accepted the offer, and, relying upon the promises of her aunt, entered into her services, and continued with her about 15 years. Mrs. Green failed to make any deed or will, and died intestate. In that case the court held that a specific performance of the agreement of Mrs. Green could be compelled in equity, and that case is followed in several other Missouri cases. This case, however, is quite different from them in many particulars, especially in this: that Hazleton did not care for Ricket but a comparatively short time,—from the 1st of April, 1882, until the 15th of September, 1883, when Ricket died. By the express provisions of the articles of agreement, Ricket was to retain during his life-time full and peaceable possession of all the land, and Hazleton was to live with Ricket,—not Ricket with Hazleton,—and Hazleton was to have no right or title in the land until after the death of Ricket. The provision in the article of agreement concerning the land in dispute was held by us in the former opinion to be testamentary only. We adhere to this ruling. "It may be laid down as a general rule that an instrument in the form of a deed, signed, sealed, and delivered as such, if it discloses the intention of the maker respecting the posthumous destination of his property, and is not to operate until after his death, is a will, and not a deed." 19 Cent. Law J. 47.

The difference between the cases cited in the former opinion and the case of Sutton v. Hayden, supra, and other similar cases, is this: that in the former cases the courts seem to think that the grantees could have recovered for any claim or service which they could establish, without seeking relief in a court of equity; in the latter cases the courts evidently proceeded upon the theory that the law furnishes no standard whereby the value of such services can be estimated, and equity can only make an approximation in that direction by decreeing the specific execution of the contract. In the Sutton-Hayden Case the niece gave for many years to the discharge of her manifold cares, down to the period of her aunt's death, an unhesitating and unwearied tenderness and attention, which are only bestowed where affection prompts them. In Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew, 1, A., on the marriage of his daughter with B., agreed to leave his daughter an equal portion with his other children. Of course, in such a case, no compensation could be agreed upon or established, and equity alone could afford relief. In Rhodes v. Rhodes, 3 Sandf. ch. 279, the services therein contracted for could not and were not intended to be compensated with money, and were also incapable of computation by any pecuniary standard. In this case the services of Hazleton with Ricket were so brief, being only for about 18 months, that the value of the same could easily be computed. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

BILL OF PARTICULARS — SUFFICIENCY — HARMLESS ERROR—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

1. A bill of particulars is not subject to the same degree of strictness as a pleading filed in a court of record; it is sufficient if all of the material facts are so stated as to apprise the opposite party of the nature of the demand against him.

2. The admission or exclusion of evidence which does not amount to prejudicial error is not sufficient cause for a reversal of a judgment otherwise supported by evidence.

3. Evidence examined, and found that the verdict of the jury is not excessive.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Finney county; A. J. ABBOTT, Judge.

Brown, Blerer & Cotteral, for plaintiff in error. Hopkins & Hoskinson, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. This was an action to recover a commission as a real-estate agent by C. D. Fitzhugh against William Pate, brought originally in justice's court, and appealed to the district court of Finney county, where the same was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $75. The plaintiff in error asks a reversal of this judgment, upon the grounds (1) that the plaintiff's bill of particulars did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) that the court erred in excluding certain evidence; (3) in admitting certain statements as to what the purchaser of the real estate said; and (4) that the damages recovered were excessive. The bill of particulars is sufficient. It alleged an indebtedness; that the defendant employed the plaintiff to solicit a customer to purchase a certain quarter section of land in Finney county; that defendant agreed to pay 5 per cent., or the customary commission for selling land; that he secured a customer who purchased the land for $2,000; and that the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff. These statements were followed with an allegation that there was due the plaintiff on the sale $100. We think the bill of particulars stated a good cause of action. Pleadings in actions before justices of the peace are not to be viewed with great strictness, and mere technical objections should be disregarded. Krouse v. Pratt, 37 Kan. 651, 16 Pac. Rep. 103; Railway Co. v. Brown, 14 Kan. 557; Lobenstein v. McGraw, 11 Kan. 645. The ruling of the court upon the admission of certain evidence, and admitting statements that the purchaser of the land made, was immaterial error. The statement that Gove, the purchaser, had bought or traded for the land, was admitted by Pate in his own evidence, and this statement made to the plaintiff became immaterial, as it did not materially prejudice the rights of the defendant, and should not cause a reversal of the case. Chellis v. Coble, 37 Kan. 558, 15 Pac. Rep. 505. The last error complained of is that the damages were excessive. The evidence of other real-estate agents was to the effect that 5 per cent. upon the first $1,000, and 2½ per cent. upon sums over $1,000, was the usual commission. There was some evidence that the plaintiff only demanded $10, but the plaintiff's explanation of this was that it was an offer made by way of a compromise. The jury fairly passed upon the evidence, and returned a verdict for $75; and there was evidence to support it. The judgment of the district court should be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURIES—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—INJURIES TO WIFE.

1. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries, the negligence established must be wanton, willful, or malicious, to justify punitive or exemplary damages.

2. Where there is no testimony showing that the negligence is so gross as to amount to wantonness, and no willful or malicious acts are proven, actual or compensatory damages, merely, is the rule.

3. It is error to leave the question of punitive or exemplary damages to the jury, when there is no testimony to warrant a verdict for such damages.

4. In an action by a married woman, living with her husband, to recover damages for personal injuries, she cannot recover for "lost time," for "medical attendance," nor for "impaired capacity to labor." Her services belong to her husband, and he must furnish her with medical attention; hence he alone suffers pecuniary damages because of "loss of time," "medical attention," and "impaired capacity to labor" of the wife, and the action for such damages must be in his name.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Barton county; ANSEL R. CLARK, Judge.

Geo. R. Peck, A. A. Hurd, and Robert

Dunlap, for plaintiff in error. Diffenbacher & Banta, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. October 12, 1886, Jane McGinnis, desiring to go from Great Bend, in Barton county, to the town of Chase, in Rice county, purchased a ticket at the former for the latter place. She rode on the early passenger train from Great Bend to Ellinwood, where she had to change from the main line of plaintiff's railroad to the M. & M. branch of the same. At Ellinwood she got on the way-car of a freight train which carried passengers. The train, which consisted of 14 freight-cars and the way-car, left Ellinwood early in the morning, just as day was breaking. It ran out from the station to the switch which connects the main line with the branch, some half or three-quarters of a mile from the station, where, by reason of the switch having been left open, the engine, tender, and two cars ran off the track. Mrs. McGinnis was sitting on the seat against the side of the car. The sudden stopping of the train threw her from her seat across the car, and down upon the floor. When she got up it was found that her ear was somewhat bruised and scratched, but no other injuries were visible. She walked over to the town, and remained until evening, and then took the passenger train for Chase, where she got into a wagon, and rode into the country a short distance, and remained all night, going back on the train in the morning to Great Bend. Just after the accident, and before Mrs. McGinnis left the car, she was asked if she was hurt, and she said not seriously. Some weeks after the accident she called a physician, and claimed to be injured in the spine, shoulder, breast, eye, and arm. The physician examined her, and found no visible evidence of injury at any of these points. She, however, claimed to be injured, and the doctor said there was some evidence from the pulse and the appearance of her tongue of some disturbance of the system, but he could not tell what it was, nor what produced it, only as he got the cause from Mrs. McGinnis. August 13, 1887, she brought her suit against the plaintiff company for damages. It was tried by the court and a jury, resulting in both a general and a special verdict for the plaintiff below. A motion was made by the defendant below to set aside the general verdict, which was for $2,000, because it did not correspond with the special verdict; which motion was sustained. A motion was then made by the defendant below for a new trial, and one by the plaintiff below for a judgment on the special verdict. The motion for a new trial was overruled; and after the plaintiff had remitted $235, and the court had stricken out $765, the motion for judgment was sustained, and judgment entered for $1,000. The company brings the case here for review.

In view of the remittitur made by the plaintiff below, the first alleged error we will notice is the action of the court in giving the instruction complained of. The seventh instruction, complained of, reads as follows: "The jury are instructed that the petition alleges that the defendant, not regarding its duty, conducted itself so carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully that the train upon which plaintiff was riding ran off the track, whereby and by reason of which the plaintiff was injured. It is the law that in actions of this kind, if the evidence proves that the complaining party received personal injury, and thereby suffered actual damages, and if the evidence further proves that such injuries and damages were sustained by reason of the gross negligence or gross carelessness of the defendant in operating its train, then the jury are not limited in their finding to the mere compensation for the actual damages sustained, but they may give in addition a further sum as exemplary or punitive damages as a salutary example, and as a sort of punishment, to deter the party committing the injury, as well as others, from again offending in like manner." We think this instruction clearly wrong. There is no allegation in the petition that the defendant below was guilty of gross negligence in connection with the accident; and there is no evidence in the case to justify such an instruction. The accident occurred by reason of the switch having been left open. It was not left open by any one connected with the train on which the plaintiff below was injured, and there is no evidence in the case to show who left it open. So far as the evidence in the case is concerned, it may have been turned and left open by a stranger, for whose act the company could not be held responsible. There is nothing in the evidence tending to show wantonness, malice, or reckless disregard of the life of the passenger by any of the agents of the company. On the other hand, the evidence shows that the agents of the company expressed their sorrow that Mrs. McGinnis was hurt, and were sympathetic and gentlemanly in their demeanor. In the case of Railroad Co. v. Kier, 21 Pac. Rep. 770, this court laid down the rule as follows: In an action to recover damages for personal injuries, the negligence established must be wanton, willful, or malicious, to justify punitive or exemplary damages. Where there is no testimony showing that the negligence is so gross as to amount to wantonness, and no willful or malicious acts are proven, actual compensatory damages merely is the rule. Therefore, to leave the question of punitive or exemplary damages to the jury, when there is no testimony to warrant such damages, is improper. In this case the jury found that the company was guilty of gross negligence, and say that such gross negligence consists in leaving the switch open; and yet, as stated above, the evidence does not disclose who left the switch open, — whether an agent or servant of the company or a stranger. This case fairly illustrates the impropriety and danger of leaving the question of punitive or exemplary damages to the jury without evidence to warrant a finding of such damages. Railroad Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489; Dorrah v. Railroad Co., (Miss.) 3 South. Rep. 36; Batterson v. Railroad Co., (Mich.) 13 N. W. Rep. 508; Railroad Co. v. McHenry, 24 Kan. 501-504.

The jury found the plaintiff below was damaged $500 by reason of impaired capacity to labor. This, and the item of $200 found in favor of the plaintiff for loss of time, which was afterwards remitted, are matters for which the plaintiff below cannot recover. She is and was a married woman, living with and keeping house for her husband. She was not engaged in any other business. Her services as the wife of her husband were due to him. She received no compensation therefor, and could not suffer any damages by reason of loss of time or impaired ability to serve him. He alone could recover for such damages. City of Wyandotte v. Agan, 37 Kan. 528, 15 Pac. Rep. 529.

The jury found the plaintiff below was damaged $65 by reason of peril and fright. Damages of this kind are too remote. A person who is placed in peril by the negligence of another, but who escapes without injury, may not recover damages simply because he had been placed in a perilous position. Nor is mere fright the subject of damages. Fright must be accompanied by some actual injury caused thereby, and traceable directly thereto, to be subject of damages. Mere fright, unaccompanied by any injury resulting therefrom, cannot be the subject of damages. Commissioners v. Coultas, L. R. 18 App. Cas. 222.

The jury found the plaintiff below had suffered $500 actual damages. It also found the items constituting these actual damages. It found $200 for loss of time, $35 for cost of medical attendance, $65 for peril and fright, $100 for physical pain and suffering, and $100 for mental anguish. All these itemized parts of the $500 are parts of the actual damages, and included within the whole sum of actual damages as found, to-wit, the sum of $500. But the sum of $235 was remitted by the plaintiff herself, as not recoverable in this action. The sum of $65 found for peril and fright must be eliminated, because damages may not be recovered for peril and fright. This reduces the actual damages to $200, constituted as follows: $100 for physical pain and suffering, and $100 for mental anguish. The plaintiff in error says this last item should not be allowed, because there is no distinct claim for it in the petition. We think there is sufficient in the petition to permit this finding to stand; and, the jury having passed upon the evidence in relation thereto, we decline to strike it out. This leaves $200 of the judgment in favor of the plaintiff to stand. We recommend, therefore, that the judgment be so modified as to reduce it to $200, or a new trial be granted.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

ELLIS et al. v. CROWL et al.

WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT — DAMAGES — RES ADJUDICATA.

A sheriff levied orders of attachment upon a stock of merchandise, as the property of C., and took the same into his possession. E. & O., who claimed the property, brought an action of replevin against the sheriff, demanding a return of the property, together with damages for its unlawful detention. Judgment was given in their favor for a return of the property and for costs; which judgment was fully satisfied and discharged by the return of the goods and the full payment of the costs, as the judgment required. Afterwards an action was brought against the sheriff and the sureties on his official bond, to recover damages for the wrongful taking and detention of the property. Held, that the adjudication in the replevin action is conclusive upon the parties, and a bar to the maintenance of a second action. Held, further, that the sureties of the sheriff can avail themselves of the bar of the former adjudication, and are released from liability.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Pottawattamie county; R. B. SPILLMAN, Judge.

Keller & Noble, for plaintiffs in error. Hayden & Hayden and W. F. Challis, for defendants in error.

JOHNSTON, J. The plaintiffs brought an action against L. W. Crowl, as sheriff, and W. W. Emmons, E. Walker, and A. Richards, as sureties on the official bond of Crowl, to recover damages for the seizure and detention of a stock of merchandise. In their petition, after setting forth the election of Sheriff Crowl, and the execution and acceptance of his official bond, they alleged that certain orders of attachment, issued from the district court of Pottawattamie county, directing the sheriff to attach the property of one T. J. Coverdale, were placed in the hands of the sheriff to be executed according to law; but that, instead of levying upon the property of Coverdale, he wrongfully attached and took into his possession a stock of general merchandise which was the property of the plaintiffs, valued at about $5,000, and retained the possession of the same from the 20th day of September, 1886, until the 16th day of March, 1887. They allege that by reason of the unlawful seizure and detention of the goods, and the cost and expense of recovering the same, they were damaged in the sum of $5,000. The answer of the defendants was a general denial, except that Crowl was sheriff, and the other defendants were sureties on his official bond as such sheriff; and, for a second defense, alleged "that on the 23d day of December, 1886, in the district court of Pottawattamie county, state of Kansas, said Ellis & Osborn, the plaintiffs herein, duly filed their petition against L. W. Crowl, one of the defendants herein, setting forth and alleging their right to the immediate possession of the stock of goods and merchandise mentioned and described in the plaintiff's petition herein, and demanding a return thereof, and a judgment for the sum of $1,500, damages, alleged to have been sustained by reason of the detention, and such proceedings were thereupon had in said suit that said L. W. Crowl appeared and answered to the petition, and a final judgment was therein rendered; that in said action one of the questions litigated and decided was the amount of damage, if any, which the said plaintiffs had sustained by reason of the detention of the said goods by the said L. W. Crowl; that in and by a judgment and decree of said court it was adjudged and determined that the said plaintiffs were entitled to the return of the goods mentioned and described in said petition, and that in default thereof for their value therein stated, and that said plaintiffs also have and recover of and from said L. W. Crowl their costs herein, taxed at $——, which said judgment was fully satisfied and discharged by the return of said goods and chattels, and the full payment of said costs before the commencement of this action; that said plaintiffs utterly failed to recover a judgment for the damages alleged to have been sustained by them in their said petition, or any part thereof." The plaintiffs demurred to the second count of the answer, for the reason that the facts therein stated did not constitute a defense. The demurrer was overruled by the court, and, the plaintiffs electing to stand on their demurrer, judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants for their costs.

The only question involved is whether the former adjudication in the replevin action against Crowl is a bar to this action brought by the same plaintiffs against him and the sureties on his official bond. This question the district court answered in the affirmative, and we think correctly. The plaintiffs had the choice of several remedies for the wrong that had been committed. They were entitled to damages for the wrongful taking and detention, and among other remedies had their action against the sheriff on his bond for the conversion of the property, and also the action of replevin to recover the property or its value, and all damages sustained for its wrongful seizure and detention; and they chose the latter. In that action, according to the allegations of the answer, they not only asked for the recovery of the property attached, but they asked for the damages which they had sustained by reason of the seizure and detention. It is true they did not recover damages in that action, but the right to damages was an issue in the case, and was necessarily tried and determined. The judgment in that case was satisfied before the commencement of this proceeding, and is conclusive upon the parties and their privies upon every question which under the pleadings was or might have been litigated and determined. In the former action the plaintiffs could have recovered full compensation for the loss sustained by the taking and detention of their property, and to as full a measure of damages as if they had first chosen the present remedy. Bell v. Campbell, 17 Kan. 211. In the cited case the question of what was the proper measure of damages in a replevin case was under consideration, and Justice VALENTINE, who delivered the opinion, said: "In some cases, deterioration of the property from injury, neglect, etc., while wrongfully detained, must be considered as an element in the allowance of damages. In other cases, the decrease in the market value of the property must be taken into consideration. In other cases, perhaps few, gross mulct, fraud, and oppression may be taken into consideration for the purpose of giving exemplarry damages. In other cases, the value of the use of the property must be taken into consideration for the purpose of giving compensatory damages. * * * And still in other cases, other damages than those above mentioned are sometimes allowed in actions of replevin. * * * Indeed, in every action of replevin, the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, should be allowed to recover all the damages, not too remote, which he has actually sustained by reason of the wrongful detention of the property, in whatever way such damages may have resulted. Exact compensation for his loss is the true rule." If plaintiffs had first instituted this action instead of replevin, they could have had no more than "exact compensation" for the injury suffered. The issue in this case, so far as damages for detention is concerned, is substantially the same as in the former. The same elements of damages are to be considered, and substantially the same proof would be required to sustain the issue in either case. It is claimed that there is not the requisite identity of parties to constitute the former adjudication a bar to the present action; and this, for the reason that the replevin action was brought against the sheriff only, while the present action is against him and his sureties. The determination of any issue or fact by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive upon both the parties and their privies. If the sheriff can avail himself of the bar of the former adjudication, then there is no question but what his sureties are relieved from responsibility. They are only responsible for his default, and any adjudication which exonerates him is equally effectual in releasing his sureties from liability. Wells, Res Adj. § 105. The matter in controversy here, as presented by the pleadings, was fairly embraced within the issues of the replevin action, and as it was there determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, and the judgment then given has been satisfied and discharged, the controversy must be regarded as forever at rest. Public policy and the well-established rules of law forbid that the unsuccessful party should be allowed to renew the contest or continue a litigation which has been once considered and decided. (Supreme Court of Kansas. April 11, 1891.)

PLEADING—BILL OF PARTICULARS.

"The plaintiff alleges for his cause of action against Jonathan High the use of one two-horse wagon from the 26th day of September, 1887, to the 21st day of November, 1887, 50 days in time between dates, at twenty-five cents per day, $12.50." Held, that the above bill of particulars filed in the justice's court states a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff therein named against Jonathan High.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Cherokee county; GEORGE CHANDLER, Judge.

J. H. Crichton and F. M. Smith, for plaintiff in error. A. H. Skidmore and P. L. Soper, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. This cause was begun before H. I. DEAL, a justice of the peace of Cherokee county, on a claim of $12.50 for the alleged use of a wagon. The bill of particulars was challenged in the justice's court, and was there held to be good. The case was then taken to the district court on a petition in error, where the proceedings had in the justice's court were reviewed and affirmed. In the light of the many decisions of this court holding that almost any statement of plaintiff's cause of action in a justice's court will be held good for reasons in such decisions given, it would seem as though it was about time to let up on a case involving but $12.50, and with no important principle or question therein calling for a decision, after two courts had said the bill of particulars was good; but, as the plaintiff in error does not seem to be satisfied with the decision of two courts against him, we cheerfully add our opinion to that of the courts below, and say that we have examined the bill of particulars in this case, and find it sufficient. It is recommended that the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

BETZ v. WILLIAMS & WHITE LAND & LOAN CO.

REAL-ESTATE AGENT — RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS.

1. A land agent or broker, who has made arrangements with the land-owner that, if he finds a purchaser to take the land at a specified sum, he is to have a stated commission, becomes entitled to his commission for selling the land if he procures for his principal a party with whom he is satisfied, who enters into a written contract with such principal to buy the real estate at the specified price, and is financially able to perform the conditions of the contract, although the principal, having the option by the contract to declare a forfeiture thereof if the installments are not paid in accordance with its terms, declares the contract forfeited on account of the non-payment of an installment when it becomes due.

2. The case of Stewart v. Fowler, 37 Kan. 677, 15 Pac. Rep. 218, referred to and commented upon.

Error from district court, Harvey county; L. HONE, Judge.

Bowman & Bucher, for plaintiff in error. Clarence Spooner, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. The Williams & White Land & Loan Company brought their action against Mrs. A. M. Betz to recover a commission of $195, alleged to be due them from her for services rendered in the sale of certain real estate belonging to her. The trial was had before the court with a jury, and resulted in a verdict for Mrs. Betz. The land and loan company filed its motion for a new trial, which was granted. Mrs. Betz excepted, and brings the case here. The motion for a new trial alleged misconduct of the jury; that the verdict and judgment were not sustained by sufficient evidence, were contrary to the facts, and also contrary to the law. The court, in sustaining the motion for a new trial, did not announce any reason for so doing. It is therefore impossible to say, upon the record presented, that "the trial court passed upon some pure, simple, and unmixed question of law." This court has decided time and again that "the granting of a new trial is largely in the discretion of the trial court; and where a new trial is given, and the record does not show upon what grounds the court granted such new trial, but the record does show errors upon which the trial court might have granted a new trial, the order granting such trial will not be disturbed." Barney v. Dudley, 40 Kan. 247, 19 Pac. Rep. 550; Howell v. Pugh, 25 Kan. 96; City of Sedan v. Church, 29 Kan. 190. As a new trial is to be had, the question of law discussed in the briefs will be referred to.

The contention is that as the contract which Mrs. Betz entered into with T. C. Brewer and F. D. Tripp, the purchasers or parties agreeing to purchase, was not a contract of sale, but simply a contract to sell, that, therefore, the land and loan company did not earn its commission. Stewart v. Fowler, 37 Kan. 677, 15 Pac. Rep. 918, is claimed to be decisive against the right to recover any commission. In that case it was said: "Where a contract for a commission for the sale of land provides that the land must be sold to a person ready, willing, and able to buy, it is not enough that there has been a contract to sell made. There must have been a sale before the commission is earned." But this was further qualified by the facts disclosed in the case, that the purchaser was unwilling to buy according to the terms of the contract, and also his ability to pay the purchase price was not affirmatively shown. It was said in that case that the burden of the purchaser's ability to pay was upon the plaintiff to establish, and therefore that the instructions prayed for in that case, to the effect that the purchaser was ready, willing, and able to perform the conditions of the sale before the commission was earned, should have been given. The facts stated in the opinion must be considered in connection with the law declared in the syllabus. In this case the trial court charged the jury, among other things, as follows: "(2) It is admitted that the defendant had the tract of land in question for sale, and employed the plaintiff as agent to assist in effecting such sale, and that it was agreed between the parties that the rate of commission, in case a commission was earned, should be five per cent. on the first thousand dollars of the purchase money, and two and one-half per cent. on the balance. It is further admitted that the language used by the parties in making their agreement was that, if plaintiff found a purchaser, he was to sell the land for $85 per acre, making $6,800, and was to receive therefor the above-named commission. (3) It is further admitted that the plaintiff found and offered, as purchasers of the land, one Tripp and one Brewer, and that the defendant and her husband on the one part, and said Tripp and Brewer on the other part, entered into a written agreement, which has been read in evidence, whereby said defendant and her husband agreed to sell said land for the said sum of $6,800 to said second parties, and said second parties agreed to purchase said land and pay therefor the said sum, divided in payments as specified in the contract; and it was further agreed that, in case the second parties fail to make any payment as specified, the defendant could declare said contract determined and forfeited, and should have the right to retain any purchase money already paid. (4) And it is further admitted that the second parties, Tripp and Brewer, failed to make the second payment, in amount $900, as required by the terms of the contract, and thereafter the defendant declared and treated said contract as determined, and all the rights of the second parties thereunder as forfeited. (5) The jury are instructed that the contract above described is not, in its terms, a contract of sale, or a contract by which a sale was effected, but is simply a contract to sell upon certain named conditions. By its terms, Tripp and Brewer bound themselves to buy the land and pay the purchase money, and the defendant had the right in law to hold them to the terms of the contract. Upon the default of Tripp and Brewer, she had the option to sue for the enforcement of the contract, or declare it at an end, so far as they were concerned. (6) But, as to the rights of the plaintiff in this transaction, the court instructs the jury that if Tripp and Brewer, who were put in communication with the defendant by the plaintiff, or either of them, at the time the contract was made, were not only willing to purchase the land in question, but solvent, and able to pay for said land according to the terms fixed by the defendant, in that case the plaintiff, by what he did, earned the commission agreed upon, and has the right to recover such commission, notwithstanding the fact that said Tripp and Brewer failed to make the second payment as agreed. (7) The jury are instructed that, Tripp and Brewer having failed in punctuality in making payment, it is not to be presumed that they were solvent and able to pay, but the burden of showing this fact, by the greater weight of the evidence, is upon the plaintiff."

These instructions properly presented the law to the jury. There was evidence offered upon the trial tending to show that Tripp and Brewer, or at least Brewer, was worth $9,700 above all of his indebtedness and exemptions, and therefore was able to buy. It is true that when pay-day came it does not appear that he was ready and willing to make his payments according to the written contract of sale, but Mrs. Betz could have enforced the payments specified in the written contract, and; as the contract gave her the sole option to forfeit it in case of failure of payment according to its terms, she need not have declared a forfeiture, unless she preferred so to do. Tripp and Brewer could not, by the terms of the contract, declare any forfeiture. They had no option in the matter. Therefore, if the evidence concerning the ability of Brewer to buy is to be believed, the land and loan company earned its commission and is entitled to recover. Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. St. 42; Stewart v. Fowler, supra; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Buckingham v. Harris, (Colo.) 15 Pac. Rep. 819; Goss v. Brown, (Minn.) 18 N. W. Rep. 290; Willes v. Smith, (Wis.) 45 N. W. Rep. 666. We gather from the briefs that the trial court set the verdict aside because the jury did not follow its instructions, or because, without any good reason therefor, they arbitrarily disregarded the evidence concerning the ability of Brewer to buy. The order of the district court granting a new trial will be affirmed.

All the justices concurring.

PETTIGREW v. LEWIS et al.

MALPRACTICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for malpractice against physicians and surgeons to recover damages for an alleged unskillful and negligent operation upon the plaintiff's eye, which resulted in injury and disease, the plaintiff must affirmatively prove that the injury and disease were produced by the operation, and that the defendants did not exercise ordinary skill and care in performing the operation. Proof that the plaintiff's eyes have become weak and sore since the operation was performed is insufficient to establish a liability against the defendants.

Error from district court, Elk county; M. G. TROUP, Judge.

J. D. McBrian & Son, for plaintiff in error. A. M. Jackson, for defendants in error.

JOHNSTON, J. Sarah A. Pettigrew brought an action against J. F. Lewis and J. F. Willard, partners as Lewis & Willard, to recover damages in the sum of $5,000, alleged to have resulted from a negligent, careless, and unskillful operation performed on her eye by Willard. She alleged that defendants held themselves out to the public as skillful surgeons, well qualified to perform operations upon the eyes and to treat the same; that she had an affection of one eye called "strabismus," and that the defendants undertook to straighten the eye, but performed the operation in such a negligent, careless, and unskillful manner that her eye became sore and weak, rendering her unable to complete her education or to perform ordinary household work. She avers that she has suffered and still suffers great physical pain in consequence of the unskillful operation and treatment, which has continued to increase since the time of the operation. The answer of the defendants was a general denial. The parties proceeded to a trial upon the issues formed, but after the plaintiff had concluded her evidence the court sustained a demurrer thereto, holding that it was insufficient to establish a liability against the defendants, or either of them, and gave judgment accordingly. The plaintiff complains, and urges that the testimony offered by her was sufficient to take the cause to the jury. The sufficiency of the evidence is the only question that we need to consider. Plaintiff offered proof to show that an operation was performed on her left eye by Dr. Willard on January 16, 1886; that prior to the operation her eye was strong and in good condition, except as to the affection of strabismus. The operation was successful so far as straightening her eye was concerned, but she stated that afterwards neither the eye operated on nor the right eye was as strong as before. She stated that some time after the operation she had what she called "a spell of the sore eyes." The lids were afterwards somewhat inflamed, and her eye watered when she was out in the wind or cold. When she returned to school she found her eyes were weak, and that it was necessary to bring objects closer to her in order to see clearly. It further appeared, however, that a father, brother, and sister were afflicted with sore and defective eyes. Was the proof sufficient to sustain a cause of action against the defendants? We agree with the district court that it did not show the operation to have been unskillfully and negligently performed, nor yet that the present condition of her eyes was the result of the operation that was performed. No proof was offered of the instruments used or the manner in which the operation was performed. No medical or scientific evidence was offered showing the cause of the present condition of the plaintiff's eyes, nor that the defendants were negligent or careless in the performance of the operation. In fact no witnesses having special skill or knowledge with reference to the treatment of the eyes were introduced in behalf of the plaintiff. The burden rested on the plaintiff to show a want of due care, skill, and diligence in the operation, and that the defective condition now existing is the result of such want of care, skill, and diligence. The defendants were not held to the exercise of the highest degree of skill, nor as warranting a cure. It is clear from the evidence that there was no special contract to that effect; and, while something is claimed by the defendants on account of a variance between the pleadings and proof, we agree with the claim of the plaintiff that the doctor, having undertaken the operation, was held to the exercise of due care and skill. "His contract as implied in law is that he possesses that reasonable degree of learning, skill, and experience which is ordinarily possessed by others of his profession; that he will use reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in the treatment of the case which he undertakes; and that he will use his best judgment in all cases of doubt as to the proper course of treatment. He is not responsible in damages for want of success, unless it is shown to result from a want of ordinary skill and learning, and such as is ordinarily possessed by others of his profession, or from want of ordinary care and attention. He is not presumed to engage for extraordinary skill or for extraordinary diligence and care, nor can he be made responsible in damages for errors in judgment or mere mistakes in matters of reasonable doubt or uncertainty." Tefft v. Wilcox, 6 Kan. 46; Branner v. Stormont, 9 Kan. 51; 14 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 78. There was no proof, however, of a want of skill or care on the part of the defendants; and negligence cannot be presumed. The mere fact that the plaintiff's eyes have been weak and sore since the operation was performed does not prove negligence in the defendants, nor establish a liability against them. To maintain her action, the plaintiff should have offered the evidence of skilled witnesses to show that the present condition of her eyes was the result of the operation, and that it was unskillfully and negligently performed. "This evidence must, from the very nature of the case, come from experts, as other witnesses are not competent to give it, nor are juries supposed to be conversant with what is peculiar with the science and practice of the professions of medicine and surgery to that degree which will enable them to dispense with all explanations." Tefft v. Wilcox, supra. "The question whether a surgical operation has been unskillfully performed or not is one of science, and is to be determined by the testimony of skillful surgeons as to their opinion, founded either wholly on an examination of the part operated upon, or partly on such examination, and partly on information derived from the patient; or partly on such examination, partly on such information, and partly on facts conceded or proved at the trial; or partly on such examination and partly on facts conceded or proved at the trial." McCl. Mal. 304. It would have been easy for the plaintiff to have submitted to an examination by an experienced physician or oculist capable of determining whether the condition of her eyes was the result of the operation, and whether that operation was performed with reasonable skill and care. Cases may arise where there is such gross negligence and want of skill in performing an operation as to dispense with the testimony of professional witnesses; but not so in the present case. It is not conceded or proved that the weakness of her eyes had materially resulted from the operation; and, even if it was, the questions would still arise: Was she in a fit physical condition to undergo the operation? Did the defendants, before beginning the operation, make due examination to determine her condition and the necessity for an operation? Was the operation performed in a careful and skillful manner? What was the standard of professional skill and scientific knowledge required of these men in that locality? Was the after-treatment and were the directions given for the subsequent care of the eye such as would meet the approval of the profession in its present advanced condition? If a mistake was made, was it a case of reasonable doubt or uncertainty or a mere error in judgment for which there is no responsibility? It was the duty of the defendants "to exercise ordinary care and skill, and, this being a duty imposed by law, it will be presumed that the operation was carefully and skillfully performed, in the absence of proof to the contrary. As all persons are presumed to have duly performed any duty imposed on them, negligence cannot be presumed, but must be affirmatively proved. This principle is especially applicable in suits against physicians and surgeons for injuries sustained by reason of alleged unskillful and careless treatment." State v. Housekeeper, 70 Md. 171, 16 Atl. Rep. 382. The present condition of her eyes may be attributed to many other causes. It may be the result of disease contracted in that vicinity, or from misuse and improper exposure of her eyes; or it may be an hereditary complaint similar to that with which her brother, sister, and other members of the family were afflicted. Whatever may be the cause, we cannot say that it is the result of the fault or negligence of the defendants. The operation may have been performed at a suitable time, with proper instruments, and in the most skillful and efficient manner, and yet have failed; and in the absence of competent proof, showing that the defect in plaintiff's eyes was due to a want of ordinary care and skill on the part of the defendants, the district court ruled correctly in sustaining the demurrer to the evidence. See Getchell v. Hill, 21 Minn. 464; McCandless v. McWha, 25 Pa. St. 95; Leighton v. Sargent, 7 Fost. (N. H.) 460; Holtzman v. Hoy, 19 Ill. App. 459; Vanhoozer v. Berghoff, 90 Mo. 487, 3 S. W. Rep. 72; State v. Housekeeper, 70 Md. 162, 16 Atl. Rep. 382; Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 766. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

DAVIS v. JENKINS.

SALE OF LAND—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—DAMAGES—ATTACHMENT AFTER VERDICT.

1. Where a party who claims to possess a right to a timber-culture claim under the laws of the United States, and to own and control the relinquishment of the same, fraudulently misrepresents the location and quality of the land to one who, relying upon his representations, purchases and pays for his relinquishment and right, such purchaser is entitled to recover the damages actually sustained; and the fact that the purchaser, in making his entry, filed an affidavit in the United States land-office that the land was prairie, and devoid of timber, will not defeat his recovery.

2. In the action to recover damages for the fraud practiced by the seller upon the purchaser, the non-taxable character of land so entered is a proper consideration for the jury in determining the value of such a claim and right of entry.

3. An attachment may be allowed in a civil action for the recovery of money after the return of a verdict, and before the final judgment thereon is rendered and recorded.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Finney county; A. J. ABBOTT, Judge.

Enoch E. Jenkins recovered a judgment against Frank Davis of $900 in the district court of Finney county. In his petition he alleged that the "plaintiff, on or about the 8th day of October, 1886, bargained with the said defendant to buy of him a relinquishment of a certain tree claim and piece or parcel of land of the said defendant, which relinquishment he (said defendant) represented to own and control, and the land included in said claim and relinquishment thereto to be good, level, prairie sod, and tillable land, and situated in Finney county, Kansas, 6 miles west of Ivanhoe, and suitable for timber-culture and agricultural purposes, and especially desirable, and would just suit the plaintiff, who then and there expressed a desire to purchase, enter, and cultivate a claim under the U. S. land laws, known as 'timber culture claim.' Plaintiff, further complaining of the defendant, says that at the time of said bargaining said defendant well knew that each and all of his representations so made as aforesaid by said defendant were false; that the said plaintiff, then confiding in the truth of said representations, and believing them to be true, and supposing that said defendant actually owned and controlled said relinquishment, and that the land included in said claim so relinquished was good, level, prairie sod, and tillable land, and was situated in Finney county, Kansas, 6 miles west of Ivanhoe, and was suitable for agricultural and timber-culture purposes, agreed to pay for said relinquishment and claim the sum of seventy-five (75) dollars, and did then pay said defendant the sum so agreed upon as aforesaid, and did use and exhaust his (said plaintiff's) rights under the timber-culture laws on said tract of land, defendant representing that he had just filed a relinquishment thereto in the U. S. land-office, so plaintiff could file and enter same as a tree claim, whereas in truth and in fact the said defendant did not own nor control, and had not owned nor controlled, any such relinquishment; that the land represented to be included in the claim conveyed by said defendant, as aforesaid, was unappropriated public domain, and had never been entered under any of the public land laws, and was not good prairie sod, and tillable land, situated in Finney county, Kansas, 6 miles west of Ivanhoe, but was rough, hilly, mountainous sand hills, and untillable piles of pure sand, and was situated — miles south of Hartland, in Hamilton county, Kansas, in the country known as the 'Sand Hills,' and is unfit for agricultural purposes and for timber-culture purposes, and is wholly worthless; whereby the said plaintiff has sustained damages to the amount of fifteen hundred (1,500) dollars, to-wit: The sum so paid as aforesaid, to-wit, seventy-five (75) dollars; (2) the value of said plaintiff's rights under the timber-culture laws, to-wit, seven hundred and fifty (750) dollars; and (3) the difference in value between 160 acres of good, level, prairie sod, and tillable land, situated as represented by said defendant, (less the government price,) and 160 acres of rough, hilly, mountainous sand hills, and untillable piles of pure sand, situated as the facts show it, less the government price therefor. Wherefore the said plaintiff pays judgment against said defendant for the said sum of fifteen hundred (1,500) dollars, his damages so as aforesaid sustained, for costs of suit, and for all other and further proper relief." The defendant admitted in his answer the sale of his interest in the claim, but denied that he represented the same to be good, level, prairie sod, and tillable land, situated in Finney county, six miles west of Ivanhoe, and suitable for timber-culture and agricultural purposes, or that he made any representations whatever as to the quality of soil, or purposes for which it was adapted, or where the same was located. Upon the issues framed, a trial was had before a jury, which resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. After the verdict was returned, but before judgment was given, the court, on the application of the plaintiff, granted an order of attachment, which was levied upon the real estate of the defendant. A motion was made to dissolve the attachment upon various grounds, and the court sustained the motion as to the homestead of the defendant, but overruled it as to other real estate which had been levied upon. The defendant brings the case to this court for review.

H. R. Boyd, for plaintiff in error. Brown, Blerer & Cotteral, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J., (after stating the facts as above.) This case is founded on the alleged fraud and deceit practiced by Davis on Jenkins in a transaction relating to a timber-culture claim, and we fail to see why the petition does not set forth a cause of action. In substance, it avers that Davis, who claimed a right under the United States laws to a tract of land, and that he owned and controlled the relinquishment of the same, represented it to be well-located, good, level, tillable land, suitable for timber-culture and agricultural purposes, and especially adapted to the wants of Jenkins, who wished to enter a timber-culture claim under the United States land laws. He confided in the truth of the representations made by Davis, and purchased and paid him for the relinquishment and claim. He avers that the representations were false in every particular; that Davis had no right in the claim, and did not own or control the relinquishment thereto; that the tract was not located where he represented that it was; that it was not level, tillable land, and not suitable for agricultural and timber-culture purposes, but, on the contrary, was rough, hilly, mountainous sand hills, and untillable piles of pure sand, and wholly worthless. Jenkins alleged that by reason of the fraud and deceit practiced upon him by Davis he had parted with his property, exhausted his rights under the timber-culture laws of the United States, and been otherwise damaged in the total sum of $1,500. The fact that Jenkins was required to make an affidavit when he placed his timber-culture filing on the land does not debar him from recovering the damages which he actually sustained. It is claimed that, if he complied with the act of congress in making the affidavit, he must have known the character of the land, and therefore could not have relied upon the representations of Davis. In this affidavit the applicant swears that the land was prairie, or devoid of timber, but is not required to state anything in regard to the quality of the soil, or the purposes for which it was adapted. 1 Supp. Rev. St. U. S. 348. Jenkins may have been acquainted with the fact that the land was prairie, and devoid of timber, without having a knowledge of the exact location, or whether it was good, tillable land, suitable for agriculture and the cultivation of timber. If he relied upon the representations, as alleged, and was thereby deceived to his injury, he may recover for the damage sustained, although he might have ascertained by a further search and inquiry that the statements made by Davis were untrue. McKee v. Eaton, 28 Kan. 226; Claggett v. Crall, 12 Kan. 393.

In instructing the jury, the court stated that land entered under the timber-culture act was not taxable from the time the entry is made until final proof is made and a final certificate is received from the register of the land-office, and that final proof may be made at the expiration of 8 years, but it is not necessarily made until the expiration of 13 years. It is not claimed that this is an incorrect statement of the law, but it is contended that it is inapplicable in the case. The non-taxable feature of a timber-culture claim was a proper consideration for the jury in determining the value of such a claim, and of the right to enter the same. No error was committed by the court in granting an attachment after the return of the verdict. The statute provides that an attachment may issue "at or after the commencement" of an action. The order may therefore be granted at any time during the pendency of the action, and before the final determination of the same. In the present case, after the verdict was returned, notice of a motion for a new trial was immediately given, and the motion was duly filed within the statutory time. It is true that after a judgment is recorded it is effectual, notwithstanding the pendency of a motion for a new trial, (Church v. Goodin, 22 Kan. 527;) but here the judgment was reserved until the disposition of the motion for a new trial. The plaintiff in error asks, what is to be gained by the levy of an attachment, after verdict, upon real estate, since the judgment, when finally rendered, becomes a lien upon the real estate from the first day of the term of court? A sufficient answer to the inquiry is that no judgment was recorded; and if the court had set aside the verdict which had been returned, and had granted a new trial, there would have been no lien nor any protection against the fraudulent disposition of the real estate by the plaintiff in error. The purpose of an attachment is to seize and hold the property until it can be subjected to execution; and a party is entitled to the benefit of an attachment until the entry of a judgment upon which an execution may issue. Until the judgment is finally entered, an attachment may be had, and a lien of the same continues till it is merged in the judgment finally rendered and recorded. The priority obtained by the attachment continues after the entry of judgment until execution issues. Speelman v. Chaffee, 5 Colo. 247; Lynch v. Crary, 52 N. Y. 181; Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121; Schieb v. Baldwin, 22 How. Pr. 278; Drake, Attachm. § 224.

There is some contention with respect to the sufficiency of the evidence; but the record does not properly show that all of the evidence is preserved, and hence no consideration of that subject is demanded. Hill v. Bank, 42 Kan. 364, 22 Pac. Rep. 324. We have read the testimony contained in the record, however, and are inclined to the opinion that it is sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment that were given. Judgment affirmed. All the justices concurring.

CONWELL v. LOWRANCE.

PERMISSION TO SUE RECEIVER—REVOCATION.

After the court has granted permission to the first mortgagee of chattels, who was in possession of the mortgaged property when a receiver appointed on an ex parte application took possession of them, to sue the receiver in replevin, and the suit had been commenced, and all proceedings had conformed to the order of the court, and a large amount of costs had accrued, it is an abuse of the discretionary power of the court to revoke the permission to sue the receiver and dismiss the action.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Finney county; A. J. ABOTT, Judge.

H. R. Boyd and Brown, Bierer & Cotteral, for plaintiff in error. Geo. E. Morgan, H. F. Mason, and Hopkins & Hoskinson, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. The material facts are: On the 1st day of December, 1888, the plaintiff in error was in the possession of a stock of drugs and drug-store fixtures, situate in a building on lot 10, in block 36, in Garden City, known as the "George H. De Waters Drug-Store." The plaintiff in error took possession of these goods under a claim that he had a chattel mortgage that was a first lien on said stock of drugs, to secure a bona fide indebtedness to him, and that the conditions of said chattel mortgage had been broken. On that day, to-wit, the 1st day of December, 1888, the said George H. De Waters executed and delivered to the Finney County National Bank, to F. Finnup, and R. M. Morton, a chattel mortgage on the same stock of drugs and drug-store fixtures, to secure the bank in the sum of $1,500, Morton in the sum of $550, and Finnup in the sum of $360. On this day these parties, the bank, Morton, and Finnup, commenced an action against De Waters, asking judgments for the respective amounts due the plaintiffs, and making other creditors of De Waters parties defendant, requiring them to answer and set up their respective liens, asking for the appointment of a receiver, the sale of the stock of merchandise, and an application of the proceeds of sale to the payment of the liens thereon in the order of their priority. An ex parte application by the plaintiffs in this action was made to the judge at chambers for the appointment of a receiver, and one was appointed on the said 1st day of December, 1888. The receiver took the oath and filed a bond as required by law, that was duly approved, and made a demand on Conwell for the stock of drugs and fixtures. Conwell refused to deliver them to the receiver. The judge of the district court made an order at chambers, directing the sheriff to take the stock of drugs from Conwell, and deliver them to the receiver, and this was done. The sheriff was ordered to bring Conwell before the judge to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. The judge finally concluded that he had no power at chambers to punish Conwell for contempt, and ordered him to appear before the court on the 1st day of January, 1889, it being one of the judicial days of the regular January term of the district court of Finney county. On the 13th day of December, 1888, Conwell made an application for leave to sue the receiver in replevin, to the judge of the district court at chambers, and leave was granted. Under the order granting leave to sue, and on the 14th day of December, 1888, Conwell commenced an action in replevin against the receiver, an order of delivery was issued, and the sheriff put Conwell in possession of the stock of drugs. On the 14th day of January the court, of its own motion, set aside the order allowing Conwell to sue the receiver in replevin, and then dismissed the action brought by Conwell. All proper exceptions were saved, a motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and the cause brought here for review. On the hearing of the motion to vacate the order granting Conwell permission to sue the receiver in replevin, Conwell offered to show by De Waters that he had a valid bona fide chattel mortgage upon the property that was a first lien thereon, but this was refused. It appears from the record that the defendants in error allege that Conwell held possession of the stock of goods under and by virtue of a bill of sale that was claimed to be fraudulent.

The power of the court to appoint a receiver must be exercised with great caution, and with a due regard to the rights and interests of all parties interested in the property. It is not to be allowed when other adequate remedy exists. High, Rec. 369. It is only in extreme cases that a court will appoint a receiver for chattel property in possession of a mortgagee having the first lien, and the obvious reason for this is that the statutes of the state authorize the mortgagee to take possession on condition broken, and this gives him the absolute legal right to possession; and, to authorize a receiver to take the possession of the mortgaged chattels away from one having apparently the first lien, there must be a very strong showing of fraud. This is a familiar doctrine, to be found both in Beach and High on Receivers. It is said by Jones on Chattel Mortgages, § 439: "The appointment of a receiver of mortgaged chattels held by a mortgagee in possession will only be made in cases of pressing necessity, in order to secure the rights of the mortgagor or others claiming under him." A mortgagee in possession will not be dispossessed by the appointment of a receiver on the ground that the property in controversy is a newspaper and printing establishment, which it is desirous to sell as an active business in actual operation. Rapier v. Paper Co., 64 Ala. 330. A mortgagee rightfully in the possession of mortgaged property cannot be deprived of it by the levy of an execution upon it, or the making of an attachment of it by a creditor of the mortgagor. Pike v. Colvin, 67 Ill. 227; Marsh v. Lawrence, 4 Cow. 461; Moore v. Murdock, 26 Cal. 514; Volney Stamps v. Gilman, 43 Miss. 456; Troy v. Smith, 33 Ala. 469. If an officer attempt to take the property upon an execution issued against a mortgagor, the execution not being a lien prior to the mortgage, the mortgagee is justified in forcibly resisting the officer. Wentworth v. People, 4 Scam. 550. But, if the officer succeeds in taking the property, the mortgagee may sue him for conversion, and recover the value of the property, (Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530; Nelson v. Wheelock, 46 Ill. 25,) or the value of his interest in the goods, (Becker v. Dunham, 27 Minn. 32, 6 N. W. Rep. 406; Bailey v. Godfrey, 54 Ill. 507.) A mortgagee of a chattel is entitled to the possession of it against a collector of taxes, who, after the mortgage, has distrained it for a tax due from the mortgagor. Fuller v. Day, 103 Mass. 481. These citations are sufficient to show how strongly the courts regard the right of possession of a first mortgagee of chattels. Applying this principle to the facts in this case, so far as they are developed by the record, we doubt whether the showing was sufficient to authorize the appointment of a receiver. The appointment was made on an ex parte application in an action on chattel mortgages executed by the debtor to the plaintiffs, at a time when the mortgaged property was in the actual possession of Conwell, the action being commenced within a few hours after the execution of the chattel mortgages. Conwell ought to have had notice of the application; he resided and the goods were situated in the same town in which the order was made. Under these circumstances, we regard the order made to allow Conwell to sue the receiver in replevin, and determine his statutory right to the possession of the goods, as one in the interest of justice, and as one having a tendency to correct the doubtful order appointing the receiver. Conwell obeyed the order allowing him to sue, in letter and spirit, and no good cause is shown why the permission to sue should be revoked. It is a matter resting very largely in the discretion of the court, but it is a legal discretion, and not arbitrary power, and is to be exercised with due regard to the rights of parties. Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, we do not think it was a fair exercise of the discretionary power of the court to dismiss the action of replevin brought by Conwell against the receiver after permission to sue had been granted, in the interests of justice, as we deem it, after Conwell had complied with all the requirements of the order, after a large amount of costs must have been necessarily created, and after it is apparent that Conwell's right to possession can be speedily determined by this form of action. Of course, the appointment of the receiver cannot be questioned or passed upon in such action, the only inquiry being whether Conwell, by virtue of his chattel mortgage, being a first lien on the chattels, is entitled to possession, or the receiver, by virtue of his appointment and the order of the court directing him to take possession. If the chattel mortgage of Conwell is void or fraudulent for any reason, it can be shown in this action as affecting his right to possession. We recommend that the order of the district court revoking permission to sue the receiver, and dismissing the action, be reversed, and the cause remanded for trial.

OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW—REVIEW ON APPEAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

1. Motions and questions not ruled upon by the trial court, or not otherwise disposed of, will not be noticed by this court.

2. When a cause is submitted to the court for trial and a jury waived, and there is a conflict of evidence on every material fact, and there is some evidence to sustain the general findings of the trial court necessarily included in the judgment, such findings and judgment will not be disturbed.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Cheyenne county; Louis K. PRATT, Judge.

M. A. Wilson and Rossington, Smith & Dallas, for plaintiff in error. S. W. McElroy, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. Bird commenced this action in the district court of Cheyenne county, claiming that on the 11th day of April, 1885, Eva Ostrander, Charles Muller, Samuel McKnight, and Lawrence Flanigan each purchased a quarter section of school land situate in Cheyenne county from the state of Kansas, the whole purchase embracing section 36, township 2 south, of range 46 west. This purchase was made under the provisions of the "Act to provide for the sale of school lands," approved February 22, 1864, and acts amendatory and supplemental thereto. That certificates of purchase were issued to each by the county clerk of Rawlins county, to which the county of Cheyenne was then attached. That these certificates of purchase were duly assigned by these respective purchasers to Beverstock and Cochran, who were purchasers for value, having paid $100 for each assignment. He further alleges that, after said certificates were assigned and were in the possession of Beverstock and Cochran, they were either lost or stolen, without fault or negligence on their part; that after they were so lost or stolen they were sold by some of the defendants without the knowledge or consent of said Beverstock and Cochran; that the names of Beverstock and Cochran were erased from the assignments made to them by the original purchasers, without their knowledge or consent; that the defendants, Henry K. White, E. S. Douglass, and E. K. White claim to be present owners of said certificates of purchase of the several pieces of school land. He further alleges that, when it was discovered that said certificates of purchase then owned and in the possession of Beverstock and Cochran were lost or stolen, such proceedings were had as to cause the clerk of Rawlins county to deliver to Beverstock and Cochran certified copies of said certificates of purchase and the assignments thereon to Beverstock and Cochran; that on the 2d day of October, 1885, Beverstock and Cochran, for and in consideration of the sum of $885 in hand paid them by one Charles B. France, duly assigned said certificates of purchase to the said France, and that said Charles B. France did subsequently assign said certificates of purchase to the said Bird, who, by virtue of such assignments, became the absolute and unqualified owner of the same; that the assignments of Beverstock and Cochran to France, and from France to Bird, are in writing, indorsed on the back of the certified copies; that afterwards Bird tendered to the treasurer of Rawlins county all the interest due and payable on said four certificates of purchase, who refused to accept the same; but that said treasurer did permit the defendant E. K. White to pay the same; that in 1886 the said Bird, desiring to make final payment of the four certificates of purchase, tendered to the county treasurer the full purchase price for said land, together with interest from the day of sale to the day of tender, which was refused. Attached to the petition are copies of the four certificates of purchase and the written assignments of the four original purchasers to Beverstock and Cochran, the petition being verified. Among the other prayers for relief was one that the defendants be restrained from claiming any interest in and to said certificates of purchase. A temporary injunction was allowed until the final hearing. The defendants Henry K. White, who was sued as E. K. White, E. S. Douglass, and C. F. Mathieson, filed the answer, admitting the purchase by Flanigan, McKnight, Ostrander, and Muller, as described in the petition, and that each received a certificate of purchase. They admit that they now claim by virtue of certain assignments made by the said original purchasers and their assignees to be the absolute owners of each and all of these certificates of purchase, each owning an undivided third interest therein. They further aver that long before they or any of their co-defendants acquired any interest in said certificates, and before the pretended acquisition of any interest in said certificates of purchase by Bird, the said Beverstock and Cochran repeatedly disavowed any claim or interest to or in said land or in said certificates, and caused the same to be sold without any visible appearance of any ownership by them therein, and to be delivered to those under whom these de-defendants claim title to said certificates, they buying the same from other persons than Beverstock and Cochran, and paying therefor upon the faith of such representations and disclaimer of ownership and interest therein by said Beverstock and Cochran. This answer is verified. Of the other defendants, Hendricks, Russell, Tindall, and Hemming filed disclaimers. The defendants Way and Kerndt made default, and filed no answers, so that the real controversy is between Bird on the one hand and White, Douglass, and Mathieson on the other. The cause was tried to the court, and a general judgment entered in the following language: "This day this cause came on to be heard on the issue joined between the parties, the plaintiff in person, and by Attorneys S. W. McElroy and John D. Hayes, and the defendants by their attorneys, James Donovan and M. A. Wilson. The plaintiff introduced his testimony and rested, then the defendants their testimony and rested, and the court, being fully advised in the premises, do find that the plaintiff, at the commencement of this action, was and now is the owner of four certificates of purchase, as follows, to-wit, the same being fully described in plaintiff's petition, and embracing the entire section thirty-six, in township two south, of range forty-one west, in Cheyenne county, Kansas. The court further finds that the said plaintiff derived his title to the said certificates of purchase from one Charles B. France, and said France his title from Beverstock and Cochran, and Beverstock and Cochran from the four original purchasers of the said land, to whom the state of Kansas issued certificates of purchase, which were on the 11th day of April, 1885, assigned to said Beverstock and Cochran, and Beverstock and Cochran to Charles B. France duly assigned October 2, 1885, and said Charles B. France transferred same to the plaintiff herein before the commencement of this action; that the said four original certificates issued to the four original purchasers were lost and unlawfully mutilated, and the names of Beverstock and Cochran were erased from each of said certificates of purchase, and afterwards the name of C. P. Russell was inserted in the said original assignments in place of the names of Beverstock and Cochran, the original and first assignees, and that such erasure was made, and the name of C. P. Russell inserted, without the knowledge and consent of Beverstock and Cochran, or either of them; that the defendants Henry K. White, Edward S. Douglass, and C. F. Mathieson are now in possession of the four original certificates of assignment, and claim their title to the same from said C. P. Russell, and C. P. Russell from N. A. Way. And the court further finds that the said N. A. Way had no interest in said certificates or right to said land; that the fraudulent alteration of said four assignments was illegal and void, and passed no title to said certificates, nor any valid interest in said land. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the plaintiff's interest and title to said certificates of purchase is paramount and superior to the interest of the defendants, and he entitled to a patent to section 36, township 2 south, of range 41 west, from the state of Kansas upon the payment of the amount due the state upon said contracts, and the furthersum of one hundred three and 68-100 dollars to the clerk of the court for Henry K. White, the same being the amount the said White has paid as interest on the said contracts; and it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the interest of the defendants in and to said land and certificates of purchase be forever canceled and held for naught, and the plaintiff's ownership in and to said certificates of purchase and right to said land therein described forever sustained, and the defendants pay the costs of this suit, taxed at $41.45, for which let execution issue." A motion for a new trial was overruled, and White, Douglass, and Mathieson bring the case here for review.

Only two assignments of error are insisted upon here. The first is that these plaintiffs in error were entitled to a judgment on the pleadings, and the second is that the trial court erred in not sustaining the motion of the plaintiff in error in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence. Numerous inquiries present themselves on a perusal of this record, and their determination may have the effect to dispose of a number of questions discussed by counsel for plaintiffs in error. The case was tried by the court on the 15th day of May, 1888, and on that day a motion was filed by attorneys for White, Douglass, and Mathieson, asking that judgment be rendered in their favor because the evidence introduced by the plaintiff (Bird) fails to show a cause of action, and because the testimony of the plaintiff fails to show any legal or equitable interest in his favor. The record fails to show anywhere that there was any ruling or disposition whatever of this motion. The attorneys of the plaintiffs in error classify this motion as a demurrer to the evidence, and assuming this to be a demurrer, still the lower court never acted on it, and we cannot. The motion for a new trial assigned as causes therefor the following: First, that the decision is contrary to the evidence; second, that the plaintiff, Benjamin Bird, is not the party in interest, and has no legal or equitable standing in this court, as is shown by the testimony and the record; third, that the plaintiff in this action relies on duplicate certificates issued by the county clerk of Rawlins county, Kan., without any authority by law; fourth, that Beverstock and Cochran made an assignment on the duplicate certificates, knowing at the same time that the original certificates were in the hands of other parties; fifth, that there is no legal evidence of any trust being established between France and Bird, or that C. B. France held any trust in said duplicate certificates for Benjamin Bird; sixth, that whatever interest is claimed by Bird was acquired by a quitclaim deed from Beverstock and Cochran; seventh, that no instruments in writing have been introduced in evidence to establish any legal or equitable interest of Benjamin Bird, C. B. France, or Beverstock and Cochran.

It will be noticed that the only statutory cause assigned for a new trial was that the decision was contrary to the evidence, and we have to indulge in a very liberal construction of statutory expression to construe this into the scope of the sixth subdivision of section 306 of the Civil Code. The other causes assigned for a new trial are (if they are anything) errors of law occurring at the trial, but they are not saved by proper objections and exceptions, and are general statements of propositions that seem to have lodgment in the minds of counsel, but never formulated by distinct and specific questions to witnesses, nor called to the attention of the court as legal questions arising on the facts presented at the trial; so that it seems to us that the only question fairly presented by the record is whether the judgment is sustained by sufficient evidence. We find that certified copies of the original certificates of purchase are attached to the amended petition, and that these show a written assignment from the original purchasers to Beverstock and Cochran, duly acknowledged by each purchaser before the county clerk. This at least makes a prima facie case that the original certificates were so assigned. One of the controverted questions of fact was whether they were so assigned, and there is some evidence that they were not, especially by Hemming, and there is also some evidence tending to show that they had been, but the names were erased. These original certificates were delivered by Meiksell to Hemming at the instigation of Way. Cochran does not know how they left his possession, and there is no word of explanation from either Meiksell or Way how they became possessed of them. There is no doubt of the assignment to and possession of Cochran,—that he bought the certificates, whether with the understanding or without it that Way was to have an interest. So there is a conflict as to whether or not at the time Beverstock and Cochran applied to the county clerk, and received certified copies of the certificates and assignments, they knew that the originals were in existence, and not lost or stolen as they pretended to believe. So there is a conflict as to whether or not White, when he purchased the original certificates, had knowledge from Bird that the persons he bought from had no interest in them. We cite these various conflicts in the evidence for the purpose of invoking the operation of a rule so often expressed that its repetition is becoming wearisome,—that where the evidence is conflicting, and there is sufficient or any evidence to sustain the judgment, it would not be disturbed by this court, for the reason that the trial court or the jury has an opportunity to see the witnesses, observe their bearing and demeanor, and has opportunities for comparison that this court cannot have. There is some evidence to sustain the judgment, and all we can do in this state of the record is to recommend that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

HURD v. SIMPSON *et al.*¹

DEFECT OF PARTIES—ACTION FOR PRICE OF LAND.

1. A defect of parties should be raised either by answer or demurrer, and, when not so taken advantage of, is usually waived.

2. The evidence examined, and found sufficient to support the special findings and judgment of the trial court.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Harper county; J. T. HERRICK, Judge.

George E. McMahon, for plaintiff in error. Shepard, Grove & Shepard, for defendants in error.

GREEN, C. This was an action brought by the defendants in error, who are husband and wife, to recover the balance of the purchase price of certain real estate in the city of Anthony, in Harper county. The title to a portion of the real estate was in each one of the plaintiffs below. On the 11th day of March, 1887, S. E. Adams, John F. Goggin, and B. F. Smith were engaged in the real-estate business in Anthony, under the name of the Anthony Real-Estate Exchange. The real estate in question was placed in the hands of said firm, and sold on the same day for $5,650, and a deed was made by R. J. and Mary H. Simpson to W. H. Hurd, the plaintiff in error. The court below found that S. E. Adams, one of the members of the real-estate exchange, in behalf of the plaintiffs below, sold said real estate to W. H. Hurd, John F. Goggin, and J. T. Holdridge; that there was a mortgage upon the premises for $2,890, which the purchasers were to assume as a part of the consideration; that $750 was the only part of the purchase price paid to the plaintiffs below, or either of them; that two of the lots conveyed to the plaintiff in error were sold and deeded by him to the purchaser, the consideration expressed being $800; that on the 16th day of May, 1887, W. H. Hurd paid interest upon the mortgage upon the land deeded to him, amounting to the sum of $238. From the conclusions of fact the trial court found that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the sum of $2,010, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum from the 11th day of March, 1887, for which judgment was rendered in the court below. The plaintiff in error assigns error, and brings the record to this court for review.

The first assignment is that the court erred in overruling defendant's objection to the misjoinder of plaintiffs. This objection was not made by answer or demurrer, and hence cannot be considered. The answer was a general denial. The rule is well settled that a misjoinder or defect of parties is waived if not taken advantage of by demurrer or answer. Commissioners v. Comau, 43 Kan. 676, 23 Pac. Rep. 1038; Coulson v. Wing, 42 Kan. 507, 22 Pac. Rep. 570; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344, 4 Pac. Rep. 262; Thomas v. Reynolds, 29 Kan. 304. The next contention of the plaintiff in error is that there was a failure of proof upon the part of the plaintiffs below, and hence a demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained. We have carefully considered all the evidence in the record, and we think there is sufficient to uphold each and all of the special findings of fact. The plaintiff in error had knowledge of the fact that the land was deeded to him a short time after the execution of the same; he and his wife executed a warranty deed to a portion of the same property conveyed to him by this deed from the plaintiffs below; and he also paid the interest upon the mortgage. There certainly was evidence of the recognition of the purchase of the land. We find no error in the proceedings of the court below, and the judgment should therefore be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

HITCHCOCK v. CITY OF OBERLIN.

OBSTRUCTION OF STREETS—INJUNCTION—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

1. In an injunction proceeding by a city of the third class to enjoin an interference with an alleged public street therein, a petition which alleges that the strip of ground in controversy is a street in Rodehaver's addition to said city, and within the corporate limits thereof, and under its control, sufficiently locates said alleged street, and shows that the city has jurisdiction over the same.

2. The objections to the admission of certain testimony examined, and held, that under the circumstances of this case the admission of the evidence complained of does not constitute material error.

3. The evidence in the case examined, and held sufficient to uphold the judgment therein.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Decatur county; L. K. PRATT, Judge.

A. G. McBride and S. D. Decker, for plaintiff in error. S. W. McElroy, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. This is a proceeding by injunction, commenced in the city of Oberlin, to enjoin the plaintiff in error from interfering with a certain alleged street in said city. In June, 1879, Hitchcock and others purchased a piece of ground of Rodehaver for the purpose of platting it as an addition to said city of Oberlin. They organized, and obtained a charter from the state granting them corporate powers, under which they platted said ground, dividing it into lots and blocks, with streets and alleys, and filed said plat of record. Running east and west along the north side of said land, as platted, was left a strip of ground 85 feet wide. The word "North" was written on that part of the plat representing said strip. The contention of the city of Oberlin in the court below was that said strip left on the north side of said plat, and marked with the word "North," was created a street, and named "North Street," on said plat. The defendant below denied that such strip was a street, and claimed that having commenced platting on the south side, and surveyed the ground into blocks and streets until they reached the north side, they had the strip in controversy left. That it was not wide enough for blocks, and was left temporarily, with the view of obtaining more land adjoining it of Rodehaver sufficient for a tier of full blocks, when they intended to block and lot it the same as the balance of the land; but, not obtaining any more land, the strip simply lay unplatted. They claim the word "North" written on that part of the plat was not written there as and for the name of a street, but simply to designate the point of compass. The matter was heard by the court, which rendered a judgment perpetuating the injunction, and for costs. Motion for new trial was overruled.

The first assignment of error is based upon the action of the court in overruling the objection of the plaintiff in error to the reception of evidence under the petition as finally amended. Counsel allege that the petition does not show where the strip of land claimed by the city to be a street was located. It is claimed that the petition must allege that the strip was a public highway, and located within the city limits. Conceding this to be the law, an examination of the petition shows the position of the plaintiff in error is untenable. The petition alleges that the strip in question is a street in the city of Oberlin, and within the corporate limits of said city, and under the control thereof.

The second error alleged consists in the action of the court in allowing John Wilson and others to testify to what John Rodehaver had said and done in connection with the sale of certain lots he had sold in and out of the addition heretofore mentioned. Rodehaver was a member and director of the corporation that owned the addition. He acted as salesman for said corporation in selling lots in said addition, and the court permitted Wilson and others who had purchased lots from said corporation, through Rodehaver, to testify to what Rodehaver said about the strip of land lying on the north side of said addition at the time and when he was selling said lots to them. They testified that Rodehaver told them, at such time, that said strip of land was a street,—was North street. Some of said parties purchased lots in the addition fronting on said strip of land that Rodehaver represented was North street, and say they purchased on the strength of such representations so made by Rodehaver that such strip was a street, and that they would not have purchased but for the belief of said representations that the strip was a street. We think the evidence was entirely proper. Rodehaver was not only an officer of the corporation which had platted and which owned the addition, including the strip in controversy, but he was, at the time of making the representations, presumably the agent of said corporation for the sale of their lots; at least, he was acting as such, and the representations reproduced were made in connection with his sale of the lots.

There was another class of testimony admitted that does not come so clearly within any rule of evidence. Rodehaver owned the land directly north of the 85-foot strip, and he was selling lots on his side of the strip and facing the same, and in connection with the sale of these lots he also represented that the 85-foot strip was a street. The court allowed these representations to be proven. In the sale of these lots he was acting for himself, and his statements that the strip was a street were, so far as the question involved in the cases concerned, but the statements of an officer of the corporation. If he had been a principal officer for the corporation, such as president, his statements would probably have been evidence; but he was only a director of the company. There was but little of this evidence, and, when received, the court said it wanted to hear all about the matter; and, when the defendant offered like testimony, the court received it, going so far as to let the defendant below prove his own statements to his hired man, to the effect that the strip was not a street. There was much more evidence of this kind introduced by the defendant below than by the plaintiff. The case was being tried by the court, which evidently gave evidence of its character little weight. There was other proper evidence sufficient to sustain the judgment of the court. The acting secretary of the corporation testified that at a meeting of said corporation for the purpose of dividing among the members of the corporation what lots were left unsold, so as to close up the business of the corporation, this 85-foot strip was by the members of the corporation called "North Street," and was by them at that time treated as a street; that there was no attempt to or talk about dividing the strip while they were engaged in dividing the lots; but that lots facing the strip were mentioned and talked about as facing North street. It was also proved that houses had been built on both sides of said strip; that fences had been erected and trees set out in line with the strip as a street; and that such fences and trees had been in existence for several years, during which the plaintiff in error, who was the chief officer of the corporation, had resided in the city of Oberlin, and necessarily near to the alleged North street. It was also shown that from the date of the platting of the ground constituting the addition the said strip had been used as a highway by the public. The city authorities treated it as a street by building small bridges or sluice-ways thereon, in order to render it passable. In view of all this evidence in support of the judgment of the court, we do not think the liberality of the court in the reception of evidence constitutes material error, especially as such liberality was exercised in behalf of the plaintiff in error to even a greater extent than it was in behalf of the defendant in error. "Dedications by maps and plats are sometimes so made as to render it difficult to determine their nature and extent. We think it a safe general rule to resolve doubts in such cases against the donor, and, within reasonable limits, to construe the dedication so as to benefit the public rather than the donor. Naturally, the presumption is that one who records a plat, and marks upon it spaces that appear to form no part of the platted lots, dedicates the land represented by the space thus excluded to the public use." Elliott, Roads & S. p. 111; City of Denver v. Clements, 3 Colo. 484; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. 250; Hanson v. Eastman, 21 Minn. 509; Sanborn v. Railroad Co., 16 Wis. 20; Yates v. Judd, 18 Wis. 126. We think the judgment is supported by sufficient evidence. We recommend that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered.

HORTON, C. J., and JOHNSTON, J., concur.

VALENTINE, J. I concur in the decision of this case. This court has always been liberal in sustaining dedications of property for public purposes, however made, and in sustaining them as intended by the dedicator or proprietor. Commissioners v. Lathrop, 9 Kan. 453; Association v. Meninger, 14 Kan. 312; Commissioners of Wyandotte Co. v. Presbyterian Church, 30 Kan. 620, 1 Pac. Rep. 109; Brooks v. City of Topeka, 34 Kan. 277, 8 Pac. Rep. 392; Board of Com'rs of Miami Co. v. Wilgus, 42 Kan. 457, 22 Pac. Rep. 615; Hayes v. Houke, 45 Kan. —, 25 Pac. Rep. 860. But where property has never been dedicated at all for any kind of public purpose, by any word, act, sign, figure, map, plat, field-notes, or acknowledgment, as was the case in the case of Fisher v. Carpenter, 36 Kan. 184, 12 Pac. Rep. 941, this court does not hold that there has been any dedication, and certainly does not hold that there has been a dedication for some specific or particular purpose, as for a public street. In the case last cited, the plaintiff in the trial court, Carpenter, commenced his action against the defendant, Fisher, to restrain and enjoin him from obstructing a piece of ground 250 feet in length east and west, 34 feet in width at the west end, and 89 feet in width at the east end, upon the sole ground that it was a public street. Carpenter was and is a private individual, having no interest in any of the property platted as Fisher's addition, of which it is claimed by Carpenter that this piece of ground constitutes a part. Now, if this piece of ground was not dedicated for any public purpose at all, or if it was in fact dedicated for some other public purpose than for a public street, as, for instance, for a public park, common, school, seminary, college, jail, court-house, church, cemetery, hospital, asylum, city hall, or market, then the plaintiff could not maintain his action. The piece of ground, however, was not dedicated at all for any public purpose in any manner, or by any word or act of any kind; and taking the statutes relating to the subject, and the map, field-notes, and acknowledgment filed by the proprietor of the said addition, they together show affirmatively that the piece of ground was not dedicated, nor intended to be dedicated, by the proprietor for a street.

SALE OF CHATELAINS — DECLARATIONS OF VENDOR — POSSESSION AND TITLE.

1. The declarations of a vendor of personal property as to his possession and title, when he is not in the actual possession of the property, are not admissible to affect the title of his grantees.

2. A contract for the sale of hay, made by A. to B., is not admissible in evidence in an action between A. and C., D. & Co., which involves the right to the possession of the hay as between them.

3. When C., D. & Co. make a contract with one S. to cut and stack hay at so much per ton from lands to which C. D. & Co. have the grass rights, and at stated intervals the stacks are measured, numbered, and marked in the name of C., D. & Co., and S. is paid for his work, S. never had the legal possession, nor became the legal owner, of the hay.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Butler county; T. A. KRAMER, Judge pro tem.

Clogston, Hamilton, Fuller & Cubblison, and B. R. Leydig, for plaintiff in error. George Gardner and Redden & Schumacher, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. This was an action in replevin to recover possession of certain hay. The material facts are that some time in the month of July, 1887, Douglass, Keyes & Co. made a contract with one William Sproul to put up for them all the hay that he could with his force and teams on sections 18, 14, and 23, in township 23, range 6, in Sycamore township, Butler county. This hay was to be stacked on the land above described, or on land belonging to Sproul. This hay was to be cut on grass lands furnished by Douglass, Keyes & Co., who had leased land for that purpose, and a large part, if not all, the hay was cut on that land. On the 5th day of September, 1887, Sproul executed and delivered to Douglass, Keyes & Co. a bill of sale for 10 stacks of hay, estimated to contain 100 tons, then in stack on the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of section 18; also for 8 small stacks, estimated to contain 40 tons, located on the same land, and 2 stacks, estimated to contain 15 tons, inside the fence, on Sproul's quarter section of land. In this bill of sale Sproul acknowledges having received \$310, being payment in full for said hay. Each of the stacks of hay enumerated in the bill of sale of September 5th was numbered and marked with a piece of lath, with the name of Douglass, Keyes & Co., placed near the bottom of the stack. On the 13th day of the same month Sproul executed another bill of sale for several more stacks of hay put up after September 5th. These stacks were numbered and marked in the name of Douglass, Keyes & Co. on a piece of lath placed near the bottom of the stack. The sum of \$121.50 is acknowledged as payment in full of the lot of hay. On the 23d day of September another bill of sale was executed by Sproul to Douglass, Keyes & Co. for 176 tons of hay, the bill of sale reciting that this includes all the hay that was put up on section 23 to this date. It also recites that Douglass, Keyes & Co. furnished the grass, and it acknowledges the receipt of \$308 for full payment of the cutting and putting it into the stack. Hoy was the agent of Douglass, Keyes & Co., and had charge of the hay, and it was in his possession, and he looked after it. On the 6th day of September, 1887, Sproul made a contract with Griggs, with whom he had dealings, and from whom he had been buying provisions with which to feed his workmen, and to whom he was indebted, to sell Griggs all the hay he had put up. At the time Griggs made this contract with Sproul he had not seen the hay, and did not go out to where Sproul was putting up hay until the 11th day of September. In the mean time he agreed with Sproul that he (Griggs) would pay the hired help by whose aid Sproul was cutting and stacking the hay. About the 23d day of October, 1887, Douglass, Keyes & Co. learned that Griggs had taken possession of the hay, and was having it baled and shipped, and they sent Hoy the plaintiff in error, up there, who took possession of the hay, and held it. On the 2d day of November this action was commenced in replevin by Griggs against Hoy to recover the possession of the hay. The case was tried by a pro tem judge, and a jury, at the April term of the district court of Butler county, and a verdict returned for Griggs, and a judgment rendered in his favor that, at the commencement of this action, the plaintiff was the owner of and entitled to the possession of the property in controversy. A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and all exceptions saved. We ought to have stated that neither Griggs nor Douglass, Keyes & Co. knew of the contracts that Sproul had made with the other until about the time Griggs commenced to have the hay baled and shipped.

Among the many assignments of error made by counsel for plaintiff in error we select two as being important.

1. The trial court, over the objection of the plaintiff in error, permitted Griggs to introduce and read in evidence to the jury a contract made between Griggs and Brown for the purchase by Brown of Griggs of the hay in controversy, and also permitted Griggs, while on the witness stand, to state what Sproul said respecting this hay at the time this contract between Griggs and Brown was made; also permitted the deposition of Brown to be read in evidence, reciting this same conversation. The pretense under which this was done was that the contract was virtually one between Sproul and Brown, and, assuming this to be true, we are at a loss to account on what principle the declarations of Sproul and a contract for the sale of this hay to another person can be admitted to bind Douglass, Keyes & Co., in their absence, and without their knowledge. It is true that under certain circumstances the declarations of a party in possession of chattels in respect to the ownership thereof are admissible, but such declarations were not made under such circumstances as entitle them to any consideration in this case. Sproul was not in the visible possession of this hay. It was not a matter of common observation to all that he had been in the possession, use, and enjoyment of it for a long time, acting as the owner, and always and on all occasions claiming to be the owner of it, for this is the law. And not that alone; it has been repeatedly and universally held that such declarations, to be binding, must have been made at a time when the declarant had the title to the property in question, and his admission, subsequent to a sale made by him, cannot be received to affect the title of his grantees. Again, if it is conceded that the contract was in fact one between Sproul and Brown, whereby the hay was sold directly by Sproul to Brown, what right has Griggs to maintain this action? Under such circumstances, the right to the possession is in Brown, and not in Griggs. The admission of this contract, and the evidence of Griggs and Brown as to the statements of Sproul as to his ownership of the hay at the time the contract between Griggs and Brown was entered into, all in the absence and without the knowledge of Douglass, Keyes & Co., were material errors.

The only ground upon which counsel for defendant in error seek to justify the admission of the declarations of Sproul at the time he sold the hay to Griggs is this: That as Douglass, Keyes & Co. and Griggs both claim under Sproul, he being the common source of title to the hay, his declarations concerning the property in controversy would be competent evidence against his grantees. But this is not the law; the same principle quoted above applies. The declarations or admissions of the grantor must be made while he is in possession of the property. So declarations of the seller of personal property made after a sale, and after he has parted with the property, are not admissible against the buyer. 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th Ed.) § 190, and foot-notes. Apply this to the facts in this case, and it appears that on the 6th day of September, when Sproul asserted, in the presence of Griggs and Brown, that he was the owner and was in possession of the hay, he had sold it the day before to Douglass, Keyes & Co.; indeed, put it up under a previous contract with them, had yielded possession, and had in writing acknowledged full payment for the same. Again, it may be seriously doubted whether Sproul ever had either the title or the possession of the hay. His contract with Douglass, Keyes & Co. was to cut and stack hay from grass lands furnished by them, and the evidence discloses that most, if not all, of the hay cut and stacked by Sproul was from land to which Douglass, Keyes & Co. had the grass rights. A fair construction of this contract, with the accompanying facts, seems to determine that under no circumstances can it be fairly said that Sproul was either in legal possession or had title to the hay. It seems conclusive, therefore, that his declarations respecting ownership or possession were not admissible for any purpose. We have no doubt but that the admission of this contract between Griggs and Brown was one of the things that tended to influence and prejudice the mind of the average juror against the plaintiff in error. The same may be said, and we think with more force, as to the admission of the declarations of Sproul on the 6th of September, at the time he sold the hay to Griggs, and Griggs sold it to Brown.

2. The trial court gave the following instruction, numbered 13: "If you find that both parties are in the same position, in this, that each of them in good faith and without fault hired said Sproul to put in the hay replevied in this action, or a part thereof, and that through the fault of said Sproul each were deceived, and that neither party has, by any subsequent act, obtained a superior right over the other; and you also find that one of the parties can be placed in the same position that he was in before said contract was made, and that the other cannot be placed in the same position he was in before such contract was made,—then you should find in favor of that party who cannot be placed in the same position as he was before the contract was made, to the extent of the amount of hay put up under such contract made with each." We cannot see any possible application of this instruction to the facts in this case; indeed, the exact facts in the case are not stated in the instruction. This is not a case that calls for any new or novel application of principle. Douglass, Keyes & Co. are first in right and first in time. The same principle controls here as if one person had furnished a tailor materials with which to make him a full suit of clothes, and agreed to pay him a certain price for his work, and the tailor had sold the suit when made to another. The case cited to support this instruction is that of Henderson v. Gibbs, 39 Kan. 679, 18 Pac. Rep. 926. In that case property was fraudulently procured by a purchaser from an innocent owner, and the fraudulent vendee afterwards sells the property to an innocent and bona fide purchaser, the only consideration moving from one to the other in the last sale being the partial payment of a pre-existing debt due from the fraudulent vendee to the second purchaser, and it is held under this state of facts that the original owner may rescind the contract made by him with his fraudulent vendee, and recover his property. Now, suppose this decision applied to the facts in this particular case, what would be the result of a fair application of it? Was Sproul the original owner, and the hay procured from him by Griggs in a fraudulent manner? or was Griggs the original owner, and had somebody fraudulently procured the hay from him? or were Douglass, Keyes & Co. the original owners, and did Sproul fraudulently procure the hay from them? It will be seen that the only possible theory upon which the rule in Henderson v. Gibbs can be made to apply to this case is upon the assumption that Sproul was the innocent owner of the hay, and that Griggs was his fraudulent vendee, and this application will not be satisfactory to the defendant in error. There are several very controlling reasons why Sproul cannot be regarded as the original owner. Even if at one time he was the owner of the hay, he had sold to Douglass, Keyes & Co. before Griggs bought, and hence had divested himself of ownership; and, secondly, he never was the owner, and never was in the legal possession of the hay, because by the terms of his contract all he agreed to do was to cut and stack hay on lands furnished by Douglass, Keyes & Co. The instruction was a most pernicious error.

3. The jury, by their verdict, and the court by its ruling on the motion for a new trial, entirely ignored the twelfth instruction, as follows: "You are instructed that if one S. C. Rodman owned the south-west quarter and the west half of the south-east quarter of section 13, township 23, range 6 east, in Butler county, Kan., and that before the hay was cut from said land said S. C. Rodman had leased in writing to Douglass, Keyes & Co. said land, and said Douglass, Keyes & Co. had employed William Sproul to put up the hay on said land, then defendant would be entitled to the possession of all the hay cut from said above-described land." This instruction is all right as far as it goes, and, while there is some confusion in the minds of witnesses as to the sections and fractional parts of sections upon which the hay was cut, there is sufficient in the evidence to establish the fact that a part, at least, of the hay was cut upon land that had been leased by Rodman to Douglass, Keyes & Co.; but the jury ignored the fact, and both jury and court disregarded the instruction. There can be no reasonable contention but that, in any view that may be taken of the facts in this case, Douglass, Keyes & Co. were entitled to the possession of all hay cut and stacked before the 6th day of September, and that they were entitled to all hay cut from the lands leased by them from Rodman. The verdict of the jury and the ruling of the trial court on the motion for a new trial totally ignored their legal rights with reference to these propositions, and it was grievous error so to do. It is recommended that the judgment be reversed, and a new trial granted.

ACTION ON ACCOUNT—VERIFICATION—ANSWER.

1. Where a civil action is commenced before a justice of the peace upon an account for work and labor performed, which account is duly verified by affidavit, such account will be taken as true under section 84 of the justices' act, unless the denial of the same be verified by affidavit. Railway Co. v. Gould, 44 Kan. 68, 24 Pac. Rep. 352; Baughman v. Hale, (Kan.) 25 Pac. Rep. 856.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Chase county; FRANK DOSTER, Judge.

Madden Bros., for plaintiff in error. Thomas H. Grisham, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. James Bryant, by his next friend, Joseph Bryant, commenced his action against Arthur Gray before a justice of the peace upon an account of six dollars for work and labor. The account was properly verified, although the affidavit annexed was evidently filed for the purpose of verifying its correctness, and also for showing the plaintiff was unable to give security for costs on account of poverty. Upon the day set for the hearing before the justice Gray obtained a continuance for 15 days by filing his affidavit alleging the absence of material witnesses. Upon the day the action was tried before the justice, Gray failed to appear, and no witnesses were introduced in his behalf. The justice rendered judgment against him for six dollars and costs. Gray appealed to the district court, and after five months had expired the case was called for trial in that court, but, as Gray had filed no verified denial, judgment was rendered again against him for six dollars, with interest and costs. When the case was called for trial in the district court Gray attempted to deny the correctness of the account by offering to show that it had been paid, and also asked for a jury. This was refused, because the correctness of the account had not been denied by affidavit. Within the prior decisions of this court no error was committed in the rulings of the district court. Railway Co. v. Gould, 44 Kan. 68, 24 Pac. Rep. 352; Baughman v. Hale, (Kan.) 25 Pac. Rep. 856, (Feb. 7, 1891.) No attempt was made by Gray to allege or prove any set-off or counter-claim. He attempted to disprove the correctness of the verified account by showing that it had been extinguished or paid. Within the authority of Baughman v. Hale, supra, the court, under the circumstances of this case, committed no error in refusing to allow the defendant to file an affidavit denying the correctness of the account. The offer was made so late that the trial court did not abuse its discretion. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

EJECTMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF ANSWER.

Where, in an action of ejectment for a town lot by one who relies on a deed from M., the defendant answers, alleging a prior purchase of the lot from the agents of M. by verbal contract, on which he paid part of the purchase money at the time, and went into immediate possession of the premises, and alleges that subsequently, and within the period fixed for the delivery of the deed and payment of the balance of the purchase money he tendered such balance, and also alleges he has made lasting and valuable improvements on the lot, held, that such answer states a defense, and it is not error to overrule a demurrer thereto which avers that such answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense.

Commissioners' decision. Error to district court, Decatur county; LOUIS K. PRATT, Judge.

A. G. McBride, May & McElroy, and G. Webb Bertram, for plaintiff in error. Wilson & Hays and S. D. Decker, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. Action in ejectment for lot 1, in block 6, in the city of Oberlin, Decatur county, Kan., and for mesne profits. The action was brought in the court below in the names of Henry S. Beardsley and Charles E. Chandler, plaintiffs, against J. R. Neil and L. E. Cross, defendants. It was afterwards dismissed as to Cross, and we do not know where Beardsley fell out, nor why he was ever in, as he had conveyed the lot to Chandler before suit. However, he does not seem to be here. Neil answered, claiming superior title to the lot in controversy. Plaintiff demurred to the second amended answer of the defendant, which was overruled, and exception allowed. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and a general judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff interposed a motion for new trial, which was overruled.

The first contention of the plaintiff in error is that the court erred in not sustaining his demurrer to the defendant's second amended answer. This demurrer alleged that the answer did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. We think the court was right in overruling the demurrer. The answer states a defense. It sets up a purchase of the lot in question from J. P. Mathis, through his agents, Wilson and Adelman, by a verbal contract, at a time long prior to the sale of the lot by said Mathis to Beardsley, from whom Chandler obtained his title, and alleges part payment of the purchase money, a tender of the balance due on the contract, possession of the property, which is admitted by the plaintiffs, and his erection of lasting and valuable improvements thereon. The receipt mentioned by counsel for plaintiff in this connection was not a contract, but a simple receipt for money paid on a verbal contract, and beyond that it cuts no figure in the case. The defendant recovered on the strength of his title under the verbal contract with the agents of Mathis, and his possession thereunder. It is admitted that Wilson and Adelman were the agents of Mathis for the sale of the lot in controversy. The undisputed evidence in the case shows that they sold the lot to Neil for $240, and gave him possession of the premises immediately. Neil paid $20 down when the contract was made, and was to pay the balance when the deed was ready. Wilson thought it would take 30 days to get the deed round from Mathis. Before the 30 days were up, Neil tendered the balance of the money to the agents of whom he purchased, and afterwards to Mathis himself, and demanded a deed. What more could he have done? What more was required of him? Nothing. He was entitled to a deed, and, being entitled to a deed, the court was right in adjudging that he should have one, with his costs. The evidence shows bad faith on the part of Mathis. On the witness stand he says his refusal to execute the deed was because the sale was made on 30 days' time, when in fact the balance of the purchase money was tendered before the time fixed by his own agents at which they would be able to deliver a deed. Wilson's evidence undoubtedly discloses the real reason why Mathis refused to execute a deed, when he says upon the witness stand that Mathis asked him "if there was not some way for him to squirm out of the Neil contract." Mathis had learned that there was likely to be a railroad built into Oberlin, and he considered his lot worth more money, and he wanted "to squirm out" of his sale to Neil. The judgment is fully sustained by the evidence. We find no error in the record, and therefore recommend that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

REVIEW ON APPEAL—FAILURE TO ASSIGN ERRORS —CONTINUANCE—ABSENCE OF WITNESS.

1. 2. An affidavit supporting a motion for continuance on account of the absence of a material witness must show that the party has been sufficiently diligent in his efforts to obtain the witness. It must set forth specific acts of diligence, such as search and inquiry. Commissioners' decision. Error to district court, Shawnee county; JOHN GUTARRIE, Judge.

Jetmore & Son and G. A. Huron, for plaintiff in error. D. E. Sowers and W. R. Hasen, for defendants in error.

SIMPSON, C. This action was brought by John F. Struthers on the official bond of A. M. Fuller, as sheriff of Shawnee county, and Joab Mulvane, John Sutherland, and J. W. Stout, sureties on the bond, to recover the sum of $1,182.25 damages for the unlawful conversion of plaintiff's goods and chattels, attached by the defendant, as such sheriff, in favor of Brown Bros. against and as the property of Schermerhorn Bros. The case was tried by a jury, and a verdict returned and a judgment rendered for the defendants. The plaintiff, having made an unsuccessful motion for a new trial, brings the case here for review. The errors assigned are: First, error of the court in overruling the motion of plaintiff for a continuance of the case; second, error in refusing to admit competent and material evidence offered by the plaintiff; third, error in admitting illegal and incompetent evidence for the defendants; fourth, the verdict is not sustained by the evidence; fifth, the verdict is contrary to law.

1. As to all the errors assigned, except the first, the record is in such condition that we cannot consider them. All these assignments of error are such as relate to matters occurring on the trial, and for which a new trial was asked, and the record must show that the action of the trial court overruling the motion for a new trial is assigned as error, or no question is properly raised for the consideration of this court. Clark v. Schnur, 40 Kan. 72, 19 Pac. Rep. 327, and cases therein.

2. The plaintiff below made a motion for a continuance, and supported it by an affidavit reciting that he could not go to trial safely without the presence of a material witness, one S. B. Maxwell. That he expected to prove by said Maxwell that the plaintiff purchased in good faith from Schermerhorn Bros. the personal property for the unlawful conversion of which this suit is brought. That said witness will testify that in the month of August, 1887, he resided in the city of Topeka, at No. 520 Harrison street, where he was keeping a boarding-house, and that P. V. Schermerhorn boarded with him. That on the 11th day of August, 1887, at about 6 o'clock P. M., he had a conversation with Schermerhorn with reference to an item printed in the Evening Journal of that date, headed "Rather Mixed," and mentioned the fact that a writ of attachment had that day been levied upon the goods held by the plaintiff to satisfy a claim for over $1,600, in which conversation he said to Schermerhorn that, according to this statement in the Journal, he did not sell out to Struthers, but made an assignment to him; to which Schermerhorn replied: "This is not true. I made a fair and square sale to Struthers, and have got all my pay;" whereupon Maxwell said to him: "How, then, can your creditors take Struthers' goods to pay your debts?" To which Schermerhorn replied, "I do not know." Of course the only pretense under which such statements could be admissible would be to impeach Schermerhorn; and it is alleged in the affidavit that Schermerhorn's deposition had been taken by the defendants to use on the trial. The affiant further alleged "that he had used due diligence to obtain the testimony of Maxwell at this time, and that he had made diligent search and inquiry as to the whereabouts of said witness in order to secure his evidence, and that on the 20th of February he caused a subpoena to be issued for him, which was returned on the 22d of February, indorsed 'Not found;' that he did not know until said subpoena was issued that Maxwell was not a resident of Shawnee county, but he is now informed and believes that he is a resident of Solomon City, Dickinson county, Kansas." The affidavit is in the usual form in all respects, except as hereinafter stated. The sole object of the presence of this witness was to impeach Schermerhorn on some statement he had made in his deposition. This deposition had been taken in August, 1887, and this trial was had on the 28d of February, 1888. The only showing of diligence made by the plaintiff was that he had made inquiries and had a subpoena issued on the 20th of February, but he does not state the extent of the inquiries, when they were made, of whom they were made, or any other fact that would allow the court to determine whether or not a proper degree of diligence was exercised. Then he expressly states in the affidavit that he did not know until since the subpoena was issued that Maxwell was not a resident of Shawnee county. This shows that a witness he regarded as an important and material one to impeach a man whose deposition was taken in August, 1887, he made no inquiry for, or obtained no knowledge of, until after the 20th of February, 1888, when his cause was set down for trial on the 23d day of February, 1888. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling the motion for continuance. We recommend that the judgment be affirmed.

PETITION FOR INJUNCTION—VERIFICATION.

Commissioners' decision. Error to district court, Stanton county; A. J. ABBOTT, Judge.

E. B. Spurgeon and Brown, Blerer & Cotteral, for plaintiff in error. S. H. Wheeler and Calhoun & Garwood, for defendants in error.

GREEN, C. This was an action for an injunction in the district court of Stanton county to restrain the officers of Johnson City from an alleged misappropriation of the funds of the city. In the absence of the district judge from the county, the probate judge granted a temporary injunction upon an application duly verified. A motion was afterwards made before the district judge to dissolve this temporary order made by the probate judge, which was sustained upon the ground that the petition upon which the injunction was asked was not verified. It is admitted by the record that the petition was not sworn to, but that the application which was presented to the probate judge was properly verified. The only question, then, presented for our determination is whether a verification of the application alone is sufficient. We think it is. The application for an injunction in this case stated that the relator had filed a petition in the district court for an injunction; that a copy of the petition was attached to the application and made a part of the same. The verification was by the county attorney and another person, and each swore that he had read the application and the exhibit thereto attached, and that they were true. We are of the opinion that this is a substantial compliance with sections 238 and 239 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The verification really covered the allegations of the petition as well as the application. We think it was manifest error for the court to dissolve the injunction upon the sole ground that the petition was not sworn to, when there was an application properly verified presented to the judge granting the remedy which satisfactorily established the plaintiff's equities. We recommend that the order of the district judge dissolving the preliminary injunction be set aside, that the restraining order heretofore granted by the probate judge be continued until otherwise disposed of, and that the cause be remanded for further proceedings.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

INTEREST ON JUDGMENT—MECHANIC'S LIEN—EX-TENT.

1. Section 5, c. 164, Laws 1889, provides: "When a rate of interest is specified in any contract, that rate shall continue until full payment is made, and any judgment rendered on any such contract shall bear the same rate of interest mentioned in the contract; * * * but in no case shall such rate exceed ten per cent. per annum;" but the concluding words of this section have no application to a contract made on the 7th day of June, 1887, that bears interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, and applies only to contracts made after the date when said section took effect. It was material error for the trial court to render a judgment bearing interest at only 10 per cent. per annum on a contract for 12 per cent., dated June 7, 1887.

2. In actions to foreclose mechanics' liens for work done and for material furnished under a contract with one who has an executory contract for the purchase of a city lot, and is in possession thereof, the lien of the mechanic or materialman must be measured by the extent of the equity of the purchaser under the executory contract.

Moore & Douglass and Sanker, Campbell & Amidon, for plaintiffs in error. Wilson & Brubacher, Dale & Wall, Hatton & Ruggles, and Schoonover & Coates, for defendants in error.

Four actions were commenced in the court below to foreclose so many mechanics' liens upon property known as "Lot No. 18, on Goethe Avenue, in Getto's Second Addition to the City of Wichita." All parties holding mortgages upon the property were made defendants in these actions. These suits were consolidated, tried by the court, the order of priority of all liens was determined, and the final decree established the rights of all parties. Two of the parties bring questions affecting their rights to this court for review. The material facts are that on the 23d day of May, 1888, Peter Getto, who was the owner of said lot No. 18, sold by contract said lot to A. H. Peavey for the sum of $1,100. Peavey paid $50 cash, and agreed to give his note, due in one year, for the balance of the purchase money, secured by a mortgage on the lot. It was agreed between Getto and Peavey that the latter should build a house on the lot and that Getto should permit Peavey to obtain a loan on the lot, and give a first mortgage as security therefor, and that Getto's mortgage for the purchase money should be subject to the mortgage given by Peavey to obtain the money with which to build a house. Acting on this agreement, Peavey secured a loan from one George C. Strong, to secure which he executed two mortgages to Strong,—one for $1,000, and one for $150. Getto having previously executed a deed for the lot to Peavey, and delivered it to Strong, Peavey and wife executed and delivered mortgages to Strong and Getto; the mortgage to the latter reciting that it was subject to mortgages to Strong for $1,150. The deed from Getto to Peavey, and the mortgages from Peavey and wife to Strong, were deposited for record on the 4th day of June, at 5:20 P. M. The mortgage from Peavey and wife to Getto was deposited for record the same day at 5:30 P. M. On this state of facts, omitting the details as to the mechanic's liens, the trial court found as follows: "The court finds that the said defendant A. H. Peavey is indebted to the said J. Friend, plaintiff, in the sum of one hundred six and 33-100 dollars, ($106.33.) That he is indebted to said plaintiff, Robert Carson in the sum of thirty-nine and 51-100 dollars ($39.51.) That he is indebted to the said plaintiff H. C. Hawkins thirty dollars ($30.00.) That he is indebted to the said plaintiff C. F. Hawley in the sum of forty-seven and 64-100 dollars ($47.64.) That he is indebted to Oliver Brothers in the sum of five hundred sixty-seven and 30-100 dollars ($567.30.) That he is indebted to A. J. Hurst in the sum of seventy-four and 38-100 dollars, ($74.38.) That he is indebted to Trimble Brothers & Threlkeld in the sum of twenty-nine and 96-100 dollars ($29.96.) That he is indebted to Goodyear & Co., in the sum of forty-three and 42-100 dollars ($43.42.) That he is indebted to Peter Getto in the sum of $1,270.50. That he is indebted to James Melrose in the sum of $1,250. That he is indebted to Coleman Rogers in the sum of $187.50. That all of said sums except the three last named are for work, labor, and materials furnished said A. H. Peavey by said named parties for the purpose and use in the erection of a certain building on the property in controversy, to-wit, lot thirteen, (13,) on Goethe avenue, in Getto's Second Addition to the city of Wichita, in Sedgwick county, Kansas, and that said parties all filed their proper and verified statements of said work, labor, and materials in the office of the clerk of the district court of Sedgwick county, Kansas, in the manner and within the time provided by law in relation thereto. That at the time of the commencement of said actions to foreclose said mechanics' liens all of said parties aforesaid had a valid and existing lien upon the premises described as aforesaid to the amount of their respective claims aforesaid. That the said last three named parties, at the time of the commencement of this action, had a lien upon said premises aforesaid to the amount of their respective claims by virtue of mortgages thereon executed by said A. H. Peavey to themselves or their assignors. The court further finds, as to the priority of said liens, that the mortgage executed by said A. H. Peavey to said Peter Getto should be declared a first and prior lien on the premises in controversy, and that the lien of said J. Friend, Robert Carson, H. C. Hawkins, C. F. Hawley, Oliver Brothers, Trimble Brothers & Threlkeld, A. J. Hurst, and Goodyear & Co. should be declared a second lien upon said premises; that the mortgage given to George C. Strong, and assigned to Melrose, should be declared a third lien upon said premises; and that the mortgage given to George C. Strong, and assigned to Coleman Rogers, should be declared a fourth lien upon said premises; that said James Melrose should be substituted to the rights of said Peter Getto in said first mortgage lien to the amount of $1,000, with interest thereon at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum from the 1st day of June, 1887; and that said Coleman Rogers should be substituted to the rights of said Peter Getto in the balance of said first mortgage to the amount of $20.50, with interest thereon at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum from the 1st day of June, 1887, and the balance of said Coleman Rogers' interest, in said mortgage should be declared to follow the liens of all said parties who are heretofore declared to be second lienholders on said premises; that said Peter Getto's mortgage should be declared a last lien upon said premises, thereby following the interest of all the said parties claiming a lien upon said premises as aforesaid. The court further finds that each of said mortgages held by Getto, Melrose, and Rogers has the words 'appraisal waived' therein inserted; and that said parties last named are now entitled to have said mortgages foreclosed; and the right to enter a further judgment for the foreclosure of said mortgages, or any of them, for the sale of said property thereunder, without appraisal, is hereby expressly reserved to said Getto, Melrose, and Rogers, respectively, in case the said property should fail to sell, within six months from the date hereof, for two-thirds of the appraised value thereof under the terms of the present judgment. It is therefore considered, ordered, and adjudged by the court that said plaintiff J. Friend have and recover judgment against said A. H. Peavey in the sum of one hundred and six and thirty-three one-hundredths dollars, ($106.33.) with six per cent. from this date." To this judgment exceptions were waived by Getto and Rogers, and they bring the questions affecting their interests to this court for review. Getto claims that the trial court erred in deciding that his purchase-money mortgage was a junior lien to the mortgages of Melrose and Rogers and the mechanics' liens.

1. The facts disclosed by the record in relation to the mechanics' liens are as follows: It is admitted in the answer of Getto that he sold said lot No. 13 to A. H. Peavey on or about the 1st day of May, 1887. Hannah, under contract with Peavey, commenced to build a stone foundation for a large house on the 17th day of May, 1887. Peavey bought lumber for the construction of a barn on the lot from Oliver Bros. early in May. These facts show possession of the lot by Peavey in pursuance of his contract of purchase from Getto, and are sufficient of themselves to sustain the priority of the mechanics' liens on the equity of Peavey, as they attach from the time of the commencement of the building, by the express terms of the statute, and as declared in the case of Thomas v. Mowers, 27 Kan. 265. Of course, the priority of these liens on the equity of Peavey cannot be successfully controverted; but how they are affected by the subsequent conveyances and mortgages is the serious question with which we have to grapple, and the case cited above does not help us in any respect. The case of Selts v. Railway Co., 16 Kan. 133, is a somewhat instructive one. In its main features it resembles the one we are considering. In that case, as in this, the contract for labor and materials was made with the owner of the equitable title. There had been only a partial payment made of the purchase money by the holder of the equitable title. The original contract for purchase and sale of the premises was in parol. At the time labor was performed and material furnished, possession was shown under the verbal contract. A mortgage was subsequently executed to secure the balance of the purchase money, as in this case. The cases differ in this: in one, a conveyance was made vesting the legal title in the debtor; in the other, no conveyance of the legal title was made. On this state of facts this court say, arguendo, "that the mechanics' liens operated upon the whole of the estate which the person procuring the labor and the materials may have in and to the property for which he procures the same, whatever may be the character of the estate, but that such lien cannot operate upon anything more than such estate; and, as far as it does operate, it is the paramount lien upon the enhanced value given to such estate by the labor and materials." The law provides, (section 630, Code:) "Such liens shall be preferred to all other liens or incumbrances which may attach to or upon such land, buildings, or improvements, or either of them, subsequent to the commencement of such building." Another case that must not be overlooked in the consideration of this one is that of Lumber Co. v. Schweiter, 44 Kan. —, 25 Pac. Rep. 592. Some of the material facts in that case are that Schweiter sold Jones a lot on the 29th day of May, who agreed to build a house on it. When the house was inclosed, Schweiter was to convey the lot to Jones, and Jones should have the privilege to place a mortgage thereon, which should be a first lien, and should execute a mortgage to secure balance of purchase money; and until the execution, delivery, and record of the deed and mortgage Jones should keep the lot clear of all liens, taxes, and judgments. It was agreed between Schweiter and Jones that the title to the lot, both legal and equitable, should remain in Schweiter until the conveyance and mortgages were made. On the 2d of May, Jones contracted with the Chicago Lumber Company for the lumber and material with which to build a house on the lot, and a delivery of the material was begun on that day, and completed on the 27th of June. On the 20th of May, Schweiter executed and delivered a deed to Jones of the lot, and at the same time Jones and wife executed a mortgage for money borrowed, and for the balance of the purchase money of the lot. All these instruments were recorded on the 23d of May. On September 9th, the lumber company filed its statement, claiming a lien for the lumber and materials used in the construction of the house; and at the trial the district court found that the mortgage securing the borrowed money was the first lien, Schweiter's mortgage the second, and the lumber company's the third. The lumber company brought the case to this court, but the judgment below was affirmed; great stress being laid in the opinion on the fact that Schweiter retained both the legal and equitable title to the lot until the deed and mortgages were executed. While there was no express stipulation between Getto and Peavey in this case to that effect, the agreement was that Peavey should execute a mortgage to secure the building fund, which by the consent of Getto should be a first and superior lien to that of Getto for the balance of his purchase money. By all the ordinary rules of law, those furnishing material to and doing work for Peavey were bound to ascertain the nature and extent of his equity in the lot. To the extent of that equity, whatever it may be, the materials furnished and the work performed is a lien dating from the commencement of the building, and prior to all subsequent liens or incumbrances; but in the language of Justice VALENTINE in the case of Seitz v. Railway Co., 16 Kan. 133, "a lien upon an estate cannot be greater than the estate itself; a stream cannot rise higher than its fountain." It seems, therefore, that the operation of the mechanics' liens must be limited to the equity of Peavey in the lot, and that the trial court erred in determining the priority of liens; the true order being, so far as the legal estate is concerned—First, the mortgage to Melrose; second, the mortgage to Rogers; third, the mortgage to Getto; fourth, the mechanics' liens; and upon the equitable estate of Peavey, first the mechanics' liens, and the mortgages following them in the order above stated.

2. Another error complained of by both Getto and Rogers is that the trial court rendered judgments in their favor to bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum only, when the notes upon which the judgments are founded bear interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. These notes were secured by mortgages, and bear date on the 1st of June, 1887, payable in 2½ years after date. The law in force at the time of the execution of these notes was section 6, c. 51, Comp. Laws 1885, and it provided: "When a rate of interest is specified in any contract, that rate shall continue until full payment is made; and any judgment rendered on any such contract shall bear the same rate of interest mentioned in the contract, which rate shall be specified in the contract; but in no case shall such rate exceed twelve per cent. per annum." Intermediate the date of the note and the trial of this case, the legislature changed the section of the law above quoted so as to make the concluding words read, "but in no case shall such rate exceed ten per cent. per annum." See section 5, c. 164, Laws 1889. The trial court provided in its decree that the judgments rendered on the notes of date June 1, 1887, should bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The contention of counsel for plaintiff in error is that the amendment of section 5 by the legislature of 1889 only operates on contracts made after the amendment became the law, and could not impair the obligation of contracts made before that date. This contention is abundantly sustained by repeated decisions of the supreme court of the United States, and our plain duty is to follow these adjudications. These decisions are constructions of a provision of the constitution of the United States that declares that "no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts." The pith of all these decisions is clearly expressed by a quotation from the case of Edwards v. Kearzey, 98 U.S. 595. Mr Justice SWAYNE, speaking for the court, says: "The remedy subsisting in a state when and where a contract is made, and is to be performed, is a part of its obligation; and any subsequent law of the state which so affects that remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is forbidden by the constitution, and is therefore void." This was said in respect to a provision of the constitution of the state of North Carolina that exempted personal property of a debtor to the value of $500 from sale under execution or other final process issued for the collection of any debt; the court holding that the exemption was not valid as regards contracts made before the adoption of the constitution of that state. This rule applies to all state legislation that affects the validity, construction, discharge, and enforcement of contracts made before such legislation took effect. Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 4 Wall. 535. "One of the tests that a contract has been impaired is that its value has by legislation been diminished. It is not by the constitution to be impaired at all. This is not a question of degree, manner, or cause, but of encroaching in any respect on its obligation, dispensing with any part of its force." Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. 301. Returning to the facts in this case, it cannot be seriously doubted but that the reduction of the interest on the notes by the decree of the trial court was a material impairment of the obligation of the contracts. If it is once conceded that the legislature of the state, and the courts of the state by virtue of such legislation, can reduce the rate of interest specified in the contract, then there is no limit to such power. In this case 2 per cent. per annum was taken from the rate agreed upon. If this can be done, there is then no legal objection to a reduction of 10 per cent. per annum. If the obligation to pay interest can be impaired, why cannot the obligation to pay a part of the principal be also impaired? The legislature of the state reduced the maximum rate of interest that could be recovered on any contract from 12 to 10 per cent. by this amendment; but we do not suppose that it was within the legislative intent to affect contracts made before the passage of the amended law. It follows that on all contracts made prior to the amendment of 1889 the old law governs, and to those made after that date the new law applies. The trial court erred in fixing the rate of interest that the judgment should bear from the time of its rendition at 10 per cent. The judgment creditor is entitled to the rate specified in the contract. There was also error in adjusting the liens; and for these errors we recommend that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court to render a judgment as indicated in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

STATE V. DOUGLASS.

CONSENTING TO COMMISSION OF CRIME—EVIDENCE OF CHARACTER.

1. A person consenting to a thing which is innocent in itself does not thereby commit a public offense, although the thing may at the time appear to him to be a public offense, and although he may at the time believe the same to be a public offense.

2. Mentally consenting to the commission of a crime, where no expressed consent, either by word or act, is given, does not make the person consenting guilty of any offense.

3. Evidence in a criminal case, as to the good character of the defendant, may be introduced for the purpose of disproving guilt, and if upon the whole of the evidence introduced, including that of the good character of the defendant, the jury entertain a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt, he should be acquitted.

David Overmeyer, for appellant. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and R. B. Welch, for the State.

VALENTINE, J. The defendant, William Douglass, was prosecuted criminally in the district court of Shawnee county, upon information, under sections 103 and 106 of the act relating to crimes and punishments, for willfully and feloniously, on October 22, 1888, placing an obstruction, a railroad tie, upon the railroad track of the Chicago, Kansas & Nebraska Railway, St. Joseph & Iowa Railroad Company, lessee, about four miles west of the city of Topeka. He was tried before the court and a jury in January, 1890, and was convicted, and was afterwards sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for the term of five years from February 15, 1890. Afterwards he appealed to the supreme court, and on November 8, 1890, the judgment of the district court was affirmed. State v. Douglass, 44 Kan. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 1118. In due time a motion for a rehearing was filed, and it is now presented to this court for consideration.

The defendant claims that the court below erred in giving the following, among other, instructions to the jury: "Eighth. If you believe from the evidence that another person than the defendant willfully placed the railroad tie on the rails or track of the railroad described in the information on or about October 22d, 1888, in this county, —actually placed the tie or solid piece of timber on the said rails or track of the said railroad,—and you further find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant was present when the tie or timber was placed on the railroad track, and encouraged, consented to, aided, or advised such other person to place said obstruction on the said railroad track, then the defendant will be equally guilty as if he had willfully placed the obstruction on the track himself, with his own hands. Ninth. If you believe from the evidence that the special agent, Thompson, or any agent of the railroad company, had reason to believe that the defendant on October 22, 1888, intended to go up the railroad from Topeka, and that it was suspected that the defendant might place an obstruction on the railroad, in such case it would be proper for the agent of the railroad to send agents or servants along the railroad track to observe and watch the movements of the defendant; such diligence on the part of the railroad company was not only lawful, but highly commendable. Tenth. If you believe from the evidence that the defendant and one Spenk, on the afternoon of October 22, 1888, started, in company with each other, from Topeka to the point on the railroad where it is alleged that the obstruction was placed on the railroad track, and that said Spenk was in the employment of the railroad company, or had been in the employment of the company, and that at some time before the obstruction was placed upon the railroad, if you find it was placed on the railroad track as charged in the information, the said defendant agreed or had an understanding that an obstruction should be placed on the track of the railroad by either of them, or both together, and you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant placed the said obstruction on the railroad track at the time and place and in the manner charged in the information, or that Spenk placed the said obstruction on the railroad as charged in the information with the consent of the defendant, or that the defendant counseled, aided, or abetted Spenk in placing the obstruction on the track as charged, then it is your duty to find the defendant guilty as charged, notwithstanding you may believe that Spenk was in the employ of the railroad company." "Twelfth. If you believe from the evidence that on the afternoon of October 22, 1888, the defendant was in a state of intoxication, still this would not constitute a defense of the offense charged in the information, if the offense was committed by the defendant or by his consent, unless the defendant was in such a state of stupefaction as to be unconscious of right or wrong, and then the defendant would not be excusable, if you find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant started from Topeka with the formed plan or design to accomplish the offense charged in the information, and in pursuance of such plan or agreement the defendant started from Topeka alone or with another, and placed the obstruction on the railroad track as charged, or counseled, aided, abetted, or advised another to place the obstruction on the track of the railroad. Thirteenth. There has been evidence offered by the defendant respecting his good character as a peaceable, orderly, law-abiding citizen, and such evidence is competent and proper to be considered by the jury in connection with other evidence in the case in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the matters charged against him; and such evidence is particularly important for the defendant in cases where there may be a doubt as to the guilt, and in all such cases the question of character should resolve such doubt, whatever it may be, in favor of the defendant; but in all cases, where all the evidence clearly shows guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, then such former good character can be of little value."

The principal objections urged against the foregoing instructions are as follows: First. It is claimed that these instructions told the jury, in effect, that if the obstruction was placed upon the railroad track by some person other than the defendant, and if the defendant was present and "consented to" the same, (see eighth instruction,) or whether he was present or absent, if the same was "done with the consent of the defendant," (see tenth instruction,) "or by his consent," (see twelfth instruction,) he should be found guilty of the offense charged against him. Second. It is further claimed that the twelfth instruction, with regard to intoxication, does not correctly state the law. Third. It is also claimed that the thirteenth instruction, with regard to good character, is erroneous. We shall consider these matters in their order.

Evidence was introduced on the trial tending to prove, among others, the following facts: Prior to October 22, 1888, the defendant believed that he had a grievance as against the railroad company. He claimed that he had discovered an obstruction upon the railroad track, had removed it, had reported the same to the railroad company, and that the railroad company had never offered to pay him anything therefor, but had always afterwards treated him with distrust and suspicion; and in fact the company had so treated him. C. H. Thompson and George Spenk were in the employment of the railroad company, and, among other things, it was their duty to watch the actions of the defendant. On October 22, 1888, Spenk invited the defendant to go with him up the railroad track west of the city of Topeka. The defendant consented. Spenk purchased a bottle of whiskey to take along with them, and they went. But before going Spenk informed Thompson with respect to their contemplated trip, and Thompson then determined to go out that way too. Thompson then applied to the sheriff of the county to detail an officer to go along with him, Thompson, and the sheriff selected Albert McLean, a deputy constable. The defendant and Spenk started soon after noon of that day. They rode a part of the way and walked the remainder. They traveled until they arrived at or near a bridge on the railroad about four miles west of Topeka, when they separated. Thompson and McLean traveled with a horse and buggy, and carried with them arms and handcuffs. They probably arrived within the vicinity of the bridge prior to the arrival of the defendant and Spenk, when they stopped. Two colored boys, named Dennis, were also seen near this bridge. Thompson threw a railroad tie off the bridge, but as to who put it on there was and is no direct evidence. Very soon afterwards Thompson, McLean, and the defendant came together very near the bridge, and Thompson and McLean arrested the defendant, and put the handcuffs on him. What became of Spenk is not shown, and he did not testify in the case. He was not present when the arrest was made. The two colored boys were still near the bridge, and one of them testified on the trial. Thompson, McLean, and the defendant also testified on the trial. The defendant testified that he did not put the tie on the railroad bridge or track, and that he did not know anything about it. There was much other testimony, but it is not necessary, for the purposes of the question now under consideration, that we should state it. The foregoing instructions, with regard to the defendant's consenting to the tie being placed on the railroad track, were evidently given upon the hypothesis that the tie may have been placed upon the railroad track by Spenk, and that the defendant consented thereto. One of such instructions was given upon the hypothesis that the defendant may have been present when the tie was placed upon the railroad track, and the others were given upon the hypothesis that he may have been present or may have been absent, and that he would be guilty of the offense charged against him, if he consented thereto, whether he was present or absent. The eighth instruction speaks of the defendant as being guilty if he was present and "consented to" the transaction. The tenth instruction uses the words, "or that Spenk placed the said obstruction on the railroad as charged in the information, with the consent of the defendant," without reference to the defendant's presence or absence; and the instruction is also to the effect that the defendant should be found guilty in such a case, "notwithstanding you [the jury] may believe that Spenk was in the employ of the railroad company." The twelfth instruction states that intoxication "would not constitute a defense of the offense charged in the information, if the offense was committed by the defendant, or by his consent, unless the defendant was in such a state of stupefaction as to be unconscious of right or wrong," and the consent here spoken of is without reference to the defendant's presence or absence. If, however, Spenk actually committed a crime by placing a tie upon the railroad track, and if the defendant had knowledge of Spenk's actions or intended actions, and that Spenk intended to commit or was committing a crime, and if the defendant consented thereto, by any word, act, sign, or motion, in such an intelligent and affirmative manner as to give encouragement to Spenk to commit the offense, the defendant would also be guilty equally with Spenk, whether the defendant was present or absent at the time. Two questions, among others, are involved in these instructions: First. Did Spenk commit any public offense? Second. Was the consent of the defendant, if he ever gave any consent, of that open or expressed kind as would give encouragement to Spenk to commit the offense? The defendant's theory, as expressed by his counsel, is that Thompson and Spenk were pseudo detectives, in the employment of the railroad company, who combined to lead the defendant into doing something that would result in his being convicted of a crime and sent to the penitentiary; that what they did was done as employees of the railroad company, ostensibly for its benefit, and not for its injury, nor for the injury of any one except the defendant; that it was one of them, Spenk, who placed the tie upon the railroad track, and as he did the same as an employee of the railroad company, which made the act virtually that of the railroad company, no offense was committed, either with or without the consent of the defendant, or to which the defendant could consent; and the defendant further claims that, even if a crime was committed by Spenk, still that the defendant did not give any consent thereto, by any word or act, and therefore that he could not be guilty of committing any offense, even if he at the time knew that Spenk intended to commit or was committing a crime, and even if he at the time mentally consented thereto. If Spenk was actually an employee of the railroad company, and if he placed such tie upon the railroad track as such employee, and had no intention whatever of doing anything to injure the railroad company or its passengers or freight, and expecting such tie soon to be removed from the railroad track, Spenk would not have committed any offense, and the defendant, by consenting to his acts, if he did consent, would only have been consenting to innocent conduct. A railroad company certainly has a right to place an obstruction upon its own track, where no wrong is intended or could reasonably be expected. In this state our statutes provide that "any person who counsels, aids, or abets in the commission of any offense may be charged, tried, and convicted in the same manner as if he were a principal." Crim. Code, § 115. But we have no statute that makes the consenting to a thing, which is innocent in itself, an offense, although the person consenting thereto may have believed the thing to be an offense; nor have we any statute making the consenting to even the commission of a crime an offense, unless the consent amounts to the counseling, aiding, or abetting in the commission of such crime. Hence, where a thing is not an offense at all, a party cannot be guilty of committing an offense by merely consenting thereto; and, even where the thing is an offense, a party can be guilty of committing an offense by consenting thereto, only where his consent is of that affirmative and expressed character which amounts to a counseling, aiding, or abetting in the commission of the offense. "He must do or say something showing consent to the felonious purpose, and must contribute to its execution." 1 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 63, 64. That a person consenting to a thing, innocent in itself, does not thereby commit a public offense, although the thing may at the time appear to him to be a public offense, and although he may at the time believe the same to be a public offense, see the following cases: Allen v. State, 40 Ala 334; Spelden v. State, 3 Tex. App. 156; Reg. v. Johnson, 1 Carr. & M. 218, 41 E. C. L. 123; State v. Jansen, 22 Kan. 498, 505, et seq. And that mental consent to a crime, where no expressed consent is given by any word or act, does not make the person consenting guilty of any offense, see the following authorities: Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 418; State v. Cox, 65 Mo. 29; White v. People, 81 Ill. 333; State v. Hildreth, 9 Ired. 440; 1 Whart. Crim. Law, §§ 211, 211a, 211d.

In the case of Clem v. State, supra, the trial court instructed the jury, among other things, as follows: "If she [the defendant] was present at the time and place of the murder, in any way assisting, aiding, encouraging, or contributing towards the murder, she would be guilty as a principal in the crime; so, if the murder was perpetrated with her knowledge and consent or connivance, she is a principal." Pages 430, 431. Upon this instruction the supreme court commented as follows: "Question is made as to the correctness of the last clause of this instruction. When the jury was told that if the defendant 'was present at the time and place of the murder, in any way assisting, aiding, encouraging, or contributing towards the murder, she would be guilty as a principal in the crime,' language was employed embracing every possible case in which she could be guilty as a principal in the second degree. The definition given was full and exhaustive. Nothing could be added to it without error, though it might properly enough be illustrated and explained, that the jury might understand fully the meaning of the language employed, and how to apply it to the facts of the case on trial. This, if done correctly, might be an aid to the jury, and would be entirely unobjectionable." Page 431. "Under this instruction the jury would understand that if they believed from the evidence that the prisoner was present when the murder was committed, and was willing or desirous that the bloody deed should be done, they must find her guilty, though that desire had been kept by her a secret, and was entirely unknown to him who inflicted the deadly blow. It is plainly not the law that one can be guilty of murder without overt act, who by neither word nor gesture has done anything to contribute to the commission of the homicide, or to assist, encourage, or evince approval of it at or before the fact, and of whom it only appears that he was present and knew of the crime and mentally approved it. The silent thought, however wicked in view of the searcher of hearts, is not a crime against our laws, but is left by them to another than a human tribunal." Page 432. In the case of State v. Cox, supra, it was held that "the mere mental approval by a by-stander of a murder committed in his presence does not make him an accomplice in the murder." In the case of White v. People, supra, the supreme court of Illinois used the following language: "By the second instruction the jury are told that one who stands by when a crime is committed in his presence by another, and consents to the perpetration of the crime, is a principal in the offense, and must be punished as such. The law is that one who 'stands by, and aids, abets, or assists' * * * the perpetration of the crime, is an accessory, and 'shall be considered as principal,' etc. Rev. St. 1874, p. 393, § 274. There is a plain distinction between 'consenting' to a crime and 'aiding, abetting, or assisting' in its perpetration. Aiding, abetting, or assisting are affirmative in their character. Consenting may be a mere negative acquiescence, not in any way made known at the time to the principal malefactor. Such consenting, though involving moral turpitude, does not come up to the meaning of the words of the statute. The words of the statute are stronger than those of the instruction." Page 337.

It is now the opinion of this court that the court below erred in its use of the words "consent" and "consented" in the foregoing instructions, and for such error its judgment must be reversed. At the time of our former decision in this case we entertained a different opinion, but the argument on the motion for a rehearing has convinced us that we were in error. The words "consent" and "consented" should be eliminated from the instructions.

The question with reference to intoxication we do not think, under the evidence in the case, requires any comment, as it does not appear from the evidence that the defendant was intoxicated at all at the time when the tie was placed upon the railroad track or at the time when it was taken off.

With respect to character, the thirteenth instruction of the court below is perhaps subject to criticism. Evidence in criminal cases of the good character of the defendant may be introduced for the purpose of disproving guilt, and if, upon the whole of the evidence introduced, including that of the good character of the defendant, the jury entertain a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt, he should be acquitted. 3 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 110, 111. Our former judgment, affirming the judgment of the district court, will be set aside, and the judgment of such court will be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial. All the justices concurring.

STATE ex rel. KELLOGG, Attorney General,
v. PLYMELL.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—ELIGIBILITY—HOLDING TWO OFFICES.

1. In this state a person holding a city office cannot hold at the same time the office of county commissioner.

2. The evidence in this case examined, and held to show that the defendant was holding the office of city clerk of West Plains, a city of the third class, at the time he qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office of county commissioner of Meade county.

Original proceeding in quo warranto.

On the 29th day of April, 1890, the following petition, omitting caption, was filed in this court: "Now comes L. B. Kellogg, attorney general of the state of Kansas, and gives the court to understand and be informed that at the general election held November 6, 1889, in the third commissioners' district in and for the county of Meade, the defendant, C. M. Plymell, was a candidate for the office of county commissioner for said district, and received a majority of the votes cast in said district for said office; and upon the canvass of the returns of said election by the board of county commissioners of said county, sitting as a canvassing board, the defendant, Plymell, was declared to have been elected to said office; and in the month of January, 1890, the defendant entered upon the discharge of the duties of said office, and has ever since continued to exercise the duties pertaining to said office, and is still exercising the powers, duties, and privileges appertaining thereto. The attorney general further gives the court to understand and be informed that at the time said election was held, at the time said canvass was made, and at the time the defendant entered upon the discharge of the duties of said office, the defendant was ineligible to be elected to said office, and is ineligible to hold the same, for the reason that at the time said election was held, and at the time the defendant pretended to qualify as such county commissioner, and at the time he pretended to enter upon the discharge of the duties of said office, the defendant was the duly appointed and qualified city clerk of the city of West Plains, and was holding said office, and performing the duties thereof, the said city then and there being duly incorporated as a city of the third class, under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas. Wherefore the said attorney general demands judgment against the defendant, C. M. Plymell, that he be ousted from said office, and that the plaintiff have and recover of and from the defendant its costs in this behalf expended. L. B. KELLOGG, Attorney General. WEBB & WEBB and F. B. LINDSAY, of Counsel." On the 11th day of January, 1891, the defendant filed the following answer, omitting caption: "For answer to the petition of the said plaintiff, defendant says—First. Defendant admits that at the general election held November 6, 1889, in the third commissioners' district in and for the county of Meade, he received a plurality of the votes cast in said district for the office of county commissioner, and further admits that he received a certificate of election as said commissioner for the third district of said county, and further admits that he entered upon the discharge of the duties of said office in the month of January, 1890, and has ever since exercised, and is now exercising, the powers, duties, and privileges appertaining to said office. Second. And said defendant, for a second defense to said petition, says that at the time of the general election in Meade county, Kansas, held November 6, 1889, the city of West Plains was pretending to have been organized and was acting as a duly-incorporated city of the third class, but that as a matter of fact the city of West Plains was not duly-incorporated as a city of the third class. And said defendant further admits that at the time of said general election he was appointed and acting as said city clerk of said pretended city of West Plains, Kansas, and had qualified as said clerk before said election; but this defendant denies that at the time he qualified as county commissioner, and at the time he entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office as said commissioner, he was the appointed and qualified city clerk of said pretended city of West Plains. And this defendant further says that subsequent to said election held in said county on the 6th day of November, 1889, he resigned the office of city clerk of said pretended city of West Plains, Kansas, at an open meeting of the mayor and council of said pretended city, and that his resignation as city clerk of said pretended city was then and there duly accepted. And said defendant further says that at no time since his resignation, and at its acceptance, which occurred on or about the 20th day of November, 1889, was he reappointed to the said office of city clerk of said pretended city. Third. And said defendant, for a third ground of defense to said petition, says that he denies that the said city of West Plains, Kansas, was at the time of said general election held in said county on the 6th day of November, 1889, or at any time subsequent thereto, a duly-incorporated city of the third class under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas. Fourth. And said defendant, for the fourth ground of defense to said petition, says that he denies each and every other allegation in said petition not hereinbefore specifically denied. C. M. PLYMELL, Defendant." Subsequently the plaintiff filed a reply containing a general denial of all new matter.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) In the fall of 1889, C. M. Plymell became a candidate for the office of county commissioner of the third district for Meade county, while he was holding the office of city clerk of West Plains, a city of that county of the third class. At the election on the 6th of November, 1889, he was successful. He subsequently qualified and acted as county commissioner. Paragraph 1622, Gen. St. 1889, reads: "No persons holding any state, county, township, or city office, or any employe, officer, or stockholder in any railroad in which the county owns stock, shall be eligible to the office of county commissioner." This action was brought to oust Plymell from his office as commissioner. It is contended that he was ineligible to be elected to this office while holding the office of city clerk. It is further contended that he was holding the office of city clerk of West Plains when he qualified as county commissioner, on the 26th day of November, 1889, and that he also continued to hold the office of city clerk after he entered upon the discharge of his duties as county commissioner on the 13th day of January, 1890. On the part of the defendant, it is admitted that he was the duly appointed and acting clerk of the city of West Plains when he was elected to the office of county commissioner, but he claims that in November, 1889, he resigned the office of city clerk, and did not hold that office when he qualified as county commissioner, or when he entered upon the discharge of his duties as such officer.

Whether the defendant was ineligible to be elected to the office of county commissioner while holding the office of city clerk we need not decide. The authorities upon this question are somewhat conflicting. State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 570; Carson v. McPhetridge, 15 Ind. 827; State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96; Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 121; Brady v. Howe, 50 Miss. 626; State v. Fisher, 28 Vt. 714; Privett v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52. We are not satisfied, from the evidence introduced upon the trial, that Plymell resigned his office as city clerk in good faith before the 13th day of January, 1890, when he entered upon the duties of the office of county commissioner. He testified that he resigned his office of city clerk between November 10 and 15, 1889. Two members of the city council, I. E. Smith and James Apple, support his evidence, and testify that the city council accepted his resignation. Plymell admits, however, that his resignation was not in writing, and it appears that no record thereof was kept by himself or the city council, and no written minute can be found in the recorded proceedings of the city council showing any such resignation. He testified, among other things, as follows: "Question. Let me ask you, Mr. Plymell, if there was not a special meeting of the city council about the 23d day of April, 1890, at which you tendered your resignation as city clerk. Answer. I think there was. Q. Was you city clerk at that time? A. I had resigned before, but it had not been put on the minutes of the meeting; so I handed in my resignation in writing about that time. Q. Who were the city council at that time? A. I. E. Smith, C. E. Woolen, O. J. Loosborrow, James Apple, and Perry Marker. Q. Who was the mayor? A. M. S. Parsons. Q. Was your resignation accepted at that time by the council? A. It was. Q. Did you perform any duties as city clerk of West Plains after the resignation you speak of, about November 10, 1889? A. After I first resigned, and after they had accepted my resignation, the acting mayor told me to act as city clerk and do the work until they could appoint another." On February 5, 1890, Plymell, as city clerk, attested the signature of W. C. Gould, mayor, to an order to C. S. Rockey, county treasurer, in favor of E. M. Mears, the city treasurer of West Plains; and on April 21, 1890, as city clerk, he attested the signature of M. S. Parsons, mayor, to an order of C. S. Rockey, county treasurer, in favor of E. M. Mears, city treasurer of the city of West Plains. R. W. Griggs testified that he was the county attorney of Meade county from September, 1888, until January 9, 1891; that on April 23, 1890, he wrote to Plymell informing him that he was illegally holding the office of county commissioner; that the next day he saw him, and he said, "I resigned the office of city clerk, and filed a new bond," or that he would do so shortly, and that would enable him to continue in office. Moses Black testified that he is the register of deeds for Meade county; that the defendant filed his official bond on November 27, 1889; that he filed another bond on the 24th day of April, 1890; and that he filed still another bond on the 2d day of May, 1890. W. C. Gould testified that he was the mayor of West Plains from April, 1889, until February, 1890; that the defendant was the city clerk from the spring of 1889 until February, 1890; and that he never resigned, or offered to resign, his office during that time. M. S. Parsons testified that he is the mayor of West Plains; that Plymell was the city clerk up to April, 1890. Henry B. Stone testified that he was a councilman of the city of West Plains from April, 1889, until January, 1890, and that Plymell was the city clerk and discharged the duties thereof during that time. After his pretended resignation, in November, 1889, of the office of city clerk, Plymell continued to hold the office of city clerk, and continued to act as such officer, for several months after he entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office of county commissioner. This is not permitted. A person holding a city office cannot at the same time hold the office of county commissioner. Rogers v. Slonaker, 32 Kan. 191, 4 Pac. Rep. 138; paragraph 1622, Gen. St. 1889. Plymell violated the statute in attempting to qualify and hold the office of county commissioner for several months while he was still city clerk. The prayer of the petition will be granted, with costs.

STATE v. CLARK.

FALSE PRETENSES—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, it is necessary for the state to prove the intent to defraud, the false pretenses made with the intent, and the fraud thereby accomplished must be shown, to warrant a conviction.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge.

A. H. Case, Anderson & Littick, and Ellis Lewis, for appellant. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and Winfield Freeman, for the State.

GREEN, C. The defendant in this case was convicted in the district court of Wyandotte county of obtaining money under false pretenses. It was charged in the information that he obtained the sum of $5,600 from the Stock-Yards Bank at Kansas City, Kan., by falsely representing to the agent of the bank that he was the owner of 143 head of native Missouri four-year-old steers, and had good right to mortgage the same. The evidence for the state disclosed the fact that the defendant was indebted to the firm of Irwin, Allen & Co., of Kansas City, in the sum of $3,100 at the time the money was charged to have been obtained. To procure the loan of $5,600, the defendant gave a chattel mortgage upon the 143 head of steers and some other stock, and also furnished as indorsers upon the note which he executed Irwin, Allen & Co. and W. H. Conklin. Out of the loan thus procured the defendant paid Irwin, Allen & Co. the amount due them, and received from the bank three cashier's checks for the balance of the $5,600. Some six weeks after the mortgage was given, it was disclosed that the defendant did not have all of the cattle he had included in the mortgage, and the bank took possession of the stock described in the mortgage which could be found, and sold the same, realizing therefrom the sum of $3,969, leaving a balance of $1,831 upon the note given for the debt, and interest. The evidence upon the part of the state and defense showed that the indorsers upon this note were good, and the balance could have been collected if suit had been instituted; but no effort was made before the filing of the information in this case to collect the amount due, except some conferences over the matter, and personal requests to pay the balance due. It seems to have been conceded that Irwin, Allen & Co. and W. H. Conklin were financially responsible. Can it be said, under this state of facts, that an offense, under the statute, for obtaining money or property from the bank by false pretenses has been made out?

To constitute the offense charged in the information, under section 94 of the crimes act, four elements must concur, which should be averred and proved: (1) There must be an intent to defraud; (2) there must be an actual fraud committed; (3) false pretenses must have been used for the purpose of perpetrating the fraud; and (4) the fraud must be accomplished by means of the false pretenses made use of for the purpose, viz., they must be the cause, in whole or in part, which induced the owner to part with his property. State v. Mathews, 44 Kan. —, 25 Pac. Rep. 36; Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. 179; People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 4 Pac. Rep. 773; 2 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 163; People v. Wakely, 62 Mich. 297, 23 N. W. Rep. 871. Tested by the above rules, which seem to be supported by reason and authority, it must appear that some one has been defrauded, to insure a conviction. This one element is essential. Can it be said that the Stock-Yards Bank has actually been defrauded by the defendant, when it holds a note upon which there is a balance of less than $2,000, and the indorsers thereon are solvent, and no steps are taken to enforce the collection? The language of the court in the case of People v. Wakely, supra, is: "But it does not amount in law to a false pretense unless made with a fraudulent intent, and the person parting with the property is actually defrauded." Was the Stock-Yards Bank actually defrauded? What right was it deprived of in the business transaction? It had parted with its money, but it held a note which was conceded to be good, aside from the security given by the defendant; and we fail to see in what way it was injured. If it was not defrauded, this essential ingredient of the crime charged was lacking, and, unless evidence can be produced to show that the bank was actually defrauded, the defendant should be discharged. It is recommended that the judgment of the court below be reversed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF LEOTI V. FISHER,
Treasurer, et al.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS — DEDUCTIONS TO STOCKHOLDERS.

1. The assessment of the entire capital stock of a national bank "in solido" against the bank itself is invalid.

2. The only way that the capital stock of a national bank can be reached is by the assessment of the shares of the different or individual stockholders. Under the statute of this state, the bank may pay the tax assessed upon the shares of its different stockholders, and it will have a lien thereon when it pays such tax until the same is satisfied; but if, from any cause, the tax levied upon the different stockholders is not paid by the bank, the property of the individual stockholders will be liable therefor.

3. The individual stockholders of a national bank are allowed the same deductions from the assessment against them upon their shares of stock as other tax-payers in the state, owning moneyed capital, are allowed; but, of course, no double deduction or exemption can be allowed to any stockholder.

Error from district court, Wichita county; V. H. GRINSTEAD, Judge.

J. S. Newby and E. C. Little, for plaintiff in error. W. B. Washington, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. The First National Bank of Leoti commenced this action to restrain the collection of certain taxes assessed against it. An order temporarily restraining the treasurer and sheriff from levying and collecting the same from the property of the bank was granted. The defendants demurred to the plaintiff's petition upon the ground that there was a defect of parties defendant, that the petition did not state facts sufficient to grant the relief prayed for, and that it did not state a cause of action against the defendants. The court sustained the demurrer, and dissolved the restraining order. The plaintiff excepted, and brings the case here. The petition alleges that the plaintiff is, and was at all times mentioned, a national bank; that E. W. Fisher and John H. Edwards are treasurer and sheriff, respectively, of Wichita county; that on May 10, 1890, the treasurer issued a tax-warrant against the plaintiff for $1,569.14 to the sheriff, and that the whole amount thereof was erroneously, wrongfully, and illegally assessed against plaintiff. The petition further states that on the 22d of March, 1889, the township assessor took a statement of the amount of property held by the bank, and a statement of the amount of stock of the bank, as the personal property of the bank, and so assessed it, "in solido," without notifying the stockholders, and without giving them opportunity to claim exemptions. The petition further alleges that in January, 1890, the board of county commissioners, having demanded and received from the president of the bank a list of stockholders, with the amount of stock held by each on March 1, 1889, and of surplus, undivided profits, and real estate, increased the bank assessment on the stock, which had once before been assessed, so that $700.84 were added to the amount of the tax, and that this was done without giving any notice to the stockholders, and that the assessment against the property was made as before, "in solido," and as the property of the bank.

It is contended that the method of the officers in assessing and attempting to collect the taxes complained of is contrary to section 5219 of the United States Revised Statutes, and also contrary to various sections of chapter 107, Gen. St. 1889, providing for the assessment and collection of taxes. Said section 5219 reads: "Nothing herein shall prevent all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the state within which the association is located; but the legislature of each state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all of the shares of national banking associations located within the state, subject only to two restrictions,—that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon any other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by non-residents of any state shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either state, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed." Paragraph 6868, Gen. St. 1889, being section 22, art. 6, of the act relating to the assessment and collection of taxes, provides that "stockholders in banks and banking associations organized under the laws of this state or the United States shall be assessed and taxed on the true value of their shares of stock in the city or township where such bank or banking association is located; and the president, cashier, or other managing officer thereof, shall, under oath, return to the assessor, on demand, a list of the names of the stockholders, and the amount and value of stock held by each, together with the value of any undivided profits or surplus; and said bank or banking association shall pay the tax assessed upon said stock and undivided profits or surplus, and shall have lien thereon until the same is satisfied: provided, that if, from any cause, the taxes levied upon the stock of any banking association shall not be paid by said association, the property of the individual stockholders shall be held liable therefor:

provided, further, that if any portion of the capital stock of any bank or banking association shall be invested in real estate, and the bank shall hold a title in fee-simple thereto, the assessed value of said real estate shall be deducted from the original assessment of the paid-up capital stock of said bank or banking association, and said real estate shall be assessed as other lands or lots; and provided, further, that banking stock or capital shall not be assessed at any higher rate than other property." It has been many times held by the supreme court of the United States that the authority of the states to tax the shares of national bank stock is derived wholly from the act of congress, and that without the consent of congress these bank-stock shares could not be taxed by state authorities at all. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316; Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 738; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449; People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539-543. The statute of the state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all shares of national bank associations located within the state, subject, however, to the restrictions of section 5219, Rev. St. U. S., under the state statute, which is in accord with the United States statute. Authority is given to tax the shares of national banks as part of the taxable estates of the owners of the shares, but in levying these taxes the state is prohibited from assessing them at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of other individual tax-payers. The tax so authorized by congress "is a several tax upon the shares of each individual stockholder or shareholder, as distinguished from a lumping tax, or a tax 'in solido,' upon the bank itself." Bank v. City of Richmond, 39 Fed. Rep. 309; Bank v. City of Richmond, 42 Fed. Rep. 877. The shares of national banks must be assessed for taxation as the property of the individual stockholders or shareholders, respectively. Hershire v. Bank, 35 Iowa, 272. Under the statute of our state, and according to general practice in other states, the national banks pay the taxes thus assessed for the individual stockholders; but the tax cannot be a lumping tax, or a tax "in solido," upon the bank only. Bradley v. People, 4 Wall. 459; Bank v. Com., 9 Wall. 353.

It is conceded in this case that the assessment of the 22d of March, 1889, was and is void. The second assessment, according to the allegations of the petition, was a lumping tax, or a tax "in solido," upon the capital stock of the national bank, and not upon the shares, or upon the individual owners of the shares. The assessment of the entire stock of the bank "in solido" against the bank was invalid. DRUMMOND, J., said, in Collins v. Chicago, 4 Biss. 472, that "the capital stock of the national bank, as such, cannot be assessed under state authority. The only way that such a stock can be reached is to assess the shares of the different stockholders in the same manner that assessments are made in other cases against property owned by the citizens and inhabitants of the state." Bank v. Britton, 105 U. S. 322; Ball, Banks, 215-224. It was said in Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 596, that "in most of the states, if not in all, the personal property of all individuals and corporations is listed, valued, and assessed by public officers under legislative authority. The first proviso of Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, simply requires that the shares of individuals in national banking associations shall be included in this valuation and assessment; and, inasmuch as personal property of different descriptions is often valued and assessed by different rules, it further requires that it shall not be so included at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of citizens. * * * Now, by taxation in common we understand taxation by a common rule and in equal degrees. To tax the shares of citizens in these associations by other rules, or in greater degrees, than other like property, would as effectually retard, impede, burden, and control the operation of the national currency act as to tax the associations themselves or their lawful operations, and would be clearly unwarranted by the constitution." The individual stockholders of a national bank are allowed the same deductions from the amount assessed against them upon their shares of stock as other tax-payers in the state, owning moneyed capital, are allowed. But, of course, no double deduction or exemption can be allowed to any stockholder. Whitbeck v. Bank, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1121; Wasson v. Bank, (Ind.) 8 N. E. Rep. 97. Therefore the second assessment against the bank was void; and as both assessments were void, the officers of Wichita county had no right to issue a warrant for their collection, or for the collection of any part of the same. It is urged, however, that the bank must pay, or offer to pay, any part of the tax lawfully or justly due, before it can obtain the relief prayed for. According to the allegations of the petition, however, there is no part of the tax lawfully or justly due. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

STATE ex rel. v. BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF WABAUNSEE COUNTY.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—TITLE OF ACT—REPAIR OF BRIDGES.

Sess. Laws Kan. 1889, c. 98, entitled "An act authorizing the county commissioners of Wabaunsee county to appropriate money," etc., provides: "The county commissioners of Wabaunsee county are hereby authorized and empowered, and it is made their duty, to appropriate such sum of money as may be necessary to keep in repair" a certain bridge. Held, that the words, "it is hereby made their duty," being broader than the title, must, to sustain the constitutionality of the act, be regarded as nugatory; that it was discretionary with the commissioners to make repairs, and they could not be compelled to do so by mandamus.

Original proceeding in mandamus.

L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and J. F. Peffer, for plaintiff. Hazen & Isenhardt and J. B. Barnes, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The question in this case comes up on a motion filed by plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings, and therefore the only question for this court to decide is whether the petition and answer entitle the plaintiff to the relief sought. This depends upon the construction of chapter 98, Sess. Laws 1889. The title of this act is, "An act authorizing the county commissioners of Wabaunsee county to appropriate money," etc. The act itself contains this language: "The county commissioners of Wabaunsee county are hereby authorized and empowered, and it is hereby made their duty, to appropriate such sum of money as may be necessary to keep in repair," etc. The words "it is hereby made their duty," if given full force, are broader than the title. To sustain the constitutionality of the act, these words must be regarded as nugatory, and the act must be construed as merely authorizing the county commissioners at their discretion to repair the bridge. Under this construction of the act, the county commissioners cannot be compelled by mandamus to make any repairs. Town of Cantril v. Sainer, 59 Iowa, 26, 12 N. W. Rep. 753; City of Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kan. 630; Stebbins v. Mayer, 38 Kan. 573, 18 Pac. Rep. 745. The peremptory writ will be denied.

ACTION ON CONTRACT—AMENDMENT OF PLEADING —QUANTUM MERUIT—EVIDENCE.

1. The plaintiff, who alleges the construction of a building under a written contract with the defendant, and who asks a recovery of the contract price, may subsequently amend the petition so as to claim the actual value of the materials furnished and the work performed upon such terms as the court may deem just.

2. Where the building is erected upon and becomes a part of the realty of the defendant, and, although defective in some respects, is of real and substantial value to the defendant for the purposes intended, the plaintiff may recover from the defendant what the building is reasonably worth to him.

3. The testimony in the case found to be sufficient to sustain the overruling of a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence.

Error from district court, Wabaunsee county: WILLIAM THOMPSON, Judge.

J. F. Peffer, for plaintiff in error. George G. Cornell, for defendants in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This was an action brought by Boyer & Boyer to recover $1,030 for furnishing material and constructing a school-house in school-district No. 2 in Wabaunsee county, and to foreclose a mechanic's lien which they had filed against the school district and building. They alleged in their petition, as a first cause of action, that on or about the 20th day of July, 1889, they entered into a written contract with the school-district board to furnish material and erect for the school-district a school-house, and that soon after the making of the contract they commenced the work, which was completed on October 7, 1889. They state that they performed all the conditions of the contract on their part, but that the school-district had failed and refused to pay them the contract price, or any part thereof. It is further alleged that they duly perfected the mechanic's lien to which they were entitled, and they asked for a foreclosure of the same. As a second cause of action it was alleged that before the signing of the written contract set out in the first count of the petition they had entered into an oral contract with the school-district to erect the school-house in the manner and upon the terms set out in the written contract, which oral contract was not reduced to writing until July 31, 1889, and that, prior to the signing of the written contract, work had been commenced, and the foundation of the building nearly completed, and that they were permitted by the school-district to carry on the building to completion, and that the material furnished and the work and labor performed for and upon the building were worth the sum of $1,030, no part of which had been paid. The defense of the district was a non-performance of the conditions of the contract by the defendants in error. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and, after the evidence of the Boyer brothers had been introduced, a demurrer to the evidence upon each count of the petition was filed by the school-district, and the court sustained the demurrer as to the first count, and overruled it as to the second count. After hearing the evidence of all the parties, the court subsequently rendered judgment against the district for $739.95, together with interest and costs. Two grounds of error are assigned for a reversal: First, that the court erred in permitting the Boyer brothers to amend their petition during the progress of the trial by setting up the second count, which has been referred to, and which seems to have been pleaded with a view of recovering the value of the materials furnished and the labor performed in case the court should hold that the work had not been done in the exact manner stipulated in the contract, and that they were not entitled to recover the price agreed on in the contract. A reading of the record satisfies us that no injustice was done in this respect. Great latitude is given to the court in the matter of amending pleadings, and it does not appear by the record that the defendant below asked for a continuance, or suffered any prejudice by reason of the amendment. The plaintiffs below were seeking a recovery for the building of the school-house, and an amendment containing facts which authorized the recovery as upon a quantum meruit was allowable. If the school-district was unawares by the amendment, or was unprepared to meet the new phase of the case, a continuance might have been had upon application to the court. But no such application was made. It is next insisted that the court erred in overruling a demurrer to the evidence offered by Boyer Bros. to sustain the second count in the petition. The testimony tended to show that there was some deviation from the requirements of the contract, but there was evidence offered in behalf of Boyer Bros. that there had been a substantial compliance with the contract; that they had endeavored in good faith to carry out its conditions; and that the defects were slight and unimportant. It is true that the foundation wall was made of grouting, instead of rubble-work, as the written contract required; but the contractors state that the wall was mostly completed before the written contract was entered into, and the school-district knew the character of wall that was being built; and it is further claimed that it is as substantial and durable as though it had been rubble-work. In our opinion, there was sufficient testimony to warrant the judgment that was given. The building is erected upon the land of the school-district, and there appears to have been an honest attempt to comply with the conditions of the contract. "It is well settled that where one party has entered into a special contract to perform work for another and furnish materials, and the work is done and the materials are furnished, but not in the manner stipulated for in the contract, so that he cannot recover the price agreed on in the contract, yet, if the work and materials are of any value and benefit to the other party, he may recover for the work done and for the materials. This is upon the principle that, if the other party has derived a benefit from the part performed, it would be unjust to allow him to retain that without paying anything." Barnwell v. Kempton, 22 Kan. 314; Duncan v. Baker, 21 Kan. 99; Usher v. Hiatt, Id. 548. The building erected is attached to the realty, and becomes the property of the school-district. It is of substantial value to the district, and may be used for the purposes for which it was built. To allow the school-district to retain the building without paying the contractors the reasonable worth of the same would be an injustice. The court evidently found that, although the school-house was defective in some particulars, it was of real and substantial value to the district for the purposes intended, but because of the defects limited the award to the actual benefits which the district received. The plaintiff in error greatly relies on Denton v. City of Atchison, 34 Kan. 488, 8 Pac. Rep. 750, but that case is not apt or controlling. In that case there was no substantial compliance with the provisions of the contract, and the improvements constructed did not attach to the realty of the city, or become its property. Then, again, in making the improvements the city authorities are acting in behalf of the abutting property owners, who are substantially benefited by the improvement, and at whose expense it is made, and are required to pursue closely the direction of the statute, and payment cannot be enforced against the property owner unless the statutory requirements are observed. It is true that there is much conflict of testimony in the record, but on a demurrer to the evidence we must view that of the plaintiffs below in its most favorable light; and, so looking at it, we readily conclude that there was sufficient testimony to overcome the demuror of the school-district. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

CITY OF IOLA v. MERRIMAN.

RAILROAD COMPANIES—MUNICIPAL AID.

In 1881 a city of the third class had the power, under certain terms and conditions, and within certain limitations, to subscribe to the capital stock of a railroad company, and to issue its bonds in payment for the stock, although the city may have been a portion of a municipal township, which township had already subscribed for all the stock and issued all the bonds in aid of railroads which it had the power to subscribe for or issue.

Error from district court, Allen county; L. STILLWELL, Judge.

S. O. Thacher and A. H. Campbell, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Ewing, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought in the district court of Allen county by Charles F. Merriman against the city of Iola, to recover upon certain interest coupons of certain negotiable bonds issued by the city of Iola, to pay for a subscription to the capital stock of the St. Louis, Ft. Scott & Wichita Railroad Company. The bonds and coupons were issued on July 1, 1881. They seem to be regular in form, and are valid, provided the city of Iola had at the time any power to issue them. A recital is contained in each of the bonds, which reads as follows: "This bond is one of a series of fifty-three, each for five hundred dollars, of like tenor and effect, and are issued under and by virtue of an act entitled 'An act to enable counties, townships, and cities to aid in the construction of railroads, and to repeal section eight of chapter thirty-nine (39) of the Laws of 1874, approved February 26, 1876.'" The defendant answered, setting forth as a second defense to the plaintiff's action the following, among other things: "The defendant alleges that it is now, and always has been, a city of the third class and a part of the municipal township of Iola in the county of Allen. * * * And it further avers that said township of Iola, on or about the 11th day of August, A. D. 1880, voted, and thereafter did issue, to said railroad company the full amount of the bonds which it was authorized under the law to issue to any railroad corporation whatever, to-wit, the sum of $83,500. * * * That the city council of said city of Iola did not at the next city election after the passage by the legislature of the state of Kansas of an act entitled 'An act to amend section four of chapter sixty of the Laws of A. D. 1871, providing for the organization and government of cities of the third class, also, providing for the appointment of assessors for said cities,'—which act is chapter 55, on page 148, of the Laws of 1876,—nor did said city council at any other time submit to the qualified voters of said city of Iola the question whether said city should be and constitute a separate township for all township purposes, and for voting and issuing bonds and subscribing stock for and in aid of building or constructing railroads." The defendant also alleged in this second defense that, while the township of Iola had within its borders more than $150,000 worth of real and personal property, and, indeed, more than double that amount, according to the assessed valuation thereof for each of several years prior to the issuing of the bonds and coupons in controversy, yet, according to the various assessments of the property within the city of Iola, the city never had that amount of property within its borders. The plaintiff demurred to this second defense upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute any defense to the plaintiff's action, which demurrer was sustained by the court; and the defendant, as plaintiff in error, brings the case to this court for review.

It is claimed that the city of Iola had no legal power or authority to issue the bonds and coupons in controversy—First, because no city of the third class has any power to issue bonds in aid of the construction of a railroad; and, second, because the city of Iola, which was a city of the third class, formed a part of the township of Iola, and that the township of Iola had already issued all the bonds which it as a township was authorized to issue under the statutes. The statutes under which the present bonds and coupons were issued, to-wit, Laws 1876, c. 107, as amended in 1877; Laws 1877, cc. 142, 144; Gen. St. 1889, par. 1283 et seq.—provide, among other things, that under certain terms and conditions, and within certain limitations, the electors of "any county," "any municipal township," or "any incorporated city," may vote at an election called for the purpose upon "a proposition to subscribe to the capital stock of, or to loan the credit of, such county, township, or city to any railroad company constructing or proposing to construct a railroad through or into such county, township, or city," (section 1.) and "if a majority of the qualified electors voting at such election shall vote for such subscription or loan, the board of county commissioners for and on behalf of such county or township, or the mayor and council for and on behalf of such city, shall order the county or city clerk, as the case may be to make such subscription or loan in the name of such county, township, or city, and shall cause such bonds, with coupons attached, as may be required by the terms of said proposition, to be issued in the name of such county, township, or city, which bonds, when issued for such county or township, shall be signed by the chairman of the board of county commissioners, and attested by the county clerk under the seal of such county, and, when issued for such city, shall be signed by the mayor, and attested by the city clerk under the seal of said city." Section 5, as amended in 1877, Laws 1877, c. 144, § 1; Gen. St. 1889, par. 1289. Indeed, ample power is given by this statute to "any county," "any municipal township," or "any incorporated city," under certain conditions, to subscribe to the capital stock of "any railroad company," and to issue its bonds in payment therefor, just as the city of Iola, which was and is an "incorporated city" of the third class, did in the present case, and such county, township, or city certainly has such power unless some other statute can be found limiting the same. Counsel for the plaintiff in error refers to section 4 of the third-class city act of 1871, as amended by section 1, c. 55, of the Laws of 1876, as furnishing such a limitation. That section, so far as it is applicable to the question now under consideration, and so far as it is necessary to quote it, reads as follows: "Municipal corporations regulated and governed by this act shall be and remain a part of the corporate limits of the municipal townships in which the same are situated for all township purposes of electing justices of the peace, constables, for the purpose of building bridges, and subscribing stock in aid of constructing railroads. All elections for justices of the peace and constables, and for issuing township bonds for building bridges and railroads, shall be held at such place as shall be prescribed for holding the township elections." This section, so far as we have quoted it, is precisely the same as the section was in 1871, and up to the time when it was amended in 1876. Section 63 of the same third-class city act, which section is still in force, (Gen. St. 1889, par. 988,) reads as follows: "The council shall take all needful steps to protect the interests of the city, present or prospective, in any railroad leading from or towards the same; but they shall not take or subscribe any stock in any railroad unless at least two-thirds of the electors of such city voting at a legal election vote in favor thereof." And under section 35 of the same third-class city act, which section is still in force, (Id., par. 960,) the city had and has the power to issue bonds for the payment of "any and all indebtedness" then existing or which might afterwards be created against the city. Now, it does not follow that because the city of Iola has remained and is a part of the corporate limits of the municipal township of Iola "for all township purposes," or for various "township purposes," including that of "subscribing stock in aid of constructing railroads," "and for issuing township bonds for building bridges and railroads," the city might not, as a city and for itself, also subscribe for stock, and issue its own city bonds in aid of the construction of railroads. When a township subscription for stock is made, the stock will of course be taken in the name of the township, and township bonds will be issued therefor, as is contemplated by the aforesaid section 4 of the third-class city act, and other statutes; and when stock is subscribed for by the city the stock will be taken in the name of the city, and city bonds will be issued therefor, as was done in this present case. Every city, whether of the first, second, or third class, and every township in the state of Kansas, is included within the corporate limits of the county within which such city or township is situated, and is so included for all county purposes, and for the purpose of subscribing for stock and issuing bonds in aid of the construction of railroads; but still it will not be claimed that because of such fact, and the particular fact that the county may subscribe for stock and issue its bonds therefor in aid of the construction of railroads, that the included city of the first or second class or the included township cannot also subscribe for stock and issue its own bonds for a like purpose: "provided . . . in no case shall the total amount of county, township, and city aid to any railroad company exceed four thousand dollars per mile for each mile of railroad constructed in said county." Laws 1876, c. 107, § 1, as amended by the Laws of 1877, c. 142, § 1, amended in 1887, and $2,000 instead of $4,000 prescribed. Laws 1887, c. 183, § 1; Gen. St. 1889, par. 1283. There are various limitations prescribed by the statutes upon the power of counties, townships, and cities to subscribe to the capital stock of railroad companies, and to issue bonds in payment therefor, some as to amounts and some with respect to other matters; but if the city of Iola had the power at all, under chapter 107 of the Laws of 1876, to subscribe for stock, and to issue its bonds in aid of railroads, then it will not be claimed, under the facts of this case as far as they are now disclosed, that such city transcended its powers in making the present subscription and in issuing the present bonds. The order and judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF FORT SCOTT v. ELLIOTT.

ACTION ON NOTE — PLEADING — SETTING OUT INDORSEMENTS.

Where, in an action by an indorsee of a negotiable promissory note, payable to order, the plaintiff declares on such note by setting out a copy of the same, with all the indorsements, and alleges ownership, and the indorsements are without date, the presumption of the law is that such note was transferred before maturity, and that plaintiff is the bona fide holder for value; that the failure of the plaintiff to set out the particular manner in which the note was transferred to it would not entitle the defendant to prove an equitable defense to such note. The setting out of a copy of all the indorsements upon a note, coupled with the allegation of title in the plaintiff, is sufficient, under the Code, to show that the title was transferred by indorsement.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Cowley county; M. G. TROUP, Judge.

Peckham & Henderson, for plaintiff in error. J. F. McMullen, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. This case was a consolidation of two actions commenced by the First National Bank of Ft. Scott against Charles H. Elliott in the district court of Cowley county upon two notes made by him to the order of the Eureka Bank, and in its possession as indorsee. Each note was dated October 7, 1884—one being for $1,000, and due in 365 days after date, and another for $825, due in 540 days after date. The allegations of the petitions were that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff upon certain notes, which were set out in the petition in full, with all indorsements thereon. The $1,000 note contained the following indorsements: "Without recourse. EDWIN TUCKER, Cashier. J. D. HILL." The $825 note was indorsed as follows: "JOHN BERRY. Without recourse. EDWIN TUCKER, Cashier. J. D. HILL." The plaintiff further alleged that it was the owner and holder of each of the notes, and entitled to the proceeds thereof, and then stated the amount due upon each note. The defendant interposed the defense that, while the notes on their face were made payable to the Eureka Bank, the maker executed and delivered them to John Berry as part payment of the purchase price of a farm; that the notes were not made for the benefit of the bank, or delivered to it, but were in fact made for the benefit of Berry, and delivered to him; that Berry was indebted to the defendant in a sum in excess of the amount due upon the notes; that such indebtedness was a proper offset to the notes in the hands of Berry; and that the plaintiff and its immediate indorser, J. D. Hill, had full knowledge and due notice of all the equities existing between the maker and Berry at the times, respectively, the notes came into the hands of Hill and the plaintiff; that the plaintiff was not the real owner of the notes; and that they were each the property of J. D. Hill. This portion of the defendant's answer was duly verified. A trial was had, and a verdict and judgment rendered for the defendant. The bank brings the case to this court, and the first error assigned is the failure of the court to instruct the jury to find for the plaintiff. It appeared in the progress of the trial, from the evidence of the cashier of the plaintiff, that the notes were discounted and received from J. D. Hill on the 23d day of September, 1885; that the notes were paid for by placing to the credit of Hill, as a depositor of the bank, the sum of $1,825; that the bank at the time had no knowledge of the business transactions between Elliott and Berry.

The defendant below was permitted, over the objection of the plaintiff, to give evidence in his own behalf of a state of accounts between himself and John Berry, from which it appeared that the latter was indebted to the defendant in a sum greater than the amount due on the two notes sued on. One other witness was called by the defendant, apparently for the purpose of showing that J. D. Hill, plaintiff's immediate indorser, was the owner of the $1,000 note. Upon this state of facts, the plaintiff in error contends that under the rule laid down in the case of Mann v. Bank, 34 Kan. 746, 10 Pac. Rep. 150, this was an insufficient defense. The doctrine stated in that case was this: "Preliminarily we would state that the mere possession of a negotiable instrument, payable to order, and properly indorsed, is prima facie evidence that the holder is the owner thereof; that he acquired the same in good faith, for full value, in the usual course of business, before maturity, without notice of any circumstances that would impeach its validity, and that he is entitled to recover as against any of the antecedent parties. 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 812; Ecton v. Harlan, 20 Kan. 452; Lyon v. Martin, 31 Kan. 411, 2 Pac. Rep. 790; Rahm v. Manufactory, 16 Kan. 530. Where a maker of such an instrument, so indorsed and held, claims that the holder of the instrument is not a holder for value, it devolves upon the maker to prove the same." The defendant in error insists that under a former decision of this court in the case of Hadden v. Rodkey, 17 Kan. 429, the pleadings in this case permitted him to prove the equitable defenses and set-offs in the answer, claiming that the plaintiff must allege and prove that the notes were transferred by indorsement, if he desired to avoid such equities or defenses as might be pleaded; that the allegation of copies of the indorsements on the notes is not sufficient; the contention being that there should be apt allegations of the manner in which the notes were transferred by indorsement. The petitions set out copies of the notes sued upon and the indorsements, alleging that there were no other indorsements thereon. It was further alleged that the plaintiff was the owner and holder of the notes and entitled to the proceeds. This we think sufficient to show that the notes were transferred by indorsement to the plaintiff. The rule, as we understand, is that, if suit be brought by an indorsee, and the note is payable to order, the plaintiff should allege the indorsements, and state the facts that give him title. It has been held to be unnecessary to allege title through all of the intermediate indorsements; but title by indorsement to himself is sufficient, and this is what the petitions in effect do in this case. Bliss, Code Pl. §§ 232-235; Reeve v. Fraker, 32 Wis. 243. It is elementary that when negotiable paper, payable to order, is indorsed, and delivered to the indorsee, the legal title passes to him, and he may maintain an action thereon. The pleadings show that these notes were indorsed, that the plaintiff was the owner, and there was so much due to him upon the obligations. Section 123 of the Code provides that in an action of this kind it is sufficient for a party to give a copy of the instrument, with all the credits and indorsements thereon, and state that there is due him on such instrument, from the adverse party, a specified sum, which he claims, with interest. It would seem that under this section, where the indorsements are alleged, and also title, there need be no express allegation of the manner of the indorsement, by which the notes were transferred to the plaintiff. The defendant could not have been prejudiced or surprised by an omission to expressly allege the particular method or manner of the indorsements by which the title was transferred. It was manifest from the pleadings that such transfers were by indorsement. The notes in question seemed to have been properly indorsed by the payee, and, there being no date, the presumption of law is that they were indorsed before maturity, and were not, therefore, subject to the defenses claimed by the defendant below. Lyon v. Martin, 31 Kan. 411, 2 Pac. Rep. 790. The same presumption would attach to the intermediate indorsee, Hill, from whom the plaintiff purchased the notes, and the fact that the bank gave him credit for the proceeds of the notes as a depositor would give it such an interest as to entitle it to maintain an action against the maker. There was no competent evidence to show that Hill took the notes subject to the infirmities claimed. The purchaser of a negotiable instrument from a bona fide holder acquires as good a title as the innocent holder had, and may recover thereon, although he, too, may have had notice of such infirmities in the note when he took it. Bodley v. Bank, 38 Kan. 59, 16 Pac. Rep. 88. The trial court should have instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff. We recommend a reversal of the judgment.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

CITY OF TOPEKA v. HUNTOON.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS — BUILDING SEWER — JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE.

1. In the absence of positive proof of fraud, the establishment of a sewer district in a city of the first class, by the mayor and council thereof, is not subject to judicial interference.

2. To disqualify a member of a city council from voting on the passage of an ordinance establishing a sewer district, it must appear that he has a pecuniary interest in the measure adverse to that of the city.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioner's decision. Error to district court, Shawnee county; JOHN GUTHRIE, Judge.

S. B. Isenbart, for plaintiff in error. Wheat, Cheaney & Curtis, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. In the month of August, in the year 1889, a large number of real property owners in the city of Topeka presented to and filed with the clerk of said city a petition requesting the mayor and council to create a certain sewer district, and to build and construct sewers therein. This petition was presented to the council; referred to its committee on ways and means; was considered by the committee; and the city engineer was requested to suggest the proper territory that should constitute the sewer district. The committee and city engineer reported after some months, and finally, on the 27th day of January, 1890, the mayor and council passed an ordinance creating and establishing sewer district No. 14, defining the territory thereof, and providing for a complete sewer system therein, and providing the manner of construction and for the payment thereof. Said ordinance was duly approved and published. On the 27th of February, 1890, three disinterested householders of the city were appointed to value and appraise the real property situate in said sewer district preparatory to a levy of the assessments thereon to pay for the work. On March 27, 1890, detailed estimates were duly prepared and filed by the city engineer, and the city clerk was authorized to advertise for sealed proposals for the building of the sewers. Sealed proposals were received, and the city authorities were about to enter into a contract for the construction of the sewers, when an injunction was granted by the district court of the county. The petition for injunction set forth, among other things, that the person applying therefor, Joel Huntoon, was the owner of real property, all of which was included within said sewer district, and would be subject to taxation for the payment of the costs of constructing said sewers; that various other tracts or lots needed sewers, and ought to have been included in said sewer district in order to relieve the property of the plaintiff, and make his burden lighter; that one Hale Ritchie was a member of the city council, and owned a number of tracts and pieces of land which were not taken into said sewer district; that one E. B. Whaley was a member of the city council, and that his wife owned six or eight lots which were not included in said sewer district; that said Whaley appeared before the ways and means committee, and before said city council, and illegally and fraudulently used his personal and official influence, with intent and for the purpose of inducing the city council to pass the ordinance leaving out of the boundary of said sewer district certain real estate belonging to Hale Ritchie, and to the wife of the said Whaley, and that said property was left out, and needed sewers. In due time an answer was filed and the cause tried, the court making special findings and separate conclusions of law, as follows:

CONCLUSIONS OF FACT.

"(1) That several months prior to January 27, 1890, the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, defendant, by resolution directed the city engineer to make surveys, with the view of creating a sewer district in territory situated in the Third and Fifth wards of the city of Topeka, with a main sewer, commencing and connecting with a large main sewer before that time constructed from at or near the intersection of Tenth avenue and Adams street, in the city of Topeka, extending the said main sewer from said connection at Tenth avenue and Adams street, in the city of Topeka; thence westerly through the Fifth and Third wards of the city of Topeka, towards or west of Lane street, in the city of Topeka. That, in obedience to the said direction of the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, the city engineer of the city of Topeka made the necessary topographical surveys, for the purpose of locating said main sewer, and the necessary lateral sewers, for said new sewer district, and a description of the boundaries of said new sewer district, for the use of the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, for the purpose of enabling the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka to enact the necessary ordinance for the establishment and creation of said new sewer district, and the said city engineer reported and recommended to the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka that the said new sewer district should be defined and bounded by ordinance substantial, as bounded, defined, and described by the map or profile attached to plaintiff's petition, and marked 'Exhibit B,' and made a part of said petition, including the green, yellow, and blue coloring on said map or profile.

"(2) That long before the passage, approval, and publication of ordinance No. 1093, to-wit, January 27, 1890, hereinafter mentioned, and the passage of the resolution directing the city engineer to make a topographical survey for the proposed sewer district, all that portion or part of the city of Topeka which lay between Adams street and Van Buren street, and north of Tenth avenue, in said city, sewers for public use had been built, constructed, and were maintained by said city in various sewer districts under and in accordance with several and different ordinances of said city, and the lots and blocks in said sewer districts had been before that time assessed and taxed by the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka to pay for the building and construction of said several main and lateral sewers in said several districts, and one of such main sewers, in district No. 12, so built and constructed and maintained by said city, commenced at or near the point or place described as the commencing point for the main sewer mentioned and described in ordinance No. 1093, creating sewer district No. 14, and thence running northerly to and discharged or emptied into the Kansas river, in the city of Topeka.

"(3) That for a long time prior to and at the passage, approval, and publication of ordinance No. 1093, and from thence until the present time, Martha Whaley, the wife of one E. B. Whaley, was and is the owner of the following-described real estate, to-wit: Commencing at the south-west corner of lot No. 850, on Monroe street, in the city of Topeka; running thence easterly 150 feet; thence northerly, at right angles with the last-mentioned line, to the north line of the north-east quarter of section 6, township 12, range 16; thence west, along said section line, to the east side of Monroe street; thence southerly, along the east side of Monroe street, to the place of beginning, and the same being a part of said quarter section. Also the following-described real estate: Commencing at a point 225 feet north of the north-west corner of Madison and Eleventh streets, in the city of Topeka, on the west side of Madison street, and running thence westerly, on a line parallel with Eleventh street, 150 feet; thence northerly, to the north line of the north-east quarter of section 6, township 12, range 16; thence east, to the north line of said quarter section, on the west line of Madison street; thence southerly, along the west line of Madison street, to the place of beginning,—the same being a part of said quarter section. That both of said described pieces or parcels of land were where the city engineer made his topographical survey for the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, and within the boundaries of the premises described in conclusion of fact No. 1, and is a part of the premises included within the bluecoloring on the map marked 'Exhibit B,' and made a part of plaintiff's petition, and that at all times heretofore and hereafter mentioned in these conclusions of fact the said Martha Whaley and her husband, E. B. Whaley, occupied these premises as their homestead.

"(4) That for a long time prior to the passage of said ordinance No. 1093 by the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, and from thence to this time, one Hale Ritchie was and is the owner of the following described real estate in the city of Topeka, to-wit: Lots Nos. 445, 447, 449, 457, 459, 461, 436, 438, 440, 448, on Quincy street, and lots Nos. 434, 436, 446, 448, 450, 460, 462, 464, on Kansas avenue, and lots Nos. 380, 382, 384, 392, 394, 396, 434, 436, 438, 446, 448, 450, 452, 454, 456, on Monroe street, lots Nos. 377, 379, 381, 383, on Madison street, and all of that block of ground lying east of Madison street, south of Eleventh street, west of Jefferson street, and the right of way of the Kansas, Nebraska & Dakota Railway Company, and north of Twelfth street, excepting the alleys in said block; and that the said Hale Ritchie, prior to the passage of said ordinance, resided on said premises with his family, and has ever since continued to reside on said premises, and that all of said premises last above described are within the boundaries of the proposed sewer district surveyed by the said city engineer, or said district described in conclusion of fact No. 1, and within the boundaries of the map attached to plaintiff's petition, and within the territory on said map indicated and marked in blue color.

"(5) That for a long time prior to and at the passage of said ordinance No. 1093, by the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, one John Ritchie, the brother of said Hale Ritchie, was the owner of about thirty-one lots situated on Kansas avenue, Quincy street, Monroe street, Madison street, in the city of Topeka, and these lots are within the boundaries of the map attached to plaintiff's petition, and within those parts or portions of said map colored in blue, and between Thirteenth street and Fourteenth street and Jackson street and the K., N. & D. R. R. That there were at the time of the passage of said ordinance No. 1093 and are on said lots mentioned, to-wit, lots 433 and 435, on Kansas avenue, and which are the first lots south of Thirteenth street, and very close to the proposed main sewer of said district No. 14, two large brick business buildings with cellars or basements underneath the same, which were owned by said John Ritchie, and of the value of twelve thousand dollars, and which two last-mentioned lots and buildings would be greatly benefited by the said main sewer, if built as proposed.

"(6) That for a long time prior to and at the passage of said ordinance No. 1093, and thence hitherto, one John Elliott was and still is one of the councilmen of the city of Topeka, and that the said John Elliott was present at the meeting of the city council of said city at the passage of said ordinance No. 1093, by the mayor and councilmen of said city, he, the said Elliott, being one of the members of the city council who voted for said ordinance, and during all the time aforesaid the said Elliott was and still is the owner of two lots on Monroe street, in the city of Topeka, fronting east, and between 10th avenue and 11th street, and in the territory colored blue on the map of said proposed district No. 14, as surveyed and proposed by the city engineer, and as defined in conclusion of fact No. 1.

"(7) That for more than one year before and at the time of the passage of said ordinance No. 1093, to-wit, January 27, 1890, by the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, the said E. B. Whaley, the husband of the said Martha Whaley, Hale Ritchie, brother of the said John Ritchie, and John Elliott were members of the city council of the city of Topeka duly qualified and acting as such. That before the passage of said ordinance No. 1093, defining the boundaries of sewer district No. 14, a controversy arose in the city council among the councilmen of the city of Topeka, concerning the boundaries of said sewer district. That some of the said councilmen contended that all of the territory surveyed and defined by the city engineer, in obedience to the instructions and resolutions adopted by the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka preliminary and preparatory to the creation by ordinance of the said sewer district No. 14, should and ought to be included within said district, and some of the councilmen contended that, unless the map or plan prepared and made by the city engineer for the use of the mayor and councilmen, preliminary to the passage of an ordinance creating and defining the territory of said sewer district, was changed or modified so as to exclude all of the said territory marked in blue color, as indicated on the map attached to the plaintiff's petition for the boundaries of the said proposed district, they would use their influence to defeat its passage by the mayor and councilmen, and would defeat any ordinance or any other provision for sewers within this district. That said land or territory marked in blue color on said maps largely owned by said Hale Ritchie and John Ritchie, his brother, and the property heretofore described, belonging to Martha Whaley, wife of E. B. Whaley, and the said John Elliott, as a part of the property marked in blue color on said map. That one Benj. M. Curtis was at the time of the passage of said ordinance, and for more than a year before that time had been, a member of the city council of the city of Topeka from the Third ward of said city, and was very desirous of adopting the topographical survey and recommendations of the city engineer of said city, and this included all the territory included in said map marked yellow, blue, and green, as shown on said map, and was desirous that the mayor and councilmen should pass the appropriate and necessary ordinance creating said sewer district, including within its territory all the land and lots surveyed by the city engineer in obedience to the direction of the mayor and councilmen; but the said Curtis and other councilmen, fearing that the owners of the land and lots indicated in blue color on said map would defeat said ordinance unless the territory marked in blue color was omitted from said ordinance, consented and agreed with the members of the city council who owned property in the territory marked in blue color on said map that such territory marked in blue color on said map, including the property of the Ritchies, Whaley, and Elliott, should be excluded from said sewer district No. 14, for the purpose and with the design that all of the real estate included and marked on said map in blue color, including the property heretofore described in these conclusions of fact, belonging to Martha Whaley, Hale Ritchie, John Ritchie, and John Elliott, should not be required to pay its proportion of the necessary assessments and burdens to be imposed upon the lots, blocks, or parcels of real estate interested in or benefited by said main sewer in said district No. 14, and for the purpose of compelling the real property indicated on said map in yellow color to pay all the assessments and burdens necessary for the purpose of constructing the main sewer from the junction of Tenth avenue and Adams street, in the city of Topeka, thence west to Lane street, as shown on said map. That thereupon, in pursuance of such agreement and understanding, to-wit, January 27, 1890, at a meeting of the mayor and councilmen regularly had and held, ordinance No. 1093, entitled 'An ordinance creating sewer district No. 14, defining the territory and establishing the boundary thereof, and providing for an entire and complete system of sewerage in said district, providing the manner and means for a special assessment to pay for the construction of the sewer in said district.' That the following members of the council voted for the passage of said ordinance: First ward, Gunn, Myers; Second ward, Earnest; Third ward, Curtis, Elliott; Fourth ward, Lockhard; Fifth ward, Whaley, Ritchie; total, 8. The following councilmen voted against the passage of said ordinance: Second ward, Heery. Councilmen absent, Tillotson, of the Fourth ward. Eight councilmen voted for the passage of said ordinance, and among them were B. M. Curtis and John Elliott from the Third ward, and E. B. Whaley and Hale Ritchie from the Fifth ward. That January 27, 1890, the mayor of the city of Topeka approved said ordinance, and January 30, 1890, the said ordinance was duly published in the official city paper. That, of the members of the city council who voted for said ordinance No. 1093, Whaley, Ritchie, and Elliott were, at the time they voted for said ordinance, peculiarly interested in the passage of said ordinance, inasmuch as it omitted large property interests belonging to said councilmen from the burden of building said main sewer, and without the vote of these three councilmen a majority of all the members of the city council did not vote for the passage of said ordinance.

"(8) That the parcel of land or lots shown on the map or profile marked 'Exhibit B,' and designated or marked in yellow color, is the territory now included in sewer district No. 14, as defined by ordinance No.

1093, and all the territory of land or lots on said map or profile marked in blue color on said map was included in the topographical survey made by the city engineer in obedience to the direction of the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka preliminary to the creation of said proposed sewer district No. 14, and were excluded from said district by said ordinance for the purpose of relieving all of the property on said map or profile marked in blue color, including the property belonging to the Whaleys, Ritchies, and Elliott, from paying its just proportion of the assessment necessary for the construction of the said main sewer for district No. 14, and for the purpose of compelling the lots and lands indicated and marked in yellow on said map or profile to pay all the assessments necessary to pay for constructing the main sewer in district No. 14.

"(9) That all of the land and lots shown on said map or profile marked in blue color were excluded from said sewer district No. 14 by the said ordinance for the purpose aforesaid.

"(10) That, after the passage of said ordinance No. 1093, the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka caused the city engineer to make another topographical survey of the territory defined and bounded by said ordinance, and prepare a map or profile, with the plans and specifications, for the main and lateral sewers of said district No. 14, and to make and file an estimate for said work, which map, plans, and specifications so prepared by the city engineer, the mayor and councilmen, at a meeting regularly had and held, adopted and approved said plans and estimates of the cost of said work, and caused the city clerk to publish proposals for bids for the construction of said main and lateral sewers. That the city engineer, by his estimates, reported to the mayor and councilmen that said work would cost $104,173.15. That the red line on said map commencing at the alley between Lincoln and Buchanan streets, running thence east, thence south, thence east, thence north, thence east, thence north to 13th street, to and across the railroad track of the K., N. & D. R. Co. and the A., T. & S. F. R. Co. track, and thence northerly to connect with the main sewer of sewer district No. 12 at the intersection of Tenth avenue and Adams street, described in conclusion of fact No. 2, shows and represents the line of the main sewer proposed to be constructed and built for sewer district No. 14.

"(11) That all the territory between 13th and 14th streets and Jackson street and the K., N. & D. R. R., marked in blue color on the map above referred to, is adjoining said main sewer, and should be drained into this main sewer by means of lateral sewers constructed at a comparatively small expense, and is and was, before the passage of said ordinance, chiefly owned by the said Hale Ritchie, and his brother, John Ritchie.

"(12) That it is practicable for the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka to create a sewer district for the lots and lands marked in blue color on the map between 10th avenue and 12th street, Jackson street, and the K., N. & D. R. R. track, and the sewage could be deposited from lateral sewer-pipes into the main sewer of district No. 14, as shown on the map. This seems to be the only means of carrying off the sewage. If the territory marked on the map in yellow color is compelled to construct the main sewer for district No. 14, and the territory marked in blue color on said map between 10th avenue and 12th street and Quincy street and the railroad track, and the territory marked in blue color on the map between 13th and 14th streets and Jackson street and the railroad track, should be drained into the main sewer by means of small lateral sewers extending from the main sewer of district No. 14, at a comparatively small expense, then it would save and relieve to the owners of the lots and lands in these two territories marked in blue color the expense of constructing a main sewer to carry away to the river the sewage from this property.

"(18) That there are and were when this ordinance was passed about 109 houses on the said lots and lands marked on said map in blue color, and nearly all of these houses were used and occupied as residences, and located on the streets and avenues stated in plaintiff's petition.

"(14) That the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, pursuant to law, appointed appraisers to appraise the real estate without improvement situated in said district 14, as defined by ordinance No. 1093, for the purpose of determining how much each lot or piece or parcel of land should pay for making said improvement, and said appraisers returned their appraisalment, under oath, into the office of the city clerk, which appraisalment is of the aggregate sum of $940,414.

"(15) That the plaintiff is the owner of 87 lots in said sewer district No. 14, as defined by ordinance No. 1093, situated on Tyler street, Topeka avenue, Harrison street, Fourteenth street, Van Buren street, Huntoon street, and Jackson street, in the city of Topeka, and the said appraisers so appointed, as aforesaid, for the purpose of appraising all of the real estate within said district, as defined by said ordinance, appraised the 87 lots belonging to plaintiff, without the improvements, at the sum of $50,700.

"(16) That there are only two houses situated on the said 87 lots belonging to plaintiff.

"(17) That the lots, pieces, and parcels of land situated in the territory marked in blue color on said map between 10th avenue and 12th street and Quincy street and the railroad track, and between 13th and 14th streets and Jackson street and the railroad track, marked on said map in blue color, are of about the same value, without improvements, lot for lot, as the average of all the lots in the territory marked in yellow on said map, and included within district No. 14, as defined in said ordinance No. 1093, without the improvements.

"(18) That, in obedience to the directions of the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, the city engineer has prepared plans and specifications for said sewer district No. 14, as defined by said ordinance, for the building of said main and lateral sewers for said district, and presented said plans and specifications to the mayor and councilmen, which have been approved by said mayor and councilmen. That the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka have caused the city clerk to advertise for sealed proposals for building said main and lateral sewers in said district, and intend to proceed and let the contract for the building of and construction of said main and lateral sewers, as alleged in plaintiff's petition.

"(19) That January 27, 1890, and for more than one year before that time, the city of Topeka had and was divided into five wards, and at all the times hereinbefore stated there were two councilmen elected, acting, and qualified, in each ward, making in all ten acting, elected, and qualified members of the city council of the city of Topeka, and that said city is and was a city of the first class, organized under the laws of this state.

"(20) That Hale Ritchie and John Ritchie were, January 27, 1890, large owners of real property in said sewer district No. 14, as bounded and defined by said ordinance No. 1093."

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

"(1) Whether or not it is competent for the mayor and councilmen of a city of the first class, by ordinance, to establish a sewer district, with one or more main sewers and lateral sewers, under the law governing such cities, until the city engineer has made and completed a topographical survey of the district to be drained by such system of sewers, and, when such a topographical survey is made, is it incumbent on and the duty of the mayor and councilmen to adopt the survey, with the boundaries indicated by such survey, or reject the survey as a whole, query.

"(2) When a city of the first class is divided into five wards, an ordinance cannot be lawfully passed by the mayor and councilmen unless at least six members of the city council vote for such ordinance, and the vote on the final passage of such ordinance must be taken by yeas and nays, and must be entered on the journal by the city clerk; and when it is shown that in a city of the first class the city is divided into five wards, and that on the passage of an ordinance by the mayor and councilmen for the purpose of creating a sewer district, defining the territory and establishing the boundary thereof, and providing for an entire and complete system of sewerage in said district, providing the manner and means, and for a special assessment to pay for the construction of the sewer in said district, and it is shown that only eight members of the city council voted for said ordinance, and it is further shown that three of the members of the city council who voted for said city ordinance secured to themselves, directly or indirectly, a pecuniary advantage over the owners of real estate included within the boundaries of the proposed sewer district, such members of the city council are disqualified to vote on the passage of such ordinance, and such ordinance does not pass in the manner required by section 109 of the act entitled 'An act to incorporate and regulate cities of the first class, and to repeal all prior acts relating thereto,' approved March 6, 1881, and the acts of the legislature amendatory thereof.

"(3) That ordinance No. 1003, entitled 'An ordinance creating sewer district number (14) fourteen, defining the territory and establishing the boundary thereof, and providing for an entire and complete system of sewerage in said district, providing the manner and means and for a special assessment to pay for the construction of the sewer in said district,' approved January 29, 1890, considered and tested by the foregoing conclusions of fact, is unreasonable, (1 Dill. Mun. Corp., 2d Ed., § 319,) is oppressive, (Id. § 320,) is partial, (Id. § 322,) is in contravention of common right, (Id. § 259,) and is therefore void in law.

"The plaintiff is entitled to a perpetual injunction, as prayed. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the defendant, its officers, agents, and servants, be, and they are all of them, enjoined by the injunction of this court from entering into any contract for the construction of the main or lateral sewers, under the ordinance of the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, No. 1003, and from making and collecting assessments for the purpose of paying for said sewer under said ordinance; and the court further finds and decrees the said ordinance to be null and void and of no effect. It is further ordered and adjudged that the plaintiff have and recover his costs paid, laid out, and expended in this action, taxed at $——."

The trial court decided that the ordinance establishing the sewer district was an unreasonable one, and that the ordinance was not legally passed by reason of the affirmative votes of three councilmen in its favor, who had a pecuniary interest therein.

1. We will first consider the question of the character of the ordinance. The powers of a municipal corporation are divisible into those general in their nature, power to pass ordinances of specified and defined character, and incidental or implied powers. This division is generic, is universally recognized by text-writers and courts of last resort, and has been frequently applied to control the decision of important controversies. Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, (4th Ed.) § 89, says: "It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient, but indispensable." Among the decisions cited approving this classification of powers are the following: Cook Co. v. McCrea, 93 Ill. 236; City of Ottawa v. Carey, 106 U. S. 110, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 861; City of Eufrasia v. McNab, 67 Ala. 598; Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 378, 7 N. W. Rep. 623; Ravenna v. Pennsylvania Co., 45 Ohio St.

118, 12 N. E. Rep. 445; Bell v. City of Platteville, 71 Wis. 189, 36 N. W. Rep. 831; Gilman v. City of Milwaukee, 61 Wis. 588, 21 N. W. Rep. 640; Charleston v. Reed, 27 W. Va. 681; City of Kansas v. Swope, 79 Mo. 446; City of Portland v. Schmidt, 13 Or. 17, 6 Pac. Rep. 221; Richmond v. McGirr, 78 Ind. 192. The ordinance in this particular case was passed by the city council in pursuance of section 19, c. 37, Laws 1881, that reads: "The mayor and council shall have power to provide for a system of sewerage and drainage for the city, or any part thereof, and to build and construct sewers or drains by districts or otherwise, as the mayor and council shall designate." The general grant of power is broad enough for all purposes, as expressed in the words, "shall have power to provide for a system of sewerage and drainage for the city, or any part thereof;" and then comes the discretionary power, as expressed in the words that follow, "and to build and construct sewers or drains, by districts or otherwise, as the mayor and council may designate."

It is said in section 328, Dill. Mun. Corp., that "where the legislature in terms confers upon a municipal corporation the power to pass ordinances of a specified or defined character, if the power thus delegated be not in conflict with the constitution, an ordinance passed pursuant thereto cannot be impeached as invalid, because it would have been regarded as unreasonable if it had been passed under the incidental power of the corporation, or under a grant of power general in its nature. In other words, what the legislature distinctly says may be done, cannot be set aside by the courts because they may deem it to be unreasonable, or against sound policy." This section of the text is supported by the cases of Peoria v. Calhoun, 29 Ill. 317; City of St. Paul v. Colter, 12 Minn. 41, (Gil. 16); Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591; Coal Float v. City of Jeffersonville, 112 Ind. 15, 13 N. E. Rep. 115; State v. Belvidere, 44 N. J. Law, 350. In the case of State v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 17, Norton, J., says: "It is naked assumption to say that any matter allowed by the legislature is against public policy. The best indications of public policy are to be found in the legislative enactments. Whether the ordinance in question is calculated to promote the object is a question with which the courts have no concern, when the legislative will has been plainly expressed." Power to do an act is often conferred upon municipal corporations in general terms, without being accompanied by any prescribed mode of exercising it. In such cases the common council necessarily have, to a greater or less extent, a discretion as to the manner in which the power shall be used. This discretion, where it is conferred or exists, cannot be judicially interfered with or questioned, except where the power is exceeded, or fraud is imputed and shown, or there is a manifest invasion of private rights. Railroad Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395; Kelley v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 83; Slack v. Railroad Co., 13 B. Mon. 1; Bridgeport v. Railroad Co., 15 Conn. 475; Page v. St. Louis, 20 Mo. 136; Mayor v. Gill, 81 Md.

375; Railway Co. v. Cheyenne, 118 U. S. 516, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601. Thus, for example, if a city has power to grade streets, the courts will not inquire into the necessity for the exercise of it, or the refusal to exercise it; nor whether a particular grade adopted, or a particular mode of exercising the power, is judicious. Tee-garden v. City of Racine, 56 Wis. 545, 14 N. W. Rep. 614; Sheridan v. Colvin, 78 Ill. 237; Hovey v. Mayo, 43 Me. 322; Richmond v. McGirr, 78 Ind. 192.

So, whether we view the delegation of the power contained in this act to the city authorities of Topeka to provide for the construction of sewers, by district or otherwise, as authority to pass an ordinance of a specified or defined character, or whether we determine that it is a general grant of power, with discretion as to the mode of its exercise,—and it must be the one or the other,—it is not subject to judicial control upon the ground that it is unreasonable. As a matter of fact, fairly determined by the express words of the statute, it could not be unreasonable because the city council had adopted a system of sewers; and the section expressly provides "that, when any property has paid its full proportion for general sewers and drains in one district, it shall not be transferred to any other, and made liable for sewers and drains therein." When, in the course of time, the sewerage system of the city shall be complete by districts, the only possible difference it can make to any or all property holders would be the time at which they are taxed for the particular improvement. If they could be excluded from a sewer district in which there was a large population, and left to await the growth and development of a more sparsely settled portion of the city, then sewer taxes would be postponed. We think the trial court erred in its conclusion of law that the ordinance establishing the sewer district was unreasonable.

2. The query of the trial court, whether or not it is competent for the mayor and councilmen of a city of the first class, by ordinance, to establish a sewer district with one or more main sewers and lateral sewers, under the law governing such cities, until the city engineer has made and completed a topographical survey of the districts to be drained by such system of sewers, and, when such a topographical survey is made, is it incumbent on and a duty of the mayor and councilmen to adopt the survey, with the boundaries indicated by such survey, or reject the survey as a whole?—may be answered in the negative, for a variety of very good reasons. First. The action in question does not make a topographical survey by the city engineer a condition precedent to the action of the mayor and council. It does not even provide that such a survey shall be made. Second. The duties of the city engineer are expressly declared by section 89 of the act to be to superintend the construction of all public works ordered by the mayor and council, make out plans, specifications, and estimates thereof, and to do the surveying and city engineering ordered by the city council. Third. It has been repeatedly decided that public powers and trusts are incapable of delegation, and the power conferred by this act must be exercised by the officers to whom it is delegated by the legislature. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 96. Where the charter gives the city council power to construct sewers of such dimensions as may be prescribed by ordinance, the council cannot, by ordinance, require sewers to be constructed of such dimensions as may be deemed requisite by the city engineer. St. Louis v. Clemens, 52 Mo. 138; Gas-Light Co. v. City of Minneapolis, 36 Minn. 153, 30 N. W. Rep. 450; Matthews v. Alexandria, 68 Mo. 115; Whyte v. Mayor, 2 Swan, 364.

3. The city council of the city of Topeka consists of ten members. It takes six affirmative votes to pass an ordinance. This ordinance received eight votes, but it is alleged that three members of the council who voted for its passage owned property within and without said sewer district, and were not legally entitled to vote, and hence, receiving only five disinterested affirmative votes, the ordinance was not legally passed. The material facts respecting the ownership of real property by members of the city council who voted for the passage of the ordinance are these: Hale Ritchie, one of the councilmen from the Fifth ward, who voted for the passage of the ordinance, was the owner of a large number of city lots on Quincy, Monroe, and Madison streets, and on Kansas avenue, and a block lying east of Madison street, south of Eleventh street, west of Jefferson street, and north of Twelfth street. His brother, John Ritchie, owned 31 lots situated on Kansas avenue, Quincy, Monroe, and Madison streets. While there is no special finding of fact by the trial court as to what proportion of the real property of Hale Ritchie and John Ritchie is included within this sewer district, we judge, from an examination of the maps attached to the record as exhibits, that about one-half of the property of each are included in the sewer district. In this state of facts it is difficult to determine whether, if a disqualification exists as to the affirmative vote of Hale Ritchie as a councilman, on the passage of the ordinance, that disqualification is produced by the property taken into the sewer district, or by that left out. To say, in general terms, that a member of a city council cannot vote on the passage of an ordinance providing for the construction of some important public improvement, because he owns real property on the street to be graded, in the sewer district to be established, or in the city, when the improvement is a general one, is at once to disqualify every property owner in the city from belonging to the city council, and committing all the material interests of the city to a class of persons who have no property rights to protect. This would be going too far. Our statutes have provided in paragraph 653, p. 230, Gen. St. 1889: "It shall be unlawful for the mayor, or any member of the council, or any elected or appointed officer or servant of the city, to be a party to or interested pecuniarily in any contract, job, or piece of work which may be let by the city; and any contract in which any such officer shall be peculiarly interested shall be null and void; and, in case any money shall have been paid on any such contract, it shall be the duty of the city attorney to sue for and recover the amount so paid, in the name of the city, from the parties to such contract, and from the councilman or other officer peculiarly interested in the same, and if any such officer, while in office, shall become peculiarly interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract or agreement in which the city shall be interested, or any question submitted, or proceedings upon which such officer shall be called upon to vote or act officially, with intent to gain, directly or indirectly, pecuniarily, any benefit, profit, or pecuniary advantage, he shall be removed from office, and on conviction shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," etc. This section prohibits a member of the city council from voting on any question submitted, or in any proceeding, with intent to gain, directly or indirectly, pecuniarily, any benefit, profit, or advantage. Assuming that this section applies in letter and spirit to Hale Ritchie in his vote on the ordinance in question, yet we are not able to determine, from the facts recited, that his affirmative vote, cast in favor of the passage of this ordinance, was cast with intent to gain any profit or advantage. If Ritchie was prosecuted under the section above quoted for misdemeanor, or if proceedings had been commenced to remove him from office as a councilman, on the facts presented in this record, could it be pretended for a moment that a guilty intent was shown? The theory of the defendant in error, if applied to the extent claimed, would practically disfranchise every member of the council who owned real property. Section 444, Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) and the case of City of Toronto v. Bowes, 4 Grant, (U. C.) 504, are cited to sustain the views of the defendant in error. The citation from the admirable work of Judge Dillon is to this effect: "Members of a municipal board are disqualified to vote therein on propositions in which they have a direct pecuniary interest adverse to the municipality they represent." This is the extent to which the text applies. In support of it, the foot-note cites the cases of Supervisors v. Hall, 47 Wis. 208, 2 N. W. Rep. 291; Pickett v. School-Dist., 25 Wis. 551; Coles v. Williamsburgh, 10 Wend. 659; Walworth Co. Bank v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 16 Wis. 629; Church v. Vandusen, 87 Wis. 54; Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

The latter case is similar to the one under consideration. It was an injunction to restrain the collection of a special assessment for paving a street. One of the grounds alleged was that two of the aldermen who formed a part of the quorum, when important action was taken, and without whose presence and votes there would have been no quorum, were petitioners for the improvement, and owners of property liable to assessment therefor. The votes of these aldermen, it is claimed, were void, and consequently the action of the council to which their votes were essential was void also. Judge COOLEY, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "We think this objection without force. The action in question was legislative in character, and the interest these aldermen had in it was of precisely the same nature with that which every legislator has in a bill he votes for, which is to subject his property, in common with that of his fellow-citizens, to taxation. They were laying down rules which in their operation would affect alike and impartially their own interest and that of all others whose property would be taxed. Such an interest is calculated to make a man careful and solicitous for the public interest, with which his own is inseparably connected, instead of inclining him to vote recklessly or corruptly, when the burdens are to follow which he must share. None of the cases cited on the argument in this connection have any bearing. Those only decide that a man is not permitted to occupy inconsistent positions when his own interest is directly involved; but in no question here voted upon could these aldermen have discriminated between their personal interest and that of the other tax-payers, except in fixing the taxing district; and as on that question, if they voted at all, it was against their apparent interest, and in favor of making a district that included their own property, it is obvious that they did not by their vote place themselves in a position antagonistic to other tax-payers. If the common council acted as commissioners of apportionment in making the assessment upon the property that was to bear the burden, other considerations might be involved; but this charter designates a different tribunal for that purpose, and prescribes great caution to insure impartiality." This comes very close to the action of Ritchie as a councilman. He had a large number of lots included in this sewer district. The other cases cited are to this effect. The case in 47 Wis. and 2 N. W. Rep. applies to two members of a board of county supervisors who voted in favor of a compromise settlement with a defaulting county treasurer, in a case in which they were personally responsible for some of the missing money. In the case in 16 Wis. the general rule of the common law, that members of a legislative or a municipal body are disqualified to vote on propositions in which they have a pecuniary interest adverse to the state or municipality they represent, was applied to an officer of a railroad company. In Church v. Vandusen it was applied to the trustees of a church society. In Pickett v. School-Dist. it was applied to a school-district officer. In the case in 10 Wend. the same principle was applied to a village trustee. We would apply it in this case against Councilman Ritchie, if it was shown that he had a pecuniary interest in the establishing of this sewer district adverse to the city of Topeka. Viewing it from every stand-point, we cannot say that Ritchie was disqualified by reason of the fact that some of his property was included in and some excluded from the sewer district. His vote made the necessary majority, and the ordinance was legally passed. It is not necessary to comment on the votes of the other councilmen. The property in cluded in the sewer district is specially benefited, and it is true that other property might have been taken in and received special benefits. This may be said in every case of the establishment of a sewer district; but because the city council, in the exercise of the power and discretion conferred upon it by law, has included some and excluded some, we cannot say, as a matter of law, based upon the exclusion, that the ordinance is void; for, without a clear showing that there has been corrupt and fraudulent action by the councilmen, we cannot review their proceedings in such a matter. Our conclusion is that, upon the facts recited in the record, there has not been a sufficient showing upon which to predicate a judgment either that the ordinance is void, or that Ritchie was disqualified from voting. It is true in this case, as in every other sewer district that may be established; that there are adjoining its boundaries some outlying property that might be benefited by the sewer; and we have no doubt but that the property lying inside the boundaries of this particular sewer will receive benefits from its construction; but, because these results are plain, it does not follow that all property that may be benefited by the construction of sewers should all be embraced within one sewer district. The legislature has left this matter to the control of the mayor and councilmen of the city of Topeka, and in no case would we interfere, except upon clear proof of actual fraud. All questions of public policy, with reference to sewers, have been considered and determined by the legislature of this state, and as long as the proceedings of the city council are in accordance with the express grant of power of the legislature, and the personal conduct of the members thereof, with respect to their official action in such matters, is not fraudulent, we find no warrant of authority to interfere or subject the establishment of sewer districts to judicial interference. Recent opinions of this court filed at the January sitting in the cases of Mayor, etc., v. Price, Mayor, etc., v. Lamphear, and Mayor, etc., v. Burns' Estate, 25 Pac. Rep. 605, will be found to have some bearing on the propositions herein discussed. It is recommended that the judgment of the district court of Shawnee county be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to refuse the order of injunction.

HAMMERSLOUGH et al. v. CITY OF KANSAS CITY et al.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — CONTROL OF STREETS — LIMITATIONS.

1. The findings of fact examined, and held sufficient to sustain the first conclusion of law by the trial court, to the effect that Central avenue, Kansas City, Kan., is a street within the limits of said city, and under the control thereof.

2. The findings of fact in this case show that the "assessment" for the improvement of Central avenue was "ascertained" November 22, 1889. Held, that the 30-days statute of limitations commenced to run at that time, and had fully run long before the plaintiffs commenced their action October 20, 1890, and the action was therefore barred.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge.

STRANG, C. This was an injunction proceeding, begun in the district court of Wyandotte county, October 20, 1890, to restrain the collection of certain special assessments levied against the property of the plaintiffs by the defendants to pay the first installment of the amount assessed against said property for paving and curbing Central avenue in said defendant city, and to declare the entire assessment void. The case was heard by the district court of Wyandotte county, November 17, 1890. The court made special findings of fact and conclusions of law, and rendered a general judgment, dissolving the injunction, and taxing the costs to the plaintiffs, who bring the case here for review. There are a number of errors assigned in this case, and an almost innumerable number of subquestions raised and discussed by counsel for the plaintiffs in their brief, and in the oral argument before the commission. Several of the questions have been decided by this court in opinions recently reported, and are therefore taken out of the domain of disputed questions, and have become the settled law of the state. In the light of these decisions, there is but little to settle in this case.

The first question we desire to notice is raised by the plaintiffs' objection to the first conclusion of law by the trial court. We notice this question first, not simply because it relates to the first conclusion of law in the case, and is the first error assigned, but because it raises a question that should be first settled. It raises the question whether or not Central avenue is a street within the defendant city. If Central avenue is not a street within said city, then the mayor and council of said city did not and could not obtain jurisdiction over the same for paving, or curbing, or for the purpose of other improvements; and if said avenue is not a street of said city, then this case should terminate here, and in favor of the plaintiffs. The conclusion of law referred to reads as follows: "That the exclusive ownership and control of Central avenue is in the city, the parties mentioned in the petition as owning certain parts of said avenue having by their acts dedicated such pieces of land to public use." The plaintiffs allege that this conclusion is erroneous. We do not think so. We think there is sufficient in the findings of fact of the court below, which are unchallenged by the plaintiffs, to fully sustain this conclusion of the court. In July, 1887, there was no street where Central avenue now is. About that time the Interstate Consolidated Rapid Transit Railway Company opened up and graded its right of way from Mill street to Eighteenth street. Soon after, adjacent property on both sides was platted in additions by the owners along the line of said roadway, and in conformity to its course, and dedications were made to the city and county of sufficient ground on either side of the said right of way to constitute a roadway 80 feet wide, almost continuously, for the entire length of such avenue; and the findings further show that said railway company, the Riverview Land & Improvement Company, by their officers, and the other individuals, who, it is alleged in plaintiffs' petition own portions of said street, in their proper persons, acquiesced in the use and occupation of said avenue as a street by the defendant city. They permitted the city to build sidewalks along said street, and most of them joined in a petition asking the city to build such walks. They also asked the city to extend the water-mains along said street, that they might connect therewith and obtain a supply of water; and again, the most of the parties who it is alleged own part of said street joined in a petition asking the city to extend said water-mains; and all the parties stood by and saw the street curbed and paved by the city, without ever objecting thereto, or making any claim to the ground being so paved. All such parties are stopped now from claiming ownership in the lands constituting said street, and, as the entire length of said street was taken into the city before it was paved, said avenue is a street of, and within the limits of, said defendant city, and as such is within the control of the mayor and council of said city. Such avenue being a street within said city, the mayor and council thereof might obtain jurisdiction over it for the purpose of curbing and paving the same by taking the necessary statutory steps which, under the law, give them jurisdiction over the streets of the city for that purpose. Did the mayor and council take such steps in this case, and obtain jurisdiction over Central avenue for paving purposes? The statute provides that they must pass and publish a declaratory resolution, declaring the necessity for paving the street sought to be paved. Such a declaratory resolution was passed June 25, 1889, and published according to law. August 24th thereafter, ordinance No. 1001 was published, being an ordinance providing for the paving and curbing of Central avenue between Mill street and Eighteenth street. Afterwards the city engineer prepared plans, specifications, and estimates for curbing and paving said avenue. The contracts for said improvement were then let. Appraisers were appointed, and the property deemed liable for the improvements was appraised, and on November 22, 1889, ordinance No. 1150 was passed and published, being "An ordinance apportioning and assessing the costs of paving and curbing Central avenue from Mill street to Eighteenth street upon the property liable for the payment thereof." Attached to this ordinance, and published with it in the official city paper, was a schedule or list of lots assessed, including those of the plaintiffs, for the purpose of the improvement of said avenue, with amount of the assessment charged against each lot. In May, 1890, the work under the paving contract was complete, and the city engineer accepted the same. In August, 1890, the work on the curbing contract being completed, the city engineer accepted the work under that contract, and made his final report to the city council, which was accepted by that body, and the contractors fully paid for their work so done. In August, 1890, ordinance No. 1651, being "An ordinance levying a tax to create a revenue to pay the maturing principal and accruing interest on internal improvement bonds issued for paving and curbing Central avenue from Mill street to Eighteenth street," was published. It thus appears that all the necessary conditions precedent to obtaining jurisdiction over said avenue for paving and curbing purposes were performed, and the council of said city obtained jurisdiction over said street for such purposes.

This case seems to have been brought under section 253 of the Code; but this court has already determined that section 253 has nothing to do with a case of this kind. In the case of Lynch v. City of Kansas City, 45 Kan. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 973, after quoting from the opinion in the case of City of Topeka v. Gage, Id. 82, referring to the limitation clause in paragraph 590, Gen. St. 1889, it is stated: "With this broad and liberal interpretation of this statute a conflict inevitably arises between it and section 253 of the Code." And, after referring to paragraph 590, containing the 30-days limitation clause, it is added: "The plain intent of these various provisions is to cause litigation, if any there is to be, to be commenced before the issue of the bonds, so as to avoid any uncertainty about their legality that might afterwards affect their market value. The 30-days limitation within which the assessments that are the basis of the bonds can be attacked is a wise one, is reasonable as to time, and is of unquestionable validity in every respect. To give it force we must hold that it changes the time within which an action of this kind can be instituted under section 253 of the Code, and leaves that section to apply only to illegal taxes and illegal charges. The word 'assessment,' as used in section 253 of the Code, and in paragraph 590, Gen. St. 1889, means the specific amount charged on the property, and not the mere fact of valuation." In the case of Marshall v. City of Leavenworth, 45 Kan. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 975, the court held that "the limitation of 30 days within which an action can be brought to defeat or avoid a special assessment for street improvements under section 1, c. 101, Laws 1887, is constitutional and valid, and the time when the assessment is ascertained, and when the limitation commences to run, is when the ordinance levying the assessments, and designating the amount of the assessment levied upon each particular lot or piece of ground, is published, and takes effect." Following the rule so laid down, the 30-days limitation in this case commenced to run December 23, 1889,—almost a year before the case was begun in the district court. See, also, Wahlgren v. City of Kansas City, 42 Kan. 243, 21 Pac. Rep. 1068; City of Topeka v. Gage, (Kan.) 24 Pac. Rep. 82; and Lynch v. Kansas City, Id. 973, referred to herein. This is not all the laches of the plaintiffs, while it is all that is, perhaps, material; yet, so far as any claim of equity is concerned, we may call attention to the fact that they not only waited until the 30-days statute had run, but they stood by and saw the contracts for paving and curbing said avenue let, saw the work being done thereunder, an ordinance passed and published providing for the issuance of bonds to raise the means to pay for the work, saw the bonds sold, the work under the contracts accepted by the city engineer, his report thereof made to the council of the city, and by them approved, the contractors fully paid, and an ordinance passed and published levying a tax upon the property assessed for the improvement, to meet the maturing principal and accruing interest on said bonds, and then, after all this was done, still waited more than 30 days before commencing their suit. The plaintiffs have lost their rights by waiting too long. There was no reason why, when, on November 22, 1889, ordinance No. 1150 was published, if property owners felt aggrieved by the assessment therein made, they should not have commenced their proceeding to enjoin the city from proceeding further. If, as they now assert, 96 lots that should have been included among the number charged with the improvement of that street were left out of the assessment, that fact was as well known then as now or at the commencement of this suit. This and all other irregularities, short-comings, and defects in the method of performing the work of curbing and paving were absolutely waived when the 30-days statute had run, and they remained unchallenged. The things necessary in this case to give the mayor and council of the defendant city jurisdiction over Central avenue for paving and curbing purposes were the fact that Central avenue was a street within the limits of said city; the passing of the resolution declaring the necessity for the improvement; the making of plans, specifications, and estimates for the work by the city engineer; the appraisalment of the property charged with the expense of the improvement; and the passage and publication of the ordinances providing for paving and curbing said avenue, with a specification of the lots charged and the amounts assessed against each lot. This done, the council had jurisdiction of the street for paving and curbing purposes; and, jurisdiction having attached, they could go ahead with the work unchallenged, unless within 30 days from the publication of the ordinance ascertaining the assessment, suit was begun. Having held that Central avenue is a street within the limits of defendant city, and that the council of said city took the necessary statutory steps to obtain jurisdiction over the same for paving and curbing purposes, and the plaintiffs' cause of action on the merits being barred by the express terms of the statute, as well as prior decisions of this court, we will not examine the numerous irregularities, defects, and short-comings discovered and argued by plaintiffs in their brief. We recommend that the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

STATE V. CORFIELD.

WHAT CONSTITUTES FORGERY—INDICTMENT.

An information which charges that the defendant made out, swore to, and presented to the board of county commissioners of a certain county a claim against said county, which was allowed, and a warrant issued to him thereon, when said county did not owe him anything, is not guilty of forgery under section 115 of the crimes act; and an information based upon such facts does not charge the offense of forgery, and it is not error to sustain a motion to quash the same.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., J. M. Johnson, J. A. Wilson, and Ady & Nicholson, for the State. Webb & Webb, for appellee.

STRANG, C. Prosecution for forgery. Information filed in the district court of Kearney county, April 16, 1889. April 18, 1889, change of venue allowed, and case sent to Barton county, Kan. March 10, 1890, motion to quash sustained and defendant discharged, to which ruling sustaining such motion to quash an order discharging the defendant, the state of Kansas excepted, and appeals to this court.

The sole question to be determined here is whether or not the information charges the offense of forgery under our statutes. The information reads as follows: "I, J. A. Wilson, the undersigned, county attorney of said county, in the name, by the authority and on behalf of the state of Kansas, come now here and give the court to understand and be informed that on the 1st day of October, A. D. 1888, in said county of Kearney and state of Kansas, one [H. A. W. Corfield] did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and fraudulently falsely make and forge and issue to him, and did willingly aid and assist in falsely making and forging, a certain county order and warrant of the county of Kearney in the state of Kansas, issued and purporting to have been issued under the authority of the said county of Kearney, and purporting to have been issued by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas, providing for the allowance and payment of claims against counties in said state of Kansas, the substance, purport, and effect of which said false and forged county order and warrant is as follows; that is to say: 'No. 474. $1,000.00. County Clerk's Office. Lakin, Kansas, Oct. 1st, 1888. Treasurer Kearney County, Kansas: Pay to H. A. W. Corfield, — or bearer, the sum of one thousand — and — 00 dollars, for mileage & Ex. for Co., as commissioner, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. By order of the board of county commissioners. W. J. PRICE, Chairman. J. B. WATERMAN, Clerk.' Which said county order and warrant was sealed with the seal of said county, and was of the value of $1,000; a more particular description of which is to said county attorney now unknown, the said false and forged county order and warrant being destroyed, (or in the possession of some person to said county attorney unknown;) which said county order and warrant was falsely made, and is a forgery, in this: that said county of Kearney did not owe said [H. A. W. Corfield] said sum of $1,000, nor any part thereof, which said defendant well knew at the time he so made and caused and procured said county order and warrant to be so made and issued to him; and that said defendant then and there well knew said county order and warrant to be false and fraudulent; and that he so made and caused and procured said county order and warrant to be so made and issued to him, the said [H. A. W. Corfield,] with intent to cheat and defraud said county of Kearney, which was then and there an organized county of the state of Kansas, contrary to the form of the statutes in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas. Second count: And I, the said J. A. Wilson, county attorney as aforesaid, give the court to further understand and be informed that on the 1st day of October, 1888, in said county of Kearney in the state of Kansas, the said H. A. W. Corfield, did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and fraudulently falsely make and forge, and cause and procure to be falsely made, forged, and issued to him, and did willingly aid and assist in falsely making and forging, a certain county order and warrant of the county of Kearney in the state of Kansas, issued and purporting to have been issued under the authority of said county of Kearney, and purporting to have been issued by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas, providing for the allowance and payment of claims against counties in said state of Kansas, the substance and effect of which said false and forged county order and warrant is as follows, that is to say: 'No. 475. $380.00. County Clerk's Office. Lakin, Kansas, Oct. 1st, 1888. Treasurer Kearney County, Kansas: Pay to H. A. W. Corfield — or bearer, the sum of three hundred eighty — and — 00 dollars, for 4 trips to Topeka for county, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. By order of the board of county commissioners. W. J. PRICE, Chairman. J. H. WATERMAN, Clerk.' Which said county order and warrant was sealed with the seal of said county, and was of the value of $380; a more particular description of which is to said county attorney now unknown, the said false and forged county order and warrant being destroyed, or in the possession of some person to said county attorney unknown, which said county order and warrant was falsely made, and is a forgery, in this: that said county of Kearney did not owe said H. A. W. Corfield said sum of $380, nor any part thereof, which said defendant well knew at the time he so made and caused and procured said county order and warrant to be so made and issued to him, and that said defendant then and there well knew said county order and warrant to be false and fraudulent, and that he so made and caused and procured said county order and warrant to be so made and issued to him, the said H. A. W. Corfield, with intent to cheat and defraud said county of Kearney, which was then and there an organized county of the state of Kansas, contrary to the statutes in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas. J. A. WILSON, County Attorney."

The prosecution is under section 115 of the crimes act, which, so far as it is material or pertinent, reads as follows: "Every person who shall falsely make, alter, forge, counterfeit, print, or photograph, or cause or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged, counterfeited, printed, or photographed, * * * any county warrant or order, * * * shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of forgery in the first degree." This section is a copy of section 115 of the crimes act of 1868, as amended by the legislature of 1876. The original section in the statutes of 1868, so far as it is material to this case, reads as follows: "Every person who shall forge, counterfeit, or falsely alter, or cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited, or falsely altered, any warrant * * * of the state of Kansas, * * * shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of forgery in the first degree." Comparing this section with original section 115 of the Gen. St. of 1868, we find that the legislature of 1876, in amending said section, so far as such amendments are pertinent to this case, added the word "make" to the operative words of the section, and extended the effect of the statute to county warrants and orders. The operative words of the old section are "forge, counterfeit, or falsely alter, or cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited, or falsely altered;" while in the new or amended section they are "falsely make, alter, forge, counterfeit, print, or photograph, or cause or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged, counterfeited, printed, or photographed." The word "falsely" and the procurement clause are found in both sections. The portion of the section to be construed is the first part thereof, containing the operative words, it being conceded that the present section extends the operation of the statute to county warrants and orders. In the old statute the word "falsely" follows all the operative words of the section except the word "alter," which alone it modifies, while in the amended section it precedes and modifies them all. By such change, does the phraseology obtain any new or other significance from that which it had in the original section so far as it went? We are unable to discover any. As it now stands, the word "falsely" modifies the words "forge and counterfeit," as well as the words "make and alter." Does the word "falsely" possess any meaning different, when it modifies the word "make" in this section, from that which it possesses when it modifies the words "forge and counterfeit?" Can we say that the word "falsely," when it modifies the words "make and alter," in the present section, means "fraudulently," and that it means something else when it modifies the very next word in the same sentence, to-wit, "forge?" We think not. We see no reason for giving the words "falsely," "make," and "falsely forge," as found in our statute, any other or different meaning from that which they possess in the ordinary forms of indictment for forgery or counterfeiting, or in the text-books. If the word "false" were eliminated from the section, and it read "every person who shall make, or cause or procure to be made, any county warrant or order, with intent to defraud the county," or if the language was "every person who shall falsely procure to be made any county warrant or order, with intent to defraud the county," we could better understand the contention of the appellant; since in the one case the defendant might be guilty of procuring the warrant to issue, and the information would be good; and in the other we could say the word "falsely" meant "fraudulently," and hold the charge good because the defendant fraudulently procured the warrant to issue. It seems to us that the position of the appellant is based upon a misapprehension of the statute, since it is claimed that the defendant is guilty of the offense of forgery, although it is conceded that he did not make the warrant set out in the information, but that, on the contrary, the warrant was made by the chairman of the board of county commissioners, and attested by the county clerk, upon a claim regularly presented to and allowed by the county board. In other words, it is insisted that the defendant is guilty of forgery, though he did not make the warrant, and the warrant itself is genuine,—that is, was not forged, but made by the parties by whom it purports to have been made,—simply because the county did not owe him anything when the warrant was issued. That because the defendant fraudulently presented a claim to the board of county commissioners, which was allowed, and a warrant issued thereon, he is guilty of forgery. The language of the statute is "falsely make, or cause or procure to be falsely made." The defendant did not make the warrant, and the warrant was not falsely made by any person or authority; hence the defendant did not cause or procure the warrant to be falsely made, and his conduct, therefore, did not amount to forgery. It is intimated by the state in its brief that the defendant cannot be punished at all unless for forgery under this statute. That is wholly immaterial, so far as the question presented to this court is concerned. We hardly think, however, that if the defendant made out and swore to a fictitious claim against the county of Kearney, and presented the same to the county board, and procured its allowance by them, and then procured a warrant to issue therefor, our statutes are so barren of remedies as to furnish none in such a case. We think the motion to quash was properly sustained. It is therefore recommended that the judgment of the district court thereon be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

ON REHEARING.

PER CURIAM. We are satisfied with the law declared in the former opinion handed down. See Mann v. People, 15 Hun, 155, and the numerous decisions cited therein; the same case in 75 N. Y. 484. In that case it was said: "A county officer, who without authority has executed in his own name, as the official representative of the county, an instrument purporting in its body to be the contract or obligation of the county, cannot be convicted of forgery." State v. Willson, 28 Minn. 52, 9 N. W. Rep. 28, State v. Young, 46 N. H. 266. We have examined Ex parte Hibbs, 26 Fed. Rep. 421; Luttrell v. State, 85 Tenn. 232, 1 S. W. Rep. 886; also all the other cases cited on the part of the state. So far as these cases conflict, if in any way they do conflict, with the former opinion, we are not inclined to follow them. The motion for a rehearing will be overruled.

PEOPLE V. DEEGAN. (No. 20,764.)

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF WITNESS—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—DRUNKEN JUROR.

1. Where, in a trial for larceny, a witness for the prosecution testifies to having seen defendant on the night of the stealing, but says nothing about any conversation with defendant, it is inadmissible for defendant to cross-examine him in respect to a conversation had at that time.

2. A conviction will not be reversed because it appears from affidavits that one of the jurors drank intoxicating liquor during the trial, and that during a recess of court he was intoxicated, when counter-affidavits by the other jurors, and the officer in charge of the jury, show that the juror was rational and sober at all times while hearing the trial and deliberating on the verdict.

3. If during the trial a juror appears to be intoxicated in court, defendant should object to his serving before the jury retire. De Haven, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

Blinds & Merriam and A. J. Burns, for appellant. W. D. Tupper and H. H. Welsh, for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted by a jury of the crime of larceny, the theft of a calf. From the judgment rendered in the premises, and an order denying him a new trial, he appeals. The evidence upon which he was tried is mainly circumstantial, but we see no reason to declare, as the defendant contends we should, that the jury were not warranted in returning the verdict of guilty.

In the progress of the trial a witness for the prosecution, Mr. Zeilor, testified that he saw the defendant and those claimed to have been with him, on the night of the alleged stealing, at Selma, in Fresno county, between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening. Then, upon cross-examination by defendant's counsel, the witness said he had no conversation with them. When his memory was refreshed by a further question, he was about to state what he had said to them, and presumably what they said to him, when the district attorney objected, on the ground that the testimony sought to be elicited was not in cross-examination of any thing brought out by him in his examination in chief. The court sustained the objection, and the defendant excepted, and assigns this ruling of the court as prejudicial error. If the people, for the purpose of criminating the defendant, had asked for this conversation, it would have been admissible, and then the defendant could have cross-examined the witness in relation to the matter. This was not done, and as the defendant's conversations could not be introduced by him in chief, for the reason that it is not permissible for a man charged with crime thus beforehand to manufacture evidence for himself, so it could not be admissible in cross-examination, if brought out by the defendant for the first time. Besides, what appears to have been said, and which it was the evident purpose of defendant's counsel to bring before the jury, is testified to by defendant afterwards. So that no prejudicial error was committed as to the matter.

The last and most important ground upon which the appellant bases his contention for a reversal of the judgment and order is that one of the jurors was guilty of the misconduct of drinking intoxicating liquors during the progress of the trial, and to such an extent as to disqualify him for the performance of his duty in such capacity. The affidavit of the juror himself, seeking to impeach his verdict, is not admissible. People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 183. There were other affidavits introduced on the part of the defendant which went to show that during the recess of the court, from 12 to 2 o'clock on the day when the verdict was rendered, the juror in question was intoxicated in a saloon in Fresno; that he had been during that week under the influence of intoxicating liquors, and that on the day of the verdict, during recess of court, as heretofore stated, he came home greatly under the influence of such liquor, stupid and irrational; that he went to sleep, and was awakened by the deputy-sheriff, and taken back to court in a condition not fitting him for the service of a juror; that he drank a tumbler full of whisky, and was intoxicated during the recess above mentioned; that the juror was drunk in a saloon between the hours of 12 and 2 on the day in question.

There is no doubt of the fact that the juror drank the intoxicating liquor during the recess. But the affidavits for the people, mainly by the fellow-jurors of the one charged with misconduct sufficient to vitiate the verdict, are to the effect that at no time during the trial did they perceive that the juror was intoxicated in any degree, but that, on the contrary, he was sober, intelligent, and perfectly able to consider evidence, and exercise judgment in deliberating thereon; and that on the day of the rendition of the verdict, after they had retired to consider it, the juror Wade discussed in a reasonable and sensible way the different facts as shown by the testimony in the case, and in every way indicated that he was thoroughly able and in a condition to perform his duty as a juror. The affidavit of Deputy-Sheriff Pickett shows that he saw the juror Wade come into the court-house where the trial was had with George Z. Moore, another deputy-sheriff, at half past 2 o'clock of the day of the verdict; that he has known the juror for about 20 years; that he particularly observed him from that time until about 5 o'clock P. M., while on the jury, and that there was nothing in his appearance and actions to indicate intoxication; that he was placed in charge of the jury at 5 P. M., and remained in charge of them until about 5:30 P. M., until they arrived at a verdict, when he returned with them to the court-room; that he met the juror in question about 15 minutes after the verdict had been returned, and had a conversation with him, and that he then appeared thoroughly sober. Deputy-Sheriff Moore swore that during all the days of this trial, 18th, 19th, and 20th of June, 1890, he was in the court-room, and observed the juror Wade; that he appeared to be thoroughly sober and intelligent, and in a condition to perform his duties as juror; that he has known Wade personally about 10 years; that on the 20th of June, 1890, at about 2:15 o'clock P. M., he went to Wade's house, and entering it saw Mrs. Hill, and asked where Wade was, to which she replied, "There he is; just wake him up;" that he did wake him, and that they proceeded to the court-house, a distance of a quarter of a mile, together; that during that walk he talked with Wade, and he was sober and intelligent, and did not appear in any way under the influence of intoxicating liquors; that they reached the court-house about 2:30 o'clock P. M.; that he remained there in the court-room some time before the case was submitted to the jury, and observed no action or appearance on the part of Wade indicating that he was drunk or intoxicated.

It thus appears that the court was justified in believing that while sitting as a juror in the box, or considering the verdict, Wade was sober, intelligent, and in a fit condition to understand and deliberate upon the evidence, apply the instructions of the court, and form an express and fair opinion as to what the verdict should be. There is no doubt that he did drink intoxicating liquors out of court, and that at the recess at least he was for a time under its influence. The question, then, is whether, as a matter of law, the verdict in which he concurred, and which he assisted in making, was vitiated by his drinking and its effect upon him outside of the court, when not sitting as a juror. We cannot say that it was. If, while in his capacity of juror, he was sober, heard the evidence, understood and appreciated it, and the instructions of the court and argument of counsel, and was then able intelligently to understand, deliberate, and determine what should be the verdict with his fellow-jurors, we are unable to perceive that the verdict was arrived at accompanied by misconduct on the part of the juror while performing his duty. He was guilty of drinking more than he ought when out of court, but does not seem ever to have been under its influence while sitting or deliberating as a juror. At those times his mind was clear, and no misconduct is shown to have occurred. We do not think that there is anything opposed to this in the case of People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164, or People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 318, 20 Pac. Rep. 719. If, as the defendant seems to think, the juror was palpably intoxicated in court, and he or his counsel perceived it, objection should have been made before the jury was permitted to retire. Ipswitch v. Fernandez, 84 Cal. 639, 24 Pac. Rep. 298. But, as we have seen, the trial judge was justified under all the evidence before him in believing the juror sober during the performance of his duty as a juror on the trial, and while deliberating upon the verdict. For these reasons we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; FITZGERALD, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

DE HAVEN, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment. The affidavits as to the condition of the juror Wade, on the afternoon when the case was submitted to the jury for decision, were conflicting; and the judge who presided at the trial, and must have personally observed the juror at the time referred to, was in a far better position than we to determine the truth of the matter, and that he did not believe the juror to have been under the influence of liquor, as charged, is implied from the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial. I do not, however, give my assent to that part of the foregoing opinion which seems to intimate that, if the juror was in the condition claimed by defendant, the objection now urged was waived because not made before the retirement of the jury. Whatever may be the rule in civil cases, in which it may be said, in a general sense, only the parties thereto are interested in the verdict, the principle of waiver of the right to object to misconduct, which in judgment of law disqualifies a juror for the performance of his duties as such, has no application to a criminal trial for a felony. In such a case the constitution guarantees to a defendant the right to a trial by 12 competent jurors, and his express consent to be tried by a less number will not bind him. People v. O'Neil, 48 Cal. 257. And there must be this number of competent jurors throughout the trial. The people of the state, equally with the defendant, are interested in having this constitutional right secured in every case, and it is of infinitely more importance to the people than to the defendant that no conviction for a grave offense shall be had, except as the result of a trial which commands the respect of those who witness it or are informed of the manner in which it is conducted. No juror is, in judgment of law, competent to sit during the trial who is not in a condition to intelligently receive the evidence, the arguments of counsel, and the charge of the court; and, while it may be true that intoxication does not affect all men alike,—some retaining their judgment and ability to weigh and deliberate upon the effect of evidence, and to understand an argument, or the instructions of the court,—still the law takes no account of these exceptions, and holds no person competent to sit as a juror while in a state of intoxication. And I am of the opinion that, if a juror is in court intoxicated to such a degree as to be painfully noticeable, the defendant is not required to bring himself into antagonism with such juror by entering any formal protest or objection to proceeding with the trial while the juror is in such condition. This would present a case affecting not only a substantial right of the defendant, but also the dignity and decorum of the court itself, and should be disposed of by the court of its own motion, and that, too, so as to preserve the rights of the defendant.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INSTRUCTIONS—MATTERS OF FACT.

1. On trial for assault with intent to murder it is error for the court to charge: "Upon a trial for an assault to commit murder, the assault and the intent being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse therefor devolves upon accused, unless the proof upon the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounted to an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict * * * bodily injury, * * * or that defendant was justified or excused," as such instruction is contradictory and meaningless.

2. Where, in such case, there is a conflict in the evidence as to how the difficulty started, it is error for the court to charge that the prosecuting witness testified, in substance, "that defendant came up and addressed him in a sharp tone, and immediately made a demonstration to draw a pistol on him. * * * Other witnesses corroborated in whole or in part that portion of the prosecutor's statement of the transaction after the conflict had commenced,"—since such charge is one as to matters of fact, which is prohibited by the constitution of the state.

H. V. Morehouse and Hiram D. Tuttle, for appellant. S. G. Tompkins, G. W. Herington, and W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action charging the defendant with an assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of one Charles H. Potter, with intent to kill and murder said Potter. The defendant was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, and fined $2,500, and in default of the payment thereof it was ordered that he be imprisoned in the county jail of Santa Clara county at the rate of one day for each $4 of said fine, and not exceeding in the aggregate 625 days. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Among the grounds relied upon by defendant's counsel to support this appeal,

It is claimed the court misdirected the jury as to the law of the case. The court gave the jury the following instruction: "Upon a trial for an assault to commit murder, the assault and the intent being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse therefor devolves upon the accused, unless the proof upon the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounted to an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict upon the person of the prosecuting witness a great bodily injury, or of a simple assault, or that the defendant was justified or excused." The learned judge of the lower court has attempted by the foregoing instruction to apply the principle found in section 1105 of the Penal Code as to the shifting of the burden of proof in cases of homicide to the present case,—a charge of assault with intent to commit murder. Such an application of that section of the Code cannot be made, for it only treats of cases of homicide. People v. Cheong Foon Ark, 61 Cal. 527; People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 605, 11 Pac. Rep. 481; People v. Mize, 80 Cal. 45, 22 Pac. Rep. 80; Com. v. McKie, 1 Gray, 61. This principle of the shifting of the burden of proof in cases of homicide is purely a creation of the statute, and must be limited to the words of the statute. It is based upon the theory that certain presumptions shall take the place of evidence, and was not intended to change the rule of evidence. But, aside from any authority upon the question, it does not appear that the burden of proof could possibly shift at any stage of the proceedings, or under any state of circumstances in a case similar to the one under discussion. The presumptions which follow from the act of killing in a case of homicide, and which are implicitly recognized by section 1105, are inapplicable to, and have no relationship with, the offense of assault with intent to commit murder; and this is fully exemplified by a cursory examination of the instruction heretofore quoted, for such an examination proves the instruction to be misleading, contradictory, and practically meaningless. The language of the instruction is: "The assault and the intent being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of justification, excuse, etc., 'rests upon the accused, unless,' etc. If the assault and the intent to commit the murder are proven, the offense is made out perfect and complete in every portion, and the foregoing instruction can only be correct in the sense that when the prosecution has proven the defendant guilty it behooves him to do something in his own behalf, or suffer the consequences of his proven guilt. The serious vice in the instruction then follows: "Unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounted to an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict upon the person of the prosecuting witness a great bodily injury, or of a simple assault, or that the defendant was justified or excused." This proviso or exception never could exist in connection with the previous assumption that the guilt of the defendant of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder had already been established by the evidence of the prosecution, and it has no significance whatever when taken in connection with the former part of the instruction. If the defendant had been convicted of an assault with intent to commit murder, he would have been entitled to a new trial by reason of error in the foregoing instruction, but, having been found guilty of the crime of "assault with a deadly weapon" only, he is acquitted of the higher offense, to which the instruction alone is pointed, and consequently is acquitted of the intent to murder, and necessarily was not prejudiced thereby. People v. Swift, 66 Cal. 349, 5 Pac. Rep. 505; People v. O'Neal, 67 Cal. 378, 7 Pac. Rep. 790; People v. Boling, 88 Cal. 380, 23 Pac. Rep. 421.

The court gave the following instruction to the jury: "The prosecutor, Potter, has testified in substance that at the time in question he was sitting in front of the Lamolle House, in a chair on the sidewalk, unarmed. That the defendant came up, and addressed him in a sharp tone, and immediately made a demonstration to draw a pistol upon him. That he, Potter, thereupon sprang up from his chair, and grappled with the defendant, and struck him in the face. * * * Other witnesses corroborated in whole or in part that portion of the prosecutor's statement of the transaction after the conflict had commenced." All the testimony of the prosecuting witness, Potter, as to these matters is as follows: "Examination in chief: I was seated in a chair in front of the Lamolle House, on Santa Clara street, near San Pedro street. I was seated looking east, and thinking about something. I had been there about twelve or fifteen minutes, when some one came up and addressed me as, 'Ah, there!' or 'Hullo, there!' I looked quick, and H. L. Gordon, the defendant, was standing about two feet from me. As I jumped around in this way, he started for his overcoat pocket with his right hand. I immediately jumped up and grabbed him. * * * I saw him make a motion for his side coat pocket, and I immediately grabbed his hand. Cross-examination: The first time I saw him was when he was standing in front of me at the Lamolle House. I first saw defendant when he got in front of me on the sidewalk, about three or four feet from me. * * * When he came up he said, 'There!' or 'Ah, there!' or 'Hullo, there!' I don't know which, but I heard the word 'there,' which was significant. When he spoke to me I had my legs crossed, and I looked round, and he immediately attempted to step back, and started his right hand for the side of his overcoat pocket. I raised up and grabbed him, * * * I grabbed him with my left hand on his right wrist as he had his hand in his pocket. * * * He was trying to get his pistol out of his pocket. He had his right hand in his pocket. * * * The first time I saw Gordon he was endeavoring to get his pistol in his hand." It appears by the record that there was a wide difference between the testimony of the prosecuting witness and the defendant as to the matters which occurred at the immediate inception of the difficulty between those parties; and, as the defendant in this case insisted at the trial that the shooting was done in self-defense, it was a matter of vital importance to the jury to know who began the affray, and this was essentially and solely the province of the jury to determine from the testimony of all the witnesses. While section 19, art. 6, of the constitution allows judges to state the testimony to the jury, yet this principle has always been strictly enforced, and necessarily so, for that judges must not charge juries with respect to matters of fact is a constitutional prohibition which has been jealously guarded and rigidly upheld from the earliest judicial history of the state. In the case of People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 147, Justice BALDWIN used the following language, which is as trite now as when used in that early case: "The experience of every lawyer shows the readiness with which a jury frequently catch at the intimations of the court, and the great deference which jurors pay to the opinions and suggestions of the presiding judge, especially in a closely-balanced case, when they can thus shift the responsibility of a decision of the issue from themselves to the court. A word, a look, or a tone may sometimes in such cases be of great or even of controlling influence. A judge cannot be too cautious in a criminal trial in avoiding all interference with the conclusions of the jury upon the facts." As we have seen, in this case the judge undertook to state to the jury the substance of the prosecuting witness' testimony, which is a very dangerous thing to do, for it is essentially the province of the jury to decide what the substance of the prosecuting witness' testimony was. Selecting what constitutes the substance of a witness' testimony is to a greater or less extent a matter of opinion, and the jurors and the judge may have held widely different views as to what the substance of the prosecuting witness' testimony really was in this case. In the instruction under consideration the court states that the witness Potter testified: "That the defendant came up and addressed him in a sharp tone, and immediately made a demonstration to draw a pistol upon him." This goes to the very gist of the main inquiry in the case, and, while the foregoing may be in a certain sense and to a limited extent the substance of what the witness said happened at the commencement of the trouble, yet the witness in his testimony says that "some one came up to me, and addressed me as 'Ah, there!' or 'Hullo, there!'" Now someone is not necessarily the defendant; and it appears nowhere in the testimony of the witness that he was addressed in a sharp tone of voice. Now, this is significant, for if the remark was made in a "sharp tone" it might indicate anger, animosity, and ill will towards the witness, and it was for the jury to decide whether the tone of defendant's voice was sharp or not. Again, the court makes the witness say, "and immediately made a demonstration to draw a pistol upon him." Now, the witness really did say:

"As I jumped around in this way, he started for his overcoat pocket with his right hand;" and surely it is for the jury, and the jury alone, to determine the full meaning of these words, as actually used by the witness. And if in other portions of the witness' testimony he made statements contradictory to those just quoted, or which more fully coincided with the views of his testimony as expressed by the court in his charge to the jury, then it is pre-eminently the duty of the jury to say from all his statements what is the substance of his testimony as to what did occur at the moment when these two parties met. At the conclusion of this instruction to the jury the court used this language: "Other witnesses corroborated in whole or in part that portion of the prosecutor's statement of the transaction, after the conflict had commenced." It appears the parties came to blows, were separated, and then the shooting followed. This is the very moment of time at which the crime was committed, if committed at all; and for the court to tell the jury that the testimony of the witness Potter as to these important matters is corroborated by other witnesses surely prejudiced the rights of the defendant to his great disadvantage, and violated that constitutional prohibition that juries must not be charged as to matters of fact. Upon an examination of the other points relied upon by appellant, we find no error. For the foregoing reason let the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

APPEAL—JUDGMENT ROLL—FINDINGS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where, in ejectment, the court recites that, having heard the proofs of the parties in support of the issues, it finds the facts as alleged in the complaint, and defendant appeals on the judgment roll alone, the judgment will not be reversed because there were no findings on the issues raised by the answer, as in the absence of a statement or bill of exceptions preserving the evidence, it will not be presumed that evidence was offered in support of the issues upon which there were no findings.

Wm. L. Gill, (A. S. Kittredge, of counsel.) for appellant. S. O. Houghton, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appeal in this case is direct from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone. The appellant seeks its reversal upon the ground that the court below did not make findings upon all the issues in the case. The complaint is in the ordinary form of a complaint in ejectment. The answer denies its several allegations, alleges title in the defendant, pleads the statute of limitations, and sets up an equitable defense. The court found only the facts which were alleged in the complaint, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. In Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. Rep. 1098, it was held that "a failure to find upon some issue, a finding upon which would merely have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, will not be held ground for reversal, unless it is shown by statement or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue." Appellant seeks to distinguish the present case from Himmelman v. Henry by the fact that it is recited in the findings herein that "the court proceeded to hear said cause upon the issues made by the complaint and the answer of the defendant thereto; and the court, having heard the proofs of the parties in support of the issues last aforesaid and the arguments of counsel, makes the findings of fact and conclusions of law;" and he contends that this recital is a sufficient compliance with the rule laid down in Himmelman v. Henry. If we should concede that this statement in the findings is sufficient to authorize us to assume that evidence was received upon the issues presented by the answer, it would not follow that the failure to make a finding upon such issues was error available to the defendant upon this appeal. The opinion of the court in Himmelman v. Henry, that a judgment would not be reversed for failure to find upon an issue, "unless it was shown that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue," necessarily implied that the evidence so shown must be sufficient to authorize such a finding as would "have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made." Such a finding would not be authorized if the evidence introduced was insufficient to sustain the allegations presenting the issues, any more than it would if there was no evidence introduced in reference thereto. In either case the finding of the court could only be against the allegation, and consequently would not "invalidate" the judgment rendered in accordance with the other findings; and, inasmuch as the failure to make such finding would not affect the substantial rights of the appellant, the judgment ought not to be reversed. Code Civil Proc. § 475. The appellant is not prejudiced unless the court shall fail to make such findings in his behalf as will countervail its other findings; and, as error in the court below is not to be presumed, but must be shown by him, it is incumbent on him to produce before this court the evidence that was presented to that court, in order that we may determine whether any error was committed in failing to make such findings. If the omitted findings must have been adverse to the appellant, their omission is not error sufficient to authorize the reversal of the judgment. Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 156. The issues upon which the court made no finding in the present case were issues tendered by the answer, and it was incumbent on the defendant to introduce evidence in their support. There is no presumption that such evidence was introduced, and, unless the defendant did introduce evidence which, unless controverted, would sustain his allegations, the court was not required to make any findings thereon. It is not enough for him to show merely that evidence was introduced, but it must also be shown that the evidence which was introduced was sufficient to support his allegations. The recital by the court that it "heard the proofs of the parties in support of the issues" does not imply that any particular proof was heard, nor does it have reference to proof upon any particular issue. It certainly does not imply that the proofs which it heard were sufficient to sustain the allegations of the answer. In Himmelman v. Henry it was recited in the findings that "the court, having heard the allegations and proofs of the respective parties, finds as matters of fact as follows." This recital was not deemed sufficient in that case to justify the presumption that any evidence was offered upon the issues on which no finding was made, and we do not perceive any substantial distinction between the recital in that case and in the one before us. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

APPEAL-BOND—DISMISSAL.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 946, 962, providing that when appellant is an administrator, acting in another's right, or appeals from a judgment in proceedings had upon the estate, he need file no bond, an administrator who appeals from an order revoking his letters is not relieved from giving an appeal-bond, as such appeal is a personal matter, and not one in which the estate is interested.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county, WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Justin Jacobs, for appellant. C. G. Lamberson, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. J. H. Danielson died intestate and unmarried, leaving two brothers in this state. March 13, 1890, the appellant, who was not a relative of the decedent, filed a petition asking for letters, and at the same time the written consent of Theodore Danielson, a brother of deceased, to his appointment. March 24, 1890, Theodore Danielson filed a petition asking for letters for himself. April 7, 1890, the court appointed both petitioners administrators, and both qualified. April 29, 1890, William Danielson, another brother of the decedent, who had been temporarily absent from the state, filed a petition asking that Erlanger's appointment be revoked, and that he be appointed in his stead. July 9, 1890, the court, after due notice, made an order revoking the letters to Erlanger, and appointed William Danielson. In making this order the court assumed to be acting under section 1383, Code Civil Proc. From these orders Erlanger appeals. July 16, 1890, the notice of appeal was served and filed. No undertaking on appeal was filed, but according to a statement in the transcript an order was made September 15, 1890, dispensing with security on appeal. Such order is supposed to be authorized by section 946, Code Civil Proc. It is also contended that no bond was required under section 965, Id. We cannot agree with this contention. Plainly, on this appeal the appellant is not acting in another's right in the sense of section 946, Id., and we think it equally evident that section 965 has no application to this case. This is not a proceeding upon the estate of which he was administrator within the purview of that section. In the first place, he was not administrator. Whatever effect his appeal, when perfected, would have upon the order removing him, it was in full force until then. It follows that when he filed his notice he was not such officer and then had no administrator's bond. Suppose the contrary were held, and the order removing him was affirmed. How could his sureties be held for costs incurred after his duties as administrator had ceased? But the section has reference to matters in which the estate is interested. This is his personal matter. The undertaking of his sureties is that he shall faithfully perform the duties of his office. How can he be said to be discharging official duty in appealing from an order relieving him from such duty? It is true, the legislature has the power to provide for obligations not mentioned in the bond, or entirely outside of its apparent scope, and one becoming surety after the law has been enacted will be bound accordingly, for he will be presumed to know of the law; but this is a harsh rule, and the legislature will not be presumed to have intended such consequence unless the intent is clear. Here the intentions are all the other way. We think the appeal should be dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—PLEADING.

Filing an answer after a default has been entered does not affect the default.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WILLIAM WALLACE, Judge.

Moses G. Cobb, for appellants. W. C. Belcher and J. W. Mastick, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The demurrers to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, were properly overruled. The default of the defendants for failing to answer the complaint, within the time allowed by law for answering, was properly entered. The filing of an answer after the default had been entered did not affect the default. The motion to set aside said default was properly denied, no ground appearing for setting said default aside. PUBLIC LANDS—SWAMP—SUITABLE FOR CULTIVATION.

Const. Cal. art. 17, § 3, providing that state lands which are "suitable for cultivation" shall be granted only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to each settler, applies to swamp lands granted to the state by Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, when such lands are "suitable for cultivation," and can be reclaimed and cultivated by an actual settler.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Freeman & Bates, for appellant. Chas. Lamberson, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This is a contest for the purchase of land from the state, instituted in the land-office. The court awarded the land to plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The land belongs to the class designated "swamp land," title to which was acquired by the state under act of congress approved September 28, 1850. The plaintiff was an actual settler upon the land, and the defendant was not. Under the finding of the court that the land in controversy was suitable for cultivation, this became the turning point in the case; the court holding that section 3, art. 17, of the state constitution was applicable. Whether it applies to swamp land at all is the only question of importance in this appeal. That the state had a clearly defined policy upon the subject generally is quite evident from the section in question and the preceding. They are as follows: "Sec. 2. The holding of large tracts of land, uncultivated and unimproved, by individuals or corporations, is against the public interest, and should be discouraged by all means not inconsistent with the rights of private property. Sec. 3. Lands belonging to this state, which are suitable for cultivation, shall be granted only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to each settler, under such conditions as shall be prescribed by law." The policy of the state is here declared to be against selling any lands suitable for cultivation in tracts in extent exceeding 320 acres, or to other than actual settlers; and this policy is greatly emphasized by the preceding section, which plainly declares that the holding of large tracts, uncultivated, is against the public interests, and should be discouraged by all means consistent with private rights. In view of such declarations, it must be manifest that it was intended that all land within this state should, so far as governmental action could accomplish it without violating private rights, be held in small tracts, and constitute homes for its owners. No narrow construction of the only words in the section open to construction—"suitable for cultivation"—should limit the operation of this policy. The effect should be rather to extend than to restrict; for the policy is plainly that the section should include all, so far as possible. The constitution classifies all lands as suitable or not suitable for cultivation. For the purposes of this section, neither the legislature nor the courts can classify them otherwise; and it must follow that whether a particular tract belongs to one class or to the other must always be a question of fact. The courts cannot exclude any other class of lands from the effects of this limitation or prohibition, except, in fact, unsuitable for cultivation; nor can the courts declare any class, as a class, unsuitable for cultivation, unless it knows judicially that no tract of the class in extent amounting to 320 acres is suitable for cultivation. Nothing less than this would justify such a judicial rule. Now, this court is presumed to know, whatever intelligent man does know, that swamp lands are liable to be reclaimed by natural causes, and that since the congressional swamp-land act, called the "Arkansas Act," many thousands of acres of these lands have been so reclaimed, and had been when this constitutional provision was adopted. There are now pending in this court several cases in which the court has found as a fact that the lands in question had been so reclaimed at the time of the several applications to purchase. These lands, when reclaimed, are often the most fertile we have, and entirely adapted to habitation. Section 3 was construed in Manley v. Cunningham, 72 Cal. 236, 13 Pac. Rep. 622, "to provide that the public lands should be held and disposed of, so far as possible, to those who will live upon and cultivate them; that they should be used to encourage the immigration of industrious people who will utilize and improve the lands, and, by building up homes and engaging in husbandry, add permanently to the wealth and prosperity of the state. The phrase 'suitable for cultivation' includes all lands ready for occupation, and which by ordinary farming processes are fit for agricultural purposes." If this decision is to stand as expressive of the law of this state, all swamp lands which at the time application was made for their purchase were fit for human habitation, and by ordinary farming processes can be made suitable for cultivation, can be sold only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding 320 acres. As already stated, the only language in section 3 which is open to interpretation is the phrase "suitable for cultivation." In Manley v. Cunningham, supra, the phrase is construed as a similar expression by the secretary of the interior in a letter of instruction to Commissioner McFarland: "All timber lands are unfit for cultivation in their natural condition; but, if they may be reclaimed by ordinary farming process, they are not, in my opinion, within the purposes of the act." In this case it is found that the lands have already been reclaimed by natural causes, and the facts show that the land is as nearly fit for human habitation as wild, unimproved lands can well be.

It is claimed that the state is morally bound not to assert that these lands are suitable for cultivation, or perhaps is estopped from so doing, because it received them under the Arkansas act, which only granted such lands as were "swamp and overflowed, and made unfit thereby for cultivation." Counsel says: "The duty of examining the public lands, and determining what parts thereof were swamp and overflowed, was confided to the officers of the land department of the United States; and their decision upon this subject, being the decision of a court of special jurisdiction upon a subject unquestionably within the limits of that jurisdiction, is binding upon all persons, and conclusively establishes that the lands are of the class to which such officers have found them to belong. With respect to each tract of land now before this court, the proper officers have made due investigation, and have determined that it vested in the state under the statute of 1850. This determination was therefore a decision not only that it was 'made thereby unfit for cultivation;' for, under the statute, it was not granted to the state unless 'unfit for cultivation.' When the present constitution was formed and adopted, the state was entitled to various classes of lands, the chief of which were school and swamp lands. The lands of the first class were partly suitable for cultivation and partly not; but the lands of the latter class could not, unless obtained in defiance of law, be otherwise than 'unfit for cultivation.'" That is, because the officers of the United States, in a proceeding to which the state was not a party and was not represented, acting under rules made by themselves, determined that on the 28th of September, 1850, these lands were swamp and overflowed, and therefore segregated them as such to the state, therefore the state cannot be understood as intending to include them in this section, although every member of the convention knew as a fact that millions of acres had at that time been reclaimed by natural causes. The test, applied under the Arkansas act, to determine whether lands passed to the state, has always been their condition on the 28th of September, 1850. The very existence of such a test implies that it was well known that their condition as to being swamp and overflowed, and thereby rendered unsuitable for cultivation, was liable to change. The rulings of the land department of the United States have recognized the fact that some of the lands have been in fact reclaimed before the survey segregating them to the state. Commissioner McFarland said: "A survey made in California in February, 1880, as of all swamp land when part had become dry from natural causes, it appearing that it was all swamp in 1850, was properly so designated by the survey." 1 Dec. Dep. Int. 324-330. And, as stated above, the members of the convention, and the people when they adopted it, must be held to have known of such natural reclamation. That some of these lands might be suitable for settlement was recognized by the statutes of the United States and of this state prior to the constitutional amendment. By Act Cong. March 5, 1885, provision was made for pre-emption of homestead locations upon these lands. As to the state, see sections 3442, 3443, Pol. Code. If one proposing to purchase from the state may be supposed to be concerned as to how the state shall discharge the obligation, if any, imposed upon it to reclaim these lands, such apprehension may well be set at rest by the fact that a fund has been provided, available for that purpose, made up of the proceeds of the sale of the lands, and by this very section 3, which aims to place them, so far as possible, in the hands of actual settlers, who must reclaim them as a means of getting a livelihood.

So far the argument has proceeded upon the assumption that lands which are in fact swamp lands or subject to overflow, so that they cannot be cultivated until reclaimed, are also to be considered unsuitable for cultivation, within the meaning of section 3, now under consideration. But this proposition cannot be admitted. We see no reason why the rule laid down in Manley v. Cunningham should not be universal in its application. The matter should be looked at from the point of view of an intending settler. If the land is of such a character that such person is likely to be willing to settle upon it in its present condition, and to undertake its reclamation for the purposes of agriculture, and can do so successfully, with such outlay as the circumstances would justify, it should be held to be suitable for cultivation, within the meaning of this section. The drainage of land so as to render it fit for the plow is an ordinary farming process, much more so than clearing land for timber, or grubbing up trees and brush. The latter is mostly confined to new land; the former is a perpetual subject of interest in agriculture. Probably, there are few farms in this state, thoroughly cultivated, some portion of which has not been drained; and the drains must be constantly looked after. The state is in no way bound to apply, as between herself and purchasers, the test found in the Arkansas act. There it is used for a purpose altogether different, and evidently, also, with a very different meaning. The primary purpose seems to have been to enable the state of Arkansas to control the margins of streams for the erection of levees. The meaning of the phrase there used undoubtedly is, "not suitable for cultivation until reclaimed." It is not used in that general sense by which lands would be classed by settlers, or by the land-officers under another law making the fact of suitability material in the discharge of official duties. This we have already shown. All such laws, as well as the section of the constitution, must be understood as applying to wild and unimproved lands, which are known not to be fit for cultivation generally until something is done to reclaim them. The section must be construed as intending this. Are the lands suitable for cultivation in the sense in which portions of the unreclaimed public domain in its wild condition can generally be said to be suitable for cultivation? The necessity for reclamation is taken for granted in the constitution. The contrary doctrine would almost amount to a judicial repeal of the provision, and would sound strange before the declared policy that the holding of lands in large tracts and without cultivation is against the public interests, and stranger still in the face of the many cases already argued here, and now pending for decision, in which the lower court had found the fact of the suitability and present inhabitation. The debates in the constitutional convention show that it was there understood that the provision in question would include swamp and overflowed lands, and that the lands mainly regarded as unsuitable for cultivation were grazing lands, which it was said must be held in larger tracts than 320 acres to be utilized profitably. We can think, at present, of only three cases in which swamp lands can be truly said to be unsuitable for cultivation, within the meaning of this section: First, where the lands cannot be made fit for cultivation; second, where, although they can be so reclaimed, it cannot be done without co-operation of others, unless by an expenditure greater than can reasonably be expected from a settler upon a tract of 320 acres,—this would be a case for a reclamation district; and, third, where the lands are not fit for human habitation until reclaimed; for of course it is necessary, in order to comply with this section, that the settlement be made before the purchaser can acquire any rights in the land. We understand this conclusion to be in entire accord with the decision in Manley v. Cunningham. It is claimed that this conclusion is at variance with the case of McIntyre v. Sherwood, 82 Cal. 134, 22 Pac. Rep. 937. The question was not presented there as here. There seems to have been no issue upon the subject in the court below, and it was not found as a fact that the land was suitable for cultivation. Probably, it was not very fully argued; but we do not care to draw nice distinctions. If there be anything in that really inconsistent with this opinion, it ought to be overruled. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

(No. 13,944.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1891.)

Chas. E. Wilson and T. M. McNamara, for appellant. N. O. Bradley and G. E. Lawrence, for respondent. W. B. Wallace, for intervenors.

TEMPLE, C. On the merits, this case is on all fours with the case of Fulton v. Brannan, ante 506, (just decided by this court, March 26, 1891.) A further question is raised as to the right of the intervenors to be heard as such. The bill of exceptions only shows the action of the court on a motion to strike out the petitions of intervention, or some portions of them. There was no error in refusing to strike out the petition of Warner. Cutler's petition shows no right to intervene. It amounted simply to a request to be permitted, as amicus curiæ, to show that neither party to the contest was qualified to purchase. The duty is cast upon the court, in such cases, to inquire whether either party is entitled to purchase, and, if neither is so entitled, to adjudge accordingly. In such circumstances we think it would be no abuse of discretion to allow an amici curiæ to produce evidence to enlighten the court. The intervenors take nothing by the judgment, and, as the bill of exceptions does not show what occurred at the trial, we do not know that either of them appeared or took any part whatever therein. So far as we can know, the plaintiff has not been injured. Judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIFF, C.; FOOTE, C.

NATIONAL BANK OF D. O. MILLS & CO. v.
UNION INS. CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No.
13,722.)

INSURANCE—WARRANTIES—INSURABLE INTEREST.

1. Although Civil Code Cal. § 2607, provides that "a statement in a policy of a matter relating to the person or thing insured, or to the risk, as a fact, is an express warranty thereof," yet, where it appears from the whole policy that such an expression was not intended as a warranty, it will not be held to be such; and where the policy recites that "it is understood and agreed that the within described premises have been leased by * * *," and it turns out that the premises were not then so leased, though they had previously been, the policy is not avoided, it appearing that there was no intentional misstatement by the assured.

2. Where the loss is payable to the mortgagee of the property, and occurs after sale under foreclosure, but before the time for redemption has elapsed, the mortgagee is entitled to recover the loss, as the foreclosure is no extinguishment of his debt until the deed has been made and the time for redemption has expired.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

FOOTE, C. On the 27th day of December, 1886, the appellant, a fire insurance company, issued to the Johnston Brandy & Wine Manufacturing Company a policy of insurance against loss or damage by fire, upon certain property therein mentioned, to the amount of $3,000. On the face of this policy was attached the following indorsement: "Loss (if any) payable to National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. as herein provided. It is hereby agreed that this policy, as to the interests of the mortgagee or trustee only therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or negligence of the mortgagor or owner of the property insured, nor by occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by the terms of this policy, nor by any change in title or possession of the property insured: provided, however, that whenever the said mortgagee or trustee shall become aware of any act or negligence of the mortgagor or owner which would, except as to such mortgagee or trustee, invalidate this policy, or of any occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by the terms of this policy, or of any change in title or possession of the property insured, he will at once notify this company thereof: and provided, also, that he will on demand pay to this company the additional premium charged by this company on account of any increased risk for the entire term of this policy; and failure to so notify this company, or to so pay said additional premium, shall avoid this contract." It further appears that there was an indorsement made thereon that on the 2d of March, 1887, the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. had notified the insurance company that it as mortgagee had instituted a suit for foreclosure on the property embraced in the policy, and that the same had been accepted by that company without prejudice to the policy. On the 25th of May, 1887, the same insurance company issued a policy of insurance of the same character and to the same parties, and the loss made payable in the same way and upon like conditions, for the sum of $2,000. It appears that the property insured was destroyed by two successive fires in the month of September, (about the 3d and 20th, in the year 1887,) and that the value of the building and other property burned at said times was fully equal to the amount of the insurance. The National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., to whom the loss was made payable, and who held a mortgage for $6,000 on this property, brought this action to recover for the loss, interest, and costs, and obtained judgment as prayed for; from which, and an order denying a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The appellant urges in support of its contention that the first finding of the trial court, "that all and singular the averments of the complaint are true;" and the second finding, "that all and singular the matters and things stated in defendant's amended answer and the general averments, and both of the general and special defenses therein set forth, are untrue, excepting," etc.,—are unsupported by the evidence. The point made in this behalf is that at the time of the issuing of the policy dated the 25th of May, 1887, it was made an express warranty therein by the insured that the premises were then leased to Messrs. Walden & Co., when, in fact, they were not so leased, and that therefore, by its terms, the policy was void for such misrepresentation. Conceding that the statement in the policy, if taken by itself, and without reference to other portions of that statement, viz., "it is understood and agreed that the within described premises have been leased by Messrs. Walden & Co.," is an express warranty, under section 2607 of the Civil Code, which reads, "A statement in a policy, of a matter relating to the person or thing insured, or to the risk, as a fact, is an express warranty thereof," nevertheless if, taking the entire policy in all its terms and language, it can be perceived that such was not the intention of the parties, such an expression will not be held to be an express warranty; and, where there is any doubt as to the construction to be given to language in such a matter, "the court should lean against that construction which imposes upon the assured the obli-

In another part of this policy there occurs this clause: "Fraud, false swearing, misrepresentation, or concealment of a material fact by the insured, whether in the application for this policy, proofs of loss, or otherwise, shall render this policy void." Thus it seems that it is the intentional misstatement or concealment of a material fact which rendered the policy void, and not the mere fact that a statement therein as to the material matter is untrue. The evidence in this case shows that there was no intentional misstatement as to the leasing of the property to Walden & Co. These parties did have a verbal lease of the premises up to the 30th of April, 1887, and this fact, and the further fact that the language of the policy is "have been" leased, goes far to create the impression that, as the lease had been so recent, the Johnston Brandy & Wine Manufacturing Co., having that in mind, might have been of the impression that these parties still had a lease, or perhaps meant to say that they had had a lease. This view of the matter in hand seems to be in accord with previous adjudications of the appellate court. In Wheaton v. Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 419, 18 Pac. Rep. 758, a somewhat similar question was involved, and it was contended that the statement of the insured, in his application as to the value of the property, was an express warranty. The alleged warranty was in this language: "Special reference being made to the assured's application and survey No. 261,707, which is his warranty, and a part hereof." In another part of the policy there was this clause: "If any false representation is made by the assured of the condition, situation, or occupancy of the property, or any overvaluation, or any misrepresentation whatever, either in a written application or otherwise, this policy shall become void." The appellate court said, (page 422, 76 Cal., and page 761, 18 Pac. Rep.): "In Helbing v. Insurance Co., 54 Cal., 156, it was held that a provision in a policy of insurance that the application shall be considered a warranty, and, if the property insured is overvalued in it, the policy shall be void, applies only where the statements as to value are intentionally false; that the question of fraud is one of fact; that although, where the discrepancy between the statement in the application and the actual value of the property is so great as to convey the conviction of fraud to the reasonable mind, the jury may and ought to find fraud, yet, where the discrepancy is not very considerable, the jury may find the application not to have been fraudulent, even in the absence of explanatory evidence. * * * Moreover, the language of the provision in the policy here sued on, that if any false representation is made by the assured, etc., the policy shall become void, when read as a whole, very clearly shows that a willful misrepresentation as to the value of the property, or one made with such gross and reckless carelessness as in the law would be treated as willful, was in the contemplation of the parties. If so, the previous clause does not make the valuation a warranty. Even when the statements in the application are declared to be warranties, they will not be regarded as such if qualified by other stipulations, which afford a fair inference that the parties themselves did not so intend them." Page 423, 76 Cal., and page 762, 18 Pac. Rep. By the findings it has been determined by the trial court as a fact that the assured did not intentionally misrepresent any fact to exist material to the risk which did not exist, and, as heretofore stated, we think the findings on this point are sustained by the evidence.

The appellant claims also that the policy of the 27th of December, 1886, was void as to the Johnston Brandy & Wine Manufacturing Co., because the lessees, Walden & Co., were warranted to be the tenants then, and in possession, and that when these tenants abandoned the possession of the premises, without notice given by the assured to the company, the policy became void. This statement of the existence of the lease to Walden & Co., if it stated such existence, was not a warranty in either of the policies, as we have seen, and the change of possession, if it took place without notice, did not concern the plaintiff here; for it was not to be affected by any act of this kind, unless notice was brought home to it of such change of possession, and it further failed to notify the company. The evidence is sufficient to show that the plaintiff had no knowledge of any change in the possession of the property from Walden & Co., back to the Johnston Brandy & Wine Manufacturing Co., nor that the premises were vacated or unoccupied, even conceding that such was the fact, under a proper interpretation of the language of the policies on these points. If it had no such knowledge, it was not bound to communicate it, and was protected by the indorsement on the policy. It follows, therefore, that unless the plaintiff here has lost its right by reason of something which is shown by the evidence to have transpired before the loss, by which the rights of the plaintiff under the terms of the indorsement on the policies are affected, there was no error committed in the rendition of the judgment and the refusal to grant a new trial.

In this connection the appellant contends "that the interest of a mortgagee in insured property is measured by the amount of his mortgage debt at the time of the loss, and if at such time his debt is extinguished, either wholly or in part, his interest as a mortgagee is also extinguished either entirely or pro tanto;" and that "the mortgage debt" of the plaintiff "having been pro tanto extinguished to the extent of $6,000, by reason of the foreclosure sale and the application of the proceeds to the mortgage indebtedness, the mortgage clause operated as a protection to the plaintiff only to the extent that its indebtedness remained unpaid after the sale." It is true that the plaintiff proceeded to foreclose the mortgage, and that of this intention the defendant had notice, and that the property was bought in at sheriff's sale for the plaintiff, a credit of $6,000 made upon the judgment, and a certificate of purchase issued. But when the fire occurred the deed had not been executed, and the legal title had not been passed, the time for redemption not having elapsed. It is not pretended that there was any payment of money on the judgment. The bid of the plaintiff was credited on the judgment, and a receipt given to balance the sheriff's account of the foreclosure sale. But there would never have been any actual payment of money received by the plaintiff unless it had been paid in upon the redemption of the property, or it had upon the failure of redemption received a deed. In fact, the plaintiff never got a deed until after the loss had occurred, no redemption having taken place.

In this connection the argument by the appellant is that the legal effect of the foreclosure was to pay the plaintiff's debt pro tanto, and to that extent to extinguish its interest as a mortgagee in the insured property. It has been held by the appellate court of this state that the foreclosure of a mortgage embraces the sale of the property, and the execution of the sheriff's deed, as well as the decree of the court ordering the sale. A mortgage cannot be said to be foreclosed, even in the sense of our Code, until the mortgagor's right of redemption is cut off. Goldtree v. McAllister, 86 Cal. 105, 24 Pac. Rep. 801. Tested by this rule, since the time for redemption had not elapsed, when the foreclosure took place, and loss occurred, and no deed had been made to the mortgagee, there had been no foreclosure of the mortgage. And so far as the question of payment of the mortgage debt is concerned, as bearing upon the matter of the extinguishment pro tanto of the insurable interest of the mortgagee, it was held in Bragg v. Insurance Co., 25 N. H. 298, that where, in a policy such as this, the insurance is effected on the property of one person, and the loss made payable to the mortgagee, another person, that even upon a foreclosure, where the property is sold and a deed made to the mortgagee, there is not such an alienation of the title as to forfeit the right to recover on the policy; for if the mortgagee thus acquires an additional interest in the property, it is a potential reason why he would be more interested in protecting the property insured; and such a change of title, although within the language of the proviso against change of title or sale or transfer, is not within its spirit and purpose, and will not vitiate the policy; and the instance of a case where the title becomes absolute in a mortgage by foreclosure is cited by Mr. May in his work on Insurance, to illustrate this principle. May, Ins. § 275. To much the same effect is it held in Heaton v. Insurance Co., 7 R. I. 508. Unless the right of redemption has been extinguished, there is no payment pro tanto by the mortgagor at the sale. West v. Chamberlin, 8 Pick. 338. Where no deed has passed, as we have seen, the foreclosure is incomplete, and no payment has been made. If the deed had been made when the fire occurred, and the right of redemption had been cut off, there would have been a payment made by the bid. But even then, under the authorities, it seems as if there would have been no change of title or extinguishment of interest which would have affected the policy. For these reasons we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

SAME v. MARTIN. (No. 13,166.)

APPEAL—BOND—DISMISSAL—NOTICE OF MOTION.

1. An undertaking on appeal, which incorrectly recites the date of the order from which the appeal was taken as being December 11th instead of December 8th, is sufficient if it correctly describes the appeal and order in all other respects.

2. Under Cal. Sup. Ct. Rule 13, requiring that a notice of motion to dismiss an appeal for failure to file a transcript in accordance with the rules of the court shall specify the objections to the transcript, an appeal will not be dismissed because of appellant's failure to number the folios of the transcript, as required by the rules, if the notice of motion to dismiss does not specify the objection.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Campbell & Wright, for appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. In each of these cases respondent moves to dismiss the appeal on two grounds: First, that no undertaking on appeal has been filed; second, that no transcript of the record has been filed, as required by the rules of this court, and that the time for such filing has expired. The point of the first objection is that, whereas the order appealed from was made on December 8th, and was so correctly described in the notice of appeal, the undertaking on appeal recites that an appeal has been taken from an order made December 11th. But since there was but one order and one appeal, both correctly described in the recital in the undertaking in all other respects except the date of the order, there can be no question that the sureties would be bound in case of a dismissal of the appeal or affirmance of the order, and therefore the undertaking is sufficient. Swasey v. Adair, 53 Cal. 136, 23 Pac. Rep. 284. The point of the second objection is that the folios of the transcript (which was on file when the notice to dismiss was served) are not numbered, as required by our rule. But this was an objection that should have been distinctly specified in the notice of motion to dismiss, in order to give the appellant an opportunity to amend the defect. It was not so specified in the notice, and therefore cannot be regarded. Rule 13. For our own convenience in examining the record we might still require the appellant to number the folios of the transcript on file, but, as it is extremely brief, such an order seems unnecessary. Motions denied.

SWAMP LANDS—SEGREGATION—RIGHT OF ENTRY.

The swamp lands granted to the state by Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, are not subject to application for purchase until they have been segregated to the state by a United States survey, and an application filed prior to such segregation confers no rights on the applicant, though it is subsequently approved, and a certificate of purchase issued after segregation.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge. Garber, Boalt & Bishop and Chas. G. Lamberton, for appellants. Freeman & Bates, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action to determine a contest arising in the state land-office as to the right to purchase from the state a certain section of swamp and overflowed land in Tulare county. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The court below found, among other things, that the land in controversy was not segregated by the United States to the state until October 14, 1884; that defendant Nagle's application was made on December 14, 1883, and filed in the state land-office on April 1, 1884,—all before the segregation; and that, as the land was not subject to application before segregation, no rights attached by reason of the application, nor by reason of the subsequent approval and certificate of purchase made after the segregation, but based on said application. Counsel for appellant argue very fully and ably that there is nothing to prevent the filing of an application to purchase swamp land before segregation; but the contrary was held in Garfield v. Willson, 74 Cal. 175, 15 Pac. Rep. 620, and in the recent case of Wren v. Mangan, ante, 100, (No. 13,424, decided since the present case was submitted.) Counsel attack the correctness of the conclusion stated in Garfield v. Willson; but we are satisfied with that conclusion and with its approval in Wren v. Mangan. We do not see that the question involved is at all changed by the adoption of the theory that the act of September 28, 1850, was a grant in presenti to the state of the swamp lands within her territory; for, that being so, the state has still the power to provide how they may pass into private ownership; and she has made no provision for an application to purchase before segregation. Indeed, the provisions of the Code on the subject clearly contemplate that no steps towards a purchase are to be taken, and no advantage or preference to be gained by an application, prior to such segregation. It is difficult to see how the requirements of the Code with respect to applications to purchase could ordinarily be complied with at all before the approval of the United States survey, which constitutes the segregation. For instance, section 3443, Pol. Code, which establishes the method of making an application to purchase swamp land, provides for an affidavit of the applicant in which, among other things, he must describe the land which he desires to purchase, and must swear that "he knows the land applied for, and the exterior boundaries thereof." But can an applicant swear to such knowledge—or have it—prior to the survey and segregation by the United States? In the case at bar the applicant undertook to make application for land described as a certain section 9; but how could he have known where section 9 was, or "the exterior boundaries thereof," before there had been an approved survey of even the township in which said section was supposed to lie? The lines of townships are "created" by the United States survey, and have no existence before it. Robinson v. Forrest, 29 Cal. 318; Middleton v. Low, 30 Cal. 596. Section 3445, Pol. Code, is in accord with the doctrine heretofore declared by this court. It refers to the application described in section 3443, and evidently assumes that it applies only to segregated land, and provides that where lands have been segregated by the authority of the United States, but "have not been sectionized by the same authority," an applicant to purchase said lands may have them sectionized by the county surveyor. But there is nowhere any provision for an application before segregation; and such an application is out of harmony with the clear intent of the legislature; and we are satisfied with the former decisions that the approval of the United States survey constitutes the segregation. We are also satisfied that in this case there was no such segregation of the land in contest until October 14, 1884. It is also urged strenuously by counsel for respondent that appellant's application was void because it appears, and is found by the court, that appellant had never been upon, and had never seen, the land applied for; that, therefore, his statement in his affidavit that he "knows of his own knowledge that there are no settlers hereon" is necessarily untrue; and that the things required by section 3443 must not only be in the affidavit, but must be true. But it is not necessary here to determine this somewhat important question, because, for the reasons above given, the judgment must be affirmed. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(No. 14,044.)

TOLL-ROADS—DUTY OF COMMISSIONERS TO FIX RATES.

Civil Code Cal. § 514, provides that "wagon road corporations * * * may take such tolls only * * * as are fixed by the supervisors of the proper county through which the road passes." Held, that the board of supervisors had no authority arbitrarily to refuse to fix such rates for a corporation which had been in operation over 12 years.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYERS, Judge.

Mandamus by Stony Hill Turnpike Road Company against the board of supervisors of Placer county, to compel the fixing of toll-rates. Civil Code, Cal. § 514, provides that "wagon road corporations * * * may take such tolls only * * * as are fixed by the board of supervisors of the proper county through which the road passes."

F. P. Tuttle, for appellant. Hale & Craig and J. E. Prewitt, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from an order granting a writ of mandate. The findings are in consonance with the allegations of plaintiff's petition for the writ, and, in effect, are as follows: The plaintiff was a corporation duly organized December 26, 1877, under the provisions of the laws of this state providing for the construction of toll-roads, and its period of existence was fixed in its articles of incorporation at the term of 25 years. That plaintiff, about said time, constructed a toll-road in Placer county, Cal., commonly known as the "Stony Hill Turnpike," and ever since has been, and now is, the sole and exclusive owner and in the possession thereof, using the same as a toll-road, and collecting tolls therefrom; that the board of supervisors of Placer county, from time to time, fixed its rates of toll, and the 13th day of January, 1888, was the last time said board established said rates; that plaintiff demanded of said board, on April 27, 1889, that it fix and re-establish said rates of toll, but said board refused, and still refuses, so to do; that on January 11, 1890, said board rescinded the said order of January 13, 1888, and no other order has been made since said last-mentioned date. That plaintiff has no speedy, plain, and adequate remedy at law, and that the defendants are the duly elected, qualified, and acting board of supervisors of Placer county. We are at a loss to see upon what authority or theory the appellant refused to establish the rates of toll upon plaintiff's toll-road. Plaintiff's property is worthless unless tolls can be collected, but tolls cannot be collected unless the board of supervisors fix the rates. Section 514, Civil Code. It certainly cannot be contended that the board of supervisors, as prescribed by the provisions of the Political Code, (section 2779 et seq.,) can advise, assist, and authorize a corporation to build and construct a toll-road, perchance at great expense, and then have the legal right arbitrarily to refuse to fix rates of toll, and thus practically confis-cate the corporation's property. The case of People v. Davidson, 79 Cal. 170, 21 Pac. Rep. 538, is a different character of action, and under an entirely different state of facts, and is not applicable nor authority in a case where a corporation has been organized under the provisions of our codes for the construction of toll-roads, and has in good faith, as appears by the record in this case, proceeded with the construction thereof. The case of Weaverville, etc., Road Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Trinity Co., 64 Cal. 69, is conclusive of this case, if authority were necessary, but under the facts here disclosed it was clearly the duty of the board of supervisors, upon the application of the plaintiff, to establish rates of toll for its toll-road. Let the judgment be affirmed.

v.26p.no.8—33

VOLCANO CANYON ROAD CO. v. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF PLACER COUNTY. (No. 14,033.)

TOLL-ROADS—DUTY OF COMMISSIONERS TO FIX RATES—MANDAMUS.

1. Civil Code Cal. § 514, provides that "wagon road corporations * * * may take such tolls only * * * as are fixed by the board of supervisors of the proper county through which the road passes." Held, that the board of supervisors had no authority arbitrarily to refuse to fix such rates for a corporation which had been operating a toll-road for 15 years.

2. On mandamus by a toll-road company to compel the board of county supervisors to fix its rates of toll, the board cannot raise any question as to whether plaintiff was lawfully incorporated, or whether it is the owner, and entitled to the possession, of the toll-road, when it has held possession for 15 years.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYERS, Judge.

Mandamus by Volcano Canyon Road Company against the board of supervisors of Placer county, to compel the fixing of toll rates. Civil Code Cal. § 514, provides that "wagon road corporations * * * may take such tolls only * * * as are fixed by the board of supervisors of the proper county through which the road passes."

F. P. Tuttle, for appellant. W. H. Bullock and J. E. Prewitt, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff is a corporation duly organized under the laws of this state, and for more than 15 years has been, and now is, the owner and in possession of that certain toll-road situate in Placer county, known as the "Volcano Canyon Toll-Road." During all the time of its ownership of the road up to October 14, 1889, the plaintiff collected tolls from persons passing over the same, under orders made from time to time by the board of supervisors of the county, fixing the rates of such tolls. The last order fixing the rates of tolls for the road was made on January 13, 1888, and this order was rescinded and set aside by the board on October 14, 1889. The plaintiff afterwards demanded that the board again fix the rates of toll to be by it collected for travel over its road, but the board then and there refused, and still refuses, to comply with the demand. The plaintiff then commenced this proceeding to obtain a writ of mandate compelling the defendant board to fix rates of toll for its road. After trial the court below found the facts to be as above stated, and rendered judgment granting the writ. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted on the judgment roll.

We think that the judgment entered was proper. The case is not materially different from that of Stony Hill Turnpike Road Co. v. Board of Supervisors of Placer Co., ante, 513, (just decided.) The questions attempted to be raised as to whether the plaintiff was ever lawfully incorporated, and as to whether it had ever been or was the owner, and entitled to the possession, of the toll-road, of which it had had actual possession for more than 15 years, were matters which could not be inquired into by the board of supervisors on an application to fix its rates of toll, or in a proceeding by mandamus to compel the board to fix rates. Weaverville, etc., R. Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 64 Cal. 69.

It is true that the right to collect tolls on a toll-road is a franchise, and that tolls can only be collected after the board of supervisors has fixed the rates; but a board of supervisors has no authority to arbitrarily refuse to fix rates, and thereby destroy the value of the toll-road property. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

YORE et al. v. BANKERS' & MERCHANTS' MUT. LIFE ASS'N OF UNITED STATES.
(No. 14,057.)

INSURANCE—LOCAL CONTRACTS—JURISDICTION—VENUE.

Where an application is for a policy to be payable in accordance with the terms of a future will, and, pending that, to stand in favor of the lawful heirs, and in the policy as issued and forwarded to the agent who took the application the legal heirs are to be the beneficiaries, the contract is not consummated until it is accepted by the insured, and suit can be brought thereon, under Const. Cal. § 16, only in the county where the application was made and accepted, as the place of the contract, and not in the county where the policy was issued.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; PHILLIP W. KEYSER, Judge. Mastick, Belcher & Mastick and Forbes & Dinsmore, for appellants. Haggin & Van Ness, (George C. Gorham, Jr., of counsel,) for appellee.

DE HAVEN, J. Appeal from an order changing the place of trial. The action is one to recover the amount named in a policy of insurance, issued by the defendant, a corporation, on the life of one Peter Yore, and was brought in the superior court of Yuba county. The defendant is a corporation formed and existing under the laws of the state of California, and its principal place of business is in the city and county of San Francisco. By section 16, art. 12, of the constitution of this state, plaintiffs are entitled to bring this action either in the county where the contract was made or in the county where the principal place of business of the defendant corporation is situated, and the only question for determination here is as to the place where the contract sued upon was made; the appellants claiming that it was made in the county of Yuba, while the respondent insists that it was made in the city and county of San Francisco. The motion was heard upon affidavits. It appears from the affidavits filed on behalf of respondent that the deceased, Peter Yore, made application in writing to the agent of respondent at Marysville, in Yuba county, for a life insurance policy, and said application was forwarded by said agent to San Francisco, and upon its receipt the officers of said respondent issued and caused the policy sued upon to be mailed to the agent of the company at Marysville, with instructions to deliver it to said Yore.

1. It is claimed by the respondent that upon this state of facts the contract was, in judgment of law, made in San Francisco, and this would be so, if the policy issued was in exact accordance with the terms proposed in the application. May, Ins. § 50, 66. A policy which in its terms is different from the application is not a completed contract, and, until accepted by the insured, is no more than a proposal to contract upon the terms stated in it. Insurance Co. v. Young, 23 Wall. 85; May Ins. § 50; Insurance Co. v. Carrington, 3 Conn. 357. It appears to us, from the affidavits used upon the hearing of this motion in the court below, that the policy as issued was not an unqualified acceptance of the terms embodied in the application of the deceased, Yore. The application itself is not set out, but its terms sufficiently appear from the letter forwarding it to San Francisco, which letter is made a part of one of the affidavits filed by respondent. In this letter the defendant's agent writes: "You will observe, by answer to question 6 he desires to dispose of proceeds of the policy by future will, pending which he desires to have it stand in favor of lawful heirs. I presume policy can be so written." The expression of such a "desire" in an application is to be construed as a proposal for insurance in accordance with the expressed wish of the applicant. Insurance Co. v. Carrington, 3 Conn. 363. The policy as issued is "payable to legal heirs or to order of —, county of —, state of —, if then living; otherwise to —." The substance of Yore's application, as appears from the above letter, was for a policy which should be payable to such person or persons as he might appoint by will, and, if no such appointment should be made, then to his legal heirs; but under the policy issued the legal heirs are to be the beneficiaries. The difference between such a policy and the one applied for is very apparent. Mr. Bliss, in his work on Life Insurance, in discussing the question as to who is entitled to claim the proceeds of a life insurance policy, says: "When a policy designates a person to whom the insurance money is to be paid, the person who procures the insurance, and who continues to pay the premiums, has no authority by will or deed to change the designation or title to the moneys. He is under no obligation to continue to pay the premiums, unless he has covenanted so to do; but, if he does so, the person originally designated in the policy will derive the benefit." Bliss, Ins. § 337; see, also, Id. §§ 317, 318; May, Ins. § 392; Wilburn v. Wilburn, 83 Ind. 56; Drake v. Stone, 58 Ala. 133. In the case of Harley v. Helst, 86 Ind. 204, the court say: "It is further said that to deny to the husband, who has paid the premiums, the right to dispose of the policy to his own use, after the death of the wife, imposes upon him a hardship and a wrong. A sufficient answer to this is that, if he wishes to retain to himself the control and ownership of the policy in such case, he may so provide in the policy." There are some cases, however, which seem to hold that one who procures a policy of insurance upon his life for the benefit of another, and pays the premiums thereon, may dispose of it by will or otherwise, to the exclusion of the beneficiary named in the policy. Clark v. Durand, 12 Wis. 224; Kerman v. Howard, 23 Wis. 108. And in the later case of Foster v. Gile, 50 Wis. 603, 7 N. W. Rep. 555, and 8 N. W. Rep. 217, the court say the beneficiary named may be changed with the consent of the company issuing the policy.

It makes no difference, in the decision of this case, which of these conflicting views is adopted as a correct statement of the law relating to the respective rights of the insured and the beneficiary named in a policy of life insurance. If the section above quoted from Bliss on Life Insurance states the true rule of law on the subject it is clear there was no completed contract of insurance in this case until the policy as issued by respondent was accepted by the applicant; and we think the same conclusion must be reached if it should be assumed that the contrary doctrine announced in the above-cited decisions of the supreme court of Wisconsin is the correct one. The conclusion as to the formation of the contract must be the same, because the applicant had an undoubted right to propose to make a contract in the very terms which he selected, and thus to apply, as he did, for a policy which would give him, in express terms, the power to say by his will to whom its proceeds should be paid, thus excluding all future controversy as to his right to do so; and, having asked for one so written, he was under no obligation to accept a policy which omitted such express terms of contract, and which left his right to dispose of the money to be paid thereunder, if he retained such right at all, to be simply implied by law. It is immaterial what his reasons were for making the application in the form he did, or why he desired a policy expressly reserving to himself, as a part of his contract with respondent, the right to say by his will to whom should be paid the amount for which he was insuring his life. It is enough that he thought such a provision was of sufficient importance to form a part of the express terms of the policy, and an acceptance of this term of the application, unless he consented to accept a policy in the form issued, was indispensable to the formation of a contract. "Until the terms of the agreement have received the assent of both parties the negotiation is open, and imposes no obligation on either." Eliason v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. 225. "An acceptance, to be good, must of course be such as to conclude an agreement or contract between the parties. And to do this it must in every respect meet and correspond with the offer; neither falling within, nor going beyond the terms proposed, but exactly meeting them at all points, and closing with them just as they are stated." Potts v. Whitehead, 20 N. J. Eq. 55. It follows that there was no binding contract in this case until Yore assented to the terms given in the policy by accepting the same; and, as this act of acceptance occurred in Yuba county, the contract must be considered as having been made there. May, Ins. § 66.

2. The letter of defendant's agent, transmitting the policy, saying: "Mr. Yore can dispose of the insurance in his will proportionately as he chooses," cannot be deemed any part of the contract itself, and was not intended as anything more than an expression of the writer's opinion of Yore's legal right to do so. Order reversed.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of Buchanan v. Nagle, ante, 512, (No. 13,705,) and Fulton v. Brannan ante, 506, (No. 13,603,) the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CAVANAUGH V. CASSELMAN. (No. 13,958.)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS—MEMORANDUM—CONTRACT.

1. A written memorandum of a contract, whereby defendant agrees to sell plaintiff certain real and personal property, which names the parties and price, and gives a complete description of the property, and is signed by the defendant, who is the party to be charged, is not insufficient because it is not also signed by the plaintiff.

2. Nor will the fact that the instrument is expressed on its face to be inter partes, and yet is only signed by the party to be charged, render it insufficient as being merely an inchoate agreement, incapable of enforcement, in the absence of any showing that it was to be signed by the other party before it became operative.

3. Where in execution of such a contract a deed to a portion only of the land described is tendered, and it is accepted under protest and as a part performance only, it cannot be contended that the contract is merged in the deed, since the obligation cannot be satisfied by the conveyance of a part of the land.

4. Evidence of witnesses pointing out to the court and defining the property in controversy, which was imperfectly described in the contract, was properly admitted to enable the court to determine whether defendant's conveyance and bill of sale were a full compliance with his agreement.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages from the defendant for the non-fulfilment of the following contract: "This indenture, made and entered into this 16th day of May, 1888, by and between Ezra Casselman, of the county of Sacramento, party of the first part, and W. B. Cavanaugh, of the city of Saramento, party of the second part, witnesseth: The party of the first part hereby agrees to sell to the party of the second part, and the party of the second part hereby agrees to buy from the party of the first part, the following described premises belonging to the party of the first part, to-wit. [Description of land and certain personal property.] The price to be paid hereunder is $24,000, of which $1,000 have already been paid at the signing of this agreement, $8,000 shall be paid on the 15th day of October, 1888, and the balance of $15,000 shall be paid on that date by the execution unto the party of the first part by the party of the second part of a mortgage upon said premises, payable five years from that date. * * * Upon the payment on said 15th day of October, 1888, of said sum of $8,000, and the execution of the mortgage herein provided for, the party of the first part will make, execute, and deliver unto the party of the second part a good and sufficient deed of all said real estate and improvements, conveying the same to the party of the second part free and clear from all incumbrances, and will also make, execute, and deliver unto the party of the second part a good and sufficient bill of sale of all the personal property hereinbefore referred to. This agreement is binding upon the heirs, administrators, and assigns of the parties hereto. In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands this 16th day of May, 1888. EZRA CASSELMAN. ANNIE CASSELMAN." The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and in its decision the court finds that the parties entered into the contract on the 16th day of May, 1888, and that the plaintiff at that time paid to the defendant $1,000 in pursuance thereof, and that on the 15th day of October, 1888, he paid to the defendant the further sum of $8,000, and executed to him the mortgage for $15,000 provided for in the contract, and that on that day the defendant made to the plaintiff a deed for a part of the land described in said agreement, which expressly excluded from its operation a portion that was included within the boundaries and description given in the contract, and also that the defendant did not deliver to the plaintiff all of the personal property specified in the contract. The court found that the value of the omitted land and of the personal property not delivered to the plaintiff was $625, and gave judgment for that amount in favor of the plaintiff. The court further found: "That on said 15th day of October, 1880, when plaintiff and defendant met to carry out said executory contract of May 16th, the defendant tendered to plaintiff the deed mentioned in finding 2, and also a bill of sale purporting to be in accordance with the terms of said contract; but the plaintiff then discovered that said deed did not include all the land described in said contract, but expressly excluded the said Garvey tract. * * * That plaintiff then refused to accept said deed and bill of sale, or either of them, in execution of said contract, because they did not convey the property last above described, and plaintiff then tendered to defendant to be executed by defendant a deed and bill of sale prepared by plaintiff, which conformed to the terms of said contract, and offered on his part to perform fully said agreement; but the defendant refused to execute said last-mentioned deed and bill of sale, or either of them, and refused to give plaintiff any deed or bill of sale other than those he [defendant] had tendered as above stated. That plaintiff had arranged to lease the premises so contracted for to third parties from said 15th day of October, and desired to get possession thereof without delay; and he finally informed defendant that he would accept said deed and bill of sale tendered by defendant, under protest, and only in part satisfaction of said contract, to the extent to which they complied therewith, and should at once sue defendant for damages for his failure to comply with said contract in the particulars above set forth; and the defendant then delivered the said deed and bill of sale to the plaintiff with a full understanding that they were not accepted as a full performance of said contract, but that plaintiff reserved the right to sue defendant for said breach. That plaintiff did so accept said deed and bill of sale in part satisfaction as aforesaid, and thereafter, on the 17th day of said October, he commenced this action." At the trial the plaintiff offered in evidence the contract of May 16, 1888, to which the defendant objected, upon the ground "that it showed upon its face that it had never been executed by the plaintiff, and that therefore it never was a perfect agreement, but was only an attempted agreement which was never consummated;" and also upon the further ground "that if it ever was an agreement, it had become merged in a subsequent agreement in the nature of a deed and of a bill of sale, and that it had been entirely superseded by such deed and bill of sale." The court overruled the objections, and allowed the instrument to be read in evidence. When the plaintiff rested the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon substantially the same grounds, which was denied. The ruling of the court with reference to this contract is presented by the appellant as the principal ground for a reversal of the judgment.

1. It was not necessary that the plaintiff should himself sign the agreement of May 16, 1888, in order to enable him to enforce it against the defendant. The statute of frauds requires the contract, or some note or memorandum thereof, to be in writing, but it need be subscribed only by the party to be charged. Reed, St. Frauds, § 359. This principle was established in this state in the case of Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458. See, also, Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 246; Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493. The "writing" in question is sufficient to satisfy the statute. It sufficiently names the parties and the price, and gives a complete description of the property. It is also subscribed by the defendant, who is the party to be charged.

2. It is also claimed by the appellant that, inasmuch as the instrument in question purports in terms to be executed by the plaintiff, it is until such execution only an inchoate agreement, and not capable of enforcement by either party. It is competent for parties to insert such conditions in their contracts as they desire, and to make contracts that shall be operative only upon the happening of some event, but when the terms of the instrument are in themselves clear, it is necessary that the conditions upon which only it is claimed that the instrument is to have effect should be equally clear. It is not the rule that a contract which on its face purports to be inter partes must invariably be executed by all whose names appear in the instrument before it shall be binding upon any. One reason why it is held in many of the cases that an agreement which is not to be operative upon one until it has been signed by another is that such signing is the consideration upon which the first signer agrees to be bound; but when a sufficient consideration for the agreement on the part of the first signer is shown to authorize its enforcement, he cannot be released therefrom unless he shall show clearly that there were other considerations for his signing the agreement than those named in the instrument. Bishop, in his treatise on Contracts, § 348, says: "If by parol stipulation, or, a fortiori, if by the writing itself, the contract was not to be deemed complete until other signatures should be added, it without such addition will not bind those who have signed it; but if nothing of this appears, the parties signing will be holden, though even on the face of it the signatures of others were contemplated by the draughtsman." See, also, in support of this principle, Parker v. Bradley, 2 Hill. 584; Scott v. Whipple, 5 Greenl. 336; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231; Low Angeles v. Mellus, 59 Cal. 444; People v. Stacy, 74 Cal. 373, 16 Pac. Rep. 192. In Chouteau v. Suydam, 21 N. Y. 181, it is said: "It is very well settled that where a bond, a deed, or other written instrument is executed by a portion only of those who appear in the body of the instrument as parties, the question whether those who have executed it are bound depends upon the circumstances under which the instrument was delivered. Those circumstances are open to proof by parol, and if it appears that at the time of the delivery by any party whose signature is affixed anything was said indicating that such party did not intend to be bound unless other parties also signed, the delivery will be considered as not absolute, but in escrow merely; * * * but it rests upon the party who has signed and delivered the instrument to establish that the delivery was intended to be in escrow."

In the present case no attempt was made on the part of the defendant to show that at the time the instrument was delivered by him to the plaintiff there was any agreement or understanding on his part that it was to be signed by the plaintiff before it became operative. It is true that in his answer he alleges that he would not have signed the agreement with the plaintiff unless the plaintiff also signed the same, and that such was the understanding and agreement between them at the time it was signed; but at the trial there was no testimony offered in support of this averment, and the court does not find that any such statement or agreement was made, the finding being that the plaintiff and defendant did enter into the contract on the 16th day of May, 1888, and "that plaintiff inadvertently omitted to sign said contract, but that he always considered himself and intended to be bound thereby." The agreement was prepared by the direction and in the presence of both parties on the 16th of May, 1888. It was at that time signed by the defendant, who received from the plaintiff the sum of $1,000 as part consideration for its execution, and who then delivered it to the plaintiff. The plaintiff accepted the same from the defendant, and caused it to be recorded in the office of the county recorder. These acts made a contract binding upon both parties, even without the signature of the plaintiff. Necessarily the oral negotiations between the parties preceded the formulation of their agreement into the written instrument. When the terms of their agreement were reduced to writing, the contract became definite, and, in the absence of the statute of frauds, became binding upon both parties. Dutch v. Mead, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 427. The signature of the vendor was all that was required to satisfy the statute of frauds. The delivery of this instrument, and its acceptance by the vendee, made the contract binding upon him also. The execution of the agreement by the vendor, and its delivery to the vendee, created an obligation upon the vendor which was a consideration sufficient to make the verbal agreement on the part of the vendee to pay the purchase price of the land binding upon him also. Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 464; Reed, St. Frauds, § 391; McDonald v. Huff, 77 Cal. 279, 19 Pac. Rep. 490; Lowber v. Connit, 36 Wis. 183; Manufacturing Co. v. Morse, 48 Vt. 322; Reuss v. Picksley, L. R. 1 Exch. 352; Grove v. Hodges, 55 Pa. St. 504. In Grove v. Hodges the agreement, as executed, was binding upon the vendor only. It was delivered to and accepted by the vendee, and its validity was assailed upon the ground that it was not executed by the vendor. The court, however, held it valid, saying: "If Irwin accepted the grant, he accepted it with its expressed conditions, and the contract became binding upon him to precisely the same extent as it would have been binding if he had personally signed and sealed the instrument. The mode of enforcing his obligations is different, but the duty is the same. It is assuredly plain law that if a party who has not put his name to a written contract accepts it when signed by the other party, it binds him the same as if he had signed it. The legal principle that contracts must be mutual, that they must bind both parties or neither, does not mean that in every case each party must have the same remedy for a breach by the other. Covenant may lie against one when only assumpsit can be maintained against the other. Nor does the principle mean that when a contract is written each party must sign it. The engagement of one may be in writing, and that of the other rest in parole even when the contract is wholly executory."

3. The contention of the defendant that the contract was merged in the deed is also untenable. The plaintiff by the execution of the contract of May 16th had a valid obligation against the defendant for the conveyance of a tract of land. That obligation could not be satisfied by the conveyance of a part of the tract any more than would the payment of a money obligation be satisfied by the payment of a part thereof. Whether the conveyance of a part was made with or without controversy between the parties is immaterial. Unless it was accepted in satisfaction of the agreement, the unexecuted part of the original agreement remained in full force. An agreement for the conveyance of 100 acres of land, except by an agreement between the parties, cannot be satisfied by a conveyance of 50 acres. Civil Code, §§ 1477, 1524.

4. There was no error in admitting in evidence the testimony of the witnesses objected to. Their testimony was for the purpose of pointing out to the court and defining the property which was the subject of negotiation between the parties, and which was imperfectly described in the contract, in order that the court might determine whether the defendant, by the conveyance and bill of sale which he had executed, had fully complied with his agreement. Code Civil Proc. § 1860. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

DUNSMOOR v. FURSTENFELDT et al. (No. 13,917.)

GARNISHMENT—MONEY IN CUSTODY OF THE COURT.

Though money belonging to an estate in bankruptcy, in the hands of the clerk of the court as a master in chancery, to be held pending the settlement of the respective rights of the creditors by litigation, is in the custody of the court, and cannot be reached by garnishment, yet where an order of distribution has been made, the rights of the respective creditors become in effect a debt due to each of them by the clerk, and a creditor of one of the creditors may levy upon it by garnishment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. TOWNER, Judge.

Wilson & Bulla and George A. Rankin, for appellant. V. Montgomery and F. O. Daniel, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. The plaintiff (clerk of the superior court) brought this action to compel the defendants, Furstenfeldt and Geinger, to interplead as to their respective adverse claims to be paid a sum of money in the possession and custody of the plaintiff, which he was willing and ready to pay to the one to whom the court should determine it was due. The court adjudged that Furstenfeldt was entitled to the money, and Geinger brings this appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll, and contends that, upon the facts found, the judgment should have been in his favor. The material facts found are substantially as follows: (1) In January, 1888, Peter Eschelbach made an assignment of his property to one Lewis, for the benefit of his creditors. (2) Thereafter, Sichler, one of the creditors of the insolvent, brought an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against Lewis, the assignee, to compel him to account to the creditors. (3) In this action against the assignee he was ordered by the court (April 11, 1889) to deposit with the clerk thereof, Dunsmoor, (plaintiff herein,) about $3,000, to be held pending the litigation as to the proper distribution thereof among the creditors; and thereupon the said sum was so deposited by the assignee. (4) On the same day (April 11, 1889) the court ordered a distribution of said sum among the creditors, one of whom was Antone Miller, to whom the court ordered the clerk (plaintiff herein) to pay from said money the sum of $305.32. (5) On July 3, 1889, Miller assigned all his right and title to the last-mentioned sum, then in the custody of the clerk, to the defendant Furstenfeldt, who, on the following 9th day of July, demanded it of the clerk, but the clerk then refused, and ever since has refused, to pay the same to Furstenfeldt. (6) On the 6th day of April, 1889, the defendant Geinger obtained a judgment in the superior court of San Francisco against Antone Miller for the sum of $1,319, upon which execution was issued to the sheriff of Los Angeles county on June 18, 1889, and was duly served by copy and garnishment upon Dunsmoor, the plaintiff, and upon Lewis, the assignee of the insolvent, on June 20, 1889. (7) Dunsmoor, on June 21, 1889, answered to the garnishment notice that he held, subject to the order of the court, $305.32, which had been distributed, by order of the court, in the case of Sichler v. Lewis, to Antone Miller, as above stated. (8) On July 1, 1889, defendant Geinger demanded of Dunsmoor said sum of $305.32, which the latter refused to pay, and which he still holds in his custody, subject to the judgment of the court in this action, as alleged in his complaint herein. (9) Thereafter the defendant Furstenfeldt petitioned the superior court of Los Angeles county for an order commanding Duns-moor to pay to him said sum of $305.32, on the ground that it had been assigned to him by Antone Miller, to whom it had been ordered to be paid in the case of Sichler v. Lewis, Assignee; but the court, after "due hearing," denied his petition "upon the ground that said court had no further control or jurisdiction over said sum of money by reason of the order of distribution previously made by said court." Whether Geinger had notice of this petition is not stated; nor does it appear that he participated in the hearing. It will be seen that the garnishment by virtue of Geinger's execution was 13 days prior to the assignment by Miller to Furstenfeldt, and, therefore, if the money ($305.32) in the hands of Duns-moor, or a debt from Duns-moor to Miller for the same sum of money growing out of the transactions, was subject to the garnish-ment, the judgment should have been in favor of the appellant; otherwise, the judgment in favor of Furstenfeldt should be affirmed. Section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "all persons having in their possession or under their control any credits or other personal property belonging to the defendant, or owing any debts to the defendant, at the time of service upon them of a copy of the writ and notice, as provided in the last two sections, shall be * * * liable to the plaintiff for the amount of such credits, property, or debts, until the attach-ment be discharged, or any judgment re-covered by him be satisfied." Respondent contends (1) that no part of the money in the possession of Duns-moor belonged to the defendant Miller; (2) that the money, of which Duns-moor acquired the posses-sion by the order of the court, was, at the time of the service of the writ, in the cus-tody of the law, and therefore not subject to garnishment; and (3) that Duns-moor owed no debt to Miller.

1. We think it must be conceded that the $8,000, while in the custody of Duns-moor, did not belong to the creditors of the insolvent. Lewis, the assignee of the insolvent, held it in trust for those credit-ors, to be distributed among them ratably in payment of their several demands against the insolvent. In his hands, no one of the creditors could have lawfully claimed any part of the money as his in-dividual personal property; nor could all the creditors jointly have so claimed all the money, as it was not a special deposit by or for them. Wade, Attachm. §§ 329, 407. The transfer of the money from the assignee to Duns-moor in obedience to the order of the court gave the creditors no more title to it than they had before.

2. Whether the money was ordered to be delivered to Duns-moor in his official capacity as clerk of the court, or as a receiver or master in chancery, he held it for the same purposes (though not by the same title) for which it had been held by the assignee, and for no other purpose. For such purposes, and until they were accom-plished, no doubt the money was in the custody of the law, in the ordinary sense of the term; but, so far as the court was concerned, such purposes were fully ac-complished by the final decree in the case of Sichler v. Lewis, Assignee, determin-ing the share of the money to which each creditor was entitled, and ordering Duns-moor (as clerk or receiver) to pay to each creditor a specific certain sum from the fund. That was the end of the judicial proceedings in the case of Sichler v. Lew-is. The execution of the decree by paying the money to the creditors was all that remained to be done. The only reason assigned by the authorities for the rule prohibiting the attachment of property in the custody of the law is that such at-tachment would generally delay and em-barrass judicial and other official proceed-ings in the administration of such prop-erty; and that this is a sufficient reason for the rule, as applied to all judicial proceed-ings in regard to such property, is gener-ally admitted; and to this extent the weight of authority admits no exception to the rule. But, according to a great pre-ponderance of the modern cases, there are some exceptions to the rule as applied to property in the custody of purely execu-tive officers, based upon the maxim that the rule should not be applied "when the reason of the rule ceases." Civil Code, §§ 3509, 3510. After speaking of the rule and the exceptions thereto in Maryland, Mr. Wade, in his work on Attachment, (section 424,) says: "It is elsewhere held, and, as it appears, with considerable unanim-ity, that when defendant has a right to a certain distributive share of the fund in the hands of a receiver, master in chan-cery, or trustee of court, the officer may be effectually garnished by a creditor of the party so entitled, after the court has ordered it to be paid. * * * The au-thorities seem to concur in holding receiv-ers and similar officers liable to garnish-ment when they have in their hands a de-finite sum to which the defendant or judg-ment debtor is clearly entitled, and the officer has nothing more to do with the fund than to pay it over. Some of them may go beyond, but none, so far as they have been examined, fall short of, this conclusion." See, also, Freem. Ex'ns, § 129; Gaither v. Ballew, 69 Amer. Dec. 764. In speaking of assignees in bankruptcy and insolvency, and after admitting that the property in their hands is not subject to garnishment before an order of distri-bution, the same author (section 423) says: "It is another matter when, in the course of the administration of his duties, the assignee has in his hands a sum due one of the creditors, and a creditor of such creditor seeks to charge him as garnishee in respect thereto. In such case the ex-emption could be maintained, if at all, only on the ground of the official capacity in which the money of the defendant was held. It is no longer the property of the assignee. In case of his refusal to pay it over to the party entitled thereto, the lat-ter could maintain an action for it. It is not apparent how, in such case, the as-signee would occupy ground more favora-ble to his exemption than would a sheriff in possession of a surplus due an execution defendant." As to sheriffs, see section 421, same author. In cases of garnishment of executors and administrators in respect to the property of legatees and heirs the exception to the rule of exemption applies after an order of distribution of the property has been made whereby the share or portion of the defendant in attachment is rendered definite and certain. Wade, Attachm. §§ 425, 426; Freem. Ex'ns, § 131; Estate of Nerac, 35 Cal. 392. I think the case at bar comes fairly within the exception to the rule that property in the custody of the law is not subject to garnishment.

3. Having conceded that no part of the money in the hands of Dunsmoor—that is, no particular coins or bank-bills—could be said to be the personal property of Miller, a delivery of which to himself he was entitled to demand of Dunsmoor, it remains to answer the objection that "Dunsmoor owed no debt to Miller." If, as contended and conceded, no particular money in Dunsmoor's hands belonged to Miller, and Dunsmoor might have paid Miller the sum ordered by the court to be paid him in any lawful money, it would seem to follow that Dunsmoor owed Miller $305.32; and, surely, what Dunsmoor owed Miller was a debt, (Rodman v. Munson, 13 Barb. 197,) the payment of which Miller could have enforced. Indeed, it was a debt in the strict legal sense,—a judgment,—a debt of record. Burrill, Law Dict. For a full exposition of the word "debt," as used in law, and particularly in statutes, see Insurance Co. v. Meeker, 37 N. J. Law. 300, and authorities there cited. Any kind of obligation of one man to pay money to another is a debt. "A debt signifies what one owes. There is always some obligation that it shall be paid; but the manner in which * * * it is to be paid, or the means of coercing payment, do not enter into the definition." Rodman v. Munson, 13 Barb. 197. Perhaps Miller might have coerced payment by motion in the same court that ordered the payment. If not, he certainly could have recovered the debt by action upon the judgment rendered in the case of Sichler v. Lewis. I think the judgment should be reversed, and that the lower court should be directed to render judgment on the findings of fact in favor of appellant.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; TEMPLE, C.

RUGGLES et al. v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CITY OF WOODLAND. (No. 14,396.)

OFFICERS OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—TENURE OF OFFICE—MANDAMUS.

1. By general Municipal Incorporation Act Cal. March 13, 1883, § 4, it is provided that officers chosen at a special election to be held within two weeks after the vote in favor of re-organization shall hold their respective offices only until the next general municipal elections. By section 752, it is provided that all elective officers of cities of the fifth class shall be chosen at a general municipal election to be held therein in each odd-numbered year; the marshal, assessor, etc., to hold office for two years, and the trustees for four years; but there is a further proviso that the first board of trustees elected under the provision of this act shall so classify themselves by lot that three of their number shall go out of office at the expiration of two years, and two at the expiration of four years. Held, the elective officers, except members of the board of trustees, are to hold office for two years, and they for four years, and that an election must be held every two years.

2. A mandamus will lie to compel the board of trustees to provide for such election.

A. C. Ruggles and J. H. Magoffay, for petitioner. Charles W. Thomas, City Atty., for respondent.

BRATTY, C. J. Mandamus to compel the respondents to call and provide for the holding of an election of city officers. Prior to May 6, 1890, the city of Woodland, in Yolo county, was a municipal corporation under a special charter. On that date a proposition to reorganise as a city of the fifth class, under the general incorporation act, approved March 13, 1883, was duly submitted to the electors of said city, and approved by a majority vote. Thereafter, on June 16, 1890, at a special election held in obedience to the provisions of section 4 of said act, the respondents, and other city officers enumerated in section 751,—i. e., the officers of a city of the fifth class,—were duly elected, and have ever since been acting as such. The petitioners, who are citizens, tax-payers, and electors of said city, have demanded that the respondents call a general city election, to be held on the second Monday of April, 1891, for the choice of successors to themselves, and the other officers enumerated in section 751; but the respondents, on March 9, 1891, by formal resolution entered upon their minutes refused to call such election, whereupon this proceeding was commenced. It is proper to say that this refusal of the respondents to call an election for the choice of their successors does not appear to have been inspired by any wish to prolong their own tenure of office beyond the term fixed by law, but only by the desire to secure an authoritative construction of two apparently conflicting provisions of the statute, in order that the city may proceed regularly and lawfully under its new charter. By section 4 of the act referred to it is provided that the officers chosen at the special election to be held within two weeks after the vote in favor of re-organization is declared, shall hold their respective offices "only until the next general municipal election to be held in such city and county, city, or town, and until their successors are elected and qualified." By section 752 of said act it is provided that all the elective officers of cities of the fifth class shall be chosen at a general municipal election to be held therein on the second Monday in April in each odd-numbered year. The marshal, assessor, etc., are to hold their offices for two years from and after the Monday following the day of their election, and the members of the board of trustees are to hold for four years from and after the same date, and until their successors are elected and qualified. So far all the provisions of the statutes are perfectly consistent, and unqualifiedly support the contention of petitioners that an election must be held on the second Monday of April of this year. But section 752 contains a proviso that the first board of trustees "elected under the provisions of this act shall at their first meeting so classify themselves by lot as that three of their number shall go out of office at the expiration of two years, and two at the expiration of four years." It cannot be denied that the respondents are embraced by the terms of this proviso, for unquestionably they are the first board of trustees elected under the provisions of this act. But, if the proviso is construed literally, it is directly in conflict with the provision of section 4, that the trustees elected at the first (the special) election are to hold only till the next general municipal election, and until their successors are elected and qualified. To reconcile this conflict, and to render the various provisions of the act sensible and coherent, it is necessary in place of the words "this act," in the proviso, to read "this section," or "this chapter;" and this accords with the evident intention of the legislature, which was that all the elective officers of the city should be chosen at the same time, and enter upon their respective offices at the same time. As to all other officers, except members of the boards of trustees, education, etc., there is no doubt that they must be elected on the second Monday of April of the odd-numbered years, and hold their respective offices for two years from the following Monday. We think it clear that the trustees (except those drawing the short term after the first general election, and those elected provisionally at the special election) are to hold four years from the same date. From these views it follows that a peremptory writ should issue as prayed.

SMITH et al. v. OLMSTEAD et al. (No. 13, 125.)

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION — CHILDREN OMITTED FROM WILLS — RIGHTS.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 1306, providing that, where any testator omits to make provision for any of his children, and the will does not show that such omission was intentional, such child succeeds to such portion of the estate as he would have received if the testator had died intestate, the estate descends to him at once, and he becomes vested with such interest, subject only to a sale for the payment of debts; and where a will gives to the testator's wife all his property, with absolute power to sell any and all of it without application to or approval by the court, but omits to make provision for a child, a sale under such power will not convey a valid title, as against the right of the child.

On rehearing.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an action for the purpose of determining conflicting claims to real property. The record shows that one Z. B. Smith, now deceased, in his lifetime made his last will, by which, after directing the payment of his debts, he in terms gave to his wife all of his property, with "absolute power to sell any or all of said real and personal property, at public or private sale, with or without advertisement, and without application to any court, and without approval or authority of any court whatever." In a subsequent clause the wife was also named as executrix of the will. She duly qualified as such, and sold to the defendants the property described in the complaint. Such sale was made without any previous order therefor, but was afterwards confirmed by the court in which the administration of her deceased husband's estate was pending. The land was community property. The record does not show that the sale was necessary for any of the reasons stated in section 1536 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that is, in order "to pay the allowance of the family, or of the debts outstanding against the decedent, or the debts, expenses, or charges of administration, or legacies." The plaintiffs are minor children of the said Z. B. Smith, deceased, and are not provided for in said will; nor does the will show that the omission to provide for them was intentional. There has never been any distribution of this property, and the administration of the estate of said Smith is still pending. The judgment of the court below was in favor of plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal. This judgment was affirmed by Department 1 of this court, on January 25, 1890, (22 Pac. Rep. 1143,) but a rehearing was granted, and the case is now before the court in bank for determination.

The question for decision is whether, upon the facts as here stated, the power of sale contained in the will is so far operative against the plaintiffs that a sale made under it, and confirmed by the court, transferred to the defendants the title to the land in controversy. To determine this, a brief reference to the plain language of the law, relating to wills, and the right to succession of property of a decedent in the absence of a will disposing of it, is necessary. By section 1307 of the Civil Code it is provided that where a testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children, unless it appears that such omission was intentional, such child "must have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate, and succeeds thereto, as provided in the preceding section." That is, "the child succeeds to the same portion of the testator's real and personal property that he would have succeeded to if the testator had died intestate." Civil Code, § 1306.

We are unable to construe these sections otherwise than as declaring that the pretermitted child succeeds immediately, by operation of law, to the same portion of the testator's real property as if no will had been made; that as to such portion the testator is to be regarded as dying intestate, and its succession is directed by law, and not by the will. And, as a necessary legal consequence of this construction, it would follow that very provision in the will, directly or indirectly attempting to dispose of such portion of the estate, except for the discharge of the decedent's debts, or other charges accruing in due course of administration, is inoperative as against such child. As to the rights of a pretermitted child, under these sections, this court has heretofore held: "In other words, the child succeeds to the same portion of the testator's real and personal property that he would have succeeded to if the testator had died intestate." Estate of Wardell, 57 Cal. 489. Sections 16 and 17 of the act concerning wills, (Hit. Gen. Laws, p. 1086,) and section 1 of the statute of descents and distributions, (Id. p. 323,) are substantially the same as the provisions of our Civil Code relating to the same subjects; and this court, in Pearson v. Pearson, 46 Cal. 609, basing its decision on these statutes, held, explicitly, that the pretermitted child takes the same share in the estate, and holds by the same title, as though the testator had died intestate.

Now, in the case of a person dying intestate, his estate descends and vests immediately in his heirs, subject only to the payment of the debts of decedent, the expenses of administration, and the family allowance. This is not only clear from sections 1388, 1384, 1386, and 1402 of the Civil Code, but was so expressly held by this court in Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 188, under statutes substantially the same, the court saying: "Upon the death of the ancestor, the heir becomes vested at once with the full property, subject to the liens we have mentioned; and, subject to these liens and the temporary right of possession of the administrator, he may at once sell and dispose of the property, and has the same right to judge for himself of the relative advantages of selling or holding that any other owner has." The respondents in this case were, immediately upon the death of their father, clothed by operation of law with such a title to the property in controversy, and, this being its nature and extent, it is clear that such title was not divested by the sale made by the executrix of their father's will, under the circumstances disclosed by the record in this case. A title to property, which is so full and complete that its possessor has "the same right to judge for himself of the relative advantages of selling or holding that any other owner has," cannot co-exist with the right of another to transfer such property at discretion, and the power exercised by the executrix in this case being inconsistent with the title which the law vested in the respondents upon the death of the father, cannot be upheld. These views are in harmony with the decisions of other states where statutes relating to wills and right of succession are similar to our own. See Northrop v. Marquam, 16 Or. 173, 18 Pac. Rep. 449; Smith v. Robertson, 89 N. Y. 558. But it is urged by appellant that these cases are not in point, because in neither of the states in which the decisions were made was there a statute similar to section 1561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that when "authority is given in the will to sell property, the executor may sell any property of the estate without order of the court, and at either public or private sale, and with or without notice, as the executor may determine," but that "no title passes unless the sale be confirmed by the court." And it is claimed that the sale here, having been confirmed by the court, is valid under that section. But we think it is manifest that in determining the question whether, in judgment of law, authority to sell has in fact been given to an executor, the section can have no application. It is equally clear that the authority to sell therein referred to must be held to include only such a one as is operative and binding upon the person against whom it is asserted; and unless such an authority can be found in the will, when such will is read and construed with reference to the law which determines its meaning and legal effect, it must be held that it does not exist; and in that case there is nothing upon which this section of the Code can act. The case of Coates v. Hughes, 3 Bl. 498, cited and relied on by appellants, is not in conflict with the views we have announced. The power under consideration there was confined to a sale for the payment of the debts of the testator, and it appeared that there was a necessity for the sale for such purpose, and the court held, and we think rightly, that such a power was operative. The reason why, in such a case, the power of sale would be operative, is apparent. The child who succeeds to the estate of his ancestor, by inheritance, takes it subject to the payment of the debts of such ancestor, and his right of succession is in no wise affected by a provision in a will which goes no further than to authorize what the law would in any event direct to be done, if necessary to discharge such lien. In such a case the executor is only clothed with the ordinary powers incident to the administration of the estate; in fact, the precise power which the law gives an administrator of the estate of an intestate. The order of confirmation imparted no validity to the sale in this case; it only adjudicates that the power contained in the will had been followed, and that the sale was for a fair price. We are satisfied with the conclusion reached in department 1. Judgment affirmed.

WE CONCUR: GAROUTTE, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

HARRISON, J. I concur in the order affirming the judgment, both for the reasons expressed in the opinion of Mr. Justice DE HAVEN, and also upon the following considerations: Section 1402 of the Civil Code provides that "upon the death of the husband one-half of the community property goes to the surviving wife, and the other half * * * goes to his descendants, * * * subject to his debts, the family allowance, and expenses of administration." These are the "purposes of administration" referred to in section 1384, Civil Code, and are also the objects for which the court is authorized under section 1536, Code Civil Proc., to direct a sale of the property of the decedent. The right of the children and the right of the surviving wife to the community property exist by virtue of the same section of the Code, and are declared in identical words, and, inasmuch as it is the settled rule that the right of the surviving wife to her half of the community property vests in her immediately upon the death of the husband, (Estate of Silvey, 42 Cal. 210,) it must also be held that the right of the children to their half of the same property vests in them at the same time. In King v. Lagrange, 50 Cal. 323, it was held that a power of sale in the will did not authorize a conveyance by the executor of the wife's share of the community property, and that a conveyance by the executor, under such power, of the real estate of the deceased, did not have the effect to transfer the interest of the wife as the survivor of the community. It is true that the conveyance in that case was only of the "right, title, and interest" of the decedent in the property, but the decision in the case does not turn upon this distinction, and in reality such a distinction does not exist. At the date of the conveyance, the testator, being dead, had, of course, no "right, title, or interest" in the property; and the conveyance by the executor under the power contained in the will, being like a conveyance under any other power of attorney, (Larco v. Casaneuva, 30 Cal. 561,) would necessarily be limited to such right, title, and interest as existed in his constituent at the date of his death, the point of time when the authority of the executor came into existence. If a conveyance under a power of sale given in the will is inoperative to transfer the interest of the wife, it must be equally inoperative to transfer the interest of the children. In accordance with the principles established by the decision in King v. Lagrange, it is the usual, if not the invariable, custom of conveyancers in this state, when community property of a decedent is sold by the executor under a power given by the will, to require a release or conveyance of the same property from the surviving wife. This rule or custom was followed in the present case, since it appears from the record that the purchaser took a deed of the land in question from the surviving wife individually as well as in her representative capacity.

WATER-RIGHTS—APPROPRIATION—PLEADING—FINDINGS—RES JUDICATA.

1. In an action by the appropriator of the waters of a river to enjoin riparian proprietors from interfering with its rights, evidence as to the width and depth of the appropriator's ditch is insufficient to show its carrying capacity, in the absence of any evidence as to the velocity of the water or the grade of the ditch.

2. Where the complaint states that the water was appropriated "in pursuance of notice duly given and made," a finding that the appropriator is entitled to water in 12 times the amount claimed in the notice cannot be sustained, as it is in conflict with and in excess of the allegations of the complaint.

3. A finding that the appropriator for five years, during the low-water season, diverted a stated quantity of water peaceably, openly, notoriously, continuously, and adversely to the riparian proprietors and their grantors, is not supported by evidence which shows that for the first two years the appropriator's ditch drew no water during the low-water period, and that for the succeeding years, by wrongfully entering on the riparian owners' land, without their knowledge, and diverting the water therefrom, the appropriator succeeded in shortening the time in which its ditch ran dry to four months in each year.

4. Repeated and long-continued incursions on the riparian owners' land by the appropriator, for the purpose of diverting the water into the latter's ditch, give it no prescriptive rights, where the riparian owners restored the water to its natural channel as often as they discovered the diversion.

5. At a point above the appropriator's ditch a slough connects with and receives the waters of the river in question, carrying them over the riparian owners' land. To prevent this the appropriator constructed a dam at the head of the slough, and deepened the river bed, cutting off the water from the riparian owners' land. Held, that a judgment obtained by the riparian owners, preventing the maintenance of the dam at the head of the slough, and restraining the appropriator from interfering with or preventing the free flow of the water "into or down the channel" of the slough, was a determination that the appropriator had no right to interfere with the natural flow of the water, not only at the head of the slough, but through its entire channel, and that this question could not again be litigated in a subsequent action by the appropriator against the riparian owners for diverting the water of the river through the slough.

6. The fact that the riparian owners made no objection to the use of the water by the appropriator during seasons of abundance, when it naturally flowed down the river, gives the appropriator no prescriptive right to change the course of the flow in seasons of scarcity for the purpose of continuing the supply.

7. Where a director of the corporation which appropriated the water has testified, on his direct examination, that the corporation had used the water without interruption, it is error to exclude a question asked on cross-examination as to whether or not he had received notice from his agent that the diversion of the water had been interrupted.

Fox, J. This is an action for injunction to restrain the defendants from turning away from Cole slough or from King's river the waters which in their natural flow would run down to the plaintiff's ditch, and for damages. The case was tried before the court without the intervention of a jury, findings filed, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff, enjoining and restraining the defendants from damming up the southerly branch or channel of Cole slough, or from diverting or turning away from said southerly branch or channel any of the waters which in their natural flow would run down to or into said southerly channel or branch, and from in any manner obstructing or interfering with the free flow of the water into or down the said southerly branch or channel of Cole slough, or through the Dutch John cut. Motion for new trial was made and denied, and defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying said motion.

Plaintiff is a corporation, having no riparian rights, so far as shown in this case, but claiming the right, as appropriator, to take water from King's river, at the head of its ditch, to the amount of 14,400 cubic inches per second, under a 4-inch pressure, for purposes of irrigation. The head of plaintiff's ditch is located on and near the S. W. corner of section 26, township 17 S., range 21 E., Mt. Diablo meridian, and takes the water from and to be used exclusively on the southerly side of King's river. The defendants are riparian proprietors, in possession of the Rancho Laguna de Tache, containing about 48,800 acres of land, situate wholly on the northerly side of King's river, bordering upon and bounded by the river for the distance of about 30 miles, covering the land on the northerly side of said river for the entire distance here under consideration, and extending above and below the points herein mentioned. King's river flows, so far as its course here comes under observation, in a general course from north-east to south-west, but by a somewhat crooked and tortuous channel. It enters township 17 S., range 22 E., at the N. E. corner of section 1. At about the center of the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the section it takes a sudden turn, and runs nearly due south about two miles, and from thence runs by a winding channel to a point in the N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 25, township 17 S., range 21 E., where it is intercepted from the north by what is known as "Dutch John Cut." From here it runs by a winding course to a point in the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 26 in the same township, where it is intercepted on the south side by plaintiff's ditch. From this point it runs by a nearly direct line to the north-west corner of said section 26, where it is intercepted from the north by what is called "Reynold's Slough," and from thence runs a nearly west course, so far as it is necessary to trace it for the purposes of this case. At the point of the first bend above mentioned, on section 1, township 17 S., range 22 E., Cole slough connects with and receives water from the river on the north side. This is shown to be a natural water-course, cut out by the high waters many years prior to the incorporation of plaintiff. It runs a general course from north-east to south-west, through the rancho Laguna de Tache, and wholly on said rancho, to a point on the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 23, township 17 S., range 21 E., where its waters enter into what is called "Reynold's Slough," above mentioned, and through it find their way to King's river at a point one mile below the head of plaintiff's ditch, and by a course some miles shorter than that of the channel of the river. Cole slough, at its upper or northerly end, is divided into two channels for a distance of about two miles, or a little over; it then unites and flows in a single channel for about the same distance, when it is again divided into two channels, one called the "north channel" (sometimes called "Waggoner's Slough") and the other the "south channel." The north channel is much the shortest, running by the most direct route, and consequently has the most rapid current. The south channel bends down very much to the south, and runs within a few hundred yards of the bank of the river, at a point known as "Dutch John Cut." From there it turns again rapidly to the north, and reunites with the north channel about one-fourth of a mile above the point where the waters flow into Reynold's slough. Dutch John cut is not, and never was, a natural water-course. At the point where it connects with the south channel of Cole slough there was a natural depression in the ground, over which the waters would flow at seasons of high water, but the river bank opposite consisted of a high ridge, which prevented them from running into the river. The consequence was that they spread out over the alluvial lands to the westward, and formed a lagoon on what would otherwise be valuable meadowland. To obviate this a tenant on the grant, in 1868 or 1869, called "Dutch John," made a cut through the high river bank to drain off this water. This cut was gradually enlarged by the action of the water, and in later years was still further deepened and enlarged by the plaintiff so as to carry the waters of the south branch of Cole slough into the river above the head of its ditch. It also is located entirely upon defendants' land. It is shown that as early as 1868, by natural processes, the channel of King's river, at the head of Cole slough, had become so filled with sand, and Cole slough had become so enlarged and deepened, that during the dry season little, if any, water ran down the channel of the river, but all the water during the dry season found its way down Cole slough and only found its way to the river again through Reynold's slough, at a point one mile below where the plaintiff subsequently connected its ditch with the river. During the season of high water, which does not exactly correspond to the rainy season, but is the season of melting snows, large bodies of water ran down both channels. It further appears that the defendants and their predecessors have, and for many years past have had, upon said rancho large numbers of cattle dependent upon the waters of Cole slough for water to drink, and also have under cultivation some 4,000 acres of said rancho planted to alfalfa and other crops requiring irrigation, and even before the incorporation of plaintiff had commenced to appropriate and divert the waters of Cole slough for purposes of distribution upon the ranch for the use of their cattle, and for the irrigation of parts thereof, by means of a ditch connecting with said slough at its junction with Reynold's slough; that as early as 1881 this ditch had been so enlarged and extended that it was 45 feet wide on the bottom, 4 feet deep, and was, with its distributing branches, 75 miles in length; that as early as 1871 the head of the south channel of Cole slough had become, from natural causes, partially filled with sand, so that at low water most of the water would run down the north channel, and the defendant's predecessors in that year built a dam of brush and sand to further facilitate the turning of the water into the northern and shorter channel, and to prevent it from going down towards Dutch John cut. The plaintiff was incorporated in October, 1873. It alleges in its complaint that on or about the 1st day of May, 1874, it, "under and in pursuance of notice prior to that time duly given and made, appropriated and acquired the right to divert, appropriate, and use, of the waters of King's river, * * * fourteen thousand four hundred cubic inches per second, under a four-inch pressure, of the water thereof, and still has the right to so divert, appropriate, and use said amount of the waters of said stream."

1. The first point made by defendants (appellants here) is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. The court finds that in 1874 plaintiff constructed a large water-ditch, connecting with King's river at a point below Dutch John cut, 24 feet wide on the bottom, and about 30 feet wide on the top, and about 4 feet deep, and has and had a capacity to carry 100 cubic feet of water per second; that in the spring of 1875 plaintiff appropriated and diverted from said King's river 100 cubic feet of water per second, and for a period of more than five years thereafter plaintiff appropriated and diverted from said river into its said ditch said quantity of water, publicly, openly, peaceably, continuously, notoriously, uninterruptedly, and adversely to the defendants and the whole world, under claim of right, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the defendants and their grantors, and, except when prevented by the defendants, as hereinafter found, the plaintiff, ever since the spring of 1875, has appropriated and diverted from said river, into its said ditch, said quantity of water, and thereby the plaintiff acquired and still has the right to divert and use the waters of said river to the extent aforesaid, and said water has been used for irrigation.

This finding is entirely unsupported by the evidence in several particulars. There is to our minds no evidence whatever to show what the carrying capacity of this ditch was or is. That depends, not only upon the width and depth of the ditch, but also upon the velocity of the flow, and we are unable to find any evidence upon the subject of the velocity of this flow. It is true that one or two witnesses say they think it would carry about a hundred cubic feet per second, but it is perfectly apparent from their testimony that the only reason they have for this opinion is that in their judgment a cross-section of the ditch one foot in width would contain about a hundred cubic feet. No test of velocity is ever made, and no proof of grade is made to enable one to calculate the average velocity of the flow. Again, this finding is in direct conflict with and in excess of the allegations of the complaint. According to the complaint the appropriation made by plaintiff was made "in pursuance of notice duly given and made." If this means anything it means that it was done in pursuance of notice given as required by the provisions of the Civil Code. Those provisions require that the appropriator shall state in the notice the extent of the appropriation, giving the number of inches, under a four-inch pressure, and the place of intended use, which notice must be posted at the point of intended diversion. Section 1415. This is the first step in the act of appropriation, and the complaint shows that the appropriation was made in pursuance of this step duly taken. The extent of the appropriation, as set forth in the complaint, according to the notice, and as afterwards actually made, and as plaintiff now claims the right to make it, was and is 14,400 cubic inches per second. And yet the court finds that the extent of appropriation and diversion actually made, and which plaintiff is now entitled to make, was and is 100 cubic feet per second, 12 times the amount claimed in the complaint; and it enjoins the defendants from doing any act or thing that shall interfere with the right of plaintiff to divert the quantity which plaintiff is so found to be entitled to divert.

Nor is there any evidence to support the finding that this appropriation and diversion was made continuously, uninterruptedly, or adversely to the defendants or their grantors. On the contrary, the evidence without conflict shows that during most of the years since 1875, during the stage of low water in the river, there were periods of several weeks at a time when there was no water in plaintiff's ditch, and it is not shown that this did not occur for some portion of the time during every year. The only years in which it is not affirmatively shown that the ditch was dry a part of the year are the two last ones, during which time it is shown that plaintiff succeeded in getting water for a longer period than usual by entering upon the lands of defendants and turning the waters of the north channel of Cole slough down the south channel, and thence through Dutch John cut into the river; but even then it is not affirmatively shown that a continuous flow of water in the ditch was secured. And so far as relates to water that was taken from the river by first diverting it from the north channel of Cole slough and turning it into the river through the south channel and Dutch John cut, the finding that it was done with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendants and their grantors is in direct conflict with all the evidence upon the subject. The court then finds that prior to 1868 all the waters of King's river flowed down the old or main channel of the river; that ever since 1868, during the period of low water in each year, all the waters of the river have flowed down Cole slough; that since 1874 a large portion of the waters thereof have flowed down the southerly branch of Cole slough into Dutch John cut, and thence into the river above the head of plaintiff's ditch, and that ever since 1875 plaintiff has obtained its supply of water through said channel of Cole slough and Dutch John cut, and for more than five years after the spring of 1875 plaintiff appropriated and diverted into said ditch through said channel of Cole slough and Dutch John cut, during the low-water season, the said quantity of water claimed by plaintiff, peaceably, openly, notoriously, continuously, uninterruptedly, and adversely to the defendants and the whole world, under a claim of right, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the defendants and their grantors, and, except when prevented by the defendants, as hereinafter found, the plaintiff, ever since the spring of the year 1875, during the low-water season, has appropriated and diverted from said King's river, through said channels of Cole slough and Dutch John cut, into its said ditch, its said quantity of water, which has been used for irrigation. This finding is unsupported by the evidence in this: The evidence given on the part of plaintiff shows, without any substantial conflict, that since 1877 plaintiff's ditch has drawn no water from King's river during the period of low water (which the court has found in another place to be from about the middle of August until the rainy season sets in, in the month of December in each year;) but by annual or biennial incursion made without right upon the lands of defendants, and the making of dams across the north channel of Cole slough, and scraping out the south channel and the channel of Dutch John cut, the plaintiff has succeeded, since 1877, in getting water a little later in the summer, and a little earlier in the following winter or spring, than it did get it in 1875 and 1876, or would have gotten it if such incursions had not been made and such work had not been done. Even by these methods, however, which were entirely unauthorized and without right, but which for some 9 or 10 years were not successfully carried to an extent which interfered with the supply of defendants, there were some four months in each year during which, according to the uncontradicted testimony of directors of plaintiff, no water flowed through the ditch of plaintiff. And the proof is uncontradicted that these incursions were made and these trespasses committed without the knowledge or acquiescence of defendants, except on the occasion, during a season of extreme low water unusually early, when a conference was had, and defendants consented that plaintiff might construct a certain kind of dam in the north channel, upon certain prescribed conditions, which would still leave a supply for defendants; but it is shown that the condition was not complied with, and the dam then constructed by plaintiff was immediately torn out by its own men, at the command of defendants, and no dam was ever afterwards constructed on the north channel, nor any work done on the south channel, with the consent of defendants.

The court also finds that Dutch John cut is now, and has been since 1875, a natural water-course, through which the waters of King's river and Cole slough have at all times flowed into plaintiff's ditch, as hereinbefore found. The evidence is insufficient to support this finding. Dutch John cut was a small, artificial cut, made as hereinbefore stated. In 1877, and annually thereafter, according to the uncontradicted testimony of plaintiff's own witnesses, plaintiff entered upon and enlarged it, and cut it deeper, for the purpose of turning the waters of Cole slough through it at a lower stage of water than it otherwise would have flowed through. The dam built in 1871, to turn the waters in the north channel, (referred to in our general statement of the facts,) was swept away by the first succeeding freshet, and before the organization of plaintiff, and at the time of plaintiff's appropriation there was no unnatural interruption to the flow down either channel. The court finds that on the 10th day of January, 1887, the defendants, against the will and without the consent of plaintiff, constructed a dam in and across the head of the southerly branch of Cole slough, and by means thereof turned away the waters which had been accustomed to flow from King's river through the said Cole slough, and through the said southerly branch and Dutch John cut back into King's river above the head of plaintiff's ditch, and through plaintiff's said ditch, and that the effect thereof was to deprive plaintiff's ditch of such water at the season of the year when all the waters of King's river flow down said Cole slough, and have thence hitherto diverted and turned away from plaintiff the said waters; and also that neither the defendants nor their predecessors have ever kept or maintained any dam across the said south channel of said slough, except as hereinbefore stated. There is some evidence to support these findings, but the findings do not state the whole truth, as shown by the evidence upon which they are based. The evidence shows that the plaintiff, with one or two exceptions, made annual incursions, from 1877 to 1887, upon the premises of defendants, and changed the natural condition of both channels of Cole slough, near the upper junction thereof, by scraping the sand and earth out of the south channel and placing it in the north channel. As soon as the supply of water in the north channel ran low by reason thereof, and the attention of defendants was thus attracted to the fact, they would go up to the junction, and, finding what had been done, would move the sand back again out of the north channel into the south one, and thus restore the channels practically to their natural condition. Sometimes the sand would thus be moved back and forth twice in the same year. And this kind of scrambling effort to change the course of the water at its lowest stages on the one side, and to preserve it on the other, was kept up until 1887. In that year the plaintiff again repeated the process of scraping out the south channel, and built a brush and earth dam across the north channel, and, this fact becoming known to defendants, they moved the whole thing over into the south channel, and thereafter did maintain a dam across the south channel to a sufficient extent to prevent water flowing down said south channel at all stages of water when it would not have flowed down there if both channels had been left in their natural condition, or as the elements would have left them if undisturbed. And it is for this act that the present action is brought, or, in other words, to enjoin the defendants from protecting themselves against the trespasses and wrongs of the plaintiff. Nothing in plaintiff's notice or act of appropriation authorized it to go, or justified it in going, upon the lands of defendants, and interfering with or altering the waterways situate thereon, for the purpose of increasing the flow of King's river at the head of their ditch, or of extending or prolonging the period thereof; and the evidence fails to show that the defendants, after the appropriation by plaintiff, interfered with or altered the channels, even upon their own land, so as to diminish that flow or shorten the period thereof; or that they interfered with said channels at all, except to restore them, from time to time, as near as practicable, to the condition that they would have been in had it not been for the changes wrongfully made therein by the plaintiff. It is also apparent from the evidence that the plaintiff knew when it made its appropriation what to expect as to quantity and continuance of flow; that the appropriation was made, and the ditch constructed, with reference to the use of, and with the intent to use, the water only at the periods of high and medium flow, with no expectation of using it at periods of low water. The ditch itself was constructed purposely and intentionally so as to let a stream some 150 feet wide and 14 inches deep run past the head of the ditch before any could be taken out, and this with a full knowledge that the channel of the river carried no water during the low stages, and that at extremely low water none ran in the south channel of Cole slough. The evidence tends to show that since then such changes have been made or have occurred in the bed of the river at that point as to enable the plaintiff to take the water so long as any comes to the head of the ditch; but this was not the original intention. No doubt, so far as any claim of these defendants is concerned, the plaintiff is entitled to take water from the bed of the river, at the head of its ditch, to the full extent of its appropriation, whenever the water comes there, from whatever source it may come, and reach the river-bed at that point; but this gives the plaintiff no right to enter upon private property, and tap other streams, for the purpose of securing water for its ditch, or of augmenting the flow of the river at the head thereof. And it is unnecessary for us in this case to discuss the measure of defendants' rights in the waters which naturally flow over and across their own lands. To those waters, while on the lands of defendants, the plaintiff is a stranger. It is only when the defendants prevent the water from running back into the river at or above the head of plain-tiff's ditch, by an interference with the course of nature,—not simply by interrupting or stopping the trespasses of plaintiff,—that the plaintiff can complain; and the evidence does not justify the conclusion that there has been any such interference. The incursions of plaintiff upon defendants' land, for the purpose of obstructing the flow of water in the north channel and increasing the flow in the south channel of Cole slough, were never assented to by defendants, but as often as discovered the work of plaintiff in that behalf was undone by defendants. However long, therefore, those incursions may have continued, or however frequently they may have been repeated, they did not secure to plaintiff any prescriptive right in the water secured thereby. Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 810; Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 181, 22 Pac. Rep. 76.

2. The next point made by appellants is that the plaintiff is estopped, by matter of record, from claiming or diverting any of the waters of Cole slough, or interfering with the free flow thereof. This point, we think, is well taken. It appears that in 1885 the plaintiff, evidently dissatisfied with the result of its efforts to augment its supply by diverting the water from the north to the south channel, went up to the head of Cole slough, and scraped out and deepened the bed of the river, and constructed a dam so as to divert the flow of the water from the head of Cole slough. Thereupon these defendants commenced an action against the plaintiff, filing a complaint in which they set up the fact of their ownership and possession of the rancho Laguna de Tache; that Cole slough ran for its entire length over and across said rancho; of their use of the waters of Cole slough for their cattle, and their appropriation and diversion thereof by means of ditches at the lower end thereof for the irrigation of their lands as hereinbefore set forth; of the action of defendant therein (this plaintiff) in deepening the channel of the river and obstructing the flow of the water down the channel of Cole slough, and to and through the head-gate and canal of plaintiffs, (these defendants,) and prayed an injunction forever restraining the defendant (this plaintiff) from entering upon the channel of King's river, or the channel of Cole slough, and from in any manner interfering with the channel of said river or of said Cole slough, or from in any manner interfering with the flow of water from the channel of said river into and through the channel of said Cole slough. In this action such proceedings were subsequently had as that on May 3, 1886, judgment was duly given and made forever enjoining and restraining the defendant (this plaintiff) "from digging out, enlarging, or lowering the channel of King's river at and immediately below the head of Cole slough, and from erecting or maintaining any dam or other obstruction in or across the channel of said Cole slough at or near its head; and from doing any act or thing which shall interfere with or in any manner prevent the free flow of water into or down the channel of said Cole slough." This judgment has become final. Respondent insists that this judgment does not work an estoppel in this case, for the reason, as it claims, that the trespasses then complained of and enjoined were those, and those only, at the head of Cole slough. We do not so read either the complaint or the judgment in that case. The locus in quo was a mere incident of the cause of action or the relief sought. The substantive wrong complained of was the prevention of the water from flowing into and down the channel of Cole slough, and into the head of the ditch of plaintiffs in that case. The judgment restrained not only the acts at the place complained of, but any act which would have the effect of preventing the water from flowing into or down the channel of said Cole slough. The injunction, therefore, ran, not alone as to the head, but as to the entire length, of Cole slough, and in doing so it did not exceed the relief warranted by the allegations and the prayer of the complaint. The effect of the judgment in the present case is to restrain and enjoin these defendants (the plaintiffs in the former case) from interfering with such trespasses of the plaintiff herein (defendant in the former case) as are committed in violation of the former injunction, and are intended to and do defeat its purpose. In other words, the effect of this judgment is to enable the plaintiff to deprive the defendants of the fruits of the former judgment, rendered in their favor, and still remaining in full force. The right to have the water flow, according to the course of nature, through the channels of Cole slough, from end to end, not only might have been, but, as we read it, was, within the purview of that former action, both in respect to matters of claim and defense, and was there adjudicated and determined. That determination is res judicata as between these parties. Coburn v. Goodall, 72 Cal. 506, 14 Pac. Rep. 190; Freem. Judgm. § 249, and cases cited. Finding, as we do, that the question of this right was involved and passed upon in the former case between the same parties, the authorities cited by respondent are not in point.

3. Appellants assign as errors of law the rulings of the court in overruling defendants' objections to nine different questions propounded to witnesses by plaintiff. We do not deem it necessary to take these questions up in detail. The evidence elicited by the responses to them was incompetent to prove any fact in issue, or to show that plaintiff had acquired a prescriptive right to enter upon the lands of defendants, or upon any of the channels of Cole slough, for the purpose of interfering with the free and natural flow of the waters through the same, and its admission was therefore erroneous. The fact that plaintiff committed annual trespasses upon the rancho, or upon the channels of Cole slough, gave it no prescriptive right to continue such trespasses. The mere use of the water during seasons of abundance, when it naturally flowed down the south channel of Cole slough and Dutch John cut, without objection on the part of defendants, gave to plaintiff no prescriptive right to change the course of the flow in seasons of scarcity for the purpose of continuing its supply. Anahelm

Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., 64 Cal. 185.

The court also erred in sustaining an objection to the question put by the defendants, upon cross-examination, to the witness Ayers. The question was: "As a director of the company, you understood and learned by your agents that the diversion of water had been interrupted, didn't you?" Plaintiff had sought to prove by the witness, on his direct examination, that it (plaintiff) had used the water through the south channel of Cole slough and Dutch John cut without interruption. The question was pertinent, and clearly within the line of cross-examination, and, if answered in the affirmative, would have charged the plaintiff with knowledge of such interruption, which was the purpose of the question.

Respondent makes a separate point, as follows: "Plaintiff has acquired the right, by adverse enjoyment and use for the period of five years, to divert one hundred cubic feet of water per second from King's river." The contest in this case is not so much as to the quantity which plaintiff has the right to divert from King's river as it is to the question of plaintiff's right to augment the quantity in King's river by diverting from Cole slough at a time when the water is so low that it would not naturally flow into King's river therefrom. For this reason it is not necessary for us to say more than we have already done on the question of quantity. The quotations which counsel makes from the testimony of his witnesses sustain us in what we have said on that subject, and they do not sustain the plaintiff in its claim of right to augment the flow in King's river by an unnatural diversion of the waters of Cole slough. Holding, as we do, that the evidence fails to show that the defendants have obstructed or diverted, or intend to obstruct, divert, or turn aside, the waters which in their natural flow would flow through Cole slough into King's river at or above the head of plaintiff's ditch, or have done, or intend to do, anything more than to prevent such natural flow being changed or diverted by the act of plaintiff, and that plaintiff has been and is estopped from changing, or claiming the right to change, the natural flow thereof, it follows that the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed. So ordered.

ARREST—IN CIVIL ACTION IN JUSTICE'S COURT—AFFIDAVIT.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 861, 862, which permit the arrest of defendant in an action on contract, express or implied, brought before a justice of the peace, when plaintiff makes an affidavit that defendant is about to depart from the state with intent to defraud creditors, or that he has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or that he has removed or disposed of his property with intent to defraud creditors, an affidavit for arrest, which shows that an action has been begun for the recovery of an "alleged" indebtedness owing by defendant, but which contains no averment that such indebtedness or cause of action exists, is fatally defective.

E. S. Pillsbury and L. F. Smith, for petitioner. J. Edwards Marks, opposed.

Fox, J. The prisoner is restrained of his liberty on an order of arrest issued in a civil action by a justice of the peace in Santa Cruz county. It is conceded that the action is for the recovery of moneys claimed to be due upon open account for supplies furnished to defendant while engaged in the restaurant business in Santa Cruz. The constitution provides: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud." Article I, § 15. The only provisions of the statute pertaining to arrest in civil actions in justice's court, or applicable in such cases, are those found in sections 861 to 865 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under these, before an order of arrest can be made by the justice in an action for the recovery of debt, it must be proved to the satisfaction of the justice that there is a cause of action arising upon contract, express or implied; and either that the defendant is about to depart from the state with intent to defraud creditors, or that he has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation, or that he has removed, concealed, or disposed of his property, or is about to do so, with intent to defraud his creditors. This proof may be made by the affidavit of himself or some other person. That it be made is jurisdictional, and without it there is no jurisdiction to issue such an order. The affidavit in this case shows that an action has been begun for the recovery of an "alleged" indebtedness, but there is no averment in the affidavit that such indebtedness or any cause of action exists. This defect is fundamental, and, whatever else may be averred, it leaves the court without jurisdiction to make the order of arrest.

The affidavit is also defective in several other important particulars. It alleges fraud, but fails to state the facts constituting the fraud; also removal and concealment of defendant's money, and a pretended sale of the balance of his property. These allegations are upon information and belief,—a form of averment which does not constitute proof, and is not authorized by law in this class of proceedings in justices' courts. In the superior court some of the facts may be alleged on information and belief, the party being required to state the source and character of his information, and that he believes it to be true. The judge of the superior court may then judge of and determine the sufficiency of the ground of belief. But the legislature has deemed personal liberty too sacred to allow a party to go into an inferior court and get an order of arrest on anything less than proof, and "information and belief" is not proof. Besides, a "pretended sale" is no sale, and does not prove that a party has sold his property with intent to defraud his creditors or otherwise. There is an averment that the defendant is about to depart from the state, with intent to defraud his creditors, but this also is made upon information and belief. I have pointed out these defects that they may be avoided in like cases, but the fundamental one is the want of any showing that there is a cause of action. For this, if for no other, the prisoner must be discharged. So ordered.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

1. A complaint for specific performance, which alleges that defendant executed a contract wherein it offered to convey lands at a certain price, and to keep the offer open for two years, provided plaintiff would insure the property for defendant's benefit, is insufficient, when it fails to allege that plaintiff did insure the property.

2. Where the contract provided that its offer should be kept open for two years, provided a certain yearly rental should be paid as specified in a certain lease, the complaint, drawn nearly a year after such rental is due, which fails to allege payment thereof, is insufficient.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; JOSEPH H. BUDD, Judge.

James H. Budd and Baldwin & Campbell, for appellant. Joshua B. Webster and L. W. Elliott, for respondents.

FITZGERALD, C. Appeal from a judgment of the superior court of San Joaquin county, and from an order refusing a new trial. This is an action to compel the specific performance of an alleged contract in writing for the conveyance of land. The so-called "contract," which is annexed to the complaint as an exhibit, is made a part thereof, and is in the words and figures following, to-wit: "The Stockton Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, does hereby offer to sell to Wm. Hart, or his assigns, all that certain piece or parcel of land situate and being in the county of San Joaquin, state of California, and known as the north half of section thirty-two, (32,) township four (4) north, range six (6) east, Mount Diablo meridian, for the sum of sixteen thousand six hundred and eighty-eight ($16,688) dollars in gold coin of the United States of America, said sale to be made subject to the foregoing lease. The Stockton Savings and Loan Society agrees to account for all rents received by virtue of the foregoing lease of said premises after this date, and prior to August 16, 1889, provided this offer is accepted upon said terms. The Stockton Savings and Loan Society agrees to keep this offer open until August 13, 1889: provided, however, that the rental for the first year, ending August 16, 1888, shall be paid as specified in foregoing lease, and, if not then accepted, this offer shall be withdrawn and considered as of no effect. Time is of the essence of this agreement; and the said William Hart, in consideration of the above offer to sell, agrees to keep the buildings on said land insured for at least six hundred dollars, and will assign to said Stockton Savings and Loan Society the policies of said insurance. Dated August 17, 1887." Defendant demurred to the complaint, upon the ground, among others, "that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The demurrer was overruled by the court below, and, upon the case being tried, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs, from which judgment and the order refusing a new trial defendant appeals.

The demurrer should have been sustained: First. Because the complaint does not show that Hart, or any one claiming under him, ever did anything in pursuance of said instrument, which was but a mere proposal to sell, and of which time was expressly made the essence, except the tender of payment, demand for deed, and offer to perform by plaintiffs on the 15th day of August, 1889, which was within two days of two years after the date of the execution of the said offer to sell, and more than 12 months after said Hart's alleged interest in said property had been sold at an execution sale by the sheriff of San Joaquin county. Second. Because we deem it essential, in order to entitle plaintiffs to maintain this action, that the complaint should allege performance, or offer to perform, or excuse non-performance, within a reasonable time after the making of the said offer to sell. As there is no allegation in the complaint showing that the agreement of Hart to keep the buildings insured and to assign to the defendant the policies of insurance, as provided by the terms of said instrument, which was the only consideration of the offer to sell, was ever performed or excused, we advise that the judgment and order be reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHEY, Judge.

PER CURIAM. The transcript in this case was filed on June 16, 1888, and, no briefs having been filed on either side, it was ordered submitted for decision on February 12, 1891. It is ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

FINE AND IMPRISONMENT—RECORDER'S COURT.

tices' and police courts "a judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine."

2. Under said section the court has discretion to direct imprisonment until the fine be satisfied at the rate of one day for two dollars of the fine. DE HAVEN, HARRISON, and GAROUTTE, JJ., dissenting.

3. Directing imprisonment until the fine be satisfied, at the rate of one day for two dollars of the fine, does not render the judgment void, and therefore authorize the discharge of the prisoner on habeas corpus. GAROUTTE, J., dissenting.

Habeas corpus.

Waterman & Broughton, for petitioner. W. A. Bell and Edwin Meserve, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The petitioner was convicted in the recorder's court of the city of Pomona, upon a charge of violating a city ordinance, and sentenced to pay a fine of $150, and in default of such payment to be imprisoned in the city jail in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for each $2 of the unpaid portion of said fine. The punishment prescribed by the city ordinance under which the petitioner was convicted is a fine not exceeding $300, or imprisonment not exceeding three months, or both such fine and imprisonment; and it is claimed that a judgment imposing a fine only cannot be enforced by imprisonment, because the ordinance does not authorize imprisonment for that purpose. But it is not necessary that such authority should be found in the ordinance, if section 1446 of the Penal Code applies to cases tried in the recorder's courts of the fifth class. By that section it is provided that "a judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine." It is contended, however, that since this provision only applies to proceedings in justices' and police courts, it confers no authority upon a recorder's court. But a recorder's court is none the less a police court because it happens to have been called by another name. The character of a court is determined, not by its name, but by the nature of its jurisdiction and functions, in which respect the recorder's courts of cities organized under the general municipal corporations act cannot be distinguished from other police courts.

Another ground upon which petitioner insists that his imprisonment is unlawful is that if it be conceded that the recorder's court of Pomona is a police court, and therefore authorized by section 1446 of the Penal Code to enforce payment of a fine by the alternative of imprisonment, this judgment is void as to the imprisonment which is prescribed, because, by the statute, the imprisonment must be at the rate of one day for every dollar of the fine, while this judgment only requires him to be imprisoned at the rate of one day for every two dollars of the fine. In support of this contention he cites the case of Ex parte Bernert, 62 Cal. 524, in which it was held that a sentence to pay a fine of $20, and in default of payment to be imprisoned 10 days, was void, because the law in question prescribed a fine of not less than $100, and allowed imprisonment only as an alternative for non-payment of the fine. The reasoning of the court was that since there could be no imprisonment except as an alternative of non-payment of the fine, and since the fine was less than the minimum prescribed by the statute, the imprisonment was necessarily unlawful. Upon the same reasoning it would seem to follow that, if this petitioner has been allowed to discharge his fine by a shorter term of imprisonment than the law warrants, he cannot be imprisoned at all. But we think there is sufficient difference between the terms of the law applicable to this case and those of the statute construed in Ex parte Bernert to enable us to escape a consequence which, upon common sense views, appears so absurd.

Section 1446 of the Penal Code does not imperatively require that the direction for imprisonment in case of non-payment of a fine shall be at the rate or in the proportion of one day for one dollar. It is in terms permissive,—the discretion of the magistrate is absolute whether or not to impose any imprisonment whatever,—and it can lead to no possible harm to hold that the law merely prescribes a maximum rate of imprisonment, leaving the magistrate full discretion to fix any rate within that maximum that seems to be just. It is certainly true, as argued by petitioner that, if this discretion exists, the magistrate may allow a fine to be discharged by imprisonment at the rate of $10 a day or $100 a day. But this does not seem to us to amount to a reductio ad absurdum. If the legislature deemed it wise to allow a police judge in his discretion to wholly omit the alternative of imprisonment, there seems to be no reason to assume an unwillingness to grant him the smaller discretionary power to vary the rate at which the fine may be discharged by that means. That such power has been conferred on the superior court by the express terms of section 1205 of the Penal Code is conceded, and this proves that the mere fact that it is a power capable of abuse by arbitrary or capricious exercise is no proof of its non-existence. It is no doubt true that the legislature might be supposed to have been willing to confide more to the discretion of the superior court than to inferior judicial officers, and it may be argued that the difference in the terms of the two sections referred to is proof of such disposition. But it is difficult to reconcile this assumption with the fact above stated, that the power conferred upon police judges to omit the alternative of imprisonment altogether is really more extensive and absolute than the power supposed to have been withheld. Certainly it is a power quite as capable of being abused to the detriment of the public, and as a means of unjust discrimination in favor of individuals. The difference in the terms of two sections of the Code would, it is true, ordinarily require a difference of construction, but the subject of these provisions is such as to demand a construction which will give them a harmonious, rather than a discordant, operation. If there is no reason to suppose the legislature less willing to confer a discretion upon police courts than upon the superior court, as to the rate of imprisonment required to satisfy a fine, there is still less reason for supposing an intention to subject petty offenders to a harsher and more burdensome rule than is applied to more serious offenders. If one who has justly incurred a fine of $5,000 may, in the discretion of a superior judge, be allowed to satisfy such fine by undergoing imprisonment for 50 days, or even less, why should one who has justly incurred a penalty of only $100 be compelled, if imprisoned at all, to stay in jail twice as long? We find it less difficult to construe the two sections of the Code in the same sense than to ascribe to the legislature an intention not merely to permit, but in a measure to compel such gross inconsistency. But, aside from all this, it has lately been decided here that there can be no imprisonment in satisfaction of a fine for a term longer than the maximum term of imprisonment prescribed as a penalty, or part of the penalty of the offense. Ex parte Erdmann, ante, 372, filed April 2, 1891. This being so, petitioner could not have been imprisoned in satisfaction of his fine of $150 longer than 90 days, and therefore a sentence in the alternative, to imprisonment at the rate of one day for one dollar, would have been void as to 60 days. Can it be said that the recorder's court was compelled to pronounce a judgment that would have been void? Surely not. If the case referred to was correctly decided, section 1446 cannot mean what petitioner contends it means. It must be subject to a construction which will admit in many cases, and which in his case demanded, a sentence of imprisonment for the satisfaction of the fine at a rate greater than one dollar a day. There is no excess of jurisdiction. The prisoner is remanded, and writ discharged.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment. Under section 1446 of the Penal Code, the court, after determining that its judgment of the fine should be satisfied by imprisonment, ought to have directed that the petitioner "be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine." This is the language of the statute, and, as it is definite and clear, there is no reason for placing upon it any other construction. The judgment under which the petitioner is imprisoned is not in this form, and is for this reason erroneous. But there is a wide difference between a judgment in which there is error which would be corrected on appeal and one that is void in the extreme sense; and it is only in this latter class that the court is authorized to discharge upon habeas corpus a defendant imprisoned thereunder. In my opinion, the judgment here assailed is not absolutely void. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the person of the petitioner.

Its judgment that he pay the fine imposed was authorized by law, and it also had the right to direct imprisonment for the satisfaction of the fine and its judgment in this respect is not wholly unauthorized; it is within and not in excess of the authority given it by the statute; and while, as we have seen, it committed an error, such error was in favor of the petitioner, and its judgment was not wholly void. The distinction between such a judgment and one entirely without warrant of law, and therefore void, is obvious.

GAROUTTE, J. I dissent. In the case of Ex parte Bernert, 62 Cal. 524, where the judgment of the court was that "the defendant pay a fine of twenty dollars, and the minimum fine recognized by law for the offense charged was one hundred dollars," this court said: "The judgment of the police court in the case before us is certainly void, because it is not one which includes any judgment which that court has jurisdiction to render in such a case." And the judgment in this case under which the petitioner is held in custody is certainly void, because it is one which the court had no authority in law to render. The judgment consists of two distinct portions: First, that the defendant pay a fine; second, that, in default in the payment of the fine, he be imprisoned at the rate of one day for each two dollars of the fine. These portions of the judgment are of equal gravity, and equally require sound law upon which to stand. I thought this court went too far in its construction of section 1446 of the Penal Code in Ex parte Erdmann, and now the construction placed upon this section in the foregoing opinion would render it unrecognizable by the legislature that created it, and cannot be supported by any well-settled principles of statutory construction. Whatever power the recorder had to imprison for the non-payment of the fine he got by virtue of this section of the Penal Code, and his power is measured by the section. The section is not mandatory in requiring him to render a judgment of imprisonment in case of default in the payment of the fine,—that is discretionary with the recorder; but when he exercises that discretion, as in this case, it is mandatory that he exercise it in the terms and in the manner fixed by the section. If petitioner can be imprisoned at the rate of $2 for each day of imprisonment, he can be imprisoned at the rate of $100 for each day of imprisonment, and the statute thus practically annulled. The section provides that the judgment shall be in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine. If the recorder has the discretion to disturb that proportion, by making the judgment one day for each two dollars of the fine, we see no reason why his discretion does not equally extend to the right of making the judgment two days for each one dollar of the fine. This court cannot by a decision, or by a line of decisions, repeal a statute, and the result of the construction given this section, in effect, is to repeal it, and create a new section in lieu thereof, providing that a judgment that a defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for as many dollars of the fine as the recorder in his discretion may deem proper. Ex parte Baldwin, 60 Cal. 435, supports the foregoing views. It would seem that the judgment is not simply erroneous, but void. Conceding the court had jurisdiction of the offense charged and the defendant, it had no jurisdiction to render such a judgment; it was a judgment not authorized by law and therefore void.

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL—RIGHT OF APPEAL.

1. The provision in Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 963, subd. 2, authorizing an appeal to be taken to the supreme court from a superior court "from an order granting or refusing a new trial," embraces such orders made in probate proceedings, as well as those made in civil actions.

2. Where legatees file written opposition to the issue of letters testamentary to the person named as executrix in a will, setting forth therein certain facts, which they allege render her incompetent to receive the appointment, and she files a written answer denying such facts, and on the issues thus presented an extended trial is had, in which many witnesses are called, the weight and credibility of whose testimony the court is called upon to determine, this presents issues of fact, which the court, after deciding, is authorized to re-examine on a motion for a new trial, with a right of appeal from its order thereon.

On rehearing.

PER CURIAM. A rehearing is asked in this case upon the ground that the court, in deciding that the order denying a new trial is an appealable order, disregarded its former decisions upon the same point. In Estate of Wiard, 83 Cal. 619, 24 Pac. Rep. 45, the court used the following language: "Subdivision 3, § 963, Code Civil Proc., enumerates all the cases in which an appeal may be taken to this court from the superior court in probate proceedings; and an order refusing to vacate a decree of distribution and settlement of final account is not one of them." In this case, after the entry of a decree of distribution, the contestant gave notice of her intention to move the court "to vacate and set aside the decree of distribution, and for a new trial in the matter of said petition for distribution." The motion, when brought on for hearing, was denied, and an appeal was taken from that order, but the record brought here did not contain any statement of the case or bill of exceptions to enable this court to pass upon that portion of the order denying the motion for a new trial, and the appeal was dismissed. In support of what is said above in dismissing the appeal, the court cited Estate of Calahan, 60 Cal. 232, and Estate of Lutz, 67 Cal. 457, 8 Pac. Rep. 39. In Estate of Calahan an order had been made in 1875 purporting to settle the final account of the executor, and discharge him from his trust. In 1880, upon a petition therefor, the superior court made an order vacating the order made in 1875, and an appeal therefrom was dismissed by this court upon the ground that such order was not appealable. In Estate of Lutz an order settling the final account of the executor and distributing the estate was made in 1881, and a petition filed in 1884 to vacate that order was denied by the superior court. An appeal from this order was dismissed by this court upon the ground that it was not an appealable order. In each of the foregoing cases the court was simply called upon to determine whether an order vacating or refusing to vacate a decree of distribution is an appealable order, and its language must be construed in connection with the matter which it decided. Taken literally, the language of the court in each of those cases would imply that an appeal does not lie from an order made in probate proceedings granting or refusing a new trial; but, as such construction is in direct conflict with the expressed language of the statute, it must be disregarded. Prior to 1880, section 969, Code Civil Proc., provided that "an appeal may be taken to the supreme court from a judgment or order of the probate court. * * * (8) Granting or overruling a motion for a new trial." In 1880 the legislature, in order to adapt the provisions of the Code to the constitution, which had given to the superior court the jurisdiction previously exercised by the district and probate courts, repealed section 969, and added subdivision 3 to section 963, Code Civil Proc., in which are contained the provisions of section 969, excepting subdivision 8. The provision in subdivision 2, § 963, Id., which authorizes an appeal to be taken to the supreme court from a superior court "from an order granting or refusing a new trial," embraces all such orders, whether made in probate proceedings or in civil actions. In all cases in which the superior court, when sitting as a court of probate, is authorized to entertain a motion for a new trial, an appeal will lie from its order thereon. Section 1714, Id., provides: "The provisions of pt. 2 of this Code relative to new trials and appeals, except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title, apply to the proceedings mentioned in this title." Section 656, Id., defines a new trial to be "a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury or court or by referees." And section 588, Id., declares the manner in which issues of fact arise upon the pleadings. It would be impracticable to enumerate the cases in which a motion for a new trial is appropriate in probate proceedings, but it may be stated generally that whenever the action of the court which is invoked is dependent upon the existence of certain extrinsic facts which are presented to it for determination in the form of pleadings, and are to be decided by it in conformity with the preponderance of the evidence offered thereon, an issue of fact arises which, after its decision, may be re-examined by the court upon a motion for a new trial. Under this rule a motion for a new trial was permissible in the present case. The respondents filed a written opposition to the appointment of the appellant as executrix, setting forth therein certain facts, which they alleged rendered her incompetent to receive the appointment. To this she filed a written answer, denying the facts which were alleged as rendering her incompetent, and upon the issues thus presented an extended trial was had before the court, in which many witnesses were called, the weight and credibility of whose testimony the court was called upon to determine. This presented issues of fact which the court, after deciding, was authorized to re-examine upon a motion for a new trial, and, as we have above stated, its order upon such motion is appealable. Appeals from orders made upon motions for new trial in probate matters were entertained by this court in Estate of Learned, 70 Cal. 140, 11 Pac. Rep. 587; Estate of Briswalter, 72 Cal. 107, 13 Pac. Rep. 164; and Estate of Doyle, 73 Cal. 564, 15 Pac. Rep. 125.

MURRY v. FAY et al., Commissioners.

(Supreme Court of Washington. April 29, 1891.)

COUNTY BONDS—POWER TO ISSUE—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

Act Wash. March 21, 1890, § 1, empowers counties through their commissioners to contract indebtedness for general county purposes in any manner, when they deem it advisable, not exceeding an amount, together with the existing indebtedness, of 1½ per cent. of the taxable property in the county. Section 2 provides that such counties may contract indebtedness in excess of 1½ per cent., but not 5 per cent., on the assent of three-fifths of the voters of the county being given thereto at a general or special election. Section 3, which authorizes the issuance of bonds, concludes: "Then the board of county commissioners of such county is authorized and empowered to issue its negotiable bonds in the name of the county for the purposes for which such election was held." The only election mentioned in said section which in terms is required to authorize the board to issue bonds is where such issue is for the purpose of procuring money (not to fund existing indebtedness) for strictly county purposes. Prior to the passage of the act there was no provision for funding county indebtedness contracted after January 1, 1888, and one of the objects of the statute was to provide for the funding of such indebtedness at a lower rate of interest than was then being paid. Held, that it was the intention to provide for funding existing county indebtedness without the expense and delay of a submission of the question to the vote of the people.

Case certified from superior court, Pierce county.

Albert E. Joab, for plaintiff. W. H. Snell, for defendants.

ANDERS, C. J. This was an action brought by plaintiff, who is a resident and tax-payer of Pierce county, in this state, against the defendants, who are county commissioners of said county, to restrain said commissioners from issuing the negotiable bonds of the county to the amount of $200,000 for the purpose of funding the outstanding county indebtedness, without first submitting the question of issuance to the voters of the county. It is substantially alleged in the complaint that the indebtedness proposed to be funded by the issuance of said funding bonds, together with the existing indebtedness of said county, will not exceed the sum of 1½ per centum of the taxable property of said county, as ascertained by the last assessment thereof for state and county purposes; that the defendants, the county commissioners of said county, intend and are now about to issue said bonds in accordance with the terms of previous resolutions of the board, (which are set forth in the complaint,) and that they have not complied with the precedent conditions and requirements of the act of the legislature of the state approved March 21, 1890, entitled "An act authorizing and empowering the organized counties of the state of Washington to contract indebtedness, to issue bonds for funding the same, and declaring an emergency," in this: that the said commissioners have not submitted to the voters of said county, at an election held under the provisions of the act of the legislature above referred to, the question of issuing bonds to procure money for strictly county purposes, nor have three-fifths of the voters of the said county assented thereto; and that the defendants passed said resolution and propose to issue said bonds without first submitting said question of the issuance of said bonds to the voters of said county. It is also set up in the complaint that if the said commissioners are allowed and permitted to so issue said bonds, without having first complied with the conditions of the said act of the legislature, the same will be illegal and void, and the plaintiff and all tax-payers of said county will suffer great, unnecessary, and unjust costs and damages. To this complaint a general demurrer was interposed, which the court sustained, and caused a judgment to be entered pro forma dismissing the action. The judge who tried the case below, being of the opinion that the cause involved the determination of the proper construction of the statutes of this state in relation to the issuance of bonds by the several counties of the state, and that it was desirable to have the opinion of the supreme court upon said question, ordered and directed the proceedings to be brought to this court for determination of the following questions: (1) Can the board of county commissioners issue bonds of the county for the funding of outstanding warrants without a vote of the people of the county, where the amount of the existing indebtedness of said county is less than one and one-half per centum of the taxable property of said county, as ascertained by the last assessment for state and county purposes? (2) Can the board of county commissioners issue the bonds of said county for county purposes, without being authorized by the vote of the people of said county, where the amount of said bonds, together with the outstanding indebtedness of said county, does not exceed one and one-half per centum of the taxable property of said county, as ascertained by the last assessment for state and county purposes?

The first section of the funding bond act of March 21, 1890, empowers each and every organized county in this state, by and through its board of county commissioners, to contract indebtedness for general county purposes, in any manner, when they deem it advisable, not exceeding an amount, together with the existing indebtedness of such county, of 1½ per centum of the taxable property in such county, to be ascertained by the last assessment for state and county purposes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness. Laws 1889-90, p. 37. Section 2 of the act provides that such counties may contract indebtedness for strictly county purposes in excess of the amount named in the preceding section, (1,) but not exceeding in amount, together with existing indebtedness, 5 per centum of the taxable property, to be ascertained as provided in section 1, whenever three-fifths of the voters of the county assent thereto, at a general or special election to be held for that purpose, consistent with the general election laws. Neither of these sections make any provision for issuing bonds of the county to pay or fund indebtedness contracted as therein specified. That authority is conferred by the third section only. And it would be clear beyond a doubt that the legislature by that section intended to empower the county commissioners to issue bonds to pay or fund existing county indebtedness within the limits prescribed in section 1, without submitting the question to the vote of the people, were it not for the words, at the close of the section, "then the board of county commissioners of such county is authorized and empowered to issue its negotiable bonds in the name of the county for the purposes for which such election was held." The words "such election" would seem, however, to refer to the election mentioned in a preceding part of the section, which must be held whenever the board of commissioners shall submit to the voters of the county the question of issuing bonds to procure money (not to fund existing indebtedness) for strictly county purposes. That is the only election mentioned which, in terms, is required to authorize the board of commissioners to issue county bonds. But the expression, "for the purpose for which such election was held," when read in connection with the first clause of the section, renders the meaning ambiguous, and we must therefore ascertain the intention of the legislature by the application of authorized rules of construction. One of these rules is that, if a literal interpretation of any part of a statute would be contrary to the evident meaning of the act taken as a whole, it should be rejected; and the best way to discover the meaning when expressions are rendered ambiguous by their connection with other clauses is to consider the object of the law and the causes which led to its enactment. Heydenfeldt v. Mining Co., 93 U. S. 638; New Lamp Chimney Co. v. Ansonia Brass, etc., Co., 91 U. S. 662. Another rule is that "a thing within the intention is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter; and a thing within the letter is not within the statute if contrary to the intention of it." People v. Insurance Co., 15 Johns. 381; Insurance Co. v. Gridley, 100 U. S. 615. Before the passage of this act no provision had been made for funding county indebtedness contracted after January 1, 1888. Many of the counties were paying 10 per cent. interest per annum upon their outstanding warrants; and one of the objects of the statute was to provide for funding such indebtedness at a lower rate of interest, and thus relieve the tax-payer of a portion of his burdens. And from these circumstances, and from the history of this legislation, we are convinced that the legislature intended, as did the framers and promoters of the act, to provide for funding existing county indebtedness, lawfully incurred, without the expense and delay incident to submitting the question of issuing bonds to a vote of the people. This intention will be clearly expressed, and all parts of section 3 be made to harmonize with each other, by rejecting the words last above quoted, as not being applicable to cases of indebtedness incurred, as in this instance, under the provisions of section 1 of the act. No other construction of the statute will relieve it from ambiguity, or express what we believe to be its intention. The first question propounded by the court below is therefore answered in the affirmative. The majority of the court being of the opinion that the second question is not involved in the case now before us, it will not now be decided. The cause will be remanded to the court below, with instructions to enter final judgment for defendants.

SKAGIT RAILWAY & LUMBER CO. v. COLE.
APPEAL—RECORD AND BRIEFS—TIME OF FILING—COURT RULES.

1. Code Wash. T. 460, which requires causes to be filed on appeal 15 days before the first day of the next succeeding term of the supreme court, is nullified by Const. Wash. art. 4, § 2, which provides that the supreme court shall always be open for the transaction of business, except on non-judicial days; thus abolishing terms.

2. Where a motion filed by appellee to affirm a judgment on the ground that appellant has failed to file its brief as soon as the rules of the court require is not called up until a later session, the fact that appellant has not yet filed its brief cannot be urged as an additional reason for granting the motion. The matter must be determined by its status at the time the motion was made.

3. The judgment will not be affirmed on account of appellant's failure to file its brief within the 30 days required by rules 6 and 9 of the supreme court, where such failure is due to a disagreement between him and his attorney, and the refusal of the latter to act.

4. Rules 6 and 9 further provide that the transcript shall be prepared within 30 days after the notice of appeal, and that it shall remain on file in the office of the clerk of the superior court until all the briefs are filed in the supreme court. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the transcript was prepared within the required time, although the certificate of the clerk of the superior court was not affixed until nearly a month later; there being no rule requiring such certificate to be attached at the time of making the transcript.

5. Where appellant, in direct violation of rule 4 of the supreme court, has failed to index and number the pages of a voluminous record, he will be compelled, as a sine qua non of further proceedings, to pay appellee $50 within 12 days, and properly prepare the record within 25 days.

Appeal from superior court, Skagit county.

J. C. Haines, for appellant. Ronald & Piles, for appellee.

SCOTT, J. Appellee moves to affirm the judgment for the following reasons: That the appellant failed to cause a transcript to be prepared, and also failed to file its brief within the required time; and he alleges the same was due to the negligence of appellant. Judgment was rendered in the court below December 19, 1889, and on the same day appellant gave notice of appeal to this court under the act passed in 1883. Although the motion purports to be based solely upon the rules of this court, counsel for appellee in his argument cites us to section 460 of the Code, which required causes to be filed 15 days before the first day of the next succeeding term, etc.; and also to the case of Haas v. Gaddis, 23 Pac. Rep. 1011, decided by us, regarding the same. Since that case was appealed our constitution has been adopted, which provides that the supreme court shall always be open for the transaction of business, except on non-judicial days. Consequently there are no terms of the supreme court in the sense in which they were formerly held, but only a division of our sittings into sessions, to facilitate the orderly arrangement and dispatch of business for the convenience of all concerned; and the authority cited no longer applies. This being so, we can look only to our rules for guidance in this matter.

It appears by the record that the statement of facts was settled March 12, 1890, and the cause was filed in this court on May 16th following. Prior thereto, on May 9th, appellee filed his motion aforesaid. Rules 6 and 9 of this court, which went into effect March 17th last, are the only ones bearing upon this subject. The motion was not called up for hearing by either party until the present session, and now appellee, as an additional reason for granting it, calls our attention to the fact that appellant has not as yet filed a brief, nor made any application to be allowed to file one until this hearing. We are all of the opinion that the motion must be determined by the status of the case at the time the motion was filed; and as a matter of practice we think appellant could well await the hearing, and make its application at such time for permission to file its brief, based upon such a showing by way of excuse for the failure to file within time as it could make. The statute (Sess. Laws of 1889-90, p. 323, § 12,) authorizes this court to make such rules as shall be deemed most conducive to the due administration of justice, except as otherwise provided by law; and, as at said time there was no law particularly specifying the course of procedure in these matters, rules 6 and 9 were accordingly duly authorized, and doubtless could have been adopted in the absence of any express power conferred by the legislature. The same have not been abrogated by statute or otherwise, but, if anything, have been confirmed by subsequent legislation. See the act to be found at page 333 of the same Session Laws, especially section 7. Section 2 of this act, however, makes some changes in the giving of the notice of appeal, and section 3 in effect requires the transcript to be certified when made. As to these matters rule 6 should now be read in the light of those sections in cases appealed since June 26th last, the act having gone into effect June 27th. Rule 9 contains the following provision: "In cases appealed to this court since the last term of the supreme court of Washington Territory, and in which no transcripts or briefs have been filed, parties shall have the time fixed by rule six in which to cause transcripts to be prepared, and in which to serve and file briefs." This would extend the time for filing appellant's brief in this case 30 days from March 17th,—the time when the rules went into effect. The appellee would have 20 days thereafter within which to file his brief, and the appellant 10 days more to file a reply brief, making in all 60 days from March 17th. Rule 6 further provides that the transcript shall remain on file in the office of the clerk of the superior court until all the briefs are filed. No briefs having been filed in the superior court clerk's office, said clerk sent the record to this court, and it was filed here on the last day within which to file briefs. It was sent somewhat in advance of the time prescribed by rule 6, as in this instance it should have remained on file in the lower court for the full period of 60 days after March 17th. Where no bill of exceptions or statement of facts is settled, the time would be 10 days less, and, except as to those cases where the clause in rule 9, quoted, applies, the time would run from the giving of the notice of appeal, or the settlement of a bill of exceptions or a statement of facts in those cases where the same are settled. As to the time of the preparation of the transcript, at which the motion is directed, no proof has been submitted to us. The only law in force at that time relating thereto is found in section 1, p. 59, of the Session Laws of 1883, which, in effect, required the clerk to make the transcript within a reasonable time after the giving of the notice of appeal, and to cause the same to be filed with the clerk of the supreme court within the time allowed by law. As said in Haas v. Gaddis, section 460 of the Code is the only place where the time of filing was prescribed, and that is not applicable to this case, owing to the fact that terms had previously been abolished.

This court has at all times recognized the uncertainty of the state of the practice existing during the period of transition from a territorial to a state government, and, owing to the consequent embarrassment attorneys and litigants were placed under, has been as lenient in each particular case as the circumstances thereof would permit, and also had the same in view when the rules of practice referred to were adopted, notably the clause mentioned of rule 9. It is evidently within the purview of the laws relating to the practice, and is also the opinion of the court, that technical omissions or imperfections in the procedure should not be allowed to defeat the ends of justice, or prevent a hearing upon the merits; yet a due regard must be had to the requirements of the statutes and rules, and flagrant or willful violations should not be allowed to go unnoticed. Under the 1883 act the statement could have been settled at any time within a reasonable time after judgment, upon giving 10 days' notice thereof, said act only having required notice of such settlement to have been given within 30 days after the rendition of judgment, and not prescribing the time within which settlement should be made. Under the law as it now exists (see section 4, p. 334, Sess. Laws 1889-90) the time of settlement is fixed and limited, and can only be extended by the superior court or judge for sufficient reason, or by consent of parties. This law was not in force when this appeal was taken. No point is made in the motion, however, that the statement was not settled within a reasonable time, and we allude to these matters only to aid in arriving at an understanding of the practice. The rule requires the transcript to be prepared within 30 days after the giving of the notice of appeal, but does not require it to be filed in this court until after the time for filing briefs has expired. We must presume in this case, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the transcript was prepared within the time allowed by rule 6, as aided by rule 9 in this instance,—that is, within 30 days after March 17th. The clerk's certificate thereto, made May 13th, is not any evidence of the time when the transcript was actually prepared, as at that time he could make and append his certificate any time before the cause should be transmitted to this court, rule 6 only relating to the time of making the transcript; and no rule or statute then in force fixed the particular time when the certificate should be made. We should be loth to affirm the judgment, however, or to dismiss an appeal, for that reason, even if it did appear that the transcript was not prepared within the 30 days allowed thereof, where no delay was occasioned thereby; and certainly would not do so where a sufficient reason is shown for the failure. In fact the only reason appearing to us for requiring the transcript to be prepared in advance of the settlement of the statement of facts or the time allowed therefor is to promote the dispatch of such business, and for the convenience of the court below and the parties in settling the statement or bill of exceptions, and of the parties in preparing briefs. Section 3 of the act last cited requires the superior court clerk to make and certify the transcript as soon as may be in the due course of business, after the notice of appeal is given or filed, but does not otherwise fix the time; and the same section requires such clerk to cause the transcript to be filed with the clerk of the supreme court within the time provided by law. There is no statute prescribing the time within which the transcript must be filed in this court, and reference must still be had to rule 6 to determine the time within which the transcript should be prepared and subsequently filed here.

As to the failure of appellant to file a brief, and by way of excuse therefor, it makes a showing by its present attorney that the failure was due to a disagreement between appellant and one of its former attorneys, who seems to have had at that time personal supervision of the case, and to the refusal of said attorney to act in the premises, which, without giving the details thereof, we deem a sufficient showing. The motion to affirm is therefore denied.

To determine this matter we have been required to examine a voluminous record, which, in direct violation of rule 4 of this court, is not indexed, and its pages are not designated by numbers. These omissions have seriously inconvenienced the court, and, unless supplied, will further embarrass us and the appellee upon the final hearing. As a condition precedent to any further proceedings in the cause by appellant we shall require it to pay to appellee $50 within 12 days from this time, after which payment, and within said time, appellant may serve and file its brief. Appellee shall have 8 days thereafter within which to serve and file his brief, and appellant 5 days more to serve and file a reply brief. Appellant shall also within 25 days herefrom prepare a proper index to said record, and cause its pages to be numbered.

COUNTY TREASURER—ACTION ON BOND—REFERENCE—ACCOUNTS.

1. In an action on the bond of a county treasurer, which is referred, a finding by the referee that, owing to mistakes made by such treasurer, the county auditor, and the board of county commissioners in the settlement of his accounts, he failed to pay over a part of the money received by him, is sufficient to warrant judgment against him and his sureties for such amount.

2. As the judicial power of the territory of Washington was by its organic act vested in a supreme court, district and probate courts, and justices of the peace, the board of county commissioners has no judicial power, and in settling the treasurer's accounts it acts in a ministerial capacity, so that its decisions are not binding on the county.

3. It is within the discretion of the court to deny defendants' demand, under Code Wash. § 93, for a copy of the items of the account mentioned in the complaint, such accounts being public accounts, which it does not appear were not equally accessible to defendants as to plaintiff.

Error to district court, King county.

Ronald & Piles and W. S. Bush, for defendants in error.

ANDERS, C. J. This was an action by defendant in error King county against George D. Hill and his sureties upon his official bond as county treasurer of said county, to recover a specified sum of money alleged to have been received by said Hill, as such treasurer, for the use of said county, during his official term of two years, commencing on the first Monday in January, 1881, but which he failed to account for to the proper authorities, or to pay over to his successor in office, as required by law. The cause was tried by a referee, who, having heard the testimony, reported the same, together with his findings of fact and conclusions of law, to the court. The referee found, in substance, that the said George D. Hill was the duly-elected, qualified, and acting treasurer of the county of King for the term of two years from and after the second Monday of January, 1881; that he, as principal, with the other defendants as his sureties, duly executed the bond set forth in the complaint; that he attended before the board of county commissioners of said county with his books and vouchers, and made settlement of his accounts with said board, as required by law, for and during his said term of office, and received the credits in his several accounts mentioned in the answers of the defendants in this action; that during his term of office as such county treasurer, and while acting as such, he had and received, for the use of said county of King, divers large sums of money, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $190,297.02; that he did not account to the proper authorities for all the money so received by him; that of the money so received by him for the use of said county he did not account to the proper authorities for, and did not pay over to his successor in office, the sum of $12,472.16, and that said failure to account for and to pay over to his successor in office said last-named sum was occasioned by, and was the result of, mistakes and errors on the part of said Hill and the county auditor of said King county in the book accounts kept by them, respectively, and of mistakes and errors on the part of the board of county commissioners of said county in the settlements had by them with said Hill on account of the money so by him received as treasurer for the use of said county. The said report of the referee also specifies the particular accounts in which the said mistakes and errors occurred, but which it is not necessary here to enumerate. And as a conclusion of law deduced from the facts set forth the referee found that the plaintiff, the county of King, was entitled to a judgment against the defendants for the sum of $12,472.16, with interest thereon from the — day of January, 1883, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, together with the costs and disbursements of the action. The defendants filed a motion to set aside the report of the referee, and for a new trial, which motion was denied by the court. Judgment was thereupon entered for the plaintiff in accordance with the referee's report, to reverse which defendants have brought the cause to this court by writ of error.

Eleven different errors, alleged to have been committed by the court below, are assigned by plaintiffs in error as grounds for reversal of the judgment. The first 10 specifications of error refer almost exclusively to the rulings of the court in settling the pleadings in the case. They are not discussed in the brief of counsel for plaintiffs in error, and therefore might properly be treated as waived; but we have nevertheless examined the record touching these objections, and are unable to perceive any substantial error therein. The eleventh assignment is that the court erred in denying the motion of defendants to set aside the report of the referee, and to grant a new trial. Our statute provides that upon a motion to set aside the report of a referee the conclusions thereof shall be deemed and considered as a verdict of the jury, (see Code, § 256;) and in no case will such report be set aside except for reasons which would make it the clear duty of the trial judge to set aside a verdict, and order a new trial. There is neither a bill of exceptions, nor the evidence given before the referee, in the record in this case, and we can therefore only consider the legal effect of the facts found by the referee. And we must assume, in the absence of the evidence, not only that the facts found are true, but also that the evidence warranted the findings. Gardiner v. Schwab, 110 N. Y. 650, 17 N. E. Rep. 732. We are of the opinion that the facts found fully justify the conclusions of law arrived at by the referee, and we cannot say that the court erred in refusing to set aside his report. But the learned counsel for the plaintiffs in error contends that the settlement of the accounts of the treasurer, Hill, with the board of county commissioners is conclusive between the parties; that the board of commissioners, in making such settlement, acted in a judicial capacity; and that their decision cannot be collaterally attacked. But we think the position of counsel is clearly untenable. The judicial power of the late territory of Washington was vested by the organic act in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and in justices of the peace. See section 1907, Rev. St. U. S. It follows, therefore, that boards of county commissioners could not have been clothed with judicial powers or functions, even by an act of the legislature, and much less could they exercise such functions in the absence of legislative enactment. The power exercised by the board of county commissioners in making settlements with the treasurer of their county is of a purely ministerial character, and such settlements do not partake of the nature of judicial decisions, and are not binding upon the county. The commissioners and the treasurer are alike agents of the county, and the acts or omissions of one agent in the discharge of duties imposed by law can in no way affect the obligations of the other to the common principal. Board v. Otis, 62 N. Y. 92; Mayor, etc., v. Stout, (N. J.) 18 Atl. Rep. 943; Hunt v. State, 93 Ind. 311. It was the duty of the defendant Hill to properly account for all moneys received as county treasurer, and to pay over to his successor in office, at the expiration of his official term, all money belonging to the county then in his hands; and there was no law authorizing the county commissioners to absolve him from the performance of that duty. Dillon v. Spokane Co., 3 Wash. T. 498, 17 Pac. Rep. 889. His settlement with the county commissioners was only prima facie evidence of the correctness of his accounts, and cannot be pleaded as an estoppel. 3 Wash. T. 500, 17 Pac. Rep. 890; Jefferson Co. v. Jones, 19 Wls. 61; Nolley v. Callaway Co. Ct., 11 Mo. 457; Board v. Otis, supra. It is further contended by plaintiffs in error that it was error on the part of the court to admit in evidence, over defendants' objection, the particular items of the accounts mentioned in the complaint, for the reason that the plaintiffs had failed to furnish a copy of the same to defendants within 10 days after demand thereof in writing, as provided by law. The Code provides that it shall not be necessary for a party to set forth in a pleading a copy of the instrument in writing, or the items of an account therein alleged; but unless he file a verified copy thereof with such pleadings, and serve the same on the adverse party, he shall, within 10 days after a demand thereof in writing, deliver to the adverse party a copy of such instrument of writing, or the items of account, verified by his own oath or that of his agent or attorney, or be precluded from giving evidence thereof; and the court may in all cases order a bill of particulars of the claim of either party to be furnished. Code Wash. § 93. This action is upon an instrument in writing, and not upon an account; and the plaintiffs, having set forth a copy of the bond in the complaint, which was duly verified, substantially complied with the provisions of the statute in that particular. The execution of the bond was not denied by the defendants, and the breaches of its conditions were set out in the complaint. The accounts alleged to be incorrect were public accounts, and were kept by the defendant Hill, and it does not appear that they were not equally as accessible to defendants as to plaintiffs. The object of a bill of particulars or the items of an account is to apprise the defendant of the nature and extent of the cause of action in order that he may plead with greater certainty. Waterman v. Mattair, 5 Fla. 213. See, also, Boone, Code Pl. § 125. And if the defendant himself has the means of obtaining such information, there is no reason for ordering the plaintiff to furnish it to him. Whether a bill of particulars should or should not be ordered in a particular case is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court. People v. Gibbs, 93 N. Y. 470. The court below refused to order the plaintiffs to furnish a bill of particulars; and in the absence of anything indicating that the defendants were prejudiced thereby, we would not feel justified in disturbing its ruling. Since the trial of this cause in the court below the defendants George D. Hill and D. M. Hyde have died, and their respective personal representatives have been substituted, and the action continued in accordance with the provisions of the statute. Perceiving no error in the record, the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

ETC.—ACCRETION.

1. The title to land over which the tide ebbs and flows is in the state, and a riparian owner can claim no easement in it, nor impose any servitude upon it, without the consent of the legislature.

2. Under Const. Wash. art. 15, providing that the legislature shall provide for the appointment of a commission to establish harbor lines in the navigable waters of all harbors in the state, within or in front of the corporate limits of a city, or within a mile thereof, and shall provide for the leasing of the right to build and maintain wharves, docks, and other structures, a riparian proprietor on the shore of the sea, so situated, has no authority, as such, to extend wharves in front of his land below high-water mark.

3. Nor can the riparian proprietor's right to accretions, not yet in existence, give him any rights in the land below high-tide mark, as against the state.

4. A riparian proprietor cannot sue to enjoin the erection and maintenance of structures on tidal land by persons who erected the same, and were in use and possession for commerce, trade, or business prior to the passage of Act Wash. March 26, 1890, which provides (section 11) that the owners of any lands fronting on the Pacific ocean, or any bay, harbor, etc., shall have the right, for 60 days after final appraisement of tide-lands, to purchase such as are in front of the lands owned by them: "provided, that if valuable improvements, in actual use for commerce, trade, or business have been made upon said tide-lands, * * * the owners of such improvements shall have the exclusive right to purchase the land so improved for the period aforesaid."

STILES, J., dissenting.

Appeal from superior court, Pierce county.

This is a suit for an injunction. After the complaint was filed, and a temporary order issued, plaintiff filed an amended complaint, which alleged, in substance, that he was the owner of certain upland bordering and abutting upon the high-water mark of Puget sound; that by reason of such ownership he was entitled to certain littoral rights in and to the shore opposite his lands, and that the appellants were occupying the shore opposite his land, and erecting structures and improvements thereon. Defendants filed an answer disclaiming any right or title to any land above high-water mark, and alleging that the land occupied by them is part of the shore of Puget sound, and that valuable improvements, in actual use for commerce, trade, and business, had been made upon said lands long prior to the passage of the tide-lands act of March 26, 1890, and that said improvements were on March 26, 1890, and prior thereto, in actual use for commerce, trade, and business, and that the defendants are the owners of, and in possession of, such improvements; and alleging the purpose of the appellants to erect on said shore conveniences for shipping, and that the plaintiff would have the right, in common with all other persons, and upon the same terms, to use such conveniences when erected; and denying that the plaintiff had been denied access from his lands to the navigable waters of Puget sound for any purposes of commerce or navigation; and denying that the appellee has desired access or egress from the waters of Puget sound for any purpose of commerce or navigation; and alleging that the harbor lines have not been fixed opposite said lands, and that the lands have not been disposed of by the state of Washington; and denying that the appellants have wrongfully or unlawfully obstructed plaintiff's access to the navigable waters of Puget sound. To this answer plaintiff demurred, on the ground that the same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and this demurrer was sustained. Defendants declined to answer further, and a final decree of perpetual injunction was made.

Doolittle, Pritchard, Stevens & Crosscup, for appellee.

ANDERS, C. J. In this case this court is called upon for the first time to determine the rights of littoral proprietors of lands abutting upon the shore of an arm of the sea in which the tide ebbs and flows; and, while it is scarcely necessary to look beyond our own constitution and laws for authority to guide us to a conclusion, still, owing to the importance of the questions both to individuals and the public, and the magnitude of the interests involved, we have examined the numerous authorities cited by the learned counsel for the respective parties in the elaborate briefs which they have filed, in order that we might familiarize ourselves with the decisions of other courts upon the subject, and with the reasons upon which their decisions are based. We shall not attempt, however, to review all of the decisions in detail, for that would be impracticable, if it were desirable, but will only refer to a few of the cases especially alluded to by counsel.

In this state the common law is our rule of decision in the settlement of questions requiring judicial determination, when not specially provided for by statute. And it seems to be generally conceded that at common law the title to the soil under water was vested in the crown. The ownership of the soil was regarded as a jus privatum, and could be conveyed to individuals, subject only to the public right of navigation and fishing, which public right was under the absolute control of parliament. In this country we have the highest authority in support of the doctrine that the state has succeeded to all the rights of both king and parliament, and hence is the absolute owner of all navigable waters, and the soil under them, within its territorial limits.

This question was thoroughly discussed by the supreme court of the United States in the case of Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 367. That was an action of ejectment for land under the waters of Raritan bay in New Jersey, over which the tide ebbed and flowed. The land in controversy was included in a large tract which was granted by the king of Great Britain to the Duke of York, and subsequently became vested in the proprietors of East Jersey, who afterwards surrendered to the crown all their governmental powers, but retained all their rights of private property. One of the parties to the action, as the grantee of the state of New Jersey, under a law of the state, claimed the exclusive right to take oysters in the place granted, and the other claimed the same right by virtue of his title from the proprietors. The right of the crown to make the grant to the Duke of York, which not only included the tide-land, and also the waters and soil under the waters, as well as the power of the state to convey the same, were questions thus brought directly before the court for determination; and it was held that the king, as the representative of the nation, had an unquestionable right to make the grant to the Duke of York, with all the prerogatives and powers of government therein contained. In discussing the question as to whether, since Magna Charta, the king had power to grant land covered by navigable waters to an individual, so as to give him an exclusive right of fishing within the limits of the grant, Mr. Chief Justice TANEY said: "And we the more willingly forbear to express an opinion on this subject because it has ceased to be of much interest in the United States; for, when the Revolution took place, the people of each state became themselves sovereign, and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters, and the soils under them, for their own common use, subject only to the rights surrendered by the constitution to the general government. A grant made by their authority must therefore manifestly be tried and determined by different principles from those which apply to the grants of the British crown." The natural and logical conclusion of the court was that the grant by the state conferred upon its grantee the exclusive right to take oysters within the territory covered by the grant.

The question of the ownership of lands under tide-water was again raised in the same court in the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How. 212, which was ejectment for a lot of land in the city of Mobile, in Alabama, which lay below high-water mark, and which had been granted to plaintiff by congress. After approving the decision in the case of Martin v. Waddell, Mr. Justice MCKINLEY, in the course of his opinion, says: "Then to Alabama belong the navigable waters, and the soil under them, in controversy in this case, subject to the rights surrendered by the constitution to the United States; and no compact that might be made between her and the United States could diminish or enlarge those rights." The court further says that, "by the preceding course of reasoning, we have arrived at these general conclusions: First, the shores of navigable waters, and the soils under them, were not granted by the constitution of the United States, but were reserved to the states, respectively; second, the new states have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original states; third, the right of the United States to public lands, and the power of congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof, conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the lands in controversy in this case."

Again, in the case of Weber v. Commissioners, 18 Wall. 57, it was held that to the state of California, upon her admission into the Union, passed the absolute property in, and dominion over, all soils under tide-water within her limits, with the consequent right to dispose of the title to any part thereof in such manner as the state might deem proper, subject to the paramount right of navigation over the waters, so far as such navigation might be required by the necessities of commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, the regulation of which was vested in the general government. Opinion of Mr. Justice FIELD, at page 65.

The court went still further in the case of McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, and there held that not only the soil under tide-waters in the state, but the waters themselves, and the fish in the waters, so far as they are capable of ownership, belonged to the state, and that the legislature had the constitutional right to pass a law prohibiting any person, not a citizen of the state, from fishing in such waters. And in Willson v. Marsh Co., 2 Pet. 245, the court sustained an act of the legislature of Delaware authorizing the damming up of a navigable stream for the benefit of adjoining lands.

The case of Hoboken v. Railroad Co., 124 U. S. 656, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 643, was an action of ejectment for land occupied by the railroad company along the margin of the Hudson river. Plaintiff claimed by dedication of the street to the water by the original proprietor of the land, as evidenced by the "Loss" map. Defendant claimed by virtue of a grant from the state. Mr. Justice MATTHEWS, speaking for the court, said: "The nature of the title in the state to lands under tide-water was thoroughly considered by the court of errors and appeals of New Jersey in the case of Stevens v. Railroad Co., 34 N. J. Law. 532. It was there declared (page 549) 'that all navigable waters within the territorial limits of the state, and the soil under such waters, belonged in actual propriety to the public; that the riparian owner, by common law, has no peculiar right in this public domain as incident of his estate; and that the privileges he possesses by the local custom, or by force of the wharf act, to acquire such rights, can, before possession has been taken, be regulated or revoked at the will of the legislature. The result is that there is no legal obstacle to a grant by the legislature to the defendant of that part of the property of the public which lies in front of the lands of the plaintiff, and which is below high-water mark.' It was therefore held in that case that it was competent for the legislative power of the state to grant to a stranger lands constituting the shore of a navigable river under tide-water, below the high-water mark, to be occupied and used with structures and improvements in such a manner as to cut off the access of a riparian owner from his land to the water, and without making compensation to him for such loss." And again: "Our conclusion, therefore, is that the grants from the state of New Jersey, under which the defendant claims, respectively, are a complete bar to the recovery sought against them in these suits." And finally: "Under those grants they have and hold the right and exclusive possession of the premises in controversy against the adverse claims of the plaintiff to any easement or right of way upon, and over them, by virtue of the original dedication of the streets, to high-water mark on the Loss map."

The foregoing decisions of the highest judicial tribunal of the United States, without other or further authority, would seem to settle, beyond controversy, the question of title to the tide-lands of this state, and to leave no doubt whatever that they belong to the state in actual propriety, and that the state has full power to dispose of the same, subject to no restrictions, save those imposed upon the legislature by the constitution of the state and the constitution of the United States; and, if this be true, it necessarily follows that no individual can have any legal right whatever to claim any easement in, or to impose any servitude upon, the tide-waters within the limits of the state, without the consent of the legislature.

But, in order that there might be no doubt upon this vexed question, the constitution of the state has spoken upon the subject. Section 1, art. 17, of that instrument, declares that "the state of Washington asserts its ownership to the beds and shores of all navigable waters in the state, up to and including the line of ordinary high tide, in the waters where the tide ebbs and flows, and up to and including the line of ordinary high water within the banks of all navigable rivers and lakes: provided, that this section shall not be construed so as to debar any person from asserting his claim to vested rights in the courts of the state." And so zealous were the people of the state in guarding their rights in these lands that they inserted a proviso in the constitution to the effect that no law of Washington Territory, granting shore or tide lands to any person, company, or any municipal or pri-

Appellee contends, however, that whatever may be the title of the state to the soil under tide-water, he, by virtue of his contiguity to the water, has certain rights in the shore beyond those of the general public, and which are peculiar to himself, among which are a right to a wharf out opposite to his upland, a right of ferriage, a right of unobstructed access to the navigable water in front of him, and a further right to accretions that may hereafter be formed, and that all of these rights are property, and are "vested rights." And in support of this contention the learned counsel for appellee have cited many authorities, among which are Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black, 23; Railroad Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. 272; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497.

But, before proceeding further, it may be proper here to observe that riparian rights in the several states are settled by the respective states for themselves. See St. Louis v. Myers, 113 U. S. 566, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 640; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324; Willson v. Marsh Co., 2 Pet. 245.

In Dutton v. Strong, cited by appellee as an authority in favor of his right to wharf out against his premises, the facts before the court were as follows: The defendant in the court below had constructed a landing or bridge pier in front of his premises, extending to the navigable waters of the lake. Plaintiff's vessel was moored to this pier in a storm, and, by force of the gale, was about to pull down and destroy defendant's structure, when he, after requesting the master of the vessel to detach the same, but who refused to do so, cut the hawser, whereby the ship was set adrift and sunk. Plaintiff sued for the resulting damage. The court held that the defendant had a right to erect the pier where it was, and to protect the same by cutting the vessel's fastenings, even although it was thereby exposed to destruction. Speaking of the origin of riparian rights in this country, Mr. Justice CLIFFORD said: "Our ancestors when they immigrated here undoubtedly brought the common law with them, as a part of their inheritance; but they soon found it indispensable, in order to secure these conveniences, to sanction the appropriation of the soil, between high and low water, to the accomplishment of these objects. Different states adopted different regulations upon the subject, and in some the right of the riparian proprietor rests upon immemorial usage. No reason is perceived why the same general principle should not be applicable to the lakes, although these waters are not affected by the ebb and flow of the tide." We have no doubt of the correctness of that decision, and this court would undoubtedly follow it in a similar case.

The case of Railroad Co. v. Schurmeir involved the title to land on the Mississippi river at St. Paul. Schurmeir's premises were bounded by high-water mark of the river, but the land in front had been filled in and built upon, down to extreme low-water mark; and it was held that he had a right, as riparian proprietor, to the reclaimed land, as against the railroad company. And, at page 289, Mr. Justice CLIFFORD said: "Although such riparian proprietors are limited to the stream, still they also have the sameright to construct suitable landings and wharves, for the convenience of commerce and navigation, as is accorded riparian proprietors bordering on navigable waters affected by the ebb and flow of the tide." But it will be remembered that the same learned judge said in Dutton v. Strong that different states adopted different regulations upon the subject; and no doubt the decision of the case was in no way in conflict with the "regulations" of Minnesota.

The question before the court in Yates v. Milwaukee was as to the validity of an ordinance of the city of Milwaukee declaring a wharf belonging to Yates a nuisance; and it was remarked by Mr. Justice MILLER, in speaking generally of riparian rights on navigable streams, that, whether the title of such owner extended beyond the dry land or not, he has the right of access to the navigable part of the river, and to make a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use, or that of the public, subject to such general rules and regulations as the legislature may see proper to impose for the protection of the rights of the public, whatever they may be, and that it is a valuable right and property, and a right of which, when once vested, the owner can only be deprived in accordance with established law, and, if necessary that it be taken for the public good, upon due compensation.

But if the court in these cases really intended to say that the same rule applied to the shore of the sea, or the arms of the sea, and that a riparian proprietor has a right, as against the state, to erect wharves extending below high-water mark, we cannot see how these can be reconciled with other decisions of the court, especially with that of Hoboken v. Railroad Co., supra. But it would seem, however, that the court in the later case of Weber v. Commissioners did make a distinction between tidal and non-tidal waters; for in that case Mr. Justice FIELD, after approving the doctrine laid down in Yates v. Milwaukee, says: "Nor is it necessary to controvert the proposition that in several of the states, by general legislation or immemorial usage, the proprietor whose land is bounded by the shore of the sea, or of an arm of the sea, possesses a similar right to erect a wharf or pier in front of his land, extending into the waters to the point where they are navigable. In the absence of such legislation or usage, however, the common-law rule would govern the rights of the proprietor, at least in those states where the common law obtains. By that law, the title to the shore of the sea, and of the arms of the sea and under tide-waters, is, in England, in the king; in this country, in the state. Any erection thereon, without license, is therefore deemed an encroachment upon the property of the sovereign, or, as it is termed, in the language of the law, a 'purpresture,' which he may remove at pleasure, whether it tend to obstruct navigation or otherwise." We think the above is a correct statement of the law applicable to riparian rights on tide-waters, and that it is fully supported by the authorities. Gould, Waters, § 167, and cases cited; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Dana v. Wharf Co., 81 Cal. 118; Martin v. O'Brien, 34 Miss. 21. And in this connection it must not be forgotten that in the case of Dutton v. Strong, Railroad Co. v. Schurmeir, and Yates v. Milwaukee, as well as that of Case v. Toftus, 39 Fed. Rep. 730, also cited by counsel, the respective riparian proprietors had already erected their improvements, presumably with the license of the state, and therefore had vested rights of property which it was proper to recognize and protect. This seems to have been the view of Mr. Gould, for, in a note to section 149 of his work on Waters, in which he quotes from the opinion of the court in the case of Yates v. Milwaukee, he uses this language: "In this case the wharf which it was attempted to condemn as a nuisance was actually built."

In Ravenswood v. Flemings, 22 W. Va. 52, which is a well-considered case, it was held, under a law of that state, that a riparian proprietor on a navigable river had no right to build a wharf, ferry, or bulk-head, below high-water mark, without the consent of the town council, and that he might be prevented from so doing by injunction. And in Com. v. Alger, supra, the court, in a most learned and elaborate opinion by Chief Justice SHAW, sustained an indictment against the defendant for extending a wharf beyond the harbor line in the city of Boston, on his own land; and, further, that the statute establishing harbor lines, and taking away the rights of proprietors of flats in the harbor beyond the lines, to build wharves thereon, even when they would be no injury to navigation, and providing for no compensation to such proprietor, was not unconstitutional, as taking private property for public uses without compensation.

We think the authorities abundantly show that a riparian proprietor on the shore of the sea, or its arms, has no rights, as against the state or its grantees, to extend wharves in front of his land below high-water mark.

But, if this were not so, we would still be constrained to hold that appellee has no such rights; for the constitution of the state, which is the supreme law of the land, expressly declares that the legislature shall provide for the appointment of a commission, whose duty it shall be to locate and establish harbor lines in the navigable waters of all harbors of the state, wherever such navigable waters lie within or in front of the corporate limits of any city, or within one mile thereof, upon either side; and, further, that the legislature shall provide general laws for the leasing of the right to build wharves, docks, and other structures, upon certain designated areas, or the legislature may provide by general laws for the building and maintaining, upon such area, wharves, docks, and other structures. Const. art. 15. Nor can the right to wharf out be claimed under the act of the territorial legislature authorizing bank owners to build wharves in front of their premises.

That act was but a license, at most, and, until availed of, was revocable, and the constitution and subsequent laws have abrogated the law.

But appellee claims that he has a vested right to future accretions to his land, and cites as authority to sustain his position the case of County of St. Clair v. Livingston, 23 Wall. 46. And the court in that case does say that the riparian right of future accretions is a vested right. But we are unable to see how one can have a present vested right to that which does not exist, and which may never have an existence. It seems to us that the more reasonable doctrine is announced in the case of Taylor v. Underhill, 40 Cal. 471, in which case the court says: "The plaintiff, as a riparian owner, has also a right to accretions to his land, and it is said the claim of defendant will be a cloud upon his title to such accretions, but, as yet, there is no such property, and there may never be. He cannot ask the court to interfere in advance to prevent a cloud being cast upon his title to that which may never have an existence."

The case of Railway Co. v. Renwick, 102 U. S. 180, cited by appellee, was an action for damages by a riparian proprietor on account of the building of a railroad along the Mississippi river in front of his premises. The court held that the plaintiff could recover, but placed its decision upon a statute of Iowa (1874) providing for compensation to riparian owners in such cases. Previous to this statute it was held in the case of McManus v. Carmichael, 3 Iowa, 1, after an exhaustive review of the authorities, that the title of riparian owners extended only to high-water mark; and in the case of Tomlin v. Railroad Co., 32 Iowa, 109, the court held that "the doctrine deducible from adjudged cases is that, by the rules of the common law, the owner of land along the shore of a navigable river is entitled to no right, either in the shore or waters, as an incident of his ownership, except the contingent ones of alluvion and dereliction. Hence he is not entitled to damages for an improvement made along the banks of such river, by authority of the state, the effect of which is to deprive him of free access to the stream."

The same question was before the court of appeals of New York in the case of Gould v. Railroad Co., 6 N. Y. 522, and was decided the same way. In that case the court said: "The banks of the Hudson river, between high and low water mark, belong to the people, and the riparian proprietor has no better right to the use of it than any other person. If he build on it or erect a wharf there, it would be a purpresture, which the legislature might direct to be removed, or to be seized for the use of the public; or the legislature might authorize an erection in front thereof, as in case of Smith's wharf, on the Thames." And in Stevens v. Railroad Co., 34 N. J. Law, 532, it was held that, although an owner of land adjacent to navigable water is more conveniently situated for the enjoyment of the public easement than others, he has, by virtue of common law, no more or greater rights than the rest of the community. In Langdon v. Mayor, 93 N. Y. 155, it was said that the legislature of the state, where not restrained by constitutional inhibitions, could authorize a boom to be placed across the Hudson river for private use, and that the right of the state to grant the navigable waters, except as restrained by constitutional checks, is as absolute as its rights to grant the dry land which it owns, and that the state holds the public domain as absolute owner, and not as a trustee, except as it is organized and possesses all its powers and property for the public benefit. See, also, Wood, Nuis. (2d Ed.) 538, and notes.

Many decisions of the various state courts have been cited by appellee as sustaining a contrary doctrine to that of the above cases, but we find, upon examination, that they are mostly (especially those referring to riparian rights in tide-waters) based either upon statutes or local customs, and are therefore not precedents binding upon us. Our attention is also called to the English cases of Bucclench v. Board of Works, L. R. 5 H. L. 418, and Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 17 Moak, Eng. R. 51, only the latter of which, however, we have had an opportunity to examine; and in that case the principal question involved was the construction of an act of parliament which distinctly recognized riparian rights in the owner, and which provided (section 179) that "none of the powers by this act conferred, or anything in this act contained, shall extend to take away, alter, or abridge any right, claim, privilege, franchise, exemption or immunity, to which any owner or occupier of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments on the banks of the river, including the banks thereof, or of any alts or islands in the river, are now by law entitled, nor to take away or abridge any legal right of ferry, but the same shall remain and continue in full force and effect as if this act had never been made." The statute is a very broad and comprehensive one; and, as it was not questioned but that Lyons' wharf was erected and used where it was in accordance with the law, the owner was entitled to the "privilege" of continuing to use it, as against the Fishmongers' Company, "as if the act had never been made." Indeed, it was conceded in argument that he had a right of access from the river to the front of his wharf, but it was contended that he had no such right as to the side next Winckworth's Hole, which was merely an inlet from the river. The court held otherwise; and its conclusion was evidently in accordance with the provisions of the act in question, although at variance with the earlier common-law doctrine, as laid down by Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Smith, 2 Doug. 442, in which that eminent jurist held that the king might authorize the erection of a structure in front of defendant's premises, between high and low water mark, in the river Thames, even though the defendant was thereby cut off from the use of his wharf.

The result of our investigation of the authorities leads us to the conclusion that riparian proprietors on the shore of the navigable waters of the state have no special or peculiar rights therein as an incident to their estate. To hold otherwise would be to deny the power of the state to deal with its own property as it may deem best for the public good. If the state cannot exercise its constitutional right to erect wharves and other structures upon its public waters in aid of navigation without the consent of adjoining owners, it is obviously deficient in the powers of self-development, which every government is supposed to possess,—a proposition to which we cannot assent. See Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 349. Nor do we think this view in any way conflicts with the constitution of the state, but, on the contrary, we believe it is in strict harmony with it, when all its parts are construed together. We cannot think that the building by the state or its grantees of wharves, upon shores of navigable waters, would constitute either a taking or damaging of private property for public use, in contemplation of the constitution. See Com. v. Alger, supra.

The next question to be considered is, by what right, if any, do appellants occupy the shore in front of appellee's premises? And in considering this question it must be remembered that the demurrer in this case admits that they have thereon valuable improvements in actual use for commerce, trade, and business, and that said improvements were on said lands on March 26, 1890, the date of the passage of the tide-land act; that said lands are within one mile of the corporate limits of the city of Tacoma; that the harbor lines have not been fixed opposite to said lands; and that the same have not been disposed of by the state. Appellee has never erected any improvements on the shore, but claims that the appellants are trespassers, and that, as against them, he is entitled to relief by injunction. On the other hand, appellants claim to be rightfully in possession of the disputed lands by authority of the act of the legislature above mentioned. Section 11 of this act provides that "the owner or owners of any lands abutting, or fronting upon, or bounded by, the shore of the Pacific ocean, or of any bay, harbor, sound, inlet, lake, or water-course, shall have the right for sixty (60) days following the filing of the final appraisal of the tide-lands to purchase all or any part of the tide-lands in front of the lands so owned: provided, that if valuable improvements, in actual use for commerce, trade, or business, have been made upon said tide-lands, by any person, association, or corporation, the owner or owners of such improvements shall have the exclusive right to purchase the land so improved for the period aforesaid: * * * provided, that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to apply to any improvements made after the passage of this act." We think, by a fair construction of this statute, that appellants are rightfully in possession of the disputed premises, and have a right to maintain their improvements as they were on March 26, 1890, but that they have no right to enlarge their erections prior to such time as they may be authorized to purchase the lands from the state. For the foregoing reasons the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion. So ordered.

HOYT, SCOTT, and DUNBAR, JJ., concur.

STILES, J., (dissenting.) The plaintiff in the superior court, the appellee here, alleged ownership of lots 15, 16, and 17, in blocks 1 and 2, in Wallace's addition to the city of Tacoma; that his lots had a water frontage on Puget sound, a navigable arm of the sea, for a distance of more than 150 feet; that defendants had, about May 1, 1890, taken exclusive possession of the shore in front of his lots, including all the area between high and low water marks, and had placed certain obstructions in the way of his access to the water, and were threatening to increase the obstructions, and refused him any access to the water from his land, or to permit him to enjoy any of his riparian rights. The prayer of the complaint was for a mandatory injunction to secure the removal of the obstructions. The answer admitted plaintiff's ownership to high-water mark, but denied his right of access and all other riparian rights; admitted taking possession of the shore; claimed improvements in actual use for commerce, trade, and business on March 26, 1890, and prior thereto, and the right to purchase the land improved under the act of that date; and alleged the distance between high and low water marks to be not exceeding 250 feet, and from high water to water of the depth of 5 fathoms to be 400 feet. The court below sustained a demurrer to the answer, and the opinion of this court has reversed the ruling.

I think the demurrer should have been sustained—First, for the reason that the allegations of the answer, intended to show improvements March 26, 1890, were not the statements of any fact, but conclusions of law; and, secondly, on the main question, because the law of the case is different from that announced by the court in its decision. This is the first instance in the recorded history of English or American law where private persons, for private ends, have been sustained by a court in taking and maintaining permanent possession of the shore of an arm of the sea, or of any navigable water, to the exclusion of the owner of the bank from passing over it to the water; and if the act of March 26, 1890, has the effect ascribed to it, it is the first act of an English or American legislature, not excepting those of New York and New Jersey, which has ever done so much. The public right in navigable waters, and to the soils underlying them, have been freely regulated and disposed of by both parliament and the legislatures; but both have held sacred the rights admitted to exist in connection with the lands bordering the waters, whether with or without constitutional rules against taking private property without compensation. These rights have been regulated in divers ways proper to their locality, according to the complicated necessities of crowded harbors or the unfrequented shores of remote waters; but while it is true that a few courts have theoretically denied, many have actually upheld them, and no other legislature has ever ignored them. Even the act of the legislature of New York, in 1840, which gave rise to the case of Gould v. Railroad Co., 6 N. Y. 548, made the most ample provision for draw-bridges, so as to continue navigation in bays and streams cut off by the railroads, and for the extension of wharves and docks across the tracks to the river beyond; all of which was in obedience to the settled policy of the state, inaugurated in 1788, which prohibited the sale of any shore lands to other than riparian owners. Rumsey v. Railroad Co., 114 N. Y. 423, 21 N. E. Rep. 1066. Of the other old states, every one, from the Massachusetts colony, in 1641, down to New Jersey, in 1848 and 1869, has similar provisions to those of New York, and a similar policy. Of the younger states, while some have no provisions by statute on the subject, every one which has a statute yields to the shore-owner the right to wharf, and in the great majority of the others the courts have held such a right to exist whenever the question has been presented. I know this argument proves nothing in the face of the claim that it is for every state to settle for itself, through its legislature, what its policy in this regard will be. I adduce it merely by way of offering a reason why this court should be slow to conclude that the effect of the act of 1890 was, and was intended to be, what it has now been decided to be.

We are not a new people. As an organized community we date from 1853. True, the sovereignty was withheld until 1889; but, upon the faith of a policy adopted and placed among the statutes of the territory in 1854, lands were acquired upon the shores of our navigable waters, and improvements made at great cost by private persons,—improvements which had a large share in making it possible for Washington to become a state, but which the principle of the court's decision would render it possible for the very next legislature to sweep out of existence or confiscate without compensation. This was a territorial statute, it is true; but the territory was competent to frame, and did frame, policies in a hundred other particulars between which and this I can see no distinction. If Massachusetts, in 1641, when a mere colony of Great Britain, could absolutely grant away the soil beneath the waters, so as to bind her when she became a state, as well as the state of Maine and New Hampshire; and if the provincial governor of New York could, in 1689, grant to the city of New York the fee of the shore between high and low water marks, whereon are now based some of the most valuable titles in that city and in the world,—it would seem to be no great violation of common sense to say that the territory of Washington could lawfully legislate to the extent of the act of 1854. And who has ever questioned the title to shore lands under the Massachusetts ordinance, or under the Dongan charter of 1689?

But it is said that the constitution, or the act of 1890, or both together, have repealed the act of 1854. Let us see. In the schedule of the constitution, (article 27, § 2,) in obedience to the last clause of section 24 of the enabling act, it was provided that all laws in force in the territory, not repugnant to the constitution, should remain in force until they expired by limitation or were repealed by the legislature; and then there was a proviso "that this section shall not be so construed as to validate any act of the legislature of Washington Territory granting shore or tidelands to any person, company, or any municipal or private corporation." What effect does that proviso have on any such act? It prevents the constitution from "validating" it. If the act was a valid law, it continued so; if it was invalid, it continued the same. Everybody knows that the proviso was aimed at a single case where the legislature of the territory did once attempt to grant shorelands to a railroad company; and it was merely to prevent that act from gathering force from the constitution, so as to render that valid which it was suspected had become or had always been invalid, that the proviso was enacted. The grant was believed to have been a fraud, and dead in law, and the proviso was to prevent its being galvanized into life. But the act of 1854 (Code, § 3271) was not a grant of lands in any sense. This court has said it was "but a license, at most;" and, while I do not agree that the right to wharf out was dependent upon the act, the court's statement is good law, to the effect that it was not a grant of tide or shore lands, and therefore was not covered by the proviso in question. But mark the difference when the constitution touches shorelands covered by patents of the United States, taken and paid for in good faith by settlers. Article 17 treats of tide-lands, and in its second section the state expressly disclaims all title to such patented lands, unless the United States shall set aside the patents as fraudulent. Now, under the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How. 229, these patents, so far as the tide-lands were concerned, were absolutely void, and the lands would have belonged to the state, but for the constitutional waiver made by the people of the state, in their high sense of fairness and justice.

The only other provision on the subject in the constitution is in section 1 of article 17, where the state's ownership of the beds and shores of all the navigable waters in the state to ordinary high-water mark is asserted. But it did not require any such assertion to vest those lands in the state; for by an unbroken line of decisions, from far back of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, the courts have held that this ownership is in the state, thrust upon it as sovereign, in trust for its own people and those of the nation, for purposes of commerce and navigation as natural high ways. It is idle to say that this assertion in the constitution conferred or strengthened the actual title of the state, and this could not, therefore, have been its purpose. But there was a valid purpose to subserve by this assertion, and that was to put it beyond question that in this state the sovereignty assumed was to high-water mark, and not merely to low-water mark. The United States, in all its grants, has conceded that the fast land stops at high-water mark; but in some of the states, as Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Illinois, and Minnesota, the title of the shore-owner has been conceded to extend to low-water, or a certain distance below high-water mark. This concession was by legislation in some states, and by the decisions of courts in others. Meyers v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 266. I hold that it was to place Washington in the rank of the greater number of states which stop the title of the shore-owner at high water that the constitutional assertion of ownership was made, and for no other purpose, since no other purpose could be subserved by it. But mark, again, the care with which this assertion of ownership was coupled with the proviso, "that this section shall not be construed so as to debar any person from asserting his claim to vested rights in the courts of the state." Under the view the court takes of these constitutional provisions, what vested right could there be to which the proviso would apply? It could not have reference to any wharf property erected under the act of 1854, since the court says that act was a mere license; and a mere license is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, and creates no vested right. Kivett v. McKeithan, 90 N. C. 106; Johnson v. Skillman, 29 Minn. 95, 12 N. W. Rep. 149; St. Louis Stock-Yards v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 112 Ill. 384; Cobb v. Fisher, 121 Mass. 169. So the court holds that the right to future accretions is not a vested right, citing Taylor v. Underhill, 40 Cal. 471, although that was merely the refusal of the court to declare a void certificate of purchase from the state a cloud upon plaintiff's right. This leaves nothing whatever for the constitutional provision to act upon, and the language under the court's interpretation is mere sound without any substance whatever.

The article (15) on harbors and tide-waters is nothing more than a limitation upon the legislature prohibiting it forever from disposing of the sea or river beds beyond certain lines in front of incorporated towns. Such lines exist in all important harbors, and are drawn to preserve the public right of navigation. Usually their location is changed from time to time as circumstances require, and it was a change of this kind, fully authorized by the state, that produced the case of Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497. The court seems to construe section 2 of this article as though there were never to be any wharves here except "upon certain designated areas," and that construction is quite harmonious with the views taken of the constitutional scheme as a whole; but, if anything else were necessary to convince one that the whole construction is wrong, this would supply it. Certainly no equally absurd scheme could be contrived, unless some one were to propose that, until the state builds its wharves, all ships must be anchored at the harbor line,—cargo and passengers to get ashore as best they can.

the first thing that attracts attention, as having a bearing on the matter under discussion, is that, for some reason, the law gives the pre-emptive right to buy tide-lands, with certain exceptions, not to the public at large, but to the upland owner; and therein, I maintain, is fashioned the general policy of the state on this subject, which is to enlarge the right conceded to be in upland owners by the act of 1854, and is exactly in harmony with the legislation of every other state in the Union which has lands of this character and laws upon the subject. I say this is the policy, because it is not going outside of proper bounds to further say that, of all the shores of navigable waters within the state of Washington, not one ten-thousandth part will be free from this pre-emptive right of shore-owners or their grantees, under section 12 of the act. This section 12 has some striking language in it, which, to my mind, further shows the policy. Under it, when an abutting owner has attempted to convey tide-lands in front of his uplands, or littoral rights therein, his grantee may purchase the tide-lands to the extent of the tract or rights (littoral rights) so conveyed. Now, what are the "littoral rights" which the upland owner could so convey? Are they what the constitution speaks of as "vested" rights? The mere license under the act of 1854 was not one of them, because a license is personal to the licensee and cannot be conveyed. 13 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 645. What "littoral" right could an upland owner attempt to convey, but his right to wharf out, by way of severance? I confess inability to imagine any other; and if there is no other, and this one has no existence, then the statute has nothing to act upon. But suppose it was the wharf license that was meant, section 12 says nothing about an executed license as the one to be confirmed; and, if this be the littoral right intended, then the legislature did not look upon the act of 1854 as repealed by the constitution. Furthermore, it is hard to see what good the state's deed to the shore-owner's grantee will do for him, whether the littoral right be natural or statutory, if the harbor line area is to be a wall between him and deep water. The state would be driving a hard bargain, indeed, with any such plan of operations, and is not to be suspected of such a scheme. But the most important thing about this section 12 is the legislative admission contained in it that the "land" and the "littoral right" are two so distinct and severable things that they may absolutely belong to different persons by deeds from the state. This is exactly what the doctrine of riparian access and wharfage is, and the justice of the provision made is apparent.

Lastly, touching the proviso of the eleventh section: "That if valuable improvements, in actual use for commerce, trade, or business, have been made upon said tide-lands by any person, association, or corporation, the owner or owners of such improvements shall have the exclusive right to purchase the land so improved: provided, that nothing in this act shall be so construed [as] to apply to any improvements made after the passage of this act." Here, again, the care of the legislature to preserve the right of the upland owner to acquire these lands is manifested most broadly; for, subsequent to the passage of the act no enlargement of the improvements can be made, and the court in its decision so holds. And it is also to be noted that, whereas, the upland owner may acquire all of the tidelands in front of his upland, the improver has the pre-emptive right to nothing but the "land so improved;" so that in this case the appellants' purchase would be limited to the exterior line of their actual works on the 26th day of March, 1890, and the appellee could acquire all in front of them to the harbor line. Now, it was settled in Weber v. Commissioners that a purchaser of tide lands from the state was entitled to none of the rights of a riparian owner. 18 Wall. 57. Upon what consideration, then, was this pre-emptive right conferred upon "improvers?" The act itself furnishes the answer. By section 12, where the upland owner has, by his deed, for a consideration, conveyed his rights away, his grantee will be protected; yet there may be another class who have merit equally as strong as the grantee under a deed. Where the owner of the fee of land has stood by for years, while an adverse claimant under color of title has made valuable improvements, the improvements offset the damages for withholding, pro tanto, (Code, § 541;) and, if the inaction of the owner continues beyond the term of our statute of limitations, the very title is presumed to have passed to the adverse party. An easement, however, of the nature of which the upland owner's rights, both by nature and by statute, largely partake, is much more easily lost. It is lost if the holder of the right does, or permits to be done, any act inconsistent with the future enjoyment of the right. 6 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 147. Therefore, if an upland owner has, in any case, remained passive, while another has in good faith placed erections in the waters in front of him, which have not been abandoned, but are in customary use, the equitable policy of section 12 requires that an estoppel be sustained against the denial of the upland owner that he has conveyed to his permissive improver. The courts, which have often restrained intrusions of this kind, when objected to promptly, would have supported such an estoppel; why, then, should not the legislature recognize it?

But I maintain that the statute did not and could not deprive the upland owner of his full right to move promptly in the courts for the removal of any obstruction to his access to the water, where it was placed there against his will, and under threats of force and violence, as the fact is admitted to be in this case, and that whenever such a state of facts exists any title derived from the state must be held in trust for the upland owner. Such cases are precisely within the principles of Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513, and numerous other cases, where force, fraud, and the misconduct of officers have transferred lands patented by the United States to their rightful owners. Emphasis is laid upon the construction by the last paragraph of the section, where it is provided that nothing in the act shall apply to improvements made after the date of its passage; showing the legislative intention to discourage all scrambling possessions or claims not founded upon the upland owner's deed. Conceding, however, that the act was intended to apply to such a claim as the one at bar, it cannot be regarded in any other light than as showing the intention to make improvements alone the basis for the state's parting with its legal title, leaving the holders of adverse equities to resort to the courts for their enforcement. C. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378. And here the importance attached to a pleading of the facts in the answer appears. None of the material averments of the complaint were denied; for the allegations therein of the plaintiff's various rights were not material. If by nature the plaintiff had the rights claimed, it was not necessary to plead them, and the statute gave him the exclusive right to purchase. The answer was a confession and avoidance in the nature of a plea in bar. But the rules of equity pleading require that a plea in bar shall state the facts upon which the avoidance is claimed, so that the plaintiff may demur to the sufficiency of the facts as constituting a defense. Goodrich v. Pendleton, 3 Johns. Ch. 385; McCloskey v. Barr, 88 Fed. Rep. 165; Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 175; Farley v. Kittson, 120 U. S. 303, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534. This answer alleged that valuable improvements in actual use for commerce, trade, and business had been made upon said lands long prior to the 26th day of March, 1890, and that said improvements were on March 26, 1890, in actual use for commerce, trade, and business, and that the defendants were the owners of, and in possession of, such improvements. These allegations are all but legal conclusions. Poorman v. Mills, 35 Cal. 118; McCloskey v. Barr, supra. The decision says the demurrer admits the truth of these allegations. But a demurrer admits the truth of such facts only as are well pleaded, and not of mere conclusions of law. Of what could these improvements consist that would bring the defendants within the statute? It is clear that there were no docks, piers, wharves, or other conveniences of shipping, because it is declared, in the sixth paragraph, to be the intention of the defendants to erect and maintain such structures in the future. This court says they may not enlarge their present improvements; and their right to wharf out is precluded by the decision in Weber v. Commissioners, and by the fact that either the upland owner or some one else may buy the area in front of them to the harbor line. I conclude, therefore, that there is nothing in the constitution or the statute which is hostile to the doctrine of riparian access and the right to wharf; that, if it is denied tentatively by section 1, art. 17, the proviso leaves it to the courts to say, whether, under the law, such rights exist; and that upon the pleadings the judgment should have been sustained.

The court has found that upon authority a riparian proprietor on the shore of the sea or its arms, has no rights, as against the state or its grantees, to continued access to the water, or to extend wharves in front of his land below high-water mark. In the language of Mr. Lewis, in his work on Eminent Domain, (page 88,) it has done so "by a narrow and technical course of reasoning, based upon the fact that the title to the soil is in the state or public;" and has not, as I conceive, accepted the great weight of authority both in England and America. To my mind, in reaching its conclusion, it has completely ignored the prime common source of the state's title, and of the riparian claim to access, which is that the navigable waters are natural public highways. Yet, as compared with this matter of substance, all questions of reclamation, of accretion, and reliction, of fishery and seaweed, pale and fade into insignificance. It is as highways that the sovereignties of the world, and particularly our own, have any jurisdiction over the navigable waters, differing in any respect from their jurisdiction over the fast land, and their different jurisdiction is of precisely the same character as the jurisdiction over highways upon the land. Under the constitution of the United States, congress has the power to regulate commerce between the states and with foreign nations; but, while under this power it has never yet undertaken to dictate concerning the manner of construction of any land highway not undertaken by itself, it has gone upon the water highways, both tide and fresh, and assumed the broadest control, deepening channels, changing harbors, building dikes, and regulating the building of bridges, in all of which it has been sustained by the supreme court of the United States, solely because the waters are natural highways. But it is at this point that the opponents of the riparian right of access make their strong stand, and where the forces of the parties for and against meet in final conflict; and that the court did not see fit to allude to this phase of the question is greatly to be regretted. For the real question involved here is not whether the owner of upland bordering upon the sea has any adverse claim to the soil under the water, as against the state, but whether, being upon his own fast land, he can step therefrom upon the public highway, and there, as a member of the public, enjoy the public right of passage.

In the case at bar, the appellants, possessing themselves of the exact line which borders the land and the highway, say to the land-owner: "You can reach the water by yonder street, or, if you will wait until we have built a wharf here, you can pass over it at the same rate of toll as any other person. In the mean time you cannot pass at all." The appellants, however, in order to sustain their own position, are forced to maintain the very doctrine they fight against,—that of the right of access. They oppose the upland owner's access, but, having planted themselves in the highway, they propose to build wharves and maintain access themselves. By their improvements they propose to turn the shallows into land, and then will claim that access to the water is necessary to its enjoyment. But here is land formed by nature, that since time was had no other outlet than over the sea, put there by nature as a highway. The land passed from the sovereign owner, by right of discovery the United States, by solemn patent, to the appellee, who is now told that the highway he relied upon is forever closed, without his consent and without any compensation for his loss. Has he been damaged? "Actually; oh, yes," will be admitted by his bitterest opponent; "but not in law, because the title to the land beneath this water is in the state." But wherein does the nature of the state's title to soil under navigable waters differ from that of its title to soil of a land highway? No writer or court that I have been able to consult points out the distinction, if there be one, except the subjection of the state's title in the submerged soil to the constitutional powers of congress. If the purpose to be subserved by the state's holding the two titles are identical, then, viz., the perpetuation of highways, it seems extremely difficult to argue on any secure or even plausible ground that the owner of land abutting on the sea has not the same right of access to and continuance of his highway as his neighbor who abuts upon a land highway. Certainly it is not necessary to argue what the rights of an abutter on a road or street are. The state, or its hand-maidens, the county, township, or municipal corporation, regulate and improve the way, but they cannot destroy it, or injure the abutter's direct access to it from every part of his frontage, without compensation. A late writer on this subject says: "'Once a highway, always a highway,' is an old maxim of the common law, to which we have often referred, and so far as concerns the rights of abutters, or others occupying a similar position, who have lawfully and in good faith invested or obtained property interests, in the just expectation of the continued existence of the highway, the maxim still holds good. Not even the legislature can take away such rights without compensation." Elliot, Roads & S. p. 658.

To illustrate this by more explicit authority: It has long been settled that running a street railroad is a proper public use of a street, when built so as not to interfere unnecessarily with the public right to travel over it; and that the mere erection of such a structure on the surface of the street does not entitle an abutting owner to compensation, even when the fee of the street is in him. But in some large cities it became necessary to have elevated railroads to carry on the traffic. These were authorized by the legislature of New York, with no provision for compensating abutters; and in a very recent case, where an elevated railroad had been built in front of his premises on Pearl street, an abutting owner sued the railroad company for damages. Abendroth v. Railroad Co., (N. Y.) 25 N. E. Rep. 496. The court of appeals in its decision said: "The term 'abutting owner' will be used in this judgment to denote a person having land bounded on the side by a public street, and having no title or estate in its bed or soil, and no interests or private rights in the street, except such as are incident to lots so situated. * * * There is no finding that the plaintiff, or any one of his predecessors, ever had any title to or estate in the land whereupon this street is maintained, or any interest except that of an abutting owner." The court then recalls numerous cases where abutting owners, both in city and country, in England and America, had been allowed special damages for obstructions in highways not opposite their land, and not authorized by legislative enactment, as well as several late cases in that state where the same principle had been upheld, where the obstruction was by legislative authority. Speaking of these last cases, it says: "The judgments for damages which have been recovered and sustained against the elevated railroads do not and cannot rest on the ground that the roads are public nuisances, for they were constructed pursuant to statute; and besides, as before stated, a public nuisance does not create a private cause of action, unless a private right exists and is specially injured by it. The only remaining ground upon which they can and do stand is that, by the common law, the plaintiffs had private rights in the streets before the roads were built or authorized to be built. * * * The constitution of this state provides: 'Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.' It is settled by Story's Case, 90 N. Y. 122, and Labr v. Railway Co., 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. Rep. 528, that such rights as this plaintiff has in Pearl street are private property, within the meaning of the constitutional provision quoted. * * * It follows that the authority conferred by the legislature to construct the road is not a defense to the action." As will be seen, from the decision, so far as the public generally was concerned, no matter how great was the nuisance in the street, it could remain, because the legislature authorized it.

And, while I am so near the subject, I will here refer to the case of Hoboken v. Railroad Co., 124 U. S. 656, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 643, relied on by the court to sustain its decision; for the student of that case, it seems to me, must see that the only matter there in issue and decided was whether the state of New Jersey, as the superior of the city of Hoboken, could wholly destroy the public right of passage over filled-up lands at the end of a street, beyond the end of the street as originally dedicated. No private citizen was complaining, and the court says, on page 693, 124 U. S., and page 656, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep.: "The right insisted upon in these actions by the city of Hoboken is the public right, and not the right of individual citizens claiming by virtue of conveyances of lots abutting on streets made by Stevens or his successors to the title. The public right represented by the plaintiff is subordinate to the state, and subject to its control. The state may release the obligation to the public, may discharge the land of the burden of the easement, and extinguish the public right to its enjoyment. Whatever it may do in that behalf conclusively binds the local authorities, when, as in the present cases, the right of action asserted are based exclusively on the public right." And it might have added that the legislature of New Jersey could have altogether destroyed the corporation of Hoboken, but it could not touch the right of a single lot-owner, corporation or no corporation, to pass from his lot to the street, and thence abroad. The difficulty which the court finds in harmonizing Yates v. Milwaukee and the other leading cases in the United States supreme court with Hoboken v. Railroad Co., vanishes entirely when the right of the state to incur a public highway, or to destroy it altogether, so far as the public right is concerned, is studied in connection with a case like that of Abendroth and the other New York elevated railroad cases, and the same principles are applied to both.

And now, the right to wharf is derived by strict analogy from the abutter's right in connection with a land highway; for no one questions the right of an abutter, where the improved road-way covers but a narrow strip in the middle of the way, to build for himself a convenient means to reach the traveled track over the intervening land; and so, on the water-way, the navigable part of the water is the actual way, to which the wharf is the reasonable means of access. And, as the right of access to the road pertains to every portion of the abutter's front, so the right to wharf belongs to all the riparian owner's front. I know it is said, in response to this, that the abutter cannot charge a toll to any member of the public who goes upon his side-way. Granted; but there is no question here of charging wharfage, which must be always reasonable, and is always under the public control. Transportation Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 699, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732. It was strongly intimated in Yates v. Milwaukee that, whenever the water-way was made navigable up to the line of the upland owner's land, he could then no longer maintain his right to project his wharf. But, except in very contracted waters, the cheaper and more practical way is to build out the wharves, instead of deepening the water. The deprivation of these private rights by the state, for its own public purposes, is the taking of property, whether on land or water, and must be compensated. Why, at this day, are these rights denied? I think this is the reason: Sometimes it happens that it is not necessary, for purposes of navigation, that the water-way should be as wide as nature has made it. Moreover, the waters have washed down the banks, and made shoals and flats, which can be filled up and made fast land, valuable for building, and even farming, purposes. The self-interest of upland owners has led them, in some instances, backed by their lawful riparian rights, to claim substantially the whole beneficial use of the entire area from the high-water mark to the point of navigability, by which means, and the non-assertion of the state's rights, they have filled up the flats, excluded the water, and made land of the whole. In some states, as Rhode Island and Minnesota, this has been conceded to them as a right, and the public has received nothing for its complaisance. This is not justice. The protest against such a monopoly has, as is often the case in such matters, overflowed its proper bounds, and gone to the extent of denying all riparian rights. But there is a middle course, which is the right one in my judgment, and which the courts ought to pursue, as leading to the law of these cases. I regret that the decision here adopted follows one of the extremes, and not the middle course.

I now come to consider the cases cited by the court as requiring its conclusion. Theoretically that is not "land" which is beneath navigable water; from the high-water mark all beyond is water. Grants of land stop at the margin, no matter how shallow or extensive may be the shoals beyond. Yet, although we do not endow the state as an ordinary landlord, we say that the title to the sea and river bottoms is in it. The state holds upland upon the same terms and with the same rights as a private citizen. We enforce this rule, even upon the federal government, in all but the matter of taxation and the right of eminent domain. There was a time when it was thought that the land beneath navigable waters belonged to the United States; but the supreme court in Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan awarded it to the several states. Yet in that great case (3 How. 229) the court said that Alabama held these submerged lands as a part of her sovereignty and jurisdiction, not governed by the common law of England as it prevailed in the colonies before the Revolution, but as modified by our own institutions; and that, "although the territorial limits of Alabama have extended her sovereign power into the sea, it is there, as on the shore, but municipal power, subject to the constitution of the United States, and the laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof." And it is worthy of note that the eminent counsel, who successfully presented that case for the defendant, said: "A right to the shore between high and low water mark is a sovereign right, not a proprietary one. Rivers do not pass by grant, but are an attribute of sovereignty. The right passes in a peculiar manner; it is held in trust for every individual proprietor in the state or the United States, and requires a trustee of great dignity. Rivers must be kept open; they are not land which may be sold. Martin v. Waddell." I think there is a popular idea that Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan in some way involved the question of riparian rights. On the contrary, it was a contest between a patentee of tide-flats from the United States, who was not an upland owner, and a squatter on the tide-flats, who had no license whatever from the state of Alabama. The same repute is true of Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 367. But the case was this: The titles to nearly or quite all the land in New Jersey came from the grantees of the Duke of York, to whom Charles II., in 1664, in consideration of the annual payment of forty beaver skins, gave a charter bestowing upon his royal brother the sovereignty and proprietorship of all the lands, bays, waters, rivers, soils, fisheries, etc., within a vast area. The duke immediately parceled out his domain, under grants equally generous in their terms with that of the king to himself, and under one of these the proprietors of East Jersey became vested with all his rights in the lands and waters about Raritan bay. In 1702 the proprietors surrendered to Queen Anne the sovereignty only, and, by the Revolution, New Jersey became an independent state. The royal grants, however, were respected, and New Jersey had no public lands. The proprietors continued to make grants of lands to colonists, and in a few instances attempted to convey exclusive rights of fishing to individuals in certain defined areas of Raritan bay. In 1821 one Arnold, the possessor of such a fishery, sued one Mundy for trespass in entering the limits of his fishery and taking away oysters. The case was appealed on a judgment for defendant, and is reported in 6 N. J. Law, 1. The ground of the decision was that, although the king of England could by his royal charter grant to a subject an indisputable title to any or all of the fast land, he could not and did not grant one inch of the soil beneath the waters to the Duke of York, because it belonged to the sovereignty, which was held in trust for the common public, and was returned to Queen Anne, to be devolved in turn upon the state of New Jersey. After stating some of the dispositions which the state might make of these soils, the court said: "The sovereign power itself, therefore, cannot, consistently with the principles of the law of nature and the constitution of a well-ordered society, make a direct and absolute grant of the waters of the state, divesting all the citizens of their common right [of fishery.] It would be a grievance which never could be long borne by a free people." In 1824 a statute of New Jersey gave to riparian owners the right to drive stakes in the waters of the bay, in front of their lands, to which to fasten nets, they not interfering with the navigation or any fishery. Waddell drove stakes accordingly, within the lines of a several fishery theretofore granted by the proprietors, and Martin, the grantee of the fishery, brought ejectment. The cause resulted as did Arnold v. Mundy, and reached the supreme court of the United States in 1842, where it was affirmed. The question here was, as in all cases of ejectment, upon the strength of plaintiff's title, and had no bearing whatever upon any riparian rights of the defendant; nor did the fact that the defendant had a license from the state cut any figure in the decision, and the result would have been the same without it. The court said: "From the opinion expressed in Blundell v. Catterall, 5 Barn. & Ald. 287, and in Duke of Somerset v. Fogwell, 5 Barn. & C. 883, the question whether since Magna Charta the king could grant to a subject a portion of the soil covered by the navigable waters of the kingdom so as to give him an immediate and exclusive right of fishery, either of shell fish or floating fish, within the limits of his grant, must be regarded as settled in England against the right of the king." The case of Willson v. Marsh Co., 2 Pet.

245, decided in 1829, merely held that, in the absence of congressional legislation, the state of Delaware could authorize the damming of an inconsiderable, sluggish creek, for the purpose of facilitating the owners of its marshy shores in reclaiming them, so that the health of the community could be bettered; and that a citizen of another state could not complain of the obstruction. McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, (1876,) decided that a state held the tide-waters, and the fish in them, for its own people, and not for the people of another state; and that a statute prohibiting the citizens of any other state from taking the fish was, "in effect, nothing more than the regulation of the use by the people of their common property," and therefore no denial of the constitutional right that the citizens of each state have to all the immunities and privileges of citizens of the several states. Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 824, confirmed the claim of the state of Iowa to the title of the Mississippi to high-water mark; but, as the main point in the case, held that one who has dedicated a street parallel to navigable water cuts himself off from riparian ownership, and yields to the public, in this instance the city of Keokuk, the right to wharf out as an incident of the public use of the street. Barney's contention was that, as owner of the land to the middle of the river, his dedication only extended to the water's edge, and that the filling beyond that line was a trespass on his land. It will be seen from the opinion of the court here that its decision is based mainly upon these United States supreme court cases. It is worthy of remark that they have not been so interpreted in any but a very small minority of the states; and the supreme court itself has never in a single instance based its ruling in a case, where the riparian right of wharfage was in issue, upon any state statute or ascertained custom or usage. In its most clearly cut decision (Yates v. Milwaukee) no such interpretation was allowed to interfere with its declaration of a riparian right of wharfage in Yates, although he was contending, not only against the city of Milwaukee, but against the state of Wisconsin, which had chartered the city, to regulate the wharves on her water front, and herself to build and maintain such aids to navigation at the ends of streets. In Weber v. Commissioners, 18 Wall. 57, notwithstanding the language quoted by the court in its opinion, Judge FIELD distinctly and broadly announced the adherence of the supreme court to the doctrine of Yates v. Milwaukee, and showed that Weber was not a riparian owner. It is worth remembering at this point that San Francisco was the successor of a Mexican pueblo, and that the municipal corporation was the owner of all the land to high-water mark; so that when the state of California fixed the harbor line, and surrendered the tide-lands within it to the city, it was making the surrender to a riparian owner. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530.

Inasmuch as the cases above noted are chiefly relied upon to overcome the force of Dutton v. Strong, Yates v. Milwaukee, and Railroad Co. v. Schurmair, and as none of them involved the matter here in issue, I will briefly allude to these three cases, which it is agreed do touch the point. It is urged that there was a difference between the fresh-water rules and the salt-water rules; or that the upland owner had already built his wharf, presumably under state license; or that there was some unmentioned statute on which the court was relying, etc. But, if any such elements did enter into the consideration of those cases, the published decisions, from syllabus to signatures, including briefs of counsel, fall to note the fact. Their declarations are broad and general, and, if we may rely on anything in judicial decisions, we ought to be able to do so here. Each of the cases was quoted in the succeeding ones, and all have been cited often and again by the supreme court, and by almost every federal and state court. Yates v. Milwaukee is the leader, and that was a case in which the state's authority was indirectly, but very materially, in question. So in Railroad Co. v. Schurmair the defendant had the state's title to the land over which the plaintiff claimed to exercise his right of access. Since those decisions there is, I believe, not a single case in the federal or state Reports where the principles therein laid down are doubted or departed from. On the contrary, they have been often cited always to the effect contended for here, and to the frequent overruling of contrary holdings. It is the same with the law-writers who have embraced this subject in their works, with a single exception. I mention this, not as arguing that numbers make the law, but to show that the profession has not understood those decisions to have been pronounced with any of the qualifications and reservations insinuated here; and I conclude with the proposition, taken from these cases, and never denied by the supreme court of the United States, that a riparian owner on the sea-shore has a natural right of access, and a right to construct a landing, wharf, or pier, for his own use, or for the use of the public, which is a vested right, or appurtenance to his land, under the common law of real property as it exists in the United States, without any reference to statutory license or customary usage. In support of this position I cite Ang. Tide-Waters, 24 et seq., 224 et seq.; Cooley, Const. Lim. (5th Ed.) p. 675, note 1; Ang. Water-Courses, (7th Ed.) 732; 3 Washb. Real Prop. (5th Ed.) 445; Gould, Waters, §§ 148-154; Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 77-89; Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 106; Washb. Easem. (4th Ed.) 324; Houck, Rivers, §§ 280, 281; 6 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 558; 28 Myer's Fed. Dec. tit. "Riparian and Littoral Proprietors;" 3 Kent. Comm. (18th Ed.) p. 413 note; Kerr, Inj. pp. 264, 265. Mr. Wood, in his Law of Nuisances, is, I believe, the only modern text-book writer who maintains the opposite ground. But this author does not attempt to misconstrue Yates v. Milwaukee, or find excuses for this ruling. On the contrary, he attacks it boldly, characterizing the language of it as "mere dictum," and declares the principle established by it as "wholly unsustained by any authority." We are not accustomed to thus lightly treat decisions of that great court, but the attack thus made is admirable for its audacity. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 17 Moak. Eng. R. 51, is also explained away by this court as never before. Mr. Wood found no explanation. He quotes at length from the opinions of Lords CAIRNS, CHELMSFORD, and SELBORNE, and then says: "Thus it will be seen that there is considerable conflict upon the question discussed in the note, but, while we believe that the doctrines advanced in this case are utterly fallacious, and unsustained in principle as they are upon authority, it will not be profitable to pursue the matter further; but, as it is the business of an author to give the law as he finds it, I have felt constrained to give the leading portions of the opinions of the lords justices in the case, that the question may be fairly presented." I take it that the author "gives the law as he finds it" when he quotes the opinion of the two highest courts of the civilized world, although he personally does not agree with the correctness of their decision.

The court assumes that, inasmuch as many of the states have long had statutes regulating the riparian owner's exercise of his right of wharfage, and in many instances enlarging it, therefore his right rests entirely upon the statute of his state. I do not see why it should be so regarded, since we constantly find what has always been the law enacted into statutory form; and we might as consistently say that the state's title to the tide and shore lands is dependent solely upon article 17 of the constitution. It is sufficient to say that the courts of the states alluded to have not taken any such position, and I shall now cite some cases showing this to be the fact. One of the oldest of these statutes is that of Maryland, in 1745; but in Railroad Co. v. Chase, 43 Md. 23, the court said: "These riparian rights, [of accretion and wharfage,] founded on the common law, are property, and are valuable; and, while they must be enjoyed in due subjection to the rights of the public, they cannot be arbitrarily or capriciously destroyed or impaired. They are rights of which, once vested, the owner can only be deprived in accordance with the law of the land, and, if necessary that they be taken for public use, upon due compensation;" citing Yates v. Milwaukee. In New York, although for many years the courts have been handicapped by Gould v. Railroad Co., as a settled rule of property, in Mayor, etc., v. Hart, 95 N. Y. 443, the court said: "But it shocks every notion of justice and right to say that the riparian owner upon navigable water has no equities by reason of that ownership. It is a doctrine which is repudiated by the entire legislation of our state. Granting, as has been held, that the riparian owner has no legal or equitable right enforceable as such against the public right, it is nevertheless true that out of his situation upon the banks, and the convenience and benefit of the water front, he suffers peculiar damage and individual injury when cut off by public use. * * * And whenever and wherever the state has granted to the city of New York exterior lands, under water, it has accompanied the grant with preemptive rights to the adjacent owners. It is idle to say that all this has been done of pure grace, and without any equity in the abutters. There was reason for doing it, and justice in the act." If stronger language was needed to show that the New York court of appeals would now overturn Gould v. Railroad Co., if it could, it is to be found in Rumsey v. Railroad Co., 114 N. Y. 423, 21 N. E. Rep. 1066, and 25 N. E. Rep. 1080. Rhode Island has always maintained the doctrine contended for without reference to any statute. Providence Steam-Engine Co. v. Providence, etc., 8 S. Co., 12 R. I. 348; Clark v. Peckham, 10 R. I. 85. Connecticut in like manner. Simons v. French, 25 Conn. 346; State v. Sargent, 45 Conn. 358. This case contains an eminently fair discussion of the powers of the state. In New Jersey the courts maintained the rule until Stevens v. Railroad Co., 34 N. J. Law, 532, (see Keyport, etc., Co. v. Farmers' Transp. Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 516; Gough v. Bell, 22 N. J. Law, 441; Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. Law, 624,) when in a long discussion, not in anywise necessary to the decision of the case, the court announced that riparian owners had no rights which could be injured by the state, but at the same time sustained a judgment for injuries of precisely the character discussed, in all essential parts. The decision on the main point, for which the case is celebrated, was based on the English case of Duke of Buccleuch v. Board of Works, L. R. 5 Exch. 221, which was reversed afterwards in the house of lords, (L. R. 5 H. L. 418,) and still further overthrown by Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 17 Moak. Eng. R. 51, on the very point relied on. The legislature of New Jersey immediately amended the wrong done by this decision by its act of 1869. Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. St. 21, says: "The state can grant authority to make such erections [of structures below high water] either to the riparian owner or to others, so long as the riparian owner is not thereby deprived of access to and the use of the river as a public highway, which is implied, if not expressed, in the grant to him of the land bounded on the stream." In North Carolina, Bond v. Wool, 12 S. E. Rep. 281, is the latest of several cases on this subject, and there the court said: "In the absence of any special legislation on the subject, a littoral proprietor and a riparian owner, as is universally conceded, have a qualified property in the water frontage belonging by nature to their land; the chief advantage growing out of the appurtenant estate in the submerged land being the right of access over an extension of their water fronts to navigable water, and the right to construct wharves, piers, or landings, subject to such general rules and regulations as the legislature, in the exercise of its powers, may prescribe for the protection of the public rights in rivers or navigable water."

It will be said that the phrase, "in the absence of any special legislation on the subject," means, "unless there be special legislation otherwise;" but it is not so. The sense is, "without any legislation to that effect," and the decision shows it.

Bond v. Wool is supported by decisions in other states, old and new, in numerous cases, of which I mention one or more in each, viz.: In Michigan: Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125; Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 375, 19 N. W. Rep. 103. In Indiana: Bainbridge v. Sherlock, 20 Ind. 364. In Wisconsin: Delaplaine v. Railroad Co., 42 Wis. 214. In Minnesota: Brisbane v. Railroad Co., 23 Minn. 114. In Missouri: Meyers v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 266, affirmed, 82 Mo. 367. In Illinois: Railroad Co. v. Stein, 75 Ill. 41. In Kentucky: Thurman v. Morrison, 14 B. Mon. 296. In Ohio: Hickok v. Hine, 23 Ohio St. 523. In Arkansas: Organ v. Railroad Co., 11 S. W. Rep. 103, and cases cited. In California: Shirley v. Bishop, 67 Cal. 543, 8 Pac. Rep. 82. In Oregon: Wilson v. Welch, 12 Or. 353, 7 Pac. Rep. 341; Parker v. Packing Co., 17 Or. 510, 21 Pac. Rep. 822.

Of these states, at least Missouri, Kentucky, Arkansas, North Carolina, California, and Oregon stop the upland title at high-water mark. Cases to the same undoubted effect in the United States courts are: Bowman v. Wathen, (Ind.) 2 McLean, 376; Packet Co. v. Atlee, (Iowa,) 2 Dill. 479, affirmed, 21 Wall. 389; State v. Railway Co., 33 Fed. Rep. 730; Hollingsworth v. Parish of Tensas, 17 Fed. Rep. 113; Rutz v. St. Louis, (Mo.) 3 McCrary, 261; Transportation Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 699, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732; Potomac Steam-Boat Co. v. Upper Potomac Steam-Boat Co., 109 U. S. 672, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445. In Van Dolsen v. Mayor, 17 Fed. Rep. 817, decided in 1883, the facts were precisely those of the case at bar, and after considering all of the cases, both English, state, and federal, the court holds that the New York elevated railroad cases are decisive of the law in that state, since there is no difference between the principles applying to the land-way and the water-way; and, further, that in view of Yates v. Milwaukee, Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., and other like cases, Gould v. Railroad Co., 6 N. Y. 523; Stevens v. Railroad Co., 34 N. J. Law, 532; Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. 9; and Furman v. Mayor, etc., 10 N. Y. 567,—are no longer to be regarded as controlling. There the lessee of the riparian owner sought an injunction to prevent the city of New York, which was the owner of the land between high and low water, from filling up the flat and obstructing the way, and was held to be entitled to the relief asked.

This court, I think, misreads the case of Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., when it gives importance to the term "privilege," as though the rights sustained in Lyon were a concession of statute or usage merely. On the contrary, each of the lords who delivered an opinion was pronouncedly clear that the right was by nature. Said Lord SELBORNE: "The right of a riparian proprietor, so far as they relate to any natural stream, exist jure naturæ, because his land has, by nature, the advantage of being washed by the stream; and, if the facts of nature constitute the foundation of the right, I am unable to see why the law should not recognize and follow the course of nature in every part of the same stream. * * * Even if it could be shown that the riparian rights of the proprietor of land on the bank of a tidal navigable river are not similar to those of a proprietor above the flow of the tide, I should be of the opinion that he had a right to the river frontage belonging by nature to his land, although the only practical advantage of it might consist in the access thereby afforded him to the water, and the right of navigation common to him with the rest of the public. Such a right of access is his only, and is his by virtue and in respect of his riparian property; it is wholly distinct from the public right of navigation." No other state court has interpreted this case, and the opinions of the judges to mean anything but what they say; and a very high English authority, the Encyclopedia Britannica, cites the case in the concluding words of its article on riparian laws in this way: "It should be noticed that rights of the public may be subject to private rights. Where the river is navigable, although the right of navigation is common to the subject of the realm, it may be connected with a right to exclusive access to riparian land, the invasion of which may form the ground for legal proceedings by the riparian proprietor." Says Judge Dillon, in his Municipal Corporations, § 106: "By the common law the riparian owner has the right to establish a wharf on his own soil, this being a lawful use of the land. The right is judicially recognized in this country, and riparian owners on ocean, lake, or navigable rivers have, in virtue of their proprietorship, and without special legislative authority, the right to erect wharves, quays, piers, and landing places on the shore, if these conform to the regulations of the state for the protection of the public, and do not become a nuisance by obstructing the paramount right of navigation. This right has been exercised by the owners of the adjacent land from the first settlement of the country."

The idea of "purpresture" furnishes forth a great difficulty in the mind of the court. There is a short and comprehensive history of that portentous institution in People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379, from which it appears to be not much more than an ancient prerogative ghost, whose original substance has been completely emasculated by the later law. Sufficient to say that whether the doctrine of purpresture, as applied to wharves extended by riparian owners, has any force in this country or not, it never, in its palmiest days, had the effect of permitting the king to shut off the riparian owner of land from access to the sea by an obstruction of any kind placed in the highway, which is the real ultimate point in issue in this case.

In conclusion, I recur to the act of 1854, to remark that if that act is to be taken as now repealed, and if riparian owners have not the natural right of access and wharfage, then there is not, in the state of Washington, any authority under which the slightest convenience can be erected or maintained in aid of navigation, excepting in front of incorporated towns; and all the accumulations of labor and wealth, already expended by private enterprise in building up a commerce second to none in present importance and future promise, are laid at the mercy of a public policy which has not seen its equal since men began to "go down in ships." For what? To maintain an idea of "legal title" and royal sovereignty, which has been repudiated for generations, and which now at this day says to the common people of Washington: "The shores of your great inland sea, and of your hundred rivers, are walled in by the state until such time as, after survey, appraisement, contests, slow legislative proceedings, and what not, the speculator on your necessities shall have loaded himself with tide-land patents, and fattened with your fees for crossing his 'land.'" The simple logger may not roll the hard-won product of his toil down the slope of his land, and into the water, because some shrewd watcher of the land-office has bought the shore while his back was turned. This is making the waters a public highway with a vengeance. But the illustration is just, because it refers to the very use made every day of our shores in hundreds of places without wharves, docks, or piers, and where there is no question of purpresture, but only the right of access is availed of. It involves the principle of the case in homely, practical form. Conceiving that no such conclusions were necessarily involved in the constitution or the statute, I dissent from the idea that any such policy was intended to be adopted, even though it were lawful to do so.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS—TIDE-LANDS—REMEDY FOR TRESPASS THEREON.

A riparian owner of land bordering on tide-waters cannot maintain ejectment against persons who have taken possession of, and erected buildings on, the land below high-tide mark, the title and power of disposal of which has been reserved to the state of Washington by the constitution. The remedy, if any, is in equity.

Appeal from superior court, Pierce county.

Calkins & Shackelford, for appellants.
Ballard & Norris, for appellees.

ANDERS, C. J. The facts in this case are substantially the same as those presented in the case of Eisenbach v. Hatfield, ante, 539, and by agreement of counsel the two cases were argued and submitted together; and, for the reasons given in the opinion filed in that case, the judgment of the court below should be reversed. But there is an additional reason why appellees cannot prevail in this action. They alleged in their complaint, substantially, that they were the owners of certain lots in the city of Tacoma, bordering upon the waters of Puget sound; that appellants, at a certain time mentioned in the complaint, willfully, maliciously, and unlawfully, and without their consent, took possession of the same, erected buildings thereon, and occupy the same; that they demanded possession of said premises from appellants, who refused, and still refuse, to deliver the same to plaintiffs, and to their damage in the sum of $1,000; and praying for possession of the said premises, and for $500, as attorney's fees, to be taxed as costs, and for further relief. Appellants, defendants below, filed an answer denying the allegations of the complaint, and setting up, as an affirmative defense to the action, that they were occupying the shore between high and low water mark opposite part of the premises described, and that the part of the said shore so occupied by them is within one mile of the corporate limits of the city of Tacoma, and that the title to said shore between high and low water mark is vested in the state of Washington, and by the constitution of said state is reserved from sale, and that the state has power and right to dispose of the possession of said land, and that the plaintiffs have acquired no right to the possession thereof, by lease or otherwise, from the state. Plaintiffs interposed a general demurrer to this answer, which was sustained by the court, and judgment rendered thereon for plaintiffs, from which judgment defendants appeal. We are of the opinion that, upon the pleadings in this case, judgment should have been rendered for defendants. The remedy, if any, of plaintiffs, was in equity, and not by an action in the nature of ejectment. The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to dismiss the action; and it is so ordered. Costs to appellants.

STILES, J. I concur in the result in this case for the special reasons stated in the foregoing opinion.

MACKEY v. MACKEY.

LOST NOTES—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

1. In an action on a note given in payment, among other things, of an antecedent note, the jury having found that its delivery was not, as contended by defendant, conditional on the surrender of the antecedent note, and it being proven that such prior note had not been indorsed, there was no error in refusing to compel the execution of a bond of indemnity against the original note as a condition to recovery on the new note.

2. Newly-discovered evidence, tending to raise a doubt as to the accuracy of plaintiff's testimony that at the time of the giving of the new note he had the old note in his possession, furnishes no ground for a new trial, as it does not tend to support the defense that the delivery of the new note was conditional on the surrender of the old note.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Gilpin county.

Patterson & Thomas, for appellant.
Ed. Hurlbut, for appellee.

BISSELL, C. In January, 1887, James Mackey brought this action against Richard Mackey, to recover upon a promissory note, which was substantially a promise by Richard to pay James $5,000 90 days after the 11th of June, 1883. The defendant admitted the execution of the note, and set up as a defense that it was in settlement of the dealings between the parties, and was intended to pay an antecedent promissory note, as well as other obligations. The only controversy was as to the amount of the original note,—which was either, according to defendant's admissions $3,000 or $3,500, and, according to the plaintiff's contention, $4,000,—and as to the delivery of the paper. The defendant conceded that, if it was the latter amount, the note which was sued on was for the right sum; but he averred and sought to prove that the delivery was a conditional one, and only to be effective upon the production and surrender of the original paper. This controversy was submitted to the jury upon proper instructions given by the court, and they rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for the note and interest. It is not seriously contended that there was no testimony to support the verdict, nor is error assigned upon that ground; but the appellant's contention is that his motion for a new trial should have been sustained. This motion for a new trial was based upon the usual grounds that the verdict was contrary to the law, and unsupported by the testimony, and upon the further ground of newly-discovered evidence, set out in the two affidavits filed in support of the motion. In this court the only part of the motion which is seriously urged as a basis of attack upon the court's ruling is that which relates to the newly-discovered testimony. The record abundantly justifies the action of the court. The only defense offered was that of non-delivery of the paper sued on. The court properly instructed the jury upon this question, and upon the testimony the jury found this fact against the defendant. Under these circumstances, the judgment entered upon the verdict must be sustained, unless the newly-discovered testimony would tend to produce a different result. Viewed in that light, it would evidently be without force. The plaintiff proved that at the time of the execution and delivery of the note sued on it was agreed that he should destroy the original note, so that the defendant could not thereafter be disturbed by suit brought upon it. It appeared that the original instrument was payable to his order; that he had never indorsed it; and that it had remained in his possession, except for a short time, when it was left with another for safe-keeping. This custodian and her husband testified to the possession of the note, and its subsequent surrender to James Mackey. The plaintiff fixed the time of this deposit as prior to the giving of the note in suit. His testimony on that matter was sought to be set out in the affidavits. According to them the plaintiff testified that the deposit had been made at the time of a visit to a place called "Perigo," which was in 1884, and, consequently, after the date of settlement. It is argued that, if these affidavits be true, the note could not have been in the possession of plaintiff at the time that the settlement was made, and, therefore, that the note could not have been destroyed, as he testifies. The affidavits do not in any manner seem to shake the case as made by the plaintiff. In the first place, it does not appear by the record that he testified to the delivery of the note to Mrs. Murphey at the time he went to Perigo with Fallon in 1884. The deposit of the note with Mrs. Murphey, and its return by her, is settled by the testimony of the plaintiff and that of Mrs. Murphey and her husband. Its destruction unindorsed by the plaintiff is not directly disputed, nor is his positive testimony upon this subject at all shaken by anything contained in the record or appearing in the affidavits. The utmost that can be claimed for the new proof is that it tends to raise a doubt as to the accuracy of his statement concerning the destruction of the paper. This, however, in no manner tends to support the defense of the non-delivery or conditional delivery of the promise upon which the suit was brought. On this issue the jury found against the defendant, and the plaintiff had a right to recover, even though the original note had not been destroyed.

The only bearing which this matter can have on the case will be disposed of in the consideration of the other error urged, which is that the court erred in refusing to compel the plaintiff to execute a bond of indemnity against the original note. It is not easy to discover the basis of this contention. It is well settled that an action at law cannot be maintained upon a lost negotiable instrument in the absence of statutory authority. The remedy of the owner of lost paper is in equity, which will only render judgment on the bill on condition that an adequate bond be filed to protect the maker against any subsequent action brought on the instrument. The rule and the doctrine grow out of the essential characteristics of negotiable paper. Under the law-merchant the holder of negotiable paper receiving it before maturity is entitled to receive its proceeds. It would therefore follow that, should the claimant of a lost negotiable instrument be permitted to sue, recover, and collect the amount of the promise, such recovery would be no bar to an action by the holder innocently receiving it before maturity. The whole doctrine controlling the right of action on such instruments springs from this principle. But there are many exceptions to the enforcement of the doctrine. In the first place, even though the instrument might have been payable to order, if it remained unindorsed no right of action can ever pass to any holder of it, and upon proof of this fact a recovery at law without a bond of indemnity is always permitted. 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 1481, 1484; Rowley v. Ball, 8 Cow. 303; Bank v. Tillman, 12 Ala. 215; Hough v. Barton, 20 Vt. 455; Aborn v. Bosworth, 1 R. I. 401. Had the suit been brought on the lost instrument itself, the rendition of judgment without the execution of a bond of indemnity could easily have been sustained, for it was clearly established by uncontroverted testimony that the original note had never been indorsed by the payee, to whose order it was drawn. But no such question necessarily arises in this case. The action was not brought upon a lost instrument; it was brought on a note which was produced in evidence, and on which the judgment was rendered. In what manner the law governing actions on lost instruments could be so far made applicable to this litigation as to require the court to compel the plaintiff to execute a bond of indemnity is not plain to be seen. Did the case require such an unusual extension of the rule, the answer is that there is nothing in the law governing actions on lost instruments calling upon the plaintiff to execute a bond of indemnity before his recovery. The case furnishes three answers to the suggestion: The original note was voluntarily destroyed, and such voluntary destruction would deprive the plaintiff of any right of action on the original instrument; the note had never been indorsed, and no holder of it could acquire a right of action thereon, save subject to the defense of the payment of the recovery in this action; and, lastly, no condition of surrender or destruction was attached to the delivery of this note, according to the verdict of the jury as rendered. This verdict was abundantly sustained by the testimony, and the plaintiff's right of recovery is fully supported by the record. No available error has been assigned by the appellant. The judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

SOLIS CIGAR CO. v. POZO et al.

TRADE-MARKS—INFRINGEMENT—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE—DECEIVING THE PUBLIC.

1. A trade-mark, consisting of the picture of a tobacco plant and the words "Fabrica Tobaccos," which together had been in common use in the tobacco business, with the words "El Cavo" above, and beneath the words "De R. Solis," "Habana," "Copyrighted," "R. Solis, Manufacturer, Denver," is not infringed by a label having a similar picture, the words "Fabrico Tobaccos" on either side of the picture, the words "El Cavo," and beneath the words "De Pozo & Suarez," "Habana," and "Pozo & Suarez, Manufacturers, Denver, Colo.," since, taken as a whole, they are not so similar that a purchaser using ordinary care and caution would likely mistake the one for the other.

2. After adoption of the original label by R. Solis, the Solis Manufacturing Company was incorporated, and R. Solis, who became its manager and largest stockholder, turned over to it his whole business, good-will, and trade, and, although there was no formal transfer of the trade-mark, the corporation continued its use. Held, that the corporation would not be denied relief against a third person on account of the condition of the title.

3. The presence of the word "Copyrighted" on a label, when in fact it had not been copyrighted, was not such a misrepresentation as would prevent the owner's receiving protection.

4. The use of the word "Habana" on a label, when in fact the cigars on which the label appeared were merely Havana filler, is such a deceit on the public that equity will furnish no relief against an infringement.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court of Denver.

In January, 1887, the Solis Cigar Company filed their bill against Pozo & Suarez, seeking to restrain them from interfering with a trade-mark which the company claimed to own, and to recover damages. It appears that several years prior to the alleged infringement R. Solis had been a manufacturer of cigars in Denver, and had adopted the brand to which the company claim title. The corporation was organized after the adoption of the brand. Mr. Solis became a large stockholder in it, turned over to the corporation his whole business, good-will, and trade, and became the manager of it. It sufficiently appeared that the company succeeded to whatever rights Solis had, and, while he made no formal transfer of his trade-marks, he turned over to the company all his rights of that description. The two brands, so far as they can be described without pictures, are as follows: The Solis brand was a picture of a tobacco plant, with a foreground of land, a background of water, with sky in the distance, and flowers on the stem projecting above the leaves. On the top of the label were the words, in capitals, "EL CABIO." A little over one-third of the way down, and on either side of the picture, were the words, in capitals, "FABRICA TOBACCOS," and below and underneath those "DE R. SOLIS." Resting on the ground was the word, in capitals, "HABANA," and below that, in smaller type, the word "Copyrighted." At the bottom of the label were the words "R. Solis, Manufacturer, Denver." The type in which this label was printed was clear cut, with fancy lines and terminals to various of the letters, as in E, L, and C, etc.; the cross, for instance, on the middle stem of the E was an upright line, terminating in a scroll at either end. These were the characteristics of the type used on that label. The other label was a picture of a tobacco plant, topped with three flowers, instead of seven, which were on the first brand, but without a visible stem. The plant rested on the ground, with some growing plants underneath, but there was no water in the background, nor any sky. It was simply the plant on a blue background, which was the prevailing color of the El Cavo brand. On either side of the flowers were the words "EL CAVIO," and on either side of the plant, arranged as in the other brand, were the words "FABRICO TOBACCOS," and beneath them "DE POZO & SUAREZ." Below the plant was the word "HABANA," in capitals; and at the bottom of the entire label were the words "Pozo & Suarez, Manufacturers, Denver, Colo." The type of the two brands was totally dissimilar; that of the El Cavo brand being fanciful, and the other plain and unornamental.

It appeared in evidence that the plaintiff had made large sales of cigars in boxes with its brand on. Proof was offered of some sales of cigars under the brand complained of as an infringement; but there was no proof of any sales of the one for the other, nor that any purchaser was deceived by the resemblance in the labels. The case was equally silent as to any interference with the plaintiff's trade growing out of the use of the label by the defendants. The intention of the defendants to pirate the plaintiff's brand was shown, but upon the question of the difference in the quality of the two brands of cigars there was a conflict of testimony. The cigars which were sold under the plaintiff's brand, according to his own testimony, were made of what is known to the trade as "Havana filler, seed binder, and Sumatra wrapper." The only portion of the cigar which was made of the Havana tobacco was the filler. The binder was of domestic production, and the wrapper was of tobacco imported from the island of Sumatra. This seems to have been a matter well understood by the trade, for the cigars were not sold to the wholesale dealers as cigars made wholly of Havana tobacco, but were sold as seed Havana cigars. According to the evidence, the trade never labels domestic cigars, or cigars made partially of domestic tobacco, as seed Havana, but labels all cigars, both those made of Havana filler, seed binder, and Sumatra wrapper, and those made entirely of Havana tobacco—filler, binder, and wrapper—as Havana cigars, preserving the distinction in their dealings with each other by calling the first "Seed Havana," and the last "Clear Havana." From the labels the public cannot determine whether the cigar is made wholly of Havana tobacco, grown on the island of Cuba, or is a mixture of imported and domestic tobacco; nor do the labels signify to what extent Cuban tobacco is used in the manufacture. The words "Fabrica Tabacos" and "De R. Solis," are simply the application of the use of the Spanish language in the brand, and mean the manufactured tobacco of R. Solis. The words "El Cavo" have a direct significance, and mean either a small door, or a little window in a door. The words "El Cavo" have no recognized significance, although there was some testimony which indicated that they meant a sort of a little apple tree growing in the Asturias. On this point, however, the testimony was not satisfactory. Upon the conclusion of the testimony the bill was dismissed, and a decree entered accordingly. This is assigned as error, and the plaintiff appeals.

W. S. Decker and A. B. McKinley, for appellant.

BISSELL, C., (after stating the facts as above.) The right which a manufacturer has in a trade-mark is everywhere recognized as property. The mark may consist of a name, or a device, or a peculiar arrangement of words, or such words with some device of greater or less novelty, which have been applied to a manufacture to designate the goods as made by a particular person. When a manufacturer has thus distinguished the goods he makes by a peculiar device, so that they may be known in the market as his, he thereby acquires the right to whatever profits may result from his superior skill, knowledge, or honesty of process; and this right may not be impaired by any piratical use of the devices which serve to mark them, and lead the public to think that they are his. The legal right to the use of the trade-mark springs from its usefulness to point out the original ownership of the article to which it is affixed, or to give notice to the public who is the producer. From this right the power of legal protection is derived. The first difficulty which arises here is to determine the question of infringement. Exact similarity is not necessary. To insist on that would be to permit most wrong-doers to evade responsibility. Colorable imitations are as much the subject of legal redress as the more exact and perfect similitudes. What is necessary in all cases is a similarity which will operate to convey a false impression to the ordinary purchaser, and serve to deceive and mislead him. The rule is grounded as much on the notion that the public is to be protected as on the theory that the inventor may have the exclusive benefit of the reputation acquired by the thing which he has produced. For this reason it is always essential to show that the imitation is of a character to escape the ordinary care and caution used in the purchase of the articles protected. The case made is not brought within the limits of this rule. It is difficult to declare the legal extent of the plaintiff's right. The words "Fabrica Tabacos" are words of common use in the tobacco trade, and have been, for many years, in Spanish-speaking communities, applied to all known manufactured products of the plant. Alone they could not be the subject of a trade-mark. Gilman v. Huunewell, 122 Mass. 139. Had these words, or the picture, been novel, and used in combination without more, some basis might be found for the claim that they made a trade-mark. But the picture of the plant, in connection with these or similar words, has been for many years used to designate the manufactured article. The two alone would not, under the testimony, serve the purpose. To all this was added the cabalistic words "El Cavo" and the name "De R. Solis." As a whole, there was produced that which would constitute a trade-mark according to accurate legal definition. When, however, the whole was looked at, there was no room for the deception of the purchaser by the use of the piratical design—the El Cavo brand. Doubtless it was designed and selected without the honesty of purpose which usually animates all fair business competition. It seems to have been chosen to gain some possible advantage; but it does not come up to the necessities of the rule. "El Cavo" alone, were the words "El Cavo" all of the device, might have infringed. Had the words, with the picture, together, constituted the trade-mark, then the infringement might have been complete; but it took the words, the picture, and the words "Fabrica Tabacos" and "De R. Solis," to make the brand. In that complained of there were the words "El Cavo," the picture of the tobacco plant, and the words "Fabrica Tabacos De Pozo & Suarez." In either case, the whole taken together constituted the device. It is unnecessary to discuss the lack of similarity in the pictures; for, while one was artistic and pretty, with its land, water, and sky, and the other was a pictorial failure, and nothing but a naked plant of poor design and in-artistic finish, there was enough resemblance to deceive. To each, however, is attached the name of the manufacturer in bold type. If the purchaser was looking for the "El Cabello de Solis," he would not be misled by the "El Cabello de Pozo & Suarez." It is agreed by all the authorities that the court will not restrain a defendant from using a label on the ground that it infringes the plaintiff's device, unless the trade-mark, taken as a whole,—words, pictures, lines, and devices,—are so similar that the purchaser, using the ordinary care and caution which may be expected of the purchasing public, would likely mistake the one for the other. This cannot, on the case as made, be held to be likely to occur. No purchases of one for the other were shown, nor was any proof of that sort offered. It did not appear that any trade had been lost; nor that any customer, retail or wholesale, had been misled. While in this class of cases actual damage need not be shown in order to recover for the piracy, yet it is a strong circumstance to influence the court on a bill for an injunction, filed before the right has been established by an action at law, especially where the infringement is more speculative than absolute. There was a clear failure of the strong proof which courts of equity require before they grant injunctive relief. McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245; Blackwell v. Wright, 73 N. C. 810; Popham v. Cole, 66 N. Y. 69; Gilman v. Hunnewell, supra.

On the trial of the case the court denied the injunction, and placed the decision on the principle that, to entitle a complainant to the protection afforded by the exercise of equitable powers, the device which served to inform the public must be honest, not only in its suggestions of place of manufacture, and persons producing, but in the statements of the composition and material of the product. The rule was accurately stated, and the only question is as to the applicability of the doctrine. It was manifest that the original trade-mark had been adopted by R. Solis. He had devised and applied it to the El Cabello brand of cigars. The Solis Company, however, by transfer and succession came into the right to use the brand. After the organization of the company, by the consent and procurement of the original owner, who was the largest individual stockholder of the concern, they continued the use of the mark. It is true that there was no formal transfer of the right, but the circumstances clearly manifest the intention of the parties, and the case becomes one of a continuing trade-mark in the possession of a corporation which succeeded to all the rights, good-will, and trade of the former owner. In such a case the corporation would be treated as the equitable owner. At any rate, the respondent could not be heard to complain, and the plaintiff would not be denied relief on that ground.

The other branch of the question—deceit of the public—is not so free from difficulty. If it be conceded that the trade-mark tended to deceive the public in any material particular, the relief must be denied. Below the picture of the tobacco plant it will be remembered were the words "Habana," "Copyrighted." They were words of definite meaning to the trade, and probably of equally certain significance to the public. They were not, however, as is clear from the evidence, of the same import to each class. The word "Copyrighted" meant the same to everybody. It implied that the protection of the statute applicable to such matters had been secured. This was probably believed to be true, but was without foundation. The misrepresentation, however, was unimportant. It did not tend to deceive the public in respect to any of those matters with which the law concerns itself. The public might buy with the same reliance on all the representations as to the place of production and ownership whether the marks were protected by the statute or guarded only by the appropriation and user of its owner. This element would neither be considered nor depended on by the purchaser, whether he was in or out of the trade. With regard to the word "Habana," the case is not so easy of settlement. This was expressive of a quality, and an absolute representation of the material of which the cigars were made. Some sorts of deception may be practiced without loss of right to the legal protection usually given this species of property. It is possible for the proof to show that the public received an erroneous impression, which would not of itself, be sufficient to destroy the validity of the trade-mark. Neither need the deception be of such a character as to work a positive injury to the purchasers to deprive the user of his exclusive privilege. In the first case it must not concern any of the essential particulars which the trade-mark protects, and in the latter it must not be absolutely false as to any of its leading elements. Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450; Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436. That the representation made by the trade-mark as to the materials of which the cigars were made are of the sort which the law says must appear to be absolutely truthful, where its protection is sought, there can be no question. They are of what is by all the authorities recognized as the substance of the device. Such words are used to lead the public to believe that the articles sold possess certain qualities known to belong to such material. They are used to influence the public to buy because of the public taste for such things. It seems clear that under the proof this case is brought within the full scope and application of this principle. The word "Habana" must be taken as a part of the mark which the plaintiff wants protected. It is on a conspicuous part of the label. It is in large, bold-faced type, to catch the eye of the purchaser. It is evidently designed to attract his attention. Like the other words, it is Spanish, and commonly used in the country where that sort of tobacco is grown. The whole purpose of the manufacturer was evidently to lead the public to believe that the cigar was made of that tobacco which is so much sought after and preferred by the smoking public. Yet it was not wholly true. The plaintiff admitted that the cigars sold under that brand were made of Havana filler, seed binder, and Sumatra wrapper. Nothing but the filler came legitimately within the definition of Havana tobacco. It clearly appeared that there was a broad distinction made in the trade between seed, seed Havana, and clear Havana cigars. One was made wholly of domestic tobacco; one of domestic and imported Cuban and Sumatra tobaccos; the third of tobacco wholly grown in Cuba. Only the last was sold as clear Havana, and that was always sold by the use of the word "clear" joined to Havana. It is evident that custom would not permit the trade to be deceived. Strict honesty was observed in all dealings with wholesale purchasers, but little attention was given to the opinions of the purchasing public. They were neither expected to know, nor was it desirable that they should learn. The maker was wholly indifferent to the impression which they might receive. Such a course is in contravention of the principles observed by courts of equity in the administration of this branch of the law. These courts have adopted rules which are founded in honesty and good sense, and which are designed to rebuke fraud, and encourage fair dealings with the public. Judged by these rules, as they have been communicated and applied, this case had no standing in court, and the bill was properly dismissed. The judgment should be affirmed.

RECORD ON APPEAL—COLLECTION OF TAXES—PROCESS.

1. In replevin of a team of horses from a tax-sale, the abstract on appeal omitted the tax schedule, exemptions of the assessment roll, bill of sale from the treasurer, and the exhibits produced in the trial court. Held, that the record did not set forth sufficient facts to a full understanding of the questions presented for decision, as required by statute.

2. A warrant to collect taxes is not a "process," within the meaning of the provision of the constitution relative to judicial proceedings, and it is not essential to its validity that it shall run in the name of the people.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Larimer county court.

W. T. Hughes, for appellant. J. M. Breeze, D. E. Parks, and H. B. Johnson, for appellee.

RICHMOND, C. This was an action of replevin instituted by Haley as plaintiff in the justice's court, subsequently appealed to the county court of Larimer county, where judgment was rendered against the plaintiff, to reverse which he prosecutes this appeal. The appeal was perfected under the act of 1885. The undisputed facts are that plaintiff was the owner of two horses, and that on or about November 30, 1886, L. H. Breeze, the then county treasurer of Routt county, seized the horses for an alleged tax due said county, and sold the same at a tax-sale, the defendant becoming the purchaser. Thereafter plaintiff instituted this suit in replevin to recover the horses, claiming that no tax was due from him to the county; that his property was never valued or assessed; that there was no meeting of the board of equalization; that the tax proceedings and sale were void; and that no title passed to defendant as purchaser at the tax-sale. The contention of appellant is that, he having proved ownership, it was the duty of the defendant to establish title as purchaser, by showing that the tax was due, and that all of the proceedings in the assessment, levy, and sale were regular and valid. The cause was tried in the court below, and it appears that several exhibits, numbered from 1 to 5, were introduced on the part of defendant, and, in addition thereto, a bill of sale, executed in due form by the treasurer of said county to him, as purchaser, was also introduced. Upon the testimony and exhibits the court below found for the defendant, and entered judgment against plaintiff for costs. Whether this finding and conclusion of the court were correct or not it is absolutely impossible for us to determine from the abstract and record in this case, the appellant having failed to submit in his abstract the exhibits produced in the court below. The act under which this appeal was prosecuted provides that the cause shall be submitted to the supreme court upon printed abstracts of the record, setting forth so much thereof as may be necessary to a full understanding of the question presented for decision, and no more. The act further provides for additional and amended abstracts in case the parties differ as to the correctness or sufficiency of those supplied. But one abstract is filed, and that by the appellant, and it does not contain enough to enable us to say whether or not the defendant below failed to show title as purchaser at the tax-sale, conceding it was his duty to do so. The tax schedule, exemptions of the assessment roll, bill of sale from the treasurer, and other papers are omitted from the abstract, which we think it was the duty of the appellant to submit. It is not incumbent upon this court to look beyond the abstract of record for the purpose of determining the controversy, nor are we at liberty to do so. The statute required that sufficient shall be submitted to enable the court to fully understand and determine the question presented for its decision. Hurd v. McClellan, 13 Colo. 7, 21 Pac. Rep. 903. But fairness to appellant's counsel probably requires that we should notice, regardless of the imperfect abstract, one point urged for reversal. The abstract contains a copy of the tax-warrant under which the property in question was levied upon and sold. This warrant did not run in the name of the people, and counsel insists that it was for this reason void, and the sale thereunder was therefore a nullity. The listing, valuation, and tax levy have been likened to a judgment; and the "warrant to collect" has been spoken of as somewhat analogous to an execution. But we do not think counsel's present objection well taken. The constitutional provision upon which he relies is found alone in the judiciary article of that instrument; and, in our judgment, the word "process" is there used solely with reference to judicial processes, i. e., processes issued in ordinary judicial actions, proceedings, or prosecutions. Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 Mich. 579; Wisner v. Davenport, 5 Mich. 501. The appeal should be dismissed, without prejudice.

BISSELL and REED, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion the appeal is dismissed, without prejudice.

NEGLECT—PLEADING—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—NONSUIT.

1. In an action for negligence, a general allegation of negligence does not charge any fact.

2. In an action for negligence, where it is alleged defective machinery was used, proof of the use of a "team" instead of machinery does not tend to support the plaintiff's allegation. A "team" is not a machine.

3. When it appears from the evidence on the part of the plaintiff that the injury which the plaintiff received was the result of an accident, or that it occurred through his own carelessness and inattention to his duties, no recovery can be had, and nonsuit in such case ought to be allowed.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

This is an action to recover damages for alleged negligence. The complaint, among other things, after alleging that the defendant is a corporation, and the plaintiff was in its employ about the 2d day of October, 1890, proceeds as follows: "That while he was so engaged in the erection of said tank through the negligence and carelessness of said defendant, and through the use of defective machinery by defendant, which defect in the machinery so used was unknown to this plaintiff, the said timbers employed in the erection of said tank fell upon this plaintiff, and seriously and severely hurt and injured him about the legs and arms and shoulders, causing him to become unconscious, and, as a consequence thereof he has been confined in bed in a hospital for a period of more than three weeks," etc. Issue was taken upon all the facts alleged, and upon a trial before a jury the plaintiff had a verdict for $1,000. The defendant moved for a new trial, and, as a condition for overruling said motion, the court required the plaintiff to remit $500, which was done, and then a judgment was entered for the plaintiff for $500, from which this appeal is taken. After the plaintiff had rested his case in the court below the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which being overruled, an exception was taken. The other facts appear in the opinion.

R. Mallory, for appellant. N. D. Simon, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The particular structure upon which the plaintiff was working at the time of the injury complained of was the frame necessary to support a water-tank. This is the plaintiff's statement at the trial of the injury, and how it occurred: "When we got the bent together, when we got everything ready to raise it, the engine did not come along in time. There was a team there that was used to haul sand, and he [Martin, the foreman] said we would hook that team on it, and raise it with them. He did hook the team on it, and started to raise it up, and they could not raise it, and he told us all to come and give the team a lift. There were five of us, and we came, and gave the team a lift to raise it up. We got it raised two or three feet, and it came back on us; and then he said for a couple of us to go and get a couple of shores, and put under it, and hold it up. So two men got sticks, and put under it, and they raised it so they could help with the shores, and they put them under, and caught it. The team hauled it a piece, and then they would catch it with the shores. The team hauled it a piece further, and got it quite a ways up, and it stopped again. And he said, 'Some one go and get a long shore.' I went and got a stick 2x8, 16 feet long, and they raised it; and I caught it the first time, and held it, and they started again. The next time they started the team it come back, and I did not catch it, and the shores were too far, and it tipped over on me." The plaintiff's counsel claims, in effect, on the argument in this court, that a general allegation of negligence and carelessness was sufficient; but that contention cannot be sustained. Such allegation does not charge a fact. Woodward v. Navigation Co., 18 Or. 289, 22 Pac. Rep. 1076. This leaves nothing upon which a recovery could be predicated but the charge for defective machinery. What particular machinery was used, or in what the alleged defects consisted, is not alleged; but conceding, as the defendant made no objection on the ground of this uncertainty, that he ought not to be permitted to raise it, now, for the first time, the question of fact arises necessarily on the motion for a nonsuit, and this brings us to the main question in this case. On the argument here the only defective machinery claimed to be in the case was the team hitched to the end of the rope, and used for the purpose of lifting the bent. The court instructed the jury that, as the team performed the office of a machine, it was to be regarded as one; and the respondent's counsel contended that, if this team was unable to lift the bent by hauling at the rope, the allegation of the use of defective machinery was made out. We are unable to concur in this view. A "team" is in no sense "machinery," any more than a man would be hauling at the same rope; but without placing our decision on this question alone, we have carefully viewed all the evidence offered by the plaintiff, and, giving full effect to every inference which might be drawn from it, it is not shown that the defendant was negligent. So far as appears, due care was used about the work by the defendant, and the injury which the plaintiff received was either the result of an accident, for which no one is responsible, or his own carelessness and inattention in failing to have his shore in proper position to receive the bent when the horses stopped pulling. If the shore which plaintiff held had been in proper position, then there can be no doubt the bent would have rested upon it, and the injury would not have occurred. For this unfortunate circumstance it is certain the defendant is not responsible. It violated no duty it owed to plaintiff. We have not thought it necessary to consider or decide the other question argued by the appellant's counsel, which is that the defendant was not doing the work when the injury occurred, and that the plaintiff was not employed by it at the time, for the reason that the other questions are decisive of the case. The judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to allow the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

STOKES v. BROWN et al.

VARIANCE—WHEN MATERIAL—PROOF.

1. No variance between the allegations and proof is material unless the adverse party is misled to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense on the merits.

2. Whenever a party claims to be misled, that fact shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court, and unless he does so the court may either direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or order an immediate amendment without costs.

3. When the allegation is unproved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its entire scope and meaning, it shall not be deemed a variance, but a failure of proof.

Appeal from circuit court, Clatsop county; FRANK J. TAYLOR, Judge.

C. W. Fulton, for appellants. F. D. Winston, for respondent.

BEAN, J. This is a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey real estate. The complaint was filed on the 31st of December, 1889; and on the ——— day of ———, 1890, the issues being joined, the cause was referred for the purpose of taking testimony. The complaint avers that on the 21st day of August, 1889, the defendants, for and in consideration of the sum of $100, executed and delivered to plaintiff their agreement in writing, wherein they covenanted and agreed to sell and convey to plaintiff block 23 in the town of Williamport upon the payment to them by plaintiff of the sum of $200 within 90 days thereafter; that on November 16, 1889, plaintiff tendered to defendants the sum of $200, and demanded the conveyance of said land in accordance with said contract, but they refused to accept the money or make the conveyance. The answer denies that the contract was made on the 21st day of August, 1889, or upon any other date or time mentioned in the complaint, or that the tender was made on the 16th day of November, 1889, or upon any other day or time set forth in the complaint. Plaintiff offered in evidence before the referee a contract in writing, executed by defendants, which is the same as alleged in the complaint, except that it is dated June 20, 1889, and is in favor of J. J. Stokes & Co. An objection was made to the admission of this contract in evidence, because it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. From the evidence it appears that at the time the complaint was drawn the contract was misplaced, and hence the mistake; but before the taking of testimony was begun, it was found, and a copy delivered to defendants' attorney. The evidence also shows that at the time the contract was made plaintiff was doing business under the name of J. J. Stokes & Co., and that the tender was made on the 18th day of September, 1889, in place of November 16th, as alleged in the complaint. When the cause came on for trial in the court below plaintiff asked leave to amend his complaint by conforming it to the facts proved; but his application was denied, and the complaint dismissed, on the ground that there was a material variance between the contract alleged in the complaint and the proof. The complaint does not aver the contract in extenso, but according to its legal effect. The variance claimed is that the contract offered in evidence is in favor of J. J. Stokes & Co., in place of J. J. Stokes, as alleged, and is dated June 20, 1889, in place of the 21st day of August of the same year. It is argued for respondent that this variance is fatal, and the contract should not be admitted in evidence. If the statute of this state has not changed the rule which is to govern in this case, the objection is well taken, and the court below was clearly right in holding that there was a fatal variance. The authorities are uniform to the effect that where a writing is the foundation of a suit or action the description thereof contained in the complaint must be proved as laid, and, where the instrument offered in evidence varies from the one pleaded, this variance renders it inadmissible, unless the rule has been changed by statute. Many of these authorities were cited by respondent's attorney on the argument. The statute of this state, however, contains provisions on the subject of variance applicable to all actions, and if they establish a different rule from the one recognized in the cases relied on by respondent we are bound to apply it. It is provided, in the first place, that no variance between the allegations and proof shall be deemed material unless it have actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense on the merits; and whenever it shall be alleged that a party has been so misled, that fact shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court, and in what respect he has been misled; and thereupon the court may order the pleadings to be amended upon such terms as shall be just. Hill's Code, § 96. It will be observed that it is not left to the judgment of the court whether, in a given instance, the variance was calculated to mislead, but that fact must be proved to the satisfaction of the court. Where the variance is not material, as above provided,—that is, where the party has not proved that he has been misled,—the court may either direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment, without costs. Id. § 97. But where the allegation is unimproved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its entire scope and meaning, it shall not be deemed a variance, but a failure of proof. Id. § 98. These provisions have materially changed the rule of evidence, and it does not now depend upon the incoherence of the two statements upon their face, but upon proof allunde, as to whether the party has been misled to his prejudice by the incorrect statement.

In this case the defendants did not offer any proof of the character required, nor did they claim that they had been in any way misled. In fact, from the record it affirmatively appears that they had full knowledge of the contract plaintiff was relying on, before any testimony was taken in the case whatever, and were furnished with a copy thereof. They both testified as witnesses, but did not undertake to deny the execution of the contract, or make any defense thereto, except that the tender was not made within the 90 days specified in the contract. They contented themselves by relying upon their objection to the admissions of the contract in evidence, claiming that the contract alleged in the complaint is different from that offered, and hence insisting that the proof was not within the issue. If, then, the discrepancy in the contract alleged and the one offered in evidence was a variance, as defined by the provisions of the statute above cited, it should have been regarded as immaterial, and the only question here is whether it was a fault of that kind, or a failure of proof, as defined in section 98. That it was an immaterial variance under the statute of this state, we think does not admit of serious question. Dodd v. Denny, 6 Or. 156; Henderson v. Morris, 5 Or. 27; 1 Rum. Pr. § 540; Catlin v. Gunter, 11 N. Y. 368; Place v. Minster, 65 N. Y. 89; Harvester Co. v. Clark, 30 Minn. 308, 15 N. W. Rep. 252; Kopplekom v. Huffman, 12 Neb. 95, 10 N. W. Rep. 577. In general terms the "scope and meaning" of the allegation in the complaint are that defendants agreed in writing to sell and convey by warranty deed to plaintiff block 22 in Willamport within 90 days from the date of the contract on the payment to them by him of the sum of $200; that he tendered the money within the time specified in the contract, but defendants have refused to convey the land to him according to agreement. The contract offered in evidence is the same, in terms, as the one the legal effect of which is averred in the complaint. The property, the consideration, the terms of contract, the time of payment, and the parties are the same, and the only difference is the date, and that the contract is in favor of J. J. Stokes & Co., who is really the plaintiff. This is a variance in some particulars only, and not in the entire scope and meaning of the complaint. If defendants were in any way misled by the discrepancy between the allegations and proof, they should have made that fact appear to the court; and, not having done so, the variance must be considered immaterial, and the facts found according to the evidence. It was said by counsel for respondent on the hearing that the evidence did not show that the tender was made by plaintiff within the time provided in the contract. We have examined the testimony on this question, and, if it be conceded that time is of the essence of the contract, we think plaintiff has shown by a decided preponderance of the evidence that the tender was made within the 90 days provided in the contract. The decree of the court below will therefore be reversed, and a decree entered here as prayed for in the complaint.

STEEL V. HOLLADAY.

EXECUTORS—COMPENSATION—EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES.

1. No commission can be allowed an executor on property which never came into his possession, nor on property which, although it belonged to the estate, has not been administered on, and is not under the control of the probate court.

2. Unusual and extraordinary services of an executor, for which the court is authorized to allow compensation, are such services as are not ordinarily required of an executor, in the discharge of the duties of his trust.

3. The claim of an executor or administrator for unusual or extraordinary services should contain a statement of each special service claimed to have been rendered, with its particular value, and, until such an account is presented, no allowance should be made therefor.

4. An executor is entitled to reasonable attorney's fees in any necessary litigation or matter requiring legal advice or counsel.

5. A claim of an executor for attorney's fees should ordinarily be presented in an itemized form, and not for an aggregate amount by the year, but, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, this rule ought not to be enforced.

6. It is the duty of an executor to keep and render a just account of his trust, and, if he thinks proper to keep a clerk for that purpose, he must do it at his own expense.

W. W. Thayer and E. B. Williams, for appellant. Geo. H. Williams and A. H. Tanner, for respondent.

BEAN, J. By the last will and testament of the late Ben Holladay, the appellant, Joseph Holladay, was appointed executor of his estate. His right to act as such was contested, and finally sustained in this court. Holladay v. Holladay, 16 Or. 147, 19 Pac. Rep. 81. On the 11th day of April, 1888, he duly qualified and continued to act as such executor until May 31, 1889, when he was removed, on the petition of Esther Holladay, widow of Ben Holladay, by the county court of Multnomah county, for neglecting to file an inventory and appraisement of the property belonging to the estate, and the respondent, James Steel, appointed as administrator thereof. On an appeal to this court the decree of the county court was affirmed. In re Holladay's Estate, 18 Or. 168, 22 Pac. Rep. 750. On May 20, 1890, appellant filed his final account as such executor, in which he claimed an allowance of $10,000 for attorney's fees, $7,912 as compensation for his own services, and $700 for the services of a clerk. The respondent, as administrator, contested his right to an allowance for any of the items claimed by him, except the sum of $2,000 for attorney's fees, and on a trial in the county court he was allowed $4,916.66 for attorney's fees, but nothing for either of the other items. On an appeal to the circuit court the decree of the county court was affirmed, and hence this appeal. At the time of Mr. Holladay's appointment as executor all the property belonging to the estate of Ben Holladay was in the possession of himself and one George Weldler as receivers, and Mr. Weldler as trustee, and continued in their possession until after Mr. Holladay was removed as executor; so, as a matter of fact, no property whatever was reduced to his possession as executor. The compensation of an executor, unless provided in the will, is fixed by statute, and he is entitled—First, to all necessary expenses incurred by him in the management and settlement of the estate, including reasonable attorney's fees in any necessary litigation or matter requiring legal advice or counsel; second, his commission on the whole estate accounted for by him; and, third, such further compensation as may be just and reasonable for any extraordinary and unusual services not ordinarily required of an executor in the discharge of his trust. Hill's Code, §§ 1178, 1180. No property belonging to the estate came into the possession of appellant as executor, and none is accounted for by him, so there is nothing upon which his commission can be estimated or determined. No commission can be allowed on property which never came into the possession of the executor, nor on property which, although it belonged to the estate, has not been administered on, and is not under the control of the probate court. 2 Woerner, Adm'n, § 528. Although the estate of Ben Holladay was the owner of a large amount of property, it was in the possession of receivers, and neither the appellant, as executor, nor the county court, had any control over it.

The amount of the commission of an executor is a mere matter of mathematical calculation, based upon the whole estate accounted for by him, and, until he has possession of some property and accounts for the same, there is nothing upon which to base such calculation; so that, on the record before us, appellant is entitled to no compensation whatever, unless it be for extraordinary and unusual services not ordinarily required of an executor. The claim presented by him is a general one for $5,000 per year, without in any way specifying the special service rendered or the particular value thereof. The fees provided by statute are to be deemed ample compensation for an executor, except in unusual cases, and when he is required to render extraordinary services not ordinarily required of an executor. His additional compensation, if any, is within the discretionary power of the court to allow, and, when a claim is made therefor, it should be scrutinized with care, and never allowed unless the court is satisfied that it is just and reasonable, and the services for which it is made should be stated and particularly set forth, in order that the court may know precisely for what services the extra compensation is asked, and the heir, creditor, or other persons interested in the estate may be informed so as to know what items, if any, they may desire to contest. In Wisner v. Mabley's Estate, 70 Mich. 271, 38 N. W. Rep. 202, it is said: "And no such account for services should be allowed without such statement is furnished by the executor or administrator of the estate." So in May v. Green, 75 Ala. 167, SOMERVILLE, J., said: "The record fails to disclose any special or extraordinary services for which the administrator was entitled to compensation. Proof, moreover, should have been made of each special service with its particular value, and the whole should not have been aggregated by mere estimate without being itemized." To the same effect, see 2 Woerner, Adm'n, § 529; Miller's Ex'x v. Simpson, (Ky.) 2 S. W. Rep. 171. The record before us does not disclose that appellant performed any services not ordinarily required of an executor, but, as he says, they were "in managing the property and correspondences in regard to claims." These are services that usually fall within the ordinary routine of administration, and for which no extra compensation is allowed. What is "extraordinary and unusual services" will depend largely upon the peculiar circumstances of each particular case, and the allowance of compensation for such services is largely in the discretion of the court; but, before the court can allow anything therefor, the claim should be itemized, and each special service rendered, with its particular value stated, so that the court may act intelligently in the matter, and be able to deal justly both with the estate and the executor. The claim presented in this case is for the aggregate sum of $7,912, without giving the items going to make up the amount, nor is the proof any more definite. The only witness who testifies in regard to the value of the services is the appellant himself, and he places them at $5,000 per year, without attempting to give each special service, with its particular value, as the law requires he should do before being allowed anything therefor. It is true the record shows that appellant devoted a great deal of time to the business of the estate, and it seems but just that he should receive a reasonable compensation therefor, which no doubt he would be allowed if the services were unusual or extraordinary, within the meaning of the law, (a question, however, which is unnecessary for us to decide,) on the presentation of a proper account. But he has accounted for no property belonging to the estate, and therefore is not entitled to the commission allowed by law, and the services rendered by him were not unusual and extraordinary, unless the peculiar condition of the estate rendered them so, and, if they were, neither the claim presented, nor the proof, furnishes any basis upon which his compensation can be ascertained. To allow an aggregate claim of an executor against an estate for extraordinary services, supported alone by his opinion as to the aggregate value of his service, would violate all the rules of both justice and law, and throw the door wide open for unscrupulous executors and administrators to rob and plunder the estates of their decedents.

We pass now to the claim for attorney's fees. That an executor is entitled to reasonable attorney's fees, in any necessary litigation or matter requiring legal advice or counsel, is not denied; nor is it denied that the employment of Mr. Williams as attorney by appellant was necessary and proper; but it is claimed that the services rendered were not reasonably worth the sum charged therefor. At the time of Mr. Holladay's appointment as executor the business of the estate was very much complicated. The assets, consisting of stock in various corporations, and large bodies of real estate in different parts of the state, were in the hands of receivers. The estate was largely indebted to various and sundry persons, both in and outside of this state, the aggregate amount of which was near $500,000, and the estate was supposed to be insolvent. In this condition of affairs Mr. Holladay was unable to secure the services of an attorney who would undertake the laborious and exacting duties required, and look to the estate for his compensation. He was therefore compelled to pledge his own personal credit, in order to secure the services of an attorney at all, which he did by employing Mr. Richard Williams at the agreed compensation of $5,000 per year. Mr. Williams continued to act as his attorney until his discharge, and it is clear, we think, from the evidence, that the services rendered by him were reasonably worth the amount agreed upon. It is so testified by Mr. Williams, as well as Judge Bellinger, who was particularly conversant with the vast and conflicting interests involved, and the complicated nature of the business. Indeed, it is not seriously contested by respondent, but it is claimed in his behalf that an itemized account for such services should have been rendered, and, until this is done, the executor is not entitled to an allowance therefor. The general rule undoubtedly is that all claims against a decedent's estate should be presented, if possible, in an itemized form, and it would have been much more satisfactory in this case if that had been done. The court should ordinarily refuse to allow an executor credit for alleged expenses in the settlement of the estate unless the account is definite, and the services proved to have been actually rendered and reasonably worth the sum charged. Such is the general rule, and courts should be slow to depart therefrom. But we think, under the peculiar facts of this case, the court, sitting as a court of equity, should not allow this wholesome rule to be invoked to defeat a just claim. The reason of this rule rests with the jealous care with which courts guard the estates of deceased persons, to prevent the allowance and payment of unjust and unreasonable claims. It requires each item of the alleged claim to be stated, with its particular value, so that the executor, and all persons interested, may have a full opportunity to resist the payment of such items thereof, if any, as may be desired. But when the reason for the rule does not exist, the rule itself should not be operative. It would be impracticable, if not impossible, for an attorney of an executor, engaged in the management of an estate, as vast and complicated as the record shows this one to have been, to render an itemized account for his services. Almost his entire time was occupied in consultation with the executor, and matters connected with the estate. Claims aggregating large sums, and involving intricate and complicated questions, were presented for examination and investigation. Suits and actions against the estate, on alleged claims amounting in the aggregate to near $150,000, were being prosecuted in both the state and federal courts. Some of these alleged claims grew out of transactions which took place in other states, rendering a vast amount of correspondence and investigation necessary in order to prepare for the defense of the actions brought thereon. From the time of the application of appellant for the appointment as executor until his final discharge, the estate seems to have been constantly harassed and annoyed by suits, actions, and proceedings in the courts. It was highly important that he have the advice and assistance of an attorney, and the contract with Mr. Williams was made in good faith, and the services faithfully rendered, and reasonably worth the sum agreed upon. The estate received the benefit, and it would now be unjust and inequitable to require Mr. Holladay to pay from his private funds for the services of Mr. Williams rendered him as executor, or any portion thereof, simply because an itemized account has not been kept or rendered.

The claim of $700 for the services of a clerk was properly disallowed. The record does not disclose that Mr. Holladay paid out any money whatever for clerk hire, nor that he obligated himself to do so. The person whom he claims acted as his clerk was in the employ of the mill company at a salary of $125 per month, during the time he charges the estate with $50 per month for the services of the same person, and does not appear to have been employed by the executor, and, besides, "it is the duty of an executor to keep and render a just account of his trust; and if he is incompetent or too indolent to do so, and thinks proper to keep a clerk for that purpose, he must do it at his own expense." Teague v. Dendy, 2 McCord, Eq. 459; Logan v. Logan, 1 McCord, Eq. 1; Lucich v. Medin, 3 Nev. 93; In re Moore, (Cal.) 13 Pac. Rep. 884. It follows, therefore, that the decree of the court below must be modified so as to allow appellant for attorney's fees from the 11th day of October, 1887, to the 31st day of May, 1889, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and in all other respects affirmed, and that appellant recover his costs and disbursements in this court and the court below.

COULTER v. PORTLAND TRUST CO. SAME
v. RASH. SAME v. WARNER.

POWER OF ATTORNEY—CONSTRUCTION—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—PAROL EVIDENCE—NOTICE.

1. When an authority is conferred upon an agent by a formal instrument, as by a power of attorney, there are two rules of construction to be carefully attended to: (1) The meaning of the general words in the instrument will be restricted by the context, and construed accordingly; (2) the authority will be construed strictly, so as to exclude the exercise of any power which is not warranted, either by the actual terms used, or as a necessary means of executing the authority with effect.

2. Where one person deals with another, knowing that the other is acting under a delegated authority, it is his duty to inform himself of the extent of such delegated authority. In such case the principal is bound only to the extent of that authority.

3. "Sale" is a word of precise legal import, both at law and in equity. It means at all times a contract between parties to give and pass rights of property for money which the buyer pays, or promises to pay, to the seller for the thing sold.

4. When an agency is created by written instrument, the general rule is that the nature and extent of the authority must be ascertained from the instrument itself, and cannot be enlarged by parol evidence of an intention to confer additional powers, because that would contradict or vary the terms of the written instrument.

5. When a party claims title to real property, and the deeds through which he claims show an infirmity in such title, he is chargeable with notice of the state of his own title, and of every fact appearing in any of the deeds through which he derails title.

Appeals from circuit court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

This is an action of ejectment brought to recover certain real property in the city of East Portland. The complaint is in the usual form, and contains all the allegations required by the statute. The answer traverses plaintiff's allegations, and then alleges title in the defendant. Upon the trial in the court below the plaintiff introduced the record evidence of his title by mesne conveyances from Elijah B. Davidson and wife, the original donees of the United States, and rested. The last conveyance in his chain of title was a deed of bargain and sale, with covenants of general warranty, from Howard H. Palmer, dated March 24, 1890. The defendant, also claiming title through Howard H. Palmer, offered in evidence a power of attorney from him to his wife, R. A. Palmer, as follows: "Know all men by these presents, that I, Howard H. Palmer, of Murray, Idaho, have made, constituted, and appointed, and by these presents do make, constitute, and appoint, R. A. Palmer, in the county of Multnomah, Oregon, my true and lawful attorney for me, in my name, place, and stead, to transact any business whatever in a lawful manner, in connection with or necessary to the buying, selling, transferring, or mortgaging real estate, in said county and state, including the signing of all necessary papers, in order to transact any such business relating to real-estate transactions, also including the sealing and acknowledging the execution of said papers, and the delivery of the same. Giving and granting unto my said attorney full power and authority to do and perform all and every act and thing whatsoever, requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises, as fully, to all intents and purposes, as I might or could do if personally present, with full power of substitution and revocation; hereby ratifying and confirming all that my said attorney or her substitute shall lawfully do, or cause to be done, by virtue thereof. In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and seal this seventeenth day of March, A. D. 1887. HOWARD H. PALMER. [Seal.]

[Seal.] Executed in the presence of W. G. JENNE, J. V. ALLEN,"—which instrument was acknowledged before W. G. Jenne, notary public for Oregon, March 22, 1887, and recorded at 4:50 P. M., November 23, 1888, on page 448 of Book 108, Deed Records of Multnomah county. Defendant next offered in evidence the following instrument, as executed under the authority conferred by said power of attorney: "Know all men by these presents, that we, Howard H. Palmer and R. A. Palmer, his wife, in consideration of one dollar to us paid by W. G. Jenne, and for the further consideration that the said W. G. Jenne hereby assumes the responsibility of providing a suitable and comfortable home for and of properly clothing Nellie Palmer, the daughter of the said Howard H. Palmer and R. A. Palmer, until the said Nellie Palmer (now nearly three years of age) shall reach the age of 18 years, do hereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey to said W. G. Jenne, his heirs and assigns, forever, the following described parcel of real estate, to-wit: [description of premises in dispute:] containing eleven and one half (11½) acres, exclusive of a road to run across said tract north and south, and to be thirty (30) feet wide. Together with the tenements, * * * and also all our estate * * * therein or thereto, including dower and the right of dower; to have and to hold the same to the said W. G. Jenne, his heirs and assigns, forever. And we, Howard H. Palmer and R. A. Palmer, do covenant with the said W. G. Jenne and his legal representatives, forever, that the said real estate is free from all incumbrances, save and except one mortgage for six hundred ($600) dollars, and interest thereon, in favor of the Solicitor's Company, and recorded in the records of said county and state; and that we will, and our heirs, executors, and administrators shall, warrant and defend the same to the said W. G. Jenne, his heirs and assigns, forever, against the lawful claims and demands of all persons whomsoever, except as above specified. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals this 22d day of November, A. D. 1888. HOWARD H. PALMER. [Seal.] By R. A. PALMER, his Attorney in Fact. R. A. PALMER. [Seal.] Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of W. H. NORMAN, J. C. MCGREN,"—which instrument was acknowledged by R. A. Palmer, both as wife and attorney in fact of Howard H. Palmer, November 22, 1888, and recorded next day at 4:50 o'clock P. M., Book 110 of Deeds, on page 44. Plaintiff objected to the admission of the deed in evidence, as unauthorized by said power of attorney and void on its face. It was conceded at the trial that defendant had succeeded to whatever title passed to W. G. Jenne by this deed, and it offered no other documentary evidence. But the defendant offered oral testimony to prove certain alleged facts, which it claimed would affect the operation of this power of attorney and deed in respect of their passing the title in said premises from Palmer to Jenne. The plaintiff objected to such testimony as incompetent and irrelevant, and excepted to its admission by the court. He also excepted to the findings of fact based thereon as unsupported by any competent or sufficient evidence, and as themselves incompetent and irrelevant.

"(1) That the first of said actions is brought to recover possession of the following described tract of land: [Here follows a description of the property, as set forth in the complaint.] (2) That the parties to said action, plaintiff and defendant, both claim title to the premises in each action involved, by deed from Howard H. Palmer, a former owner thereof. (3) That all said lands were portions of a larger tract, prior to the 29th day of January, 1887, owned by one Susan E. Jenne, who on said day conveyed all said larger tract of land to one William G. Jenne, her son, for the purpose of having the same divided among her children, of whom Rhoda A. Palmer, the wife of said Howard H. Palmer, was one; that, at the time of the execution of said conveyance by said Susan E. Jenne, she gave verbal direction to the said William G. Jenne in regard to the apportionment of her said lands among her children, and verbally stated to him that her daughter, Rhoda A. Palmer, should have no portion of said land, but that he should convey to said Howard H. Palmer the share to which his wife, as the child of the said Susan E. Jenne, would otherwise be entitled; that, in pursuance of said direction, the said William G. Jenne conveyed to the said Howard H. Palmer in fee all the lands in said actions involved; and that said Howard H. Palmer paid no consideration therefor. This last-mentioned conveyance is the source of title to said lands derived by the said Howard H. Palmer. (4) That thereafter the said Howard H. Palmer executed to his wife, the said Rhoda A. Palmer, a power of attorney bearing date March 17, 1887, and acknowledged March 22, 1887, wherein and whereby he empowered the said Rhoda A. Palmer, in his name, place, and stead, to 'transact any business whatever in a lawful manner in connection with or necessary to the buying, selling, transferring, or mortgaging real estate,' in Multnomah county, state of Oregon, 'including the signing of all necessary papers in order to transact any such business relating to real-estate transactions, also including the sealing and acknowledging the execution of said papers, and the delivery of the same;' that said instrument was witnessed and acknowledged so as to entitle it to be recorded, and was on November 23, 1888, duly recorded in the office of the recorder of conveyances for said Multnomah county. (5) That at some time prior to the 22d day of November, 1888, the said Howard H. Palmer and Rhoda A. Palmer had executed to the Solicitor's Company a mortgage upon the land conveyed to the said Howard H. Palmer by the said William G. Jenne, to secure a loan of $600 made by said company, which money was sent to the said Rhoda A. Palmer, in Idaho, by W. G. Jenne. (6) That on said 22d day of November said Rhoda A. Palmer, assuming to act as attorney in fact for said Howard H. Palmer, under said power of attorney, on his behalf and on her own behalf, executed to the said William G. Jenne a deed purporting to convey in fee-simple all the lands involved in these three actions, exclusive of a road across said tract north and south, to be thirty feet wide, upon an expressed consideration of one dollar, 'and for the further consideration that the said W. G. Jenne hereby assumes the responsibility of providing a suitable and comfortable home for, and of properly clothing, Nellie Palmer, the daughter of the said Howard H. Palmer and R. A. Palmer, until the said Nellie Palmer (now nearly three years of age) shall reach the age of eighteen years;' said conveyance shall also contain a covenant of general warranty of the title to said premises, and also a covenant that 'said real estate is free from all incumbrances, save and except one mortgage for six hundred ($600) dollars, and interest thereon, in favor of the Solicitor's Company;' that said conveyance was duly witnessed and acknowledged, so as to entitle it to be recorded, and it was on the 23d day of November, 1888, duly recorded in the office of the recorder of conveyances of said Multnomah county. (7) That on the 4th day of February, 1889, said W. G. Jenne, with his wife, executed a deed, purporting to convey in fee-simple the tract of land involved in the first of the actions above set forth to the defendant the Portland Trust Company of Oregon, for a consideration of $300 per acre, and thereafter said company executed to the defendants Rash and Warner deeds purporting to convey in fee-simple, as portions of the land to it conveyed, the tracts to which they respectively make claim of title. (8) That, at the time of the execution of said several conveyances, none of the defendants had any knowledge or notice of matters affecting the title to the lands to each conveyed, except as appeared from the record of conveyances. (9) That, from the purchase price of the lands conveyed by the said William G. Jenne to the said Portland Trust Company of Oregon, said company retained the amount due upon the mortgage to the Solicitor's Company, above mentioned, and therewith satisfied the same. (10) That the sum of one dollar mentioned in the deed of the 22d day of November, 1888, from the said Howard H. Palmer and Rhoda A. Palmer to the said William G. Jenne, was never paid, but that the said William G. Jenne took charge of the child in said deed mentioned from the date of its execution until the month of March, 1890, when she was taken from his custody upon proceedings in an action of habeas corpus instituted by the said Howard H. Palmer against the said Wm. G. Jenne in this court. (11) That the said Rhoda A. Palmer died on or about the 17th day of December, 1888, and that from the date of the execution of the conveyance from William G. Jenne to Howard H. Palmer, above mentioned, to that of the death of the said Rhoda A. Palmer, the said Howard H. Palmer allowed the said Rhoda A. Palmer to control the land to him conveyed as aforesaid, and executed with her such instruments in relation thereto as she desired to have executed, and that the intent of the said Howard H. Palmer in executing said power of attorney was to enable his wife to manage and control the lands above described, in any manner that she might determine. (12) That the said Howard H. Palmer was not within the state of Oregon at the time of the execution of the deed by Rhoda A. Palmer as his attorney in fact to William G. Jenne, and did not know of the execution of said deed, or of any of said transactions connected with or relating to said premises, occurring after the execution of said power of attorney and mortgage, in March and April, 1887, until July, 1889, and that he never ratified the same. (13) That on the 24th day of March, 1890, the said Howard H. Palmer executed to the plaintiff a deed purporting to convey in fee-simple all the lands above described, in consideration of the sum of one hundred dollars paid by the said plaintiff to said Palmer, but that said Palmer still retains an interest in said lands; and that said consideration was a nominal one, and said conveyance was executed solely to vest the title to said lands in the plaintiff." These findings of fact were followed by conclusions of law in favor of the defendant, upon which judgment was entered, from which this appeal was taken. The other facts appear in the opinion.

W. W. Thayer and J. F. Watson, for appellant; Williams & Wood, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The first question to which our attention will be directed is the construction to be given the power of attorney executed by Howard H. Palmer to his wife, R. A. Palmer, on the 17th day of March, 1887. By that instrument he created R. A. Palmer his true and lawful attorney in fact, and empowered her to transact any business whatever in a lawful manner, in connection with or necessary to the buying, selling, transferring, or mortgaging real estate in said county and state, including the signing of all necessary papers, in order to transact any such business relating to real-estate transactions; also including the sealing and acknowledging the execution of said papers, and the delivery of the same. In this case there is no question as to the power to buy or mortgage real estate, because the agent did not assume to act under the power created by those words. The only question that we need to consider is the extent of the agent's power conferred by the words "selling" or "transferring." Gouldy v. Metcalf, (Tex.) 12 S. W. Rep. 830, is a recent case on this subject. In that case the attorney was authorized by the power "to buy, sell, and exchange property, to receive and receipt for money, to sell and dispose of property, to give bills of sale thereto, or to sell and transfer real estate, and to execute deeds thereto, or to do and perform any lawful act in or about or concerning my [the principal's] business, as fully and completely as if I were personally present;" and the court held that this did not authorize the attorneys to execute an assignment of the principal's property for the benefit of his creditors. In passing upon this question the court said: "The language used in the grant of general power is certainly very comprehensive, but the established rule of construction limits the authority derived by the general grant of power to the acts authorized by the terms employed in granting the special powers. When an authority is conferred upon an agent by a formal instrument, as by a power of attorney, there are two rules of construction to be carefully attended to: (1) The meaning of the general words in the instrument will be restricted by the context, and construed accordingly. (2) The authority will be construed strictly, so as to exclude the exercise of any power which is not warranted either by the actual terms used, or as a necessary means of executing the authority with effect. Ewell, Evans' Ag. 204, 205; Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120." So in Holbrook v. McCarthy, 61 Cal. 216, which was a sale of land under a power of attorney, the terms of which were not followed, and the court held the act of the agent of no binding force upon the principal. So, also, in Morris v. Watson, 15 Minn. 212, (Gil. 165,) the agent had a general power to sell and convey real estate, and, assuming to act under such power, he mortgaged it, and the court held the act void. So, in Bank v. Gay, 63 Mo. 33, the agent had authority to use or sign the principal's name for the purpose of obtaining accommodation at a bank, which of necessity, remarked the court, authorized the execution of a note, and that the law would give effect to such purpose in the usual and ordinary way, but that such power did not authorize the execution of an instrument which was not a commercial note. The only departure claimed was that the agent signed his principal's name to a paper in all respects a promissory note, except it contained a clause for the payment of attorney's fees, if placed in an attorney's hands for collection; and the court held this provision destroyed its character as a promissory note, and that, as against the principal, it was void. This case would seem to the writer to be an extreme case, but it illustrates to what extent and how jealously courts scrutinize the acts of agents done in excess of their authority. So in Dozier v. Freeman, 47 Miss. 647, it was held that where one person deals with another, knowing that the other is acting under a delegated authority, it is his own folly if he does not inform himself of the extent of the delegated authority. In such case the principal is bound only to the extent of that authority. And Society v. Poe, 53 Md. 28, is to the same effect. So, also, in Pollock v. Cohen, 32 Ohio St. 514, it was held where authority to perform a specified act, in specified modes, is conferred upon an agent by a regularly executed power of attorney, and general words are also used, the general words are limited by and to be construed with reference to the modes specifically named. And an able elementary writer says on this subject: "It results from the rules of interpretation applied to the construction of powers of attorney that where authority is given to perform specific acts, and general terms are also employed, the latter are limited to the particular acts authorized by the power." Section 359, Devl. Deeds. These principles are declared and illustrated by other cases. Bank v. Aymar, 8 Hill. 262; Wanless v. McCandless, 38 Iowa, 20; Tappan v. Morseman, 18 Iowa, 499; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. 495; Billings v. Morrow, 7 Cal. 172; Rountree v. Denson, 59 Wis. 522, 18 N. W. Rep. 518; Story, Ag. § 72; Whart. Ag. § 227.

2. The authorities cited conclusively settle in what light a power of attorney is to be viewed, and how construed, and it only remains to ascertain in what manner Mrs. Palmer proceeded in the execution of the power conferred upon her. On the 22d day of November, 1888, she proceeded, assuming to act under this power of attorney, to execute to her brother W. G. Jenne a deed in the name of Howard H. Palmer and herself, whereby, for the consideration of one dollar, and "the further consideration that the said W. G. Jenne hereby assumes the responsibility of providing a suitable and comfortable home for and properly clothing Nellie Palmer, the daughter of said Howard H. Palmer and R. A. Palmer, until the said Nellie Palmer (now nearly three years of age) shall reach the age of eighteen years," did thereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey to said W. G. Jenne, forever, the real estate in controversy. Was this a sale? It is said in Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 11 Pac. Rep. 820, that an agent authorized to sell and convey the property of his principal cannot, as against the principal, convey it in trust, for the payment of his own debts, to one who has notice of the terms of his agency. It was said in Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 544: "'Sale' is a word of precise legal import, both at law and in equity. It means, at all times, a contract between parties to give and pass rights of property, for money, which the buyer pays or promises to pay to the seller for the thing bought and sold." And it was said in Mora v. Murphy, (Cal.) 23 Pac. Rep. 63: "A power to sell and convey is prima facie a power to sell for money, usually for cash paid;" and it is further said: "To give it any other meaning, it must be by some usage or custom in the country where the power is to be exercised, modifying the prima facie significance of the power conferred." So in Benj. Sales, (section 1,) which defines the requisites of a sale, "that it may be defined to be the transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing, for a price in money;" and in section 2 it is observed, in considering the price, "that it must be in money paid or promised accordingly, as the agreement may be for cash or a credit sale; but if any other consideration than money be given it is not a sale." The principle is announced in Huthmacher v. Harris, Adm'r. 88 Pa. St. 491; Bigley v. Risher, 63 Pa. St. 152; Tied. Sales, § 1. Under no definition of the word "sale" that I have been able to find, or any authority relating to the subject of sales, can this attempted transfer of Palmer's property be called a "sale." By this attempted transfer of the land in controversy by Mrs. Palmer to her brother, she sought to make provision for the support of the infant child of herself and husband, and that was all. Whether such a stipulation as the one in the deed to Jenne created an obligation that might be enforced, if properly authorized, it is not now necessary to consider or decide. Let it be conceded that it was enforceable against Jenne, had Palmer elected to do so, it was in no sense a sale, but, at most, only an executory agreement, so far as the consideration was concerned. The performance of Jenne's agreement was in no manner secured. He might become insolvent, remove from the state, or simply refuse to care for and support Nellie, leaving Palmer's rights altogether uncertain and precarious.

3. But it was claimed on the argument here that, under the pleadings in this case, it was competent to aid this deed, and the power under which it was executed, in some way by parol evidence, and accordingly a large amount of such evidence was offered. It must be observed that no mistake or imperfection in the writings was put in issue by the pleadings. It is difficult to see on just what ground this parol evidence is offered. There is no latent ambiguity in these writings, and the court can have no difficulty in construing them, and determining just what their legal import is. But if it be conceded that parol evidence is admissible when there is no uncertainty in the writings, simply for the purpose of showing the situation of the parties and their relations to each other, as well as the property in controversy, it is not perceived how it could aid the respondent's contention. The fact is undisputed that the mother of Mrs. Palmer once owned this property, and deeded it to Palmer, the husband of R. A. Palmer. It likewise fully appears that she said at the time her daughter R. A. Palmer was not to have it. This deed to Howard H. Palmer gave him as absolute an estate in this land as if he had purchased it from some person outside of the family, and paid full value for it. There is no attempt by the pleadings to assert any equity in Mrs. Palmer at the time her mother made this deed, and, if set up, it is not perceived on what ground it could be sustained. But this parol evidence was designed in some way to enlarge the powers of the agent beyond what was specified in the writing, and it is believed this cannot properly be permitted. In Insurance Co.

v. Wilcox, 57 Ill. 180. It was held that it was a general rule that, where an agency was conferred by a written instrument, the nature and extent of the authority must be ascertained from the instrument itself, and cannot be enlarged by parol evidence of the usage of other agents, in like cases, or of an intention to confer additional powers, because that would be to contradict or vary the terms of the written instrument. The same case states for what purpose and to what extent parol evidence may be resorted to, and it is remarked that the usages of a particular trade or business, or of a particular class of agents, are properly admissible, not for the purpose of enlarging the powers of the agent employed therein, but for the purpose of interpreting those powers actually given; for the means ordinarily used to execute the authority are included in the power, and may be resorted to by all agents, and especially commercial agents. It was argued here that the defendant is a bona fide purchaser, and therefore its title could not be disturbed. It is not perceived in the present condition of this record that the question of good faith enters into the case. The very defect complained of constitutes an essential part of the defendant's title, and it must be held to be chargeable with notice of the state of its own title, and of every fact appearing in any of the deeds or writings through which it derails title. Wade, Notice, §§ 307, 308. These conclusions require a reversal of the judgment, and that the cause be remanded for a new trial. The same judgment will be entered in Coulter v. Rash and in Coulter v. Warner, submitted at the same time. These cases all depend upon identically the same principle, and the same judgment will be entered in each.

LACHES—WHAT CONSTITUTES STALE CLAIM.

1. What constitutes a stale equity is regarded as a vexed question hardly susceptible of an accurate definition. It is not length of time alone that is a test of staleness, but the question must be determined by the facts and circumstances of each case, and according to right and justice.

2. Nor, in determining whether or not the claim or equity is stale, is the court confined to the statutory period, but may refuse relief in cases where the delay is less or greater than that named in the statute.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; L. B. STEARNS, Judge.

Nicholas & Osborne, for appellant. Ira Jones, for respondent.

LORD, J. This is a suit in equity to have a conveyance of certain lands therein described from the insolvent, William Ramsey, and its subsequent conveyance to the defendant, Jones, declared void, and the defendant required to convey the same to the plaintiff. The facts in substance were these: The insolvent, William Ramsey, made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors on the 23d day of February, 1880, to one Pringle, but the court in 1890 thereafter appointed the plaintiff in the present suit assignee. On the same day he executed a conveyance to one F. to the land in controversy, which was designed to pay or secure certain indebtedness as disclosed by the answer of the defendant, and soon thereafter died, leaving a will, by which he devised all his right and title to the land in dispute to his executors. A few days prior to such assignment, the defendant and his partner had commenced an action and levied an attachment on the said land, and a certificate was filed, as required by law, upon the date of such assignment. Several years intervening, and no proceedings being taken under the assignment, and acting on the supposition that it had been abandoned, the defendant obtained judgment on the 10th day of March, 1885, upon which execution issued April 6, 1885, under which the land was sold, and he became the purchaser. Some year or so thereafter a litigation was commenced and carried on between the executors of F. and the defendant, which was finally adjusted and settled, and the possession and title of F. were transferred to the defendant on the 15th day of December, 1888, who has since been in possession, and claims that the rights of the plaintiff are barred by the statute of limitations. It thus appears that the deed and assignment were more than 10 years old, and that no proceedings had been taken under the assignment until the commencement of the present suit, alleging that the deed to F. was fraudulent, and praying that it be declared void. The pleadings, and especially the answer, are quite voluminous in setting forth in extenso the action and proceedings in the attachment, and the sale made thereunder, the litigation instituted by the executors of F. to recover the property in controversy, and its final settlement, and the payment of a large sum by the defendant, and the proceedings taken under the assignment, showing that nothing had been done, or that it was in course of settlement, and other facts designed to exhibit the staleness and inequity of the claim and suit of plaintiff as against the rights of the defendant to the land in controversy. There is nothing in the record which specifies the ground upon which the suit of the plaintiff was dismissed, and the title of the defendant as against the plaintiff confirmed, other than the decree of the court, which "finds from the answer of the defendant, and not denied by the reply of the plaintiff, that the equities of the suit are with the defendant." This, we conceive, proceeded mainly upon the ground that the facts set up in respect to the assignment, and the laches and delay of the plaintiff while the defendant was harassed by litigation for the recovery of the property in dispute,—the title of F.,—which he finally procured by a settlement and payment to the executors of a large sum of money, not denied or explained, exhibited a stale claim or equity which was fatal to the merits of his suit as assignee; that the case, as it stood confessed on the pleadings at the hearing by reason of such delay and laches of the complainant was such as would render a court of equity passive, or justify its refusal to grant re-relief. There is certainly nothing shown even to indicate what were the impediments to an earlier prosecution of the suit to secure the land in controversy for the payment of the claims alleged, or how, under the circumstances, he could have remained so long ignorant of his rights as such assignee, when so much was openly transpiring calculated to awaken his knowledge, if any rights he had, and no means were used to fraudulently keep him in ignorance of them. What constitutes a stale equity is regarded as a vexed question hardly susceptible of an accurate definition. It is not length of time alone that is a test of staleness, but the question must be determined by the facts and circumstances of each case, and according to right and justice. Nor in determining whether or not the claim is stale is the court confined to the statutory period, but may refuse relief in cases where the delay is less or greater than that named in the statute. From the original appointment to the commencement of the present suit no action has been taken or anything done, although covering more than the statutory period, to indicate any insolvent estate was in the course of settlement or pending, and it was certainly the duty of the plaintiff, if necessary for any cause, to seek the aid of a court of equity without unreasonable delay, for during the interval the defendant was pursuing modes to secure and perfect his rights upon principles substantially equitable, and without any fraudulent concealment; and, as the facts conceded in the pleadings in our judgment indicate that he could not have been without knowledge of the existence of such rights, and the defendant's conduct in the interim, he must have regarded such rights acquired by the defendant as just and equitable, and acquiesced in them; otherwise negligence would seem justly imputable to him. In Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 196, the court say: "The doctrine of laches in courts of equity is not an arbitrary or technical doctrine. Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy, either because the party has by his conduct done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or where by his conduct and neglect he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted, in either of these cases lapse of time and delay are most material. * * * Two circumstances, always important in such cases, are the length of the delay and the nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party, and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking one course or the other, so far as relates to the remedy." Upon analogous principles, the lapse of time, especially when there was equal means of knowledge of the original transaction, and a failure to take any steps under the assignment, and no explanation or excuse for such delay, while at the same time the defendant was seeking openly in the same court to protect his title to the land in controversy from the action of the executors, and expending large sums in the settlement of such litigation, combined with all the circumstances set forth, much of which is matter of record, bring the case within the rule that lapse of time and staleness of the equity or claim require, upon principles of equity and justice, that the decree of the court below be affirmed, and the bill dismissed.

FERGUSON V. ALLEN.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS—JURISDICTION—MALCONDUCT OF OFFICERS—REJECTION OF LEGAL VOTES.

1. Comp. Laws Utah, § 8751, relating to contested elections, provides that no irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the judges is such as avoids an election, unless it procures the person whose right to the office is contested to be declared elected when he has not received the highest number of legal votes. Section 3752 provides that when any election held for a county office is contested on account of malconduct of the judges of any precinct it can only be annulled when the rejection of the vote of such precinct would change the result in the remaining vote of the county. Held, in a contest for a county office, that where qualified voters, after their names have been illegally stricken from the lists, tender their votes, with affidavits of their qualification, and the same are rejected, they cannot then be counted or made available in such a contest; the power of the court being restricted to the rejection of fraudulent votes actually cast, or to the rejection of the vote of a precinct, where it appears that such vote would change the result in the remaining vote of the county.

2. The fact that fraudulent ballots are cast by persons who are not qualified electors is no ground for rejecting the entire vote of a precinct, where there are means of purging the poll, and ascertaining the actual legal vote.

3. The supreme and district courts have jurisdiction conferred upon them in contested elections by sections 3757, 3765, which provide that, after the filing of the grounds of contest, the district court shall proceed to hear and determine the same; and that, if either party is aggrieved by the judgment, he may appeal therefrom to the supreme court, as in other cases.

Appeal from district court, third district; T. J. ANDERSON, Justice.

Comp. Laws Utah, § 3757, relating to contested elections, is as follows: "Upon the statement of the grounds of contest being filed, the clerk must inform the judge of the district court thereof. The judge of said court must then, by an order to be entered by the clerk, name some day, not less than ten nor more than twenty days from the date of such order, to hear and determine such contested elections." Section 3765 provides that "either party aggrieved by the judgment may appeal therefrom to the supreme court, as in other cases of appeal thereto from the district court."

Arthur Brown and J. L. Rawlins, for appellant. C. F. Loofbourow and Zane & Putnam, for appellee.

MINER, J. The plaintiff, Fergus Ferguson, and the defendant, Clarence E. Allen, were each, respectively, candidates for the office of county clerk of the county of Salt Lake, territory of Utah, at the August election in 1890, and the only candidates therefor. At the canvass of the votes by the county canvassers of the precinct returns, that body adjudged that defendant, Allen, had received a majority of 15 votes; the said plaintiff having received 3,740 votes, and the defendant having received 3,755 votes; and a certificate of election was accordingly given to the defendant, Allen, who is now in possession of the office. The plaintiff, within the time required by law, filed his notice of contest, and now claims that there are two distinct errors in that computation,—that is: (1) In the Bingham precinct three polling places were provided by the Utah commission, but no division was had of the registration list. The whole registration was left with the judges of each poll. That poll No. 3 in such precinct was established up the canyon, in the mountains, for the accommodation of the voters at the Brooklyn mine. At this poll 41 ballots were cast at this election,—39 for the contestee, Allen, and 2 for the contestant. Thirteen of the 39 votes cast for contestee, Allen, were proved to be cast fraudulently, by persons not entitled to vote, and were rejected by the trial court, thus leaving Allen's vote in this precinct 26. It is now claimed by the contestant that the court erred in not rejecting the entire vote polled at this precinct, for the reason that the whole poll was proven fraudulent, and no legal votes were shown to have been cast. The contestant also claims that he is entitled to have counted in his favor 15 votes in the South Cottonwood precinct, which were not returned by the judges of election; and claims that the facts concerning these 15 voters are that 15 legal voters, whose names appeared upon the registration list, who were entitled to vote, were wrongfully stricken from the registration list by the judges of election themselves, so as to prevent their vote; that the said 15 voters, however, tried to vote, so far as they were able to do so, and that each of them tendered a ballot, together with an affidavit sworn in due form by each of said persons offering to vote, containing the oath required by the act of congress of March 3, 1887, known as the "Edmunds-Tucker Law;" and that the judges refused to put these ballots into the box. Each of the voters caused said ballots to be preserved, and his name written upon it, identified, and brought into court, so that the ballot was cast by each of the 15 voters as far as it was in the power of the voter to cast it. Each of these votes contained the name of the contestant. Counting these votes, he would have a majority over the contestee of eight votes. Contestant claims: (1) That the court erred in not throwing out the entire ballot of the third poll of the Bingham precinct, and deducting all the 39 votes from Allen's majority, for the reason that the whole of said poll was proven to be fraudulent, and no legal votes were shown to have been cast. (2) The court erred in not allowing the 15 votes which it determined to have been wrongfully and illegally kept from the ballot-box in South Cottonwood precinct, and found to have been by the votes tendered for Fergus Ferguson, to be counted for him.

The evidence upon this case as tried in the court below is not brought before this court by the record, and the only question before this court on the record is whether or not the findings of fact by the lower court justify the conclusions and judgment of the court below, or whether other and different conclusions of law should have been reached upon the facts as found. Upon these points the court below found, among others, the following facts: "(8) That at said poll No. 3, in Bingham precinct, said 13 ballots were cast by persons who were not qualified electors of said precinct, but who fraudulently personated the names of persons whose names appeared upon the registration list, who were not present to vote. That each of said 13 ballots were cast, counted, and returned for the incumbent, contestee Allen, for said office of county clerk. (9) That in the precinct of South Cottonwood, in said county, 15 different persons presented themselves at the polling place on the day of election, and claimed the right to vote, and each tendered to the judges of election a ballot for contestant for said office of clerk of the county court, but with said ballot tendered on affidavit, sworn to before a justice of the peace by the persons so offering to vote, which affidavit contained the oath required by the Edmunds-Tucker law; and the ballot of each of said persons was refused by the judges for the reason that the names of none of said persons was upon the registry list of said precinct. That the names of each of said 15 persons had, prior to said day of election, been upon the registration list of said precinct, but each of said names had been by the judges of election stricken from said list before the opening of the polls, in accordance with the directions in writing from the deputy registration officer of said precinct. That the right of each of said 15 persons to vote at said election had been objected to by a qualified voter, in writing, before said deputy registrar, and a hearing had been had upon each of said objections after due notice had been given each of said persons before said deputy registrar, and said deputy registrar had determined on such hearing that the names of each of said persons should be stricken from the registration list of said precinct, which said determination was erroneous, and illegal, the said 15 persons being qualified voters; but was duly certified to said judges, and the vote of each of said persons was refused by said judges of election, for the reason that the name of each had been so stricken from the registration list."

Upon the foregoing facts as found, the trial court found therefrom the following conclusions of law: "That to the majority of fifteen for the incumbent, as shown upon the face of the canvass and return, there should be added six votes on account of the matters set out in the fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs of the foregoing findings of facts, and that from the majority of the incumbent, as thus increased, should be deducted 14 votes, on account of the matter stated in the third and eighth paragraphs of said findings, leaving the incumbent a clear majority of seven votes out of all the legal votes cast for said office at said election. That the ballots offered to be cast for contestant in South Cottonwood precinct, as referred to in the ninth paragraph of the said findings of facts, and which were rejected by the judges, and were not in fact cast, cannot be counted, nor can any of them be counted or made available to the contestant in this proceeding. And upon the foregoing facts and conclusions, it is adjudged and determined by the court that the contestant's complaint be dismissed, and that he take nothing by this proceeding; that the incumbent was legally elected to said office of clerk of the county court of said Salt Lake county, and his right and title to said office is confirmed."

The above findings include so much only as may be material in this discussion. On examination of the eighth finding of fact, we are unable to discover that there is any error of the court in its findings of law, so far as they apply to the third poll of the Bingham precinct. It is apparent from the findings that 13 ballots were cast fraudulently, by persons who were not qualified electors of that precinct, by personating those whose names appeared upon the registration list, but did not vote; and these 13 votes were properly deducted from the vote of the contestee, Allen. That there was fraud practiced at this poll there can be no question; but it does not appear from the findings of fact that the incumbent, or any of the officers conducting the election, participated in such fraud, or knew of it, or that the proceedings were so tarnished with fraud, neglect, or improper conduct on the part of the officers that the result of the election was rendered so unreliable and fraudulent as to make it impossible to ascertain the actual vote from other evidence in the case. Where the result at a poll, as shown by the returns, is false and fraudulent, and it is impossible to ascertain the actual legal vote from other evidence in the case, the vote of such poll must be wholly rejected. Paine, Elect. § 499; McCrary, Elect. §§ 488-490; Phelps v. Schroder, 26 Ohio St. 549; Ex parte Murphy, 7 Cow. 153; Lloyd v. Sullivan, (Mont.) 24 Pac. Rep. 218, 227; Whipley v. McKune, 12 Cal. 352; People v. Pease, 84 Amer. Dec. 242; Cooley, Const. Lim. 280; State v. Hilmantel, 23 Wis. 422. In this case the court was able, from the testimony, to purge the poll of the 13 fraudulent votes, and give effect to the legal or unimpeached votes cast at this election. We find no error in this. We also find that this court, as well as the court below, had jurisdiction under sections 3757, 3765, Comp. Laws 1888. Russell v. McDowell, (Cal.) 23 Pac. Rep. 183.

The ninth finding of fact, as to the vote at South Cottonwood precinct, and the conclusion thereon, presents a more difficult question for determination. The statute provided for a hearing before a deputy registration officer of objections to the right to vote of any persons registered. Section 246, p. 321, 1 Comp. Laws 1888, provides, among other things: "If upon such hearing the justice (by construction, deputy registrar) shall find that the persons objected to are not qualified voters, he shall, within three days prior to the election, transmit a certified list of the names of all such unqualified persons to the judges of election, and such judges shall strike such names from the registry list before the opening of the polls." Section 3751, Comp. Laws Utah 1888, reads as follows: "No irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the judges, or any of them, is such malconduct as avoids an election unless the irregularity or improper conduct is such as to procure the person whose right to the office is contested to be declared elected when he had not received the highest number of legal votes." See Russell v. McDowell, (Cal.) 23 Pac. Rep. 183. This statute should be construed with reference to the laws of the United States applicable to the subject. The trial court took testimony, and made its findings as above given. It appears from the findings of fact (from which the contestant only appeals) that the names of 15 qualified voters of South Cottonwood precinct had, prior to the day of election, been properly upon the registration list of such precinct; that on the morning of the election these names had been stricken from such list by the judges of election, in accordance with the direction of the deputy registration officer of that precinct after a notice and hearing had been given each of them; that such determination of the deputy registrar was erroneous and illegal, the said 15 persons being qualified voters; that each of said 15 persons presented themselves at the polling place on the day of election, and claimed the right to vote, and tendered the judges a ballot containing the name of the contestant for the aforesaid office, together with an affidavit, as required by the act of congress of March 3, 1887, and that they were refused, for the reason that their names had been so stricken from the registration list.

The question presented here is whether the judges of election should have received, or, in any event, counted, these 15 votes, so tendered for the contestant, notwithstanding their names had been illegally and erroneously stricken from the list of voters; no challenge being interposed, as provided in section 251, 1 Comp. Laws 1888. It is apparent that, if these votes had been received or counted for the contestant, the result would have been different, and the contestant, under the findings, would have received eight majority over the vote of Mr. Allen, the contestee. The authorities bearing upon this question are somewhat uncertain and conflicting, depending largely upon the statutes of different states. Bearing upon this question, we find in Paine on Election, § 499, the following general proposition: "Honest voters may lose their votes through criminal misconduct of dishonest officers of election. While it is well settled that the mere neglect to comply with directory requirements of the law, or the performance of duty in a mistaken manner, without bad faith, or injurious results, will not justify the rejection of an entire poll, it is equally well settled that when the proceedings are so tarnished by fraudulent, negligent, or improper conduct on the part of the officers that the result of the election is rendered unreliable, the entire returns will be rejected, and the parties left to make such proof as they may of the votes legally cast for them. But when fraud on the part of the officers of election is established, the poll will be rejected, unless it shall prove to be possible to purge it of the fraud." In other words, the illegal and fraudulent rejection of a sufficient number of qualified electors in a precinct, which, if they had voted, would have changed the result of the election, was held to avoid the election in that precinct. Renner v. Bennett, 21 Ohio St. 431; State v. Commissioners, 17 Fla. 707; Patton v. Coates, 41 Ark. 111; Phelps v. Schroder, 26 Ohio St. 558; State v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71; 6 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 292, 334, 344, 423, 430; McCrary, Elect. §§ 423, 476, 509; People v. Bell, 119 N. Y. 176, 23 N. E. Rep. 533; Lloyd v. Sullivan, (Mont.) 24 Pac. Rep. 218, 227; Russell v. McDowell, (Cal.) 23 Pac. Rep. 183; People v. Bell, 8 N. Y. Supp. 254; State v. O'Day, (Iowa,) 28 N. W. Rep. 642; Perry v. Whitaker, 71 N. C. 475; People v. Canaday, 21 Amer. Rep. 465; Zeller v. Chapman, 54 Mo. 502. I am unable to see the difference in the degree of fraud or misconduct presented by a case where the election officers illegally and wrongfully strike the name of a qualified voter from the registry list, or in which they illegally and fraudulently place the names of illegal voters on the registry list. In the latter case it is held to be misconduct in the officers. While a disregard of a mandatory provision in a statute as to the conduct of an election will ordinarily avoid an election, it is generally well settled that neglect or disregard of a directory provision of a statute designed to prevent fraudulent voting, followed by actual fraud of that character sufficient in extent to throw doubt on the true result of the election, is ground for rejecting the entire vote of a precinct, provided there were no means of purging the poll. Officers of election are, like other persons, presumed to know the law, and their deliberate neglect to do their duty, or their illegal, wrongful, and fraudulent performance of the duty imposed on them to register and permit all persons having such qualifications to vote, calls for an explanation on their part. In this case it is conceded by contestee's counsel that no evidence of justification was offered before the court below to explain or justify the acts of the election officers. This omission casts suspicion upon their integrity, and with the testimony before the court was presumably sufficient, prima facie, to make out a case of erroneous and illegal conduct on their part, as found by the trial court. The case of Russell v. McDowell, (Cal.), reported in 23 Pac. Rep. 183, fully sustains this doctrine, and also gives construction to section 3751, Comp. Laws 1888, which is similar to the California statute.

The object of the registry law is to preserve the purity of the ballot-box, and to guard against abuses to the elective franchise, and not to prevent any qualified elector from voting, or unnecessarily to hinder or impair his privilege. This right should not be impaired by the regulation. It must be a regulation, not a destruction, of the right. Attorney General v. Common Council, 78 Mich. 545, 44 N. W. Rep. 388;

Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. St. 338; Dells v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 555, 6 N. W. Rep. 246, 381; Warren v. Board, 72 Mich. 398, 40 N. W. Rep. 553; People v. Gordon, 5 Cal. 235; Webster v. Brynes, 34 Cal. 278. So it has been held that the exclusion of legal voters through error in judgment (but not fraud) will not defeat an election, because it cannot be known with certainty afterwards how the excluded electors would have voted, and it would be dangerous to receive and rely upon voters' subsequent statements as to their intention, when unfortunately such intention was ineffectually expressed, after it is ascertained precisely what effect their votes would have upon the result. Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 626, 780; Newcum v. Kirtley, 13 B. Mon. 515. "If, however, the inspectors of election shall exclude legal voters, not because of honest error in judgment, but willfully or corruptly, and to an extent that affects the result; or if legal voters are intimidated and prevented from voting, or for any other reasons the electors have not had opportunity for the expression of their sentiment through the ballot-box,—the election should be set aside altogether, as having failed in the purpose for which it was called." Cooley, Const. Lim. 621; State v. Echols, 41 Kan. 1, 20 Pac. Rep. 523; Renner v. Bennett, 21 Ohio St. 441; Phelps v. Schroder, 26 Ohio St. 559; Bell v. Snyder, 4 Cong. Elect. Cas. 247; McCrary, Elect. § 11; State v. Commissioners, 17 Fla. 707; People v. Bell, (N. Y.) 23 N. E. Rep. 533; People v. Thatcher, 55 N. Y. 534; Paine, Elect. §§ 513, 596; People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 63; People v. Cook, 59 Amer. Dec. 470; Capen v. Foster, 23 Amer. Dec. 648; Ebert v. Wood, 2 Amer. Dec. 437. A proper rule in such cases is that any irregularity in conducting an election, which does not deprive a qualified elector of his vote, or admit a disqualified person to vote, or cast uncertainty on the result, should be overlooked in trying title to an office. Cooley, Const. Lim. 618. That no legal voter should be deprived of that privilege by an illegal act of the election authorities is a fundamental principle of law; but, in order for such voter to avail himself of that privilege, he must conform to such reasonable rules as are prescribed by law. He must leave nothing undone on his part that he should do in order to bring himself within this rule. He must see that his name is on the registration list, and otherwise entitled to vote. When he has done this, he has done all that the statute requires in this territory.

In this case it appears that each of these 15 electors had their names properly enrolled; that they were legal voters, and entitled to vote at this election; that the deputy register, without any authority of law whatever, erroneously and illegally ordered their names stricken from the lists of qualified electors on the morning of the election; that each of them went and tendered a vote for the contestant, with an affidavit of their qualifications as legal voters. They were refused because their names had been illegally and erroneously stricken from the list of voters by order of the deputy registrar. This illegal act, if it was such, upon the part of the registration officers, cannot be justified upon any pretext whatever. The rights and wishes of all people are too sacred to be cast aside and nullified by the illegal and wrongful acts of their servants, no matter under what guise or pretense such acts are sought to be justified. This right is a fundamental right. All other rights, civil or political, depend on the free exercise of this one, and any material impairment of it is, to that extent, a subversion of our political system. These registration and election officers act ministerially, or at most quasi judicially, and their acts may properly be reviewed and questioned in a proceeding to contest or try the title to any office made elective by the laws of the territory. People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45; Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544; State v. Robb, 17 Ind. 536; 5 Cal. 235; People v. Van Cleve, 53 Amer. Dec. 69; Davies v. McKeeby, 5 Nev. 369; 23 N. E. Rep. 633; People v. Bell, 8 N. Y. Supp. 234; Perry v. Whitaker, 71 N. C. 475; People v. Canaday, 21 Amer. Rep. 465.

These acts of the legislature herein quoted can properly be considered, in connection with the Edmunds-Tucker act, as applicable to this territory in the registration of electors and conduct of elections, and should be so construed as to give every man, who has that right, an opportunity to register and vote, and to have that vote honestly counted. Section 9 of the Edmunds-Tucker law declares vacant all registration and election offices of every description in the territory; and each and every duty relating to the registration of voters and conduct of elections, receiving and registering votes, and the canvassing the same, etc., shall, until other provisions be made by the legislature of the territory, as hereinafter provided, be performed by and under the existing laws of the United States and of said territory by proper persons, appointed by the Utah commission; * * * and no person shall be excluded from the polls who is otherwise eligible to vote, on account of any opinion, etc.; * * * nor shall they refuse to count any such vote on account of the opinion of the person casting the same on the subject of polygamy." The construction of this statute may be found in McCrary, Elect. § 11; 6 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 292, 430; Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 15, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Buchanan v. Manny, 2 Ellis. 287. Section 2007 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relied upon by counsel for the contestant, might be a potent factor in the determination of this question had not the supreme court of the United States declared it unconstitutional in U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214. I am satisfied that no case can be found in the books which presents a stronger appeal in behalf of justice to an elector than is presented by the record in this case. Yet the law seems to be settled that, unless the ballot is actually cast, it cannot be counted in a local election contest. Justice CAMPBELL, in his opinion in People v. Clcott, 16 Mich. 311, says: "There is no case, so far as I have been able to discover, under any system of voting by closed ballot, which has held that any account can be taken of rejected votes in a suit to try title for office." Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, pp. 626, 627, says: "We have seen that no evidence is admissible as to how parties intended to vote who were wrongfully prevented or excluded from so doing. Such a case is one of many without a remedy, so far as candidates are concerned." And in such cases the injured parties have their right of action against the registration officers who violate their oaths, and maliciously or corruptly strike the name of a legal voter from the registration list, or maliciously or corruptly refuse to place such names upon the register; and such parties may be made liable in a civil action in damages, or prosecuted criminally for such corrupt, willful, and malicious acts. Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938; Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544; 6 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 306, 308, 443; Hardesty v. Taft, 87 Amer. Dec. 584; Jenkins v. Waldron, 11 Johns. 114; Patterson v. D'Auterive, 54 Amer. Dec. 564; Caulfield v. Bullock, 18 B. Mon. 494; Morgan v. Dudley, Id. 693. By section 3752, Comp. Laws 1888, it is enacted that when any election held for an office exercised in and for a county is contested on account of any misconduct on the part of the board of judges of any precinct election, or any member thereof, the election cannot be annulled and set aside upon any proof thereof unless the rejection of the vote of such precinct or precincts would change the result as to such office in the remaining vote of the county. Also, see sections 3751-3762, Comp. Laws 1888. It is contended with much reason that under the provisions of these statutes no vote can be counted for a candidate that is not actually cast for him while the polls are open, and that the power of this court is limited to the rejection of such fraudulent votes as were actually cast, or to the rejection of the vote of precincts on account of fraud in the officers conducting the election in cases where it appears that the rejection of the vote of such precinct would change the result as to such office in the remaining vote of the county. The full vote of South Cottonwood precinct is not reported or found by the trial court, therefore we are unable to determine whether or not the rejection of the entire vote of South Cottonwood precinct would change the result of the election for this office; therefore, upon the whole record, we find no errors. The findings and judgment of the court below are affirmed, with costs.

MCGRATH V. TALLENT.

EJECTMENT—EVIDENCE—AFFIDAVIT FOR CONTINUANCE—NEW TRIAL—NOTICE.

1. Comp. Laws Utah, § 3858, provides that a motion for continuance, on the ground of absence of evidence, may be made upon affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence, and that due diligence has been used to procure it, and that the court may require the moving party to state in the affidavit the facts he expects to prove. Held, that a statement to the effect that defendant is too sick to leave his bed, that his testimony is material, and that his attorney cannot safely go to trial without him, is insufficient to require a continuance, where it is not made under oath, and does not contain a statement of the facts to be proven.

2. Section 3403 provides that the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after verdict, file with the clerk, and serve upon the adverse party, a notice of his intention; and, if the motion is made on a statement of the case, he must within 10 days after service of notice, or such further time as the court may allow, prepare a draft of the statement, and serve the same upon the adverse party. Held, that an order giving 30 days in which to prepare and serve such a statement does not extend the time for filing and serving notice.

3. Although an order allowing a statement of the case, on motion for a new trial, to afterwards stand as a bill of exceptions on appeal, is erroneous, exception thereto, when made for the first time in the appellate court, comes too late, and the bill must be regarded as part of the record.

4. Plaintiff in ejectment claimed, under a deed from a railroad company, part of a section designated by an odd number, lying within 3 miles of its line of road; and, to show title in his grantor, relied upon an act of congress granting thereto such of the sections indicated by odd numbers, within 30 miles of said railroad, as were not mineral lands, and such as had not been sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of, and to which pre-emption or homestead claims had not attached. Defendant denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and the evidence showed that he was in possession when suit was instituted. Held, in the absence of proof that the disputed tract was not within any of the above exceptions, direction of a verdict for plaintiff was erroneous.

Appeal from district court, first district;
J. A. MINER, Judge.

Maloney & Perkins, for appellant. Smith & Smith, for appellee.

ZANE, C. J. This is an action of ejectment to recover the land described in the complaint, and damages for its detention. The defendant filed an answer denying all the material allegations of the complaint. When the case was called for trial the defendant's counsel entered a motion for a continuance, and stated that the defendant was so ill as to be confined to his bed; that his testimony was material to the issues involved; that the statement was made upon the representations of defendant's physician, and that the attorney could not safely go to trial without the presence of defendant. The plaintiff objected to the continuance, and the motion was overruled. To this ruling of the court the defendant excepted, and assigns the same as error.

Section 3353, Comp. Laws Utah 1888, provides that a motion to postpone a trial, on the ground of the absence of evidence, can be made upon affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained, and that due diligence has been used to procure it. It further provides that the court may require the moving party to state in an affidavit the evidence which he expects to obtain; and authorizes the adverse party to admit that such evidence would be given, and that it be considered as actually given on the trial, or offered and overruled, and if such admission is made, that the trial shall not be postponed. The statement made by the counsel was not sufficient to require a continuance. It was not under oath, and was not a statement of facts expected to be proved. A continuance will not be granted because of the absence of a party, unless he is a material witness, and, if so, the facts expected to be proved by him must be stated under oath, unless the oath is waived. It must also appear that the party has used due diligence to be present at the trial. The ruling upon the motion to postpone was not erroneous.

The case was tried by the court and a jury, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff on October 21, 1890, and on the same day judgment was entered on the verdict, and on motion of the defendant an order was made giving 30 days thereafter in which to prepare and serve a statement on a motion for a new trial, and staying execution in the mean time.

Section 3402 of the above-mentioned book provides that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within ten days after the verdict, * * * file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made, and whether the same will be made upon affidavits or the minutes of the court or a bill of exceptions or a statement of the case. * * * (8) If the motion is to be made on a statement of the case, the moving party must, within ten days after service of the notice, or such further time as the court in which the action is pending, or the judge thereof, may allow, prepare a draft of the statement, and serve the same, or a copy thereof, upon the adverse party." The above-mentioned order extended the time in which to prepare a statement of the case, and to serve the same, but did not extend the time in which to file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of intention to move for a new trial. Extension of the time in which to prepare the statement and serve it does not include the extension of time in which to file and serve notice of intention to make the motion for a new trial. The language of the law is plain, and there is no room for construction.

We find no error in the order of the court refusing to settle the statement on which to submit the motion for a new trial. It also appears from the record in this case that on November 12th the motion for a new trial was set down for hearing on the 15th day of the same month, and that on the 20th, and within the thirty days given defendant to draft and serve a statement upon which to have a motion for a new trial, the defendant obtained another order, granting him five days further time in which to prepare, serve, and file a bill of exceptions. And on the 25th day, and within the five-days additional time, the court made the following order: "The above was prepared as a statement on motion for a new trial, and the same, on motion of the plaintiff's counsel not to settle it on the grounds that it was not prepared in the time required by law, was allowed, and the said unsettled statement, over the objections of the defendant, was stricken from the files, notwithstanding the defendant had thirty days from the 21st day of October, 1890, within which to prepare, file, and serve statement on motion for new trial. The above [referring to the statement] is now presented to the court as a bill of exceptions on appeal, under section 8635, Comp. Laws 1888, and the same, having been examined by the court, is found to be in all things correct, and is hereby allowed, settled, and signed, and this bill of exceptions is hereby made a part of the record in this cause." The motion for a new trial was heard and overruled on the same day that the above order was made. No objection by the plaintiff in the court below to the order quoted, or to the hearing of the motion for a new trial, appears upon the record, nor does it appear that any exception was taken to the same. Under these circumstances, the court cannot treat the order as a nullity, and disregard the bill of exceptions. The action of the court in making it was erroneous, but the order was not void. The objection and exception to the order, and to the hearing of the motion for new trial on the bill of exceptions, comes too late, when made for the first time in this court on the argument of the case. We must regard the bill of exceptions as a part of the record.

The court directed the jury to find the verdict for the plaintiff on the evidence, and to this the defendant objected, and excepted. The record shows that a deed sufficient to convey any interest of the Union Pacific Railway Company in the land in dispute was made and delivered by it to the plaintiff; that the land was part of a section designated by an odd number; and that it is within three miles of the track of the road of that company, as constructed and operated. It also appears from the evidence in the record that the plaintiff had possession of the land before the defendant took possession. Upon this proof of title alone the plaintiff relied. The defendant in his answer denied all the material allegations of the plaintiff's complaint, and the evidence proves that the defendant was in possession of the land at the time the suit was brought. That gave him a right to hold the possession against any other person who could not show title to it. The plaintiff was required to prove that she held title from the government to connect her title with the title the government held. The evidence fails to show a grant by patent from the government to any one. The plaintiff relied upon the act of congress of July 1, 1862, and the act of July 2, 1864, amendatory thereof, to establish the grant of the lands to the Union Pacific Railway Company. The lands granted are described in the above-mentioned acts. If all the sections indicated by odd numbers, within 20 miles of the line as constructed and operated, had been granted, the evidence would have been sufficient to identify the land in dispute as a part of it. But the grant did not include all of such lands. In section 3 of the act of July 1, 1862, is found the following language: "That there be and is hereby granted to the said company * * * every alternate section of public land designated by odd numbers, to the amount of five alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad, on the line thereof, and within the limits of ten miles on each side of said road, not sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a pre-emption or homestead claim may not have attached, at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed: provided, that all mineral lands shall be excepted from the operation of this act." 12 U. S. St. at Large, § 3, p. 492. And section 4 of the amendatory act mentioned amended section 3 of the act amended by striking out "five" where it occurs and inserting "ten," and by striking out "ten" where it occurs and inserting "twenty." 13 U. S. St. at Large, § 4, p. 358. The act above referred to required the company, within a specified time, to designate the general route of its road, as near as might be, and to file a map of the same in the department of the interior. These acts granted only such of the sections indicated by odd numbers, and such parts of them as were not mineral, and as had not been sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of. They expressly provided that the grant should not defeat or impair any pre-emption, homestead, swamp land, or other lawful claim, nor include any government reservation or mineral lands or improvements of any bona fide settler. If the land in dispute was included in any of the exceptions or reservations of law, it was not granted to the Union Pacific Company. No evidence was offered to show that the tract in dispute was not within any of such exceptions or reservations. Without such proof, we are of the opinion that the evidence was not sufficient to support the verdict, and that the court erred in instructing the jury to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff. The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the district court is directed to grant a new trial.

ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN — RIGHT TO INHERIT — MORMONS.

1. Act Utah 1852, § 25, permitting illegitimate children to inherit from the father, is valid under Act Cong. Sept. 9, 1850, (9 St. p. 453, § 6,) providing that the legislative power of Utah shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the constitution of the United States and the provisions of the act.

2. The act was not abrogated by Act Cong. July 1, 1862, (12 St. 501,) annulling all acts passed by the legislature of Utah territory, "which establish, support, maintain, shield, or countenance polygamy," since polygamy is neither established, maintained, nor countenanced by permitting illegitimate children to inherit from the father.

Following Cope v. Cope, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222.

Appeal from district court, third district. Bennett, Marshall & Bradley, for appellants, Milando Pratt et al. C. S. Varian, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. Orson Pratt died in 1881, intestate, and left a large estate, and many polygamous children, and some legitimate children as well. The question is as to whether the polygamous children should share in the distribution of the estate. The decree of the district court was that none but the legitimate children should inherit. This decree is reversed, and a decree entered that all of the children acknowledged by him as such in his life-time, or proved to be such by satisfactory evidence, shall share in the distribution of the estate. This decision is made on the authority of the case of Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222, recently decided by the supreme court of the United States.

PEOPLE ex rel. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF SALT LAKE CITY v. GODFREY et al.

ELECTIONS FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES—UTAH TERRITORY—"EDMUNDS LAW."

1. Act Cong. March 22, 1882, (the Edmunds Law,) declaring vacant all registration and election offices in the territory of Utah, and providing that all duties relating to registration and elections should, until provision should be made by the legislature therein provided for, be performed under existing laws, by a board of five persons to be appointed by the president, who should continue in office until the legislature should make provision for filling the offices made vacant by the act, only vacated the offices then in existence, and did not prevent a legislature selected at an election, conducted by persons appointed by the board, from making laws by which such vacant offices might be filled; and the board of education of Salt Lake City, appointed by Act Utah March 18, 1890, to establish and maintain schools, and to conduct elections to determine whether school bonds shall be issued, have the right to conduct such elections.

2. Sess. Laws Utah 1890, art. 15, §§ 102, 103, providing that 15 days before an election for school trustees for levying taxes, for voting on the issue of bonds, or for any other purpose named in the article, the city councils of the several cities shall appoint three judges of election from each ward, etc., are, in so far as they relate to elections on the issue of bonds, and no further, repealed by sections 122-125 of the same act, relating exclusively to elections on the issue of bonds, and specifically providing another mode of conducting them by the board of education.

Sutherland & Judd, for appellants. Baldwin & Tatlock, for respondents.

ZANE, C. J. This was an application based on an affidavit of Richard W. Young, a member of the board of education of Salt Lake City, for a writ of prohibition against the defendants, prohibiting them from publishing a notice of election to decide upon the issuing and sale of bonds to raise money to purchase school-house sites, and for buying and building school-houses, and from appointing judges to hold such election, and from receiving the returns thereof. The district court held that, upon the facts stated in the affidavit, the law did not authorize the issuance of the writ, and the plaintiff appealed to this court. The fifteenth article of an act of the legislature providing for a uniform system of free schools throughout the territory, in force March 13, 1890, makes the school trustees of each city of the first and second class, together with the mayor thereof, a body corporate, and invests them with the powers deemed necessary to establish and maintain common schools in the districts embraced in such cities. The city of Salt Lake belongs to the first class. This board is in terms authorized to call elections at which to determine whether bonds shall be issued, to give the notices prescribed, to appoint judges to hold such elections, and to receive and canvass the returns thereof. Notwithstanding the provisions of the law referred to, the defendants issued the notice of the election mentioned in the application, appointed judges to hold the same, and required the returns thereof to be made to them as such board. Had that body the power to do so? To answer this question it becomes necessary to interpret section 9 of an act of congress approved March 22, 1882, known as the "Edmunds Law." That section is as follows: "That all the registration and election offices of every description in the territory of Utah are hereby declared vacant, and each and every duty relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, the receiving or rejection of votes, and the canvassing and return of the same, and the issuing of certificates or other evidence of election in said territory, shall, until other provision be made by the legislative assembly of said territory, as is hereafter by this section provided, be performed under the existing laws of the United States and said territory by proper persons, who shall be appointed to execute such offices, and to perform such duties, by a board of five persons to be appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of one political party, and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The members of said board so appointed by the president shall each receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and shall continue in office until the legislative assembly of said territory shall make provision for filling said offices, as herein authorized. The secretary of the territory shall be secretary of said board, and keep a journal of its proceedings, and attest the action of said board under this section. The canvass and return of all votes at elections in said territory, for members of the legislative assembly thereof, shall also be returned to said board, which shall canvass all such returns, and issue certificates of election to those persons who, being eligible for such elections, shall appear to have been lawfully elected, which certificates shall be the only evidence of the right of such persons to sit in such assembly: provided, that the said board of five persons shall not exclude any person otherwise eligible to vote from the polls on account of any opinion such person may entertain on the subject of bigamy or polygamy, nor shall they refuse to count any such vote on account of the opinion of the person casting it on the subject of bigamy or polygamy; but each house of such assembly, after its organization, shall have power to decide upon the elections and qualifications of its members; and at or after the first meeting of such legislative assembly, whose members shall have been elected and returned according to the provisions of this act, said legislative assembly may make such laws, conformable to the organic act of said territory, and not inconsistent with other laws of the United States, as it shall deem proper concerning the filling of the offices in said territory declared vacant by this act."

The connection of the provisions of this section bearing upon the question under consideration will be more apparent if other portions of it are omitted. Without such parts the section would read: "All registration and election offices * * * are declared vacant, and * * * every duty relating to registration, * * * the conduct of elections, the receiving of votes, their canvass and return, and the issuing of * * * evidence of election, shall, until * * * provision * * * made by the legislature as by this section provided, be performed under existing laws, * * * by persons appointed by * * * a board of five persons, * * * who "shall continue in office until the legislature * * * shall make provision for filling said offices, as herein authorized. * * * Said legislature may make such laws * * * as it shall deem proper concerning the filling of the offices declared * * * vacant by this act." This section declared all the election offices of the territory vacant, and provided that the duties belonging to them should be discharged by persons appointed by the board, until legislators chosen at an election held by such persons should enact laws by which they could be filled. The board was authorized to appoint persons to execute the offices made vacant by the first clause of the section and none other. In the use of the language, "all the registration and election offices of every description in the territory of Utah are hereby declared vacant," did congress intend only such as were then in existence, or did it also mean new election offices, created by a legislature chosen at an election held by persons appointed by the board provided in the section? Such a legislature, eight years after the ninth section took effect, provided for the creation of the corporation called the "Board of Education of Salt Lake City," and gave it power to call elections, to vote on the issuance and sale of bonds, and to appoint judges thereof, and to receive and canvass the returns. Such board, and the judges appointed by it, were given all authority necessary to such elections. If the power given and the duties specified with respect to such elections constitute election offices, then they are new ones, and of a corporation brought into existence eight years after the act of congress in question took effect. At the time the act of congress under consideration took effect, election offices existed in the various counties and municipalities in this territory. A portion of the language of the first sentence of the ninth section, considered alone, would indicate an intent to empower the board to appoint persons to execute the duties of election offices that might afterwards be made as well as those then existing. But the other language connected with this, found in the section declaring the offices vacant, and giving the board the power to appoint until other provision be made by the legislature for filling the offices declared vacant, and requiring the performance to be under existing laws, should be considered with it. The offices which the board known as the "Utah Commission" was authorized and required to appoint persons to execute were those offices which the legislature was authorized to provide by law for filling, and they were the ones made vacant by the first clause of section 9. The election offices created by the legislative enactment of March 13, 1890, were not made vacant by the ninth section of the act of congress of March 22, 1882. The latter section was designed to vacate the offices then in existence, not to prohibit any legislature, whose members might be selected at elections conducted by persons appointed by the board, from making laws by which such vacant offices might be filled. The persons filling the election offices at the time the act of congress took effect were deemed unsuitable, and the laws for filling them then in force were believed to be objectionable. To remove and replace such unsuitable election officers, and to render nugatory such objectionable laws, was the purpose of section 9. So far that section evinced an intention to deny to the people of the territory to which it applied, for a time, the right to have their election offices filled by persons selected by them, or their right, through their legislature, to provide by law for filling them. Only to that extent does the section limit the political action of the people of the territory, or the political action of the counties or other municipalities in its borders with respect to their local affairs. Doubtless the belief of congress was that the public good demanded that the people of this territory should for a time be deprived so far of the principle of local self-government enjoyed by the citizens in the other territories and in the states. A law denying to the people of one territory privileges extended to all the others should be strictly construed. We are of the opinion that the section above quoted did not give the defendants the power to call the election to vote on the issuance of school bonds, and the sale thereof, or to appoint the judges of such election, or to receive or canvass the returns.

Reference has been made to section 23 of an act of congress in force March 3, 1887. This section, in effect, merely requires the laws enacted by the territorial legislature, mentioned in the section above quoted, to be approved by congress before taking effect. Our attention has been also called to an irreconcilable repugnancy between certain provisions of sections 102 and 106 of article 15 of an act of the territorial legislature, (Sess. Laws 1890, p. 128.) relating to elections to determine whether bonds shall be issued and sold, and sections 122-125 of the same act. The two sections first mentioned contain, among others, the following provisions: That "fifteen days before an election for school trustees for levying taxes, for voting on the issue of bonds, or for any other purpose named in the article, the city councils of the several cities shall appoint from each manlcl-pal ward three judges of such election." These sections also require the elections to be held in the municipal wards of the city at the time and place designated in the notice. Section 122 provides that the board of education may, when in their judgment it is advisable, call a meeting, and submit to a vote of the district the proposition to issue and sell bonds to raise money to purchase school-sites, to purchase or build school-houses. Sections 123 and 124 are as follows: "The meeting provided for * * * shall be called by publishing a notice signed by the president and clerk of the board of education. * * * Such notice shall contain—First, the time and place of holding such election; second, the names of three judges to conduct the same; third, the hours during the day (naming not less than eight hours) for which the polls will be open; fourth, the amount and denomination of the bonds, the rate of interest, and the number of years, not exceeding twenty, the whole or any part of said bonds are to run; fifth, for what purpose it is proposed to issue the bonds." "The board of education shall appoint three judges to conduct the election. * * * At such elections the ballots shall contain the words 'Bonds,—Yes,' or 'Bonds,—No.'" Section 125 requires the returns to be canvassed by the board of education, and makes it the duty of that body to file with the clerk of the county a certified copy of the order of the board, and of the notice, and an affidavit showing when and where published, and also a statement showing the number of inhabitants, and the value of the taxable property in the district, and that the amount of bonds proposed to be issued does not exceed 2 per cent. of the value of such taxable property, and also facts showing that all matters in relation to the issue thereof were lawfully conducted. Sections 102 and 103 provide for calling and holding elections to vote for trustees, levying taxes, and other elections, as well as those for voting on the issuance and sale of bonds. Their provisions are more general, while those sections making it the duty of the board of education to call the elections, appoint the judges, canvass the returns, and make certificates, etc., are very specific. They provide alone for elections to vote on propositions to issue and sell bonds. They evince greater care in their preparation and more deliberation than the sections first referred to, so far as they relate to the issuance and sale of bonds. To hold that the latter govern elections to vote on the issue and sale of bonds does not invalidate sections 102 and 103, so far as they provide for elections other than to vote on the proposition for the issue and sale of bonds. The intention of the legislature is clear when all the provisions of the act relating to such elections are considered together. It is that these sections were intended to provide for holding all other elections mentioned in them except the one relating to bonds. As to the provisions relating to all other elections, there is no conflict between the two sections. And the provisions relating to the other elections do not depend on those relating to elections for the issuance and sale of bonds. The latter may fall and the former stand. The provisions of sections 102 and 103 may stand, so far as they are not in conflict with the more special provisions of sections 122-125. The provisions of the first two sections, so far as they relate to elections to vote on the issuing and sale of bonds, and no further, are repealed by the latter sections. Suth. St. Const. § 160; End. Interp. St. § 216. The court holds that the election to decide upon the issuance and sale of the bonds in question should be called and conducted according to the provisions of sections 122-125, above referred to. And we further hold that the qualifications of voters must be determined by the laws of the United States, when any conflict arises between them and the laws enacted by the territorial legislature. We are of the opinion that the judgment appealed from is erroneous. Judgment reversed.

BROWN v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO.

MASTER AND SERVANT—PERSONAL INJURIES—EMPLOYMENT OF INCOMPETENT FIREMAN.

1. In an action against a railway company for damages alleged to have been caused by the negligence of a fireman, temporarily operating a locomotive, in backing it up too rapidly, whereby plaintiff, a brakeman engaged in coupling, lost a hand, the court refused an instruction, based upon a contention that the fireman was a fellow-servant, that though the jury found that he caused the accident by too rapidly backing the engine, yet, if they found that he was qualified to perform the duties incident to his position, and that among them was that of handling the engine in the absence of the engineer, then they must find for defendant. It charged instead, in substance, that to entitle the plaintiff to recover they must find that the fireman was negligent or incompetent; that such negligence or incompetence must be proved, not by the circumstances of the accident alone, but that facts of his previous career must be taken into consideration; and that the defendant failed to use reasonable care in employing him. Held no error.

2. Where it appeared that plaintiff, at the time of the injury, was 22 years old; that he had been confined only about a month thereby; that he was still able to do light work about a farm; that his health was not at all impaired; that he was not educated for a profession; that at the time of the injury he was earning about $75 per month,—a verdict of $12,000, though reduced by permission of plaintiff's counsel to $10,000, for the loss of a hand, is grossly excessive.

3. Such judgment being all remitted by plaintiff's counsel, except $4,000, will be affirmed, with costs.

J. L. Rawlins and L. R. Rogers, for appellant. Marshall & Royle, for appellee.

ANDERSON, J. This action is brought by plaintiff to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the negligence of the defendant, whereby plaintiff was so injured in one of his hands that it had to be amputated, and also for other bodily injuries. There was a trial to a jury, and a verdict for plaintiff for $12,000, for which amount the court gave judgment. There was a motion for a new trial, one of the grounds of which was that the damages awarded were excessive. Upon the hearing of this motion the court ordered the judgment reduced to $10,000, by consent of plaintiff, and overruled the motion. The defendant brings this appeal from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial. The plaintiff was head brakeman on a train on the defendant's road at the time he received the injuries complained of. The train was going west, and reached Blue Creek station, on defendant's line of road, about 10 o'clock at night. At this point there is a hill where it is customary to attach another engine, called a "helper" engine, to the train to help it up the ascent. The conductor of the train ordered plaintiff to couple the helper engine, which was standing on a side track, to the engine drawing the train. Plaintiff opened the switch, and called to the man in charge of the helper engine to bring it out onto the main track, so that the coupling could be made. When the helper engine reached the main track plaintiff signaled the man in charge of it to back the engine up, which he did for about half the distance to the train, and stopped, when plaintiff adjusted the coupling-pin, and signaled him to continue to back the engine, while plaintiff ran to the stationary engine, stepped upon the cow-catcher, and picked up the push-bar to couple into the draw-head of the helper engine. The plaintiff testified that the engine came back with such speed and force that he failed to make the coupling, and was unable to get out of the way, and his left hand was caught between the bumpers of the two engines, and crushed, so that it had to be amputated. He also received a flesh wound in his right thigh. Plaintiff testified that the helper engine came back at the rate of four or five miles an hour. The helper engine was in charge of the fireman, he having been placed in charge of it by the engineer, who was temporarily absent. The plaintiff testified that it was too dark for him to see who was in charge of the engine. It is claimed by plaintiff that the fireman, Fay, who was in charge of the helper engine, was not competent to act as engineer, and that it was his negligent and unskillful management of the engine that caused the accident, and that his incompetency to act as engineer was known to the regular engineer, who placed him in charge, or could have been known if proper inquiry and examination had been made with respect to his competency, and that it was negligence in the defendant company to permit him to be placed in charge of the engine. On behalf of the defendant it is claimed that Fay, although only a fireman, was competent to manage the engine, that due care was observed in employing him as fireman, and that, being in fact a competent engineer, it was not negligence to intrust the engine to him for the particular duty then in hand; and also that he was a fellow-servant with plaintiff, and that, therefore, plaintiff cannot recover, even if the negligence of Fay caused the injury complained of. It is further contended that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing directly to the injury complained of, and for that reason cannot recover.

At the close of the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that no negligence on the part of the defendant had been shown; that, if any negligence had been shown which tended to produce the injury complained of, aside from the contributory negligence of plaintiff, it was the negligence of a fellow-servant; and that plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed directly to the injury complained of. The motion was overruled by the court, and this ruling is claimed as error. Whether the motion should have been sustained or not is now immaterial, as the defendant waived any error there may have been in the ruling of the court, by failing to stand on its motion, and in offering evidence in its behalf after the ruling of the court had been made. Insurance Co. v. Crandall, 120 U. S. 527, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 685; Railroad Co. v. Mares, 123 U. S. 710, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321; Insurance Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534.

At the close of the evidence the defendant requested the court to instruct the jury that the evidence did not warrant a verdict for the plaintiff, and that they should return a verdict for the defendant, which the court refused to do, and this refusal of the court is one of the errors complained of. We have examined the evidence, and think there was no error in the court submitting the question of negligence to the jury.

The defendant requested the court to give the following instruction to the jury: "The jury are instructed that if they find from the evidence that Fireman Fay caused the accident by too rapidly or otherwise backing the front engine onto the rear engine, yet if from the evidence they find that Fireman Fay was a competent fireman, and qualified to perform the duties incident to or usual to his position, and that among those duties was that of handling the engine during the temporary absence of the engineer, then the jury are instructed to find for the defendant."

In view of the instructions which were given the jury by the court, we think there was no error in refusing this one. The jury were instructed that, "to entitle the plaintiff to recover, by reason of the negligence or incompetence of Fireman Fay, they must find that not only was he negligent or incompetent, but that fact must have been known to the defendant, or should have been known to it, by the use of reasonable or proper care; and that they should not find that the fireman, Fay, was negligent or incompetent from the circumstances and facts occurring at the time and occasion of this accident, but should take into consideration his prior record and conduct, as well as his subsequent career, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff." Again, the court instructed the jury that "the jury must find from the evidence, not only that Fireman Fay was incompetent or negligent before they can find a verdict for plaintiff, but they must also find from the evidence that the defendant was negligent, and failed to use reasonable and proper care in his employment, or in his retention, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff." We think these and other similar instructions given by the court presented the question as to the liability of the defendant for the alleged negligent acts of Fireman Fay, while acting in the capacity of engineer, as fairly and fully as the defendant was entitled to.

The jury returned special findings with their general verdict, in which they found every material fact in favor of the plaintiff, and it is insisted that neither the special findings nor the general verdict are supported by the evidence. But we need not discuss these questions, as the case must be reversed on another ground.

We think the damages awarded by the jury grossly excessive, and, even as reduced by the court, the amount of plaintiff's recovery is greatly in excess of what he is justly entitled to. The plaintiff testified that he was 22 years old when he was injured; that he was confined to the house about two and a half or three weeks, most of the time in bed, on account of his injuries, and that it was about a month before he could go out on the street, and that after getting out on the street the cold bothered his arm some; that he suffered pain longer with his leg than with his arm; that it was about three weeks before his leg healed up. He further testified that he had been employed as a brakeman about two and a half months; that before he began work as a brakeman he worked at home for his father on a farm; that he was in good health before he was injured, and earned his living by physical labor, and was not educated for any profession. He also testified that since he recovered from his injuries his health had been good, and that he is now a strong, healthy man; that he works for his father on the farm, but that about all he does is to do chores and work in the garden. He also testified that at the time he received the injuries complained of he was receiving from the railroad $70 per month, and something additional for extra time, making his wages at that time amount to $75 or $80 per month. A railway company is entitled to have its rights and liabilities determined by the same rules of law and justice that apply in suits between individuals. For an injury similar to the one complained of in this case, if inflicted by an individual, no jury would find such a verdict as was returned in this case. It is not claimed that the injury was wanton or willful, and there was therefore no room for vindictive damages. The injury to the plaintiff was merely an accident, resulting, it is true, as found by the jury, from the carelessness of the defendant company, but still an accident, in the sense that it was not intentional. While the injury to plaintiff is severe, it only partially disables him, and there are many occupations in which he will be able to earn nearly, if not quite, as much as he usually earned before the accident. By the verdict as rendered, the plaintiff was given at once a nice little fortune, more than the majority of men earn in a lifetime, and vastly more than the great majority of men accumulate by a life of toil and privation. The annual income he would derive from the amount of the verdict, at the ordinary rate of interest, would be about one-fourth more than he was getting when he was injured, and the interest on the judgment, as finally modified, would exceed the highest wages the testified to ever having earned before the accident. There can be no reasonable doubt that the heavy damages awarded by the jury in this case were given under the influence of passion or prejudice, and, if passion or prejudice swayed the minds of the jury in awarding damages, the same or other improper influences may have operated upon their minds in determining the questions of fact necessary to fix the liability of the defendant. Doubtless the 12 men who composed the jury were, individually, honest men, but we are forced to the conclusion that they did not properly appreciate their duties and responsibilities as jurors in this case. The popular prejudice against railway corporations may not be wholly undeserved, but it should not be permitted to find expression in unjust verdicts. When the prejudice against these corporations becomes so strong as to taint the administration of justice, it becomes the duty of the courts to interfere. However reluctant to disturb the verdict of a jury for such a cause, we think the verdict in this case so excessive that it ought not to stand. While we consider it our duty to hold railway companies to a strict accountability for damages caused by their negligent or wrongful acts, yet we also feel it our duty to not permit a glaring injustice to be done them to satiate the demands of popular prejudice. The judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded.

ZANE, C. J., and BLACKBURN and MINER, JJ., concur.

Thereupon, after the reading of the opinion of the court, the respondent, by his counsel, offered in open court to remit of the judgment herein all except $4,000, and, the same being so remitted, it was ordered that the judgment herein be, and the same is hereby, affirmed for $4,000, and costs.

WEAVER v. WEAVER et al.

JUDGMENT FOR ALIMONY—EXECUTION AGAINST DECEASED HUSBAND'S ESTATE—GARNISHMENT.

1. Comp. Laws Utah 1888, §§ 8424, 4185, provide that when a judgment has been rendered against a decedent in his life-time no execution shall issue after his death, except only where the judgment is for the recovery of real or personal property, or the enforcement of a lien thereon. Held, that a money judgment rendered as alimony to the widow of decedent during his life-time was not within the above exception.

2. Under such circumstances, where plaintiff's right to enforce her judgment by execution has been extinguished by the death of the judgment debtor, she cannot have such process against a garnishee.

ANDERSON, J. On the 6th day of February, 1883, the plaintiff obtained a decree of divorce against the defendant David Weaver in the third district court. At the time of the commencement of the action, the court issued an injunction restraining the defendant from disposing of his property pending the suit. At the final hearing of the case the court found that the defendant had been personally served with the writ of injunction, the summons, and a copy of the complaint in the case, on the 29th day of May, 1882; and that on or about the 30th day of September, 1882, in violation of the injunction of the court, he sold and disposed of his property, and secretly left the jurisdiction of the court, taking with him the proceeds of the sale of his property, and without having complied with the order of the court, made at the commencement of the action, for the support of the plaintiff and her children pending the action, and for plaintiff's attorney fees. The court, by its judgment and decree, gave to the plaintiff the custody and control of her four minor children, and also gave her all the real estate owned by the defendant on the 29th day of May, 1882. The court also adjudged that the defendant pay to the plaintiff $7,500, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum until paid, and $7,500 to her as trustee for the support and education of her minor children, and that he pay the counsel fees and costs of the case. On the 17th day of December, 1888, J. R. McBride, attorney of record for the plaintiff, filed a motion in the third district court that execution issue to enforce the decree, and in support of the motion filed his own affidavit, setting forth the above facts down to the rendering of the judgment; and, also, the further facts that the defendant left the territory of Utah in September, 1882, and has ever since remained beyond the reach of the process of this court; and that in 1884 he went to England, and remained there until August, 1888, when he went to Evanston, Wyo., where he died intestate in October of that year; that no part of the judgment or costs had been paid; that W. L. Pickard, of Salt Lake City, had bought a part of the defendant's property, and was indebted to him therefor in the sum of $10,500 and interest thereon at 10 per cent. per annum since August 4, 1884; that an administrator of the estate of said defendant had been appointed in Wyoming, who had demanded of said Pickard the amount he was owing defendant. The court granted the motion of plaintiff, and ordered an execution to issue, and under it Pickard was summoned as a garnishee. He appeared in person and by attorney, and was sworn and examined as to his indebtedness to defendant. The court found that Pickard, by his own admission, had received from the defendant the sum of $10,000 on the 4th day of August, 1884, for which he had given his note, due in one year, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, no part of which had been paid, and that the note was non-negotiable in form; that the note was in the possession of the administrator,—one Hilton,—in Wyoming; and that Pickard admitted an indebtedness to the defendant in the sum of $10,000 and interest for one year at 7 per cent., and denied any other or greater indebtedness; whereupon the court ordered Pickard to pay the marshal on the execution the sum of $10,700. Pickard paid to the marshal $3,000 on the execution, March 8, 1889, since which time no more has been paid. In 1889 J. R. McBride was appointed administrator of the estate of said David Weaver in Salt Lake county, Utah, and, having obtained possession of the Pickard note, brought suit thereon on the 30th day of November, 1889, for the full amount of the note, less the $3,000 which had been paid. Pickard defended by pleading the statute of limitations, and judgment was rendered in his favor April 12, 1890, and from which no appeal was taken. April 30, 1890, plaintiff applied to the third district court by motion for an order for the issuance of an execution to enforce the order of March 2, 1889, to collect the balance ordered to be paid. Pickard was cited to appear and show cause why the motion should not be granted. He appeared, and opposed the granting of the motion, and an order was made by the district court that an execution issue for the balance of principal and interest unpaid, amounting to $8,359.10, to the granting of which order Pickard excepted, and brings this appeal.

The statutes of this territory provide that "the party in whose favor a judgment is given may, at any time within five years after the entry thereof, have a writ of execution issued for its enforcement." 2 Comp. Laws 1888, § 3419. At the time the execution was issued on this judgment under which Pickard was garnished, more than six years had elapsed since the judgment was rendered. Whether, in a case where, pending an action, an injunction has been issued and served on the defendant, restraining him from disposing of his property, and he sells all his property notwithstanding such injunction, and leaves the territory, and remains away permanently, an execution may issue after five years from the rendition of judgment, we do not deem it necessary to determine in this case, in view of the other facts disclosed by the record. It may be proper to observe, however, that the statute makes no exception in such a case; the only exception provided by the statute being that "in all cases other than for the recovery of money the judgment may be enforced or carried into execution after the lapse of five years, by the leave of the court." Id. § 3423. It is provided by statute that, "when any judgment has been rendered for or against the testator or intestate in his life-time, no execution shall issue after his death, except as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure relative to executions. Judgment against the decedent for the recovery of money must be presented to the executor or administrator, like any other claim." Id. § 4135. The Code of Civil Procedure, relative to executions, provides that, "notwithstanding the death of a party after judgment, execution thereon may be issued, or it may be enforced as follows: (1) In the case of the death of the judgment creditor, upon the application of his executor or administrator, as successor in interest. (2) In case of the death of the judgment debtor, if the judgment be for the recovery of real or personal property, or the enforcement of a lien thereon." Id. § 3424. The judgment sought to be enforced in this case was a money judgment, and was not a judgment for the recovery of real or personal property, or the enforcement of a lien; and under the sections of the statute above quoted no execution could issue thereon after the death of the judgment defendant. It follows, therefore, that the order of the court of March 9, 1889, that execution issue on the judgment, was void; and likewise the order of May 7, 1890, which was based on it, and from which this appeal was taken; and such is the general rule. 1 Freem. Ex'ns (2d Ed.) § 35. The plaintiff can have no greater right to enforce her judgment against the garnishee than she has against the judgment defendant, and, when her right to have execution issue was terminated by the death of the defendant, no proceedings in garnishment could be begun or carried on. Drake, in his work on Attachments, says: "The plaintiff's right to hold a garnishee exists only so long as, in the suit in which the garnishment takes place, he has a right to enforce his claim against the defendant. When his remedy against the latter is at an end, so is his recourse against the garnishee. That the latter may show that the plaintiff's right against him has been thus terminated cannot be doubted." Drake, Attachm. (2d Ed.) § 459. The court, therefore, erred in ordering that execution issue against the garnishee, and its action is reversed.

WHALEN v. McMAHON, (APPEL et al., Intervenor.)

GARNISHMENT—INTERVENTION—APPEAL.

1. Under Gen. St. Colo. 1883, § 2011, providing that third persons must assert their rights to property seized under attachment issued by a justice of the peace before the trial of the main action, a claimant of a fund garnished under an attachment cannot intervene after the trial of the main action and judgment for plaintiff.

2. An appeal by the intervenor from the order of the justice dismissing the petition of intervention, because filed after trial in the main action, should be dismissed, as the intervenors have no standing in court.

3. Where the intervenor claims the garnished fund by assignment from the debtor, and it appears by the assignment that it was not absolute, but only as security for what indebtedness the assignor might incur to the assignee, judgment should be given for the intervenor for only so much of the fund as is necessary to satisfy his debt, and for plaintiff for the balance.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Fremont county court.

Joseph H. Maupin, for appellant.

BISSELL, C. In 1887, Whalen brought this suit against the defendant, McMahon, to recover a sum of money which he alleged McMahon owned him. A writ of attachment was issued by the justice before whom the suit was brought, and served upon the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company as garnishee, which made answer, acknowledging an indebtedness to the defendant of $113.84. The case was subsequently tried, and a judgment for the plaintiff followed. The company did not turn over the money either to the officer serving the writ or to the justice when they filed their answer. On the 13th of September, and 10 days after the rendition of judgment against defendant, Appel & Pope, who claimed to be the owners, by assignment, of the debt which was due from the railroad company to McMahon, sought to assert their claim to the money by means of a petition of intervention which they attempted to file with the justice. The right to file the petition was disputed, and the justice refused to entertain it. At this stage of the proceedings, a notice under the statute having been issued to the railroad company to show cause why final judgment should not be entered against them, judgment against the company was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $55.10, with the costs, making a total judgment of $89.20. Appel & Pope, who sought to intervene and claim the money, attempted to take an appeal from the refusal of the justice to entertain their petition, an appeal was allowed, and the cause went to the county court, where a motion was made by Whalen to dismiss the appeal, which was denied. The court took jurisdiction of the case, heard it upon the merits as to the intervenors, and finally entered judgment for them for all the money due from the company to McMahon. It is apparent from this statement that the judgment of the county court cannot be maintained. Whatever right third parties may have to property which has been seized under a writ of attachment issued by a justice of the peace must be asserted before the trial of the main action. Gen. St. 1883, § 2011. This section plainly and distinctly limits the exercise of that right to a time antecedent to the trial of the action. It is thus evident that the justice was right in refusing to entertain the petition of intervention. It is equally clear that the motion to dismiss the appeal should have been granted. The intervenors, Appel & Pope, were without standing in court. They had never become parties to the suit, and were without right, either of contest or appeal. Id. §§ 1988-2011; Downing v. Florer, 4 Colo. 209. Since the case must be reversed, and further litigation over the fund is likely to ensue, the error which it is apparent the court committed in disposing of the merits of the suit will be considered. The answer which the railroad company filed in the justice's court, in response to the garnishee process, set up an assignment from McMahon to Appel & Pope, of which they had notice. Of course, it was their duty, as well as their privilege, to set up this assignment, and protect themselves from any liability which they otherwise might incur if they simply answered an indebtedness to McMahon, and judgment should be rendered against them. The court, however, took an erroneous view of the rights growing out of the assignment, as between the railroad company, the assignees, Appel & Pope, and the attaching creditor. The testimony which was introduced on the trial made it plain that the assignment, which was executed by McMahon to his grocers, Appel & Pope, was an assignment as security for whatever debt might be contracted between the assignor and the assignee, upon the sale of goods during the month for which the wages were assigned. In other words, the assignment was not an absolute assignment, for a valuable consideration, of the whole sum; but was a transfer to the grocers of so much of his money as might be necessary to liquidate any claim which they might have against him for goods delivered before the end of the month. The evidence before the court substantially was that the indebtedness to be protected by the assignment amounted to less than $25, while the amount due by the railroad company was upwards of $113, the excess being enough to satisfy the attaching creditor's debt. Under these circumstances, while the railroad company would have the right in the garnishment proceedings to protect themselves from the effect of the assignment, it was equally the right of the attaching creditor to show the nature, character, and extent of the transfer, in order that he might have judgment against the garnishee for whatever excess there might be over Appel & Pope's claim. According to the testimony, what was due from the railroad company was enough to cover both debts. Under these circumstances, had the appeal been properly taken, the judgment of the county court was wrong; for it should only have gone to the extent of holding that Appel & Pope, by virtue of their assignment, had the right to take enough of the claim against the railroad company to satisfy the debt which might be due to them from McMahon. The judgment should be reversed and remanded, with directions to the county court to dismiss the appeal.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions that the county court dismiss the appeal.

JOHNSON v. JONES.

JURISDICTION—INSTRUCTIONS—PREFERRING CREDITORS—EVIDENCE—REVIEW ON APPEAL.

1. Replevin against a sheriff for the wrongful seizure of plaintiff's goods under an attachment against another can be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction, and need not be brought in the court out of which the writ of attachment is sued.

2. It is not error to refuse an instruction containing a correct abstract proposition of law, but having no application to the issues.

3. It is proper to refuse to instruct the jury that, from the fact of the intimacy of an insolvent debtor and his preferred creditor, they may infer that the creditor knew of the debtor's condition.

4. On appeal the court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury, unless it appears that they were actuated by passion or prejudice.

Bullock, Hardenbrook & Dixon and M. B. Carpenter, for plaintiff in error. H. N. Sales and I. R. Howse, for defendant in error.

BISSELL, C. This was an action of replevin commenced in August, 1883, by James Jones against the defendant, Johnson, who was the sheriff of Jefferson county, to recover a quantity of stock and chattels which he had seized under a writ of attachment. The attachment writ was issued in a suit previously brought by one E. W. Tweedy against L. W. Jones in the district court of Arapahoe county. The plaintiff alleged title, and a wrongful taking by the sheriff. The sheriff justified, and set up the pendency of the attachment suit, and his levy thereunder. The property remained in the possession of the plaintiff up to the time of the trial. The case was tried to a jury, and they found that the plaintiff, James Jones, was the owner of the property which had been seized, that he was entitled to its possession, and had been damaged in the sum of $1. Upon this verdict the proper judgment was entered by the court, and the defendant Johnson sued out this writ of error. Only three errors are relied upon.

The first contention of plaintiff in error is that the district court of Jefferson county was without jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The whole argument is based upon the hypothesis that, as the suit in which the writ of attachment was issued had been commenced in the district court of Arapahoe county, no action could be brought in any other court of concurrent jurisdiction within the limits of the state, which would in any wise affect the possession of the property. The argument is based upon the case of Parks v. Wilcox, 6 Colo. 489, 600, where the principle for which he contends was applied to a case of seizure of property by a federal marshal, and the subsequent institution of a suit against that officer in a state court by a person who claimed title. Neither the case nor the principle has any application whatsoever to the controversy here. Since the judgment in this case was rendered, this question has been put at rest in this state, and the principle controlling actions of this description within this jurisdiction has been declared and illustrated by an able and exhaustive opinion, containing a review of all authorities, in the case of Wilde v. Rawles, 13 Colo. 583, 22 Pac. Rep. 897. In that case the court decided that, wherever the goods of one not a party to the action were seized by the sheriff, the owner had an undoubted remedy against the sheriff as a wrong-doer. The court said "that if there is any principle of law which may be considered as entirely settled by a long series of uniform decisions in the courts, both at home and abroad, at common law and under the code practice, it is that he who, whether an officer of the law or otherwise, takes the property of another without authority, is a wrong-doer, and the taking is wrongful." Proceeding upon this hypothesis, the court established the doctrine that the action for the wrongful taking might be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. It therefore follows that the contention of the plaintiff in error that the court was without jurisdiction cannot be maintained.

Error is likewise predicated upon the refusal of the court to give three specified instructions. As to one of them, the response is that the subject-matter of the instruction was fully covered by the instructions which the court gave in the cause. As to another, it might be said that, while the instruction embodied a correct abstract proposition of law, it was of no practical application to the issues being tried before the jury, nor would it have aided them in reaching a correct verdict in the case. This being true, it was not error for the court to refuse to give it. While with equal propriety it might have been read, the refusal manifestly did the defendant no harm. The third and last instruction which the plaintiff in error claims ought to have been given by the court does not accurately express the law which controls this class of actions. The instruction asked, in terms, is: "Although the law permits an insolvent debtor to make choice of whom he will pay, it denies him the right in doing it to contrive that the other creditors shall never be paid, or to use the debt to delay, hinder, or embarrass the other creditors in the enforcement of their demands, if the grantor and the grantee be intimate; from this fact it may be inferred that the grantee knew the former's condition." It is evident that a condition is attached to the legal principle which is here sought to be stated, which can never determine its applicability in any case. While it may be true that the permission which the law gives to an insolvent debtor to make choice of the creditor who shall receive his money is coupled with the condition that it shall not be exercised for certain specified reasons which the law declares to be fraudulent, the right is never hampered by the relations which may exist between the debtor and the creditor; their intimacy is no limitation upon the right which the law gives. It may be true that the jury would have a right to take into consideration the relations existing between the parties in reaching a conclusion as to the knowledge possessed by the creditor of the debtor's financial straits, but that knowledge is not a necessary inference to be drawn from the extent or character of their friendship. It was a proper subject for the consideration of the jury, but to have instructed them to draw the inference would have been error, and the instruction, therefore, was properly refused.

The only other error insisted upon is that the verdict of the jury was not supported by the evidence. This error assigned simply calls for the reiteration of the rule which has long been established in the state, and always repeated wherever the question is raised, viz., that the court will never interfere with the verdict of a jury unless, "upon the whole record, it appears that the jury acted so unreasonably in weighing testimony as to suggest a strong presumption that their minds were swayed by passion or prejudice, or that they were governed by some motive other than that of awarding impartial justice to the contending parties." Green v. Taney, 7 Colo. 278, 3 Pac. Rep. 423; Barker v. Hawley, 4 Colo. 327; Lebanon Min. Co. v. Consolidated Republican Min. Co., 6 Colo. 372. Under this rule, the judgment in this case cannot be disturbed. There was abundant evidence upon which the jury could find the verdict which they rendered, and, whatever may be the opinion of the court as to the true merits of this case, it must be controlled by the verdict of the jury, when it is abundantly supported by competent testimony. The judgment should be affirmed.

BARKER v. HOVEY et al.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS — OPENING COUNTY ROAD — DEDICATION — SIDEWALKS — ESTOPPEL OF TAX-PAYER.

1. Under chapter 214, Laws 1887,—"An act providing for the improvement of county roads,"—the county board have no power to order the improvement of a strip of ground laid out and intended as a street through land platted into blocks and lots, that had never been used or traveled as a road, and that never had been regularly laid out as a road in accordance with the provisions of the general road law.

2. The board of county commissioners have no power to declare by resolution a strip of ground laid out and intended for a street or road through land platted into blocks and lots to be a county road.

3. A dedication to the county by the land-owners on each side of land sufficient for the purposes of a road, and an acceptance thereof by the board of county commissioners, accompanied by their declaration that the land dedicated shall constitute a county road, is in disregard of the proceedings prescribed by statute concerning roads and highways, and does not make the strip of land dedicated a county road, or a regularly laid out road. Oliphant v. Commissioners, 18 Kan. 386, cited and followed.

4. Under chapter 214, Laws 1887,—"An act providing for the improvement of county roads,"—the county board have no power to order a regularly laid out road to be improved to a greater width than that established by the proceedings under the general road law, by which the road in question was laid out and opened.

5. Under chapter 214, Laws 1887,—"An act providing for the improvement of county roads,"—the board of county commissioners have no power to order or contract for sidewalks 14 feet wide on each side to be built along a regularly laid out county road.

6. A tax-payer is not estopped from asserting a jurisdictional defect in assessment proceedings when he had no knowledge of the defect at the time the proceedings were instituted, nor until after the work had been commenced, nor until after the improvement had been completed.

and Scroggs & Gibson, for defendants in error.

SIMPSON, C. This is an action brought under section 253 of the Code by the plaintiff, Thomas J. Barker, against the county commissioners, clerk, and treasurer of Wyandotte county, to enjoin the collection of certain taxes and special assessments levied upon plaintiff's land by pretended authority of chapter 214 of the Laws of 1887, being an act entitled "An act providing for the improvement of county roads." The facts, as disclosed by the pleadings, evidence, and findings, are substantially as follows: The plaintiff, Thomas J. Barker, is the owner of a tract of land situated in the suburbs of Kansas City, but beyond the limits thereof. This land abuts upon Quindaro boulevard, a street that runs along its northern boundary. Lying west of plaintiff's land, in the order mentioned below, and running parallel with its western boundary, are Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth streets. Lying east of plaintiff's land in the order mentioned below, and running parallel with its eastern boundary, are Sixth, Hallock, Fifth, Thompson, Fourth, Walnut, and Third streets. The plaintiff's land is within one-half mile of all of these streets; and the county commissioners, by pretended authority of chapter 214 of the Laws of 1887, undertook to improve Quindaro boulevard, Third street, Fifth street, and Tenth street, by grading and paving them with cedar blocks, and to impose one-third of the cost of such improvement upon the tax-payers of the county by general taxation, and to charge the other two-thirds as a special assessment upon plaintiff's land, as provided in said road improvement law. This action was brought to enjoin the collection of said general tax, and also the collection of said special assessment, on the ground of various irregularities in the proceedings, and because the said chapter 214 of the Laws of 1887 is unconstitutional. Upon the trial the district court granted the injunction in the matter of the Quindaro boulevard, but denied it as to Third, Fifth, and Tenth streets. This petition in error is brought by the plaintiff to reverse the judgment of the district court denying the injunction in the matter of Third, Fifth, and Tenth streets, and the defendants have also filed a petition in error to reverse the judgment granting the injunction in the matter of the Quindaro boulevard.

It is claimed that chapter 214 of the Laws of 1887 is unconstitutional—First. Because it attempts to delegate legislative power to the commissioners, and confer upon them the absolute and arbitrary power to levy taxes and special assessments on the property of others. Second. The road improvement law is unconstitutional because it does not provide "a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation." Third. The act in question is in violation of section 15 of the bill of rights. Fourth. It is not within the constitutional right of the legislature to confer upon counties and other quasi corporations the power to levy special assessments for local improvements; much less to confer that power upon a class of "resident land-holders." Fifth. The act is in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution. In addition to the constitutional objection, it is urged that the proceedings are void for the following judicial defects and irregularities: As to Quindaro boulevard: First. The petition is not signed by a majority of the resident land-holders as required by section 1 of the act. Second. The county surveyor, in making the map of the taxing district, as required by section 3 of the act, omitted several tracts of land within the half-mile limit. Third. The county surveyor, in making the profile and specifications for the improvement, as required by section 3 of the act, wholly disregarded the petition, and specified a different improvement from that prayed for. Fourth. One of the road commissioners did not take the oath required by section 5 of the act. Fifth. No notice was given of the time and place of making the apportionment. As to Tenth street: First. At the time the petition was presented Tenth street did not in fact exist. Second. The apportionment was made and delivered to the county clerk before the day those interested had been notified to appear and make their complaints. Third. The apportionment was not signed or authenticated by the commissioners, and the record of their proceedings were not kept and filed with the county clerk, as required by section 7 of the act. Fourth. The omission of a cemetery in making the apportionment. As to Third street: The same irregularities occur as in the Tenth Street proceedings. As to Fifth street: The same infirmities exist in the proceedings as to this street as in Third and Tenth streets, except that Fifth street was a "regularly laid out county road" to a width of 40 feet, the same being improved, however, to a greater width. The petition for the improvement of this street fails to state "the time for which assessments in payment thereof are to be made" as required by section 2 of the act. In addition to curbing, grading, and paving on a concrete base the improvements of Fifth street also included the construction of sidewalks 14 feet wide on both sides of the street. The plaintiff's land had already been charged with three of these road-tax assessments for Quindaro, Third, and Tenth streets, and was therefore expressly exempted by section 8 of the act from further burdens. The case was tried by the court, and the following findings of fact and conclusions of law made:

"Findings of fact: (1) This action was begun November 10, 1888, to restrain the collection of taxes for special improvements in grading and paving Quindaro boulevard, a county road, Ninth, Fifth, and Third streets in Wyandotte county, made under the act providing for the improvement of county roads, (chapter 214 of the Laws of 1887,) and which were made in 1888, and fully completed as follows: Quindaro boulevard, June 14, 1888; Ninth, Fifth, and Third streets about October 18, 1888. The assessments had been made and apportioned, and the amounts entered upon the tax-rolls of the county, and the county treasurer was proceeding to collect said taxes in the same manner as other taxes, when this action was instituted. (2) The petition for the improvement of Quindaro boulevard was on the 3d day of June, 1887, presented to the board of county commissioners of said county, and upon presentation of such petition the commissioners ordered a survey, map, and profile and specifications to be made and filed by the county surveyor, which were all made and attached together, properly authenticated by the signature of the county surveyor, and the map and profile offered in evidence are the ones and only ones made by the county surveyor, and by him filed with the board of county commissioners relating to said Quindaro boulevard improvement. (3) Afterwards the county commissioners appointed S. S. Sharpe, G. W. Bishop, and R. W. Gray, commissioners to take charge of said improvement. On January 8, 1888, said Sharpe resigned, he having been in the mean time elected county commissioner, and W. E. Connelley was appointed by the commissioners in his place, and afterwards Bishop and said Connelley resigned, and the county commissioners appointed T. W. Higgins and James Squires in their places. (4) Said commissioners were all properly qualified, except G. W. Bishop, who resigned before any considerable portion of the work of said improvement was begun. (5) The plaintiff lived upon his land just south of the Quindaro boulevard, and his land abuts thereon. He was residing at his said home all the time the improvements were being made upon all the streets mentioned, and was thoroughly familiar with the manner in which the construction of said improvement was carried on, and knew that his land was within the half-mile limit, and would be assessed to pay for such improvement under said law of 1887. (6) There were within the half-mile limit between the termini mentioned in the petition, along said Quindaro boulevard, twenty-one resident land-holders at the time of the presentation of the petition for the improvement of the said road. Only five of said resident land-holders signed the petition which was presented to the board of county commissioners, and upon which said board acted in ordering said improvement to be made and constructing the same. (7) The petition for the improvement of Quindaro boulevard was presented to plaintiff for signature, but he did not sign the same; and it nowhere appears in evidence that he knew who did sign it, or that it was not signed by a majority of the resident land-holders within the territory taxed until after said improvement was completed. (8) The map filed by the county surveyor included a triangular strip of ground on the south side of the road, improved at its junction with Fifth street, which was not within the half-mile limit, and excluded a similar tract on the north side of said Quindaro road, at the same junction, which was within the half-mile limit. (9) The map also excluded a small tract of land which was within the half-mile limit, and lying south of the road, in a triangular form, and at that time within the city limits of Kansas City, as appears from the map; and also excluded a piece of land of about 40 acres, used as a cemetery, and marked 'Woodlawn,' lying within said limits; and the commissioners, on each of the improvements mentioned, excluded said last-mentioned tract in making up their apportionments. (10) It does not appear that the plaintiff knew what lands were included or excluded from said map. (11) The profile filed by the county surveyor showed the grade line of the road, and the commissioners in making the improvement made some slight deviations from such grade line, but such deviations did not in any manner injure the road, and to some extent reduced the cost of the improvement. Whatever change was made was at the request of the plaintiff, Barker. (12) The contract for the work was made by the commissioners for a foundation of one-inch cypress plank, and the work was constructed with one-inch cypress plank foundation. (13) Plaintiff knew what the petition called for, and also the kind of plank that was being used during all the work from the beginning. (14) The precise day upon which the road commissioners made their apportionment does not appear from the evidence, but upon June 14, 1888, they caused to be published a notice, of which the following is a copy: 'The board appointed to assess the benefits to property for grading and blocking of Quindaro boulevard have made their apportionment, and will meet the property owners interested at the office of the county clerk on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, June 18th, 19th, and 20th, at 9 A. M. [Signed] R. M. GRAY, Chairman. T. L. HIGGINS, Secretary. Which notice was published for one week in the official county paper, and is the only notice shown by the evidence to have been given by the said commissioners either before or after making their apportionment. Upon June 18, 1888, the said commissioners met, and their minutes show the following entry: 'June 18, 1888. The board, having finished the apportionment of benefits, and having advertised the same in the official county paper, met, as per said notice, as a board of equalization, and to hear complaints, if any are to be made, from property owners, and, after remaining in session all day, adjourned until to-morrow, June 19th. [Signed] T. L. HIGGINS, Secretary. R. M. GRAY, Chairman.' Said board were in session for the purposes mentioned in the foregoing entry each day thereafter until June 23d following, when they adjourned finally as a board, and the same day filed their report with the county clerk, together with all books and papers possessed by them relative to said improvement. Each day's entry in the minutes of their proceedings was signed by the chairman and secretary, and the last by all the board, as was also a paper delivered to the county clerk, which purported to be the final action of the board. (15) The improvement upon Quindaro boulevard was well constructed and of good material, and was of great value to the property owners within the half-mile limit, and enhanced the value of all such lands to an amount greater than the tax assessed against it for such improvement. (16) The petitions for the improvement of Ninth and Third streets were in due form, and all the preliminary steps of surveys, map, and specifications were regularly ordered and filed, and Henry Horstman, Henry Swingley, and John Adams were duly appointed and sworn as commissioners to take charge of said improvements. (17) The work was begun about —, 1888, and completed about October 18, 1888. (18) The work upon the improvements was all well done, and materials used first class. (19) The commissioners kept full minutes of all their proceedings, but by accident the book in which such proceedings were kept was mutilated, and only a few pages thereof preserved and produced in court. The book of apportionments and papers offered in evidence are those kept and made by the commissioners. (20) The only notices given to the public or property owners along the line of said improvements, shown by the evidence to have been given by the commissioners either before or after their apportionments, of the cost of such improvements, were dated October 18, 1888, and were in words and figures as follows: 'Third-Street notice: The road commissioners on North Third street county road, having made apportionment of the cost of improving said road, will meet at the office of the county clerk of Wyandotte county, Kansas, in Kansas City, in said county, on Monday, Oct. 29, 1888, and continue in session until Wednesday, Oct. 31, to hear any complaints from property owners who may be taxed for the payment of said improvements HENRY HORSTMAN, H. S. SWINGLEY, JOHN ADAMS, Commissioners.' 'Ninth-Street notice: The road commissioners on Ninth-Street county road, having made apportionment of the cost of improving said road, will meet at the office of the county clerk of Wyandotte county, Kansas, in Kansas City, in said county, on Monday, Oct. 29th, 1888, and continue in session until Wednesday, Oct. 31, to hear any complaints from property owners who may be taxed for the payment of such improvement. HENRY HORSTMAN, H. S. SWINGLEY, JOHN ADAMS, Commissioners.' Said notices were published for two weeks only, on October 18 and 25, 1888. (21) The report and apportionment made by the commissioners were duly filed, and on October 31, 1888, the plaintiff filed with the county clerk a paper which was called an appeal from said report, and protest against any tax against his property for said improvements, but no appeal was ever perfected by him, and he never made any further appearance before the county board in reference to the matter. The commissioners docketed the protest as an appeal, but no further order was ever asked or made in relation thereto. (22) On November 1, 1888, the tax-roll, with the cost of said improvements so apportioned, including the assessment on plaintiff's land, was by the county clerk delivered to the county treasurer for collection. (23) And at the time of the presentation of the petition for the improvement of said Third and Ninth streets, those portions of them petitioned to be improved were not, and never had been, county roads. (24) One portion of Ninth and all of Third street had been laid out as streets through certain lands platted by the owners, but had not been used or traveled as roads, while another portion of Ninth street had never been opened in any way, or dedicated as a street, or laid out or traveled at the time the petition was filed; but in June, 1888, the owner of the land executed a deed therefor to the county. (25) No petition of householders for opening said road was filed, no viewers were appointed, or reports of utility filed, and no proceedings for laying out said Ninth or Third streets as county roads were had prior to the filing of the petitions for their improvement, but the commissioners, two or three months after the filing of the petitions, by resolution of the board declared the said streets to be county roads. (26) On April 11, 1888, and before the said improvements were completed, the boundaries of Kansas City, Kansas, were so extended as to bring all that part of Ninth and Third streets described in the petition for improvement within the city limits, and the name of said Ninth street was changed to 'Tenth street.' (27) The plaintiff lives and his land lies just south of the Quindaro boulevard, and between the improvement on Ninth street and that on Fifth street; and other streets intervene between plaintiff's land and Third and Ninth streets. (28) His (plaintiff's) land does not anywhere abut upon said Ninth or Third streets, but the improvements were and are of great value to the property of the plaintiff, and he has received benefits therefrom equal to and greater than the cost of such improvements taxed to him, and different from those to the general public. (29) The plaintiff living in the immediate vicinity, at all times knew that said Ninth and Third streets never had been county roads up to the time of the petitions for their improvement; and he also at all times knew that the improvements were being made under the said law of 1887, and that his land was within the half-mile limit, and would be assessed with its proportion of the cost of such improvements. (30) Fifth street, where improved, was regularly laid out as a county road, and had been traveled as such for many years prior to the filing of the petition for its improvement. (31) The same commissioners were appointed and qualified upon the improvement of Fifth street as upon Third and Ninth streets, and the work done was fully up to contract and a valuable and desirable improvement, and was completed about October 18, 1888. (32) The report of the commissioners as to the Fifth-Street improvement was filed upon the same day as those upon Third and Ninth streets. The tax-roll was delivered to the treasurer at the same time, and said street was brought within the new boundaries of Kansas City on April 11, 1888, and before the work was fully completed. (33) The commissioners gave only one notice, so far as the evidence shows, either before or after making their apportionment, and that was in words and figures as follows:

'Fifth-Street notice: The road commissioners on Fifth-Street county road, having made apportionment of the cost of improving said road, will meet at the office of the county clerk of Wyandotte county, Kansas, in Kansas City in said county, on Monday, Oct. 29, 1888, and continue in session until Wednesday, Oct. 31, to hear any complaints from property owners who may be taxed for the payment of said improvement. [Signed] HENRY HORSTMAN, H. S. SWINGLEY, JOHN ADAMS, Commissioners. Oct. 18, 1888.' This notice was published for two weeks only, on October 18 and 25, 1888. (34) On October 31st the plaintiff filed a paper named therein an appeal from the report of the commissioners as to Fifth street, but no appeal was perfected by him, and he at no time asked any order from the county commissioners to be made in relation to the assessment against his land, and no order ever has been made therein; and, while the county board docketed such protest as an appeal, it was never by either party thereafter treated as such. (35) None of the lands of the plaintiff abut upon Fifth street, and a street intervenes between the land of plaintiff and said street, but the land of plaintiff has been increased in value by said Fifth-Street improvement, and has derived benefits therefrom different from the general public, and to an amount greater than the cost of the improvement taxed to him. (36) By reason of the improvement of the boulevard, Tenth, Fifth, and Third streets, all that belt of country lying immediately south of the boulevard and between Ninth and Third streets, in which tract the land of plaintiff lies, has been made easy of access upon paved streets, has been greatly enhanced in value, and since said improvements were made has been more rapidly developed than any portion of Kansas City, owing largely to such improvements. (37) The petition filed for the improvement of Fifth street was properly signed, and was regular in form, except that it did not state the time for which assessments in payment of the improvement were to be made. The plaintiff saw and knew the contents of said petition before the improvement thereunder was begun. (38) The plaintiff was at all times fully aware of the work of improvement upon said street being done during the time it was progressing, and the manner of doing the same, and that his land was within the half-mile limit, and would be assessed to pay for such improvement."

"Conclusions of law: (1) The petition for improvement of Quindaro boulevard was void, and conferred no jurisdiction upon the board of county commissioners to make the improvement. (2) No sufficient facts have been shown to create an estoppel as to plaintiff. (3) The temporary injunction should be made perpetual as to the tax for the improvement upon Quindaro boulevard. (4) Third and Tenth streets were not county roads when the petition was filed, and never have been, and the commissioners had no jurisdiction to order the improvement; but the plaintiff, by reason of the facts shown in evidence, is estopped to set up the illegality of the tax, and the temporary injunction is, as to the tax for both of those improvements, dissolved. (5) The Fifth-Street petition was irregular, but not void, and conferred jurisdiction upon the board of commissioners to order the work. (6) The plaintiff, having knowledge of the defect in the petition and other facts shown in the evidence, is estopped from setting up such irregularity at this time, and the temporary injunction is dissolved as to the assessment for the Fifth-Street improvement."

We do not deem it necessary in the disposition of these cases to consider but few of the many questions raised and discussed by counsel for the plaintiff in error. Three cases have been considered together, those of Hovey v. Barker, post, 591, 595, and Stewart v. Board,¹ embracing most, if not all, of the questions involved in this case. The record is in an unsatisfactory state. While it recites that it contains all the evidence, the various maps made by the county surveyor of the respective taxing districts are not contained in the record, although it recites that they were offered and received in evidence. This omission precludes us from having any intelligent knowledge of the various localities referred to in the record and briefs of counsel. The various questions discussed and determined in these cases all arise about the true intent and construction of the provisions of an act of the legislature of 1887 entitled "An act providing for the improvement of county roads." In the first section of the act provision is made for the commencement of proceedings to improve "any regularly laid out road." The expression in the title, and the words quoted in the first section, make it clear that the true intent and meaning of the act was to provide for the improvement of that class of roads that are established under the provisions of the general law of the state concerning highways as county roads. The roads then sought to be improved under this act must be regularly laid out county roads. There is no possible construction that can be given to this act to make it include within its provisions streets, or any portion thereof, in a city of the first class, or any other class of roads than the class specifically mentioned in the act. We have general laws providing for the organization and control of cities of the first class, whereby the most ample power is conferred upon the corporate authorities to make the most elaborate improvements of its streets. The improvement authorized by the act under consideration is that of a regularly laid out county road, entirely outside of the limits of any city of the first class. If any portion of the road intended to be improved lies within a city of the first class, this act has no application whatever to this portion. These remarks are deemed necessary, because, in the absence of the county surveyor's maps, it seems that probably when some of these proceedings were instituted, or certainly soon thereafter, some portions of the roads were in fact streets in the city, so called in the record, and so designated in the findings of the trial court. In this case, as in the case of Board v. State, 42 Kan. 327, 22 Pac. Rep. 326, there is a very vigorous assault on the constitutionality of the act, but as there are other controlling questions that in our judgment are decisive of this controversy, it is not necessary to consider the question of its constitutional validity. That part of the judgment sought to be reversed by this proceeding in error are the findings of fact and conclusions of law with reference to the improvement of Tenth, Third, and Fifth streets.

1. As to Tenth street. This street was originally called "Ninth" street, but changed to "Tenth" by the city council of Kansas City, the boundaries of the city having been extended so as to include it before the improvements were completed. According to the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special findings of the trial court that portion of Ninth street petitioned to be improved was not and never had been a county road. A part of Ninth street had been laid out as a street through certain lands platted by the owners, but had not been used or traveled as a road; while another part had never been opened in any way, or dedicated as a street, or laid out, or traveled at the time the petition was filed; but in June, 1888,—more than nine months after the petition was presented and the improvement ordered,—the owners of the land through which the street was located executed a deed of the street to the county. No petition of householders for opening said road was filed; no viewers were appointed, or reports of utility filed; and no proceedings for laying out said Ninth street as a county road were had prior to the time of the filing of the petition for its improvement; but the county commissioners, two or three months after the filing of the petitions, by resolution of the board, declared said street to be a county road. We have already said that this law only authorizes the improvement of county roads regularly laid out. The road sought to be improved must be at or before the presentation of the petition a regularly laid out county road in order to confer power to order the improvement. It is not enough that, after the petition had been presented, the improvement ordered, and the work commenced, it had then been declared by resolution of the county board a county road. If the county board had power to so declare it would not meet the positive requirements of the act; but the board of county commissioners have no power to establish highways by resolutions. Noffziger v. McAllister, 12 Kan. 315; Commissioners v. Muhlenbacker, 18 Kan. 129; Shaffer v. Weech, 34 Kan. 595, 9 Pac. Rep. 202. So that neither at the time the petition for improvement was presented, nor during the continuance of the work of improvement, was Tenth street a county road, or a regularly laid out road. This is conclusive against the power of the board of county commissioners to consider the petition or order the improvement. But the court finds that by reason of the plaintiff's land being in the vicinity of the improvement, and he residing thereon, and that the improvements were and are of great value to the property, and that he has received benefits therefrom greater than the cost of improvement taxed to him, and different from the general public, and that he knew that Ninth street was not a county road, and never had been up to the time of the filing of the petition, and that he knew that the improvements were being made under the law of 1887, and that his land was within the half-mile limit and would be assessed with its proportionate share of the cost of the improvement, by all these facts he is estopped from asserting that Ninth street was not a county road. It is said in reply to this, and very truthfully said, too, so far as many of these findings are concerned, that there is absolutely no evidence to sustain them. There is evidence tending to show that the land of Barker is in the vicinity of this street; that he has resided thereon for many years; that the improvement of the street was of some value to his property, and that he has received benefits therefrom; that he knew that the improvements were being made under the law of 1887; and that his land was within the half-mile limit; but apart from the nearness of the improvement to his land and his long residence thereon there is no fact shown or attempted to be shown from which any inference could possibly be drawn that he knew that Tenth street was not a county road. The proof of knowledge ought to be reasonably clear and strong before it is adjudged that he is estopped by it. We think that there is no evidence to sustain the finding of knowledge. If there was, it is hardly free from doubt, under the case of City of Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. 274, that Barker is not estopped from asserting the jurisdictional defect that it was not a county road that was being improved. The cited case is very like this one. The similarity in facts is strong, and in principle very great. In that case Laing was a resident of the city, knew that his land was being graded, and made no objection thereto. It appears that the grading was of great benefit to him, but no street or road was ever laid out or dedicated through his land. He enjoined the collection of an illegal assessment, as is done in this case. Laing knew that there was no road or street laid out through his land. There the proof of knowledge was positive, direct, and uncontroverted. Here a fact is found from which an inference of knowledge might arise. This court held that Laing, with positive knowledge of the jurisdictional defect, was not estopped, and, following that decision, with a belief that it is the true rule in cases of this character, we now say that Barker is not estopped. Whatever may be said about irregularities of all kinds and non-jurisdictional defects, we believe that it is not within the authority of any person or party in interest, by their action or silence or express assent, to confer a power upon tribunals of limited and special jurisdiction that the law has expressly withheld.

2. As to Third street. The same state of facts exist with reference to this street that were found as to Tenth. It never was a county road or a regularly laid out road. All of this street had been laid out as a street through certain lands platted by the owners, but had not been used or traveled as a road. The owners of the land executed a deed of the street to the county. The street was declared a county road by resolution of the county board. The boundaries of the city of Kansas City were extended so as to include the improved portion of the street before such improvements were completed. The questions, therefore, as to this street (there being the same findings as to residence and knowledge) are the same as discussed and decided above with reference to Tenth street.

3. As to Fifth street. The finding of the trial court is that this street, where improved, was regularly laid out as a county road, and had been traveled as such many years prior to the presentation of the petition for improvement. The petition omitted one of the essential requirements prescribed by the second section of the act in this: it did not state the time for which the assessments for the payment of the improvement are to be made. While Fifth street was a county road, it was only 40 feet wide. It was improved to the width of 42 feet a part of the way, and 52 feet the remainder, with a sidewalk 14 feet wide on each side of the improved way. In view of other fatal defects, it is not now necessary to pass upon the question as to whether or not the omission in the petition to state "the time for which assessments in payment thereof are to be made," as required by the second section of the act, is jurisdictional, or a mere irregularity that does not deprive the county board of the power to act. The other enumerated defects are such that they cannot be sustained under any friendly construction of the provisions of this statute. The road might be improved to its full width in accordance with a fair construction of the act, taking neither economy nor utility into account; but when it is stretched beyond the boundaries of the road on either side to the extent of two or ten feet, such a departure from its width as regularly laid out and declared is not only without authority, express or implied, but is so clearly void that it is almost incredible that such an official tribunal as the board of county commissioners would have ever conceived the idea or tolerated a suggestion of it. But when, in addition to an arbitrary improvement in excess of the legally established width of the road, they add the cost of sidewalks on each side 14 feet wide, all pretense of compliance with the avowed purpose of the law is gone. They convert a road 40 feet wide—a width established under the provisions of the general road law—into one 70 feet wide a portion of its length, and the remainder 80 feet wide, by an unauthorized contract for improvement. These things are wholly unauthorized by the statute, and are absolutely without power and authority, and are not binding on the plaintiff in error, and in the very nature and essence of things ought never to be permitted to be successfully enforced by any court. The same facts are urged as an estoppel against the plaintiff in error as in the other two streets. Some of these facts relied upon to estop him are sustained by evidence, the others are not. We have considered these findings in the Tenth-Street matter. They apply to all three of the streets taken together, and are not made specific as to each street. These attempts to exercise powers not granted in terms or fairly implied by the act render the assessments levied on the land of the plaintiff in error for the improvement of Fifth street void, and there are no sufficient facts pleaded or found to estop him from asserting the jurisdictional defects enumerated. It may be said that, as Fifth street was found to be a regularly laid out and traveled road, the cost of the improvement to the width of 40 feet is valid, and the plaintiff in error ought to have tendered or paid the tax on the legal width before he can ask to have the illegal part restrained from collection. If the tax had been so itemized and segregated that the defendant in error or the officers could by computation arrive at the amount assessed for the improvement of the 40 feet in width, this ought to and would have been required. But the record, so far as it shows about the assessments for the improvement of Fifth street, recites an aggregate sum of $940.75 assessed against the land of the plaintiff in error, and it does not appear that the plaintiff had or could have had any means by which to determine what was the amount of legal taxes, if any there be, that was assessed against his land for the improvement of the legal width of the Fifth-Street road. We recommend that the judgment of the district court of Wyandotte county, as to the assessments for the improvement of Third, Fifth, and Tenth streets, be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

BARKER v. HOVEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. April 11, 1891.)

Motion to correct judgment. For former report, see ante, 585.

PER CURIAM. Upon the application of the plaintiff to have the judgment rendered in this court corrected, we find, upon an examination of the record, that the facts of the case were found by the court below. Upon those facts the judgment of that court as to the assessments for the improvement of Third, Fifth, and Tenth streets was reversed. Under section 559 of the Code the motion to correct the judgment of this court will be allowed, and the court below will be directed to render judgment upon the facts found by it in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for an injunction against the collection of the assessments on the streets above named.

HOVEY et al. v. BARKER.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS—PETITION—ASSESSMENTS.

1. Under chapter 214, Laws 1887, ("An act providing for the improvement of county roads,").

the petition required by section 1 must be signed by a majority of the resident land-holders within one-half mile on either side of a regularly laid-out road, within the terminal points mentioned, or the board of county commissioners acquire no jurisdiction to order the improvement prayed for.

2. A tax-payer is not estopped from asserting a jurisdictional defect in the assessment proceedings when he had no knowledge of the defect at the time the proceedings were instituted, nor until after the work had been commenced.

(Syllabus by Stimpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error to district court, Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge.

Winfield Freeman, A. L. Berger, and J. B. Scroggs, for plaintiffs in error. Hutchings & Keplinger, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. This is a petition in error filed by the board of county commissioners and others, plaintiffs in error, to reverse one of the findings and a part of the judgment of the district court made in the case. The action was commenced by the defendant in error, Barker, under section 253 of the Code, to enjoin the collection of certain taxes and special assessments levied upon his land under the pretended authority of chapter 214, Laws 1887, being "An act providing for the improvement of county roads." We have considered some of the findings and rulings in the preceding case, (44 Kan. —, ante, 585.) that the plaintiff below brought here for review. At the trial below, the court found as follows, as to the improvement of the Quindaro boulevard: "(2) The petition for the improvement of the Quindaro boulevard was on the 3d day of June, 1887, presented to the board of county commissioners of said county, and upon presentation of such petition the commissioners ordered a survey, map, and profile and specifications to be made and filed by the county surveyor, which were all made and attached together, properly authenticated by the signature of the county surveyor; and the map and profile offered in evidence are the ones, and only ones, made by the county surveyor, and by him filed with the board of county commissioners, relating to said Quindaro boulevard improvement. (3) Afterwards the county commissioners appointed S. S. Sharpe, G. W. Bishop, and R. W. Gray commissioners to take charge of said improvement. On January 8, 1888, said Sharpe resigned, he having been in the mean time elected county commissioner, and W. E. Connelley was appointed by the commissioners in his place; and afterwards Bishop and said Connelley resigned, and the county commissioners appointed T. W. Higgins and James Squires in their places. (4) Said commissioners were all properly qualified, except G. W. Bishop, who resigned before any considerable portion of the work of said improvement was begun. (5) The plaintiff lived upon his land just south of the Quindaro boulevard, and his land abuts thereon. He was residing at his said home all the time the improvements were being made upon all the streets mentioned, and was thoroughly familiar with the manner in which the construction of said improvements was carried on, and knew that his land was within the half-mile limit, and would be assessed to pay for such improvement under said law of 1887. (6) There were within the half-mile limit between the terminal mentioned in the petition, along said Quindaro boulevard, twenty-one resident land-holders at the time of the presentation of the petition for the improvement of the said road. Only five of said resident land-holders signed the petition which was presented to the board of county commissioners, and upon which said board acted in ordering said improvement to be made, and constructing the same. (7) The petition for the improvement of Quindaro boulevard was presented to the plaintiff for signature, but he did not sign the same, and it nowhere appears in evidence that he knew who did sign it, or that it was not signed by a majority of the resident land-holders within the territory taxed until after said improvement was completed. (8) The map filed by the county surveyor included a triangular strip of ground on the south side of the road improved at its junction with Fifth street, which was not within the half-mile limit, and excluded a similar tract on the north side of said Quindaro road, at the same junction, which was within the half-mile limit. (9) The map also excluded a small tract of land which was within the half-mile limit, and lying south of the road, in a triangular form, and at that time within the city limits of Kansas City, as appears from the map, and also excluded a piece of land of about forty (40) acres used as a cemetery, and marked 'Woodlawn,' lying within said limits, and the commissioners on each of the improvements mentioned excluded said last-mentioned tract in making up their apportionments. (10) It does not appear that the plaintiff knew what lands were included or excluded from said map. (11) The profile filed by the county surveyor showed the grade line of the road; and the commissioners, in making the improvement, made some slight deviations from such grade line, but such deviations did not in any manner injure the road, and to some extent reduced the cost of the improvement. Whatever change was made was at the request of the plaintiff Barker. (12) The contract for the work was made by the commissioners for a foundation of one-inch cypress plank, and the work was constructed with one-inch cypress plank foundation. (13) Plaintiff knew what the petition called for, and also the kind of plank that was being used during all the work from the beginning. (14) The precise day upon which the road commissioners made their apportionment does not appear from the evidence, but upon June 14, 1888, they caused to be published a notice of which the following is a copy: 'The board appointed to assess the benefits to property for grading and blocking of Quindaro boulevard have made their apportionment, and will meet the property owners interested at the office of the county clerk on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, June 18th, 19th, and 20th, at 9 A. M. [Signed] R. M. GRAY, Chairman. T. L. HIGGINS, Secretary,'—which notice was published for one week in the official county paper, and is the only notice shown by the evidence to have been given by the said commissioners either before or after making their apportionment. Upon June 18, 1888, the said commissioners met, and their minutes show the following entry: "June 18, 1888. The board having finished the apportionment of benefits, and having advertised the same in the official county paper, met, as per said notice, as a board of equalization, and to hear complaints, if any are to be made, from property owners, and, after remaining in session all day, adjourned until to-morrow, June 19th. [Signed] T. L. HIGGINS, Secretary. R. M. GRAY, Chairman." Said board were in session for the purposes mentioned in the foregoing entry each day thereafter until June 23d following, when they adjourned finally as a board, and the same day filed their report with the county clerk, together with all books and papers possessed by them relative to said improvement. Each day's entry in the minutes of their proceedings was signed by the chairman and secretary, and the last by all the board, as was also a paper delivered to the county clerk, which purported to be the final action of the board. (15) The improvement upon Quindaro boulevard was well constructed and of good material, and was of great value to the property owners within the half-mile limit, and enhanced the value of all such lands to an amount greater than the tax assessed against it for such improvement. (16) By reason of the improvement of the boulevard, Tenth, Fifth, and Third streets, all that belt of country lying immediately south of the boulevard and between Ninth and Third streets, in which tract the land of plaintiff lies, has been made easy of access upon paved streets, has been greatly enhanced in value, and since said improvements were made has been more rapidly developed than any portion of Kansas City, owing largely to such improvements."

According to the sixth special finding, only 5 of the 21 resident land-holders that were within the half-mile limit between the termini mentioned for improvement signed the petition. It was this finding, in all probability, that induced the trial court to conclude that the petition for the improvement of Quindaro boulevard was void, and conferred no jurisdiction upon the board of county commissioners to make the improvement, that no sufficient facts have been shown to create an estoppel as to the plaintiff, and that the temporary injunction should be made perpetual as to tax for the improvement of Quindaro boulevard. The findings and conclusions as to this boulevard are claimed to be erroneous, and it is said, in support of this contention, that the statute confers upon the resident land-holders, only, the right to petition, and when the petition is presented the board of county commissioners exercise the same powers as they are authorized to exercise under the provisions of the general road laws. It is further said that the insufficiency of the petition cannot be urged in this action, as it is a collateral attack.

ty of the resident land-holders within one-half mile on either side along the line of any regularly laid-out road, within the terminal points mentioned in the petition, shall petition the board of county commissioners of any county in this state for the improvement of any road as located, or any part thereof, it is hereby made the duty of such county commissioners to cause the same to be improved as herein-after provided." It would seem, on principle, that the requirement of this statute that a majority of the resident land-holders within the limit must sign the petition for improvement is not only imperative, and must always be complied with, but the power of the board to order the improvement cannot be exercised without the petition contains the names of that majority. The best reason for this is because the statute says so; and if you once depart from the plain letter of the act, and say that 5 land-holders out of 21 can compel action by the board, then any number less than a majority may do so. The position assumed by counsel for these plaintiffs in error with reference to this question is this: That under the first section of the act the board of county commissioners have the power to determine whether or not the petition was signed by a majority of the resident land-holders within the half-mile limit; that in this particular instance they exercised that power, and determined that the petition was signed by such majority; and that this finding cannot be attacked collaterally in this proceeding. Numerous cases decided by the supreme court of the state of Indiana are cited that fairly support this contention. The case of Quinlan v. Myers, 29 Ohio St. 500, is a formidable authority in their favor. They also cite the case of Sleeper v. Bullen, 6 Kan. 300, and call attention to the following language of the court: "Is the city liable? We think it is. The petition appears to be good upon its face. The city council, the agents of the city, and in whom is confided the province of deciding the question, decided and declared that the petition was good and valid; and now, after the contract has been executed on the part of the contractors, after the grading has all been done, the city is estopped from denying the validity of the contract, or its liability to the contractors for the grading." When this case is carefully examined, it will be seen that this language was used by the court with reference to a controversy between the city and the contractors, and has no application to the question of the validity of the petition as between a lot-owner, whose lot was assessed, and the city. The case was commenced by Sleeper and many others against the city of Leavenworth and the city treasurer to restrain the collection of a special tax assessed to pay for making certain local improvements on Fifth avenue, in the city of Leavenworth, alleging that there had not been any legal or proper petition presented to the city council praying for the improvements to be made, and that for the want of such petition the taxes levied to pay for the same were illegal and void. Subsequent to the filing of the plaintiff's petition, Bullen and Dustin, the contractors who made the improvements, were made parties on their own motion, and in their answer they claimed that their contract was made with the city in good faith, and in ignorance of the facts respecting the petition, that they had performed and completed the contract, that their work had been accepted by the city, and demanded judgment against the city for the amount due them for making the improvements. The trial court found "that a petition for grading Fifth avenue between certain points had been signed by the requisite number of property owners affected thereby; and while said petition was in the custody of the city council, and without the consent of a majority of the property owners residing upon and owning the property to be taxed to pay for such improvement, it was changed by one of the signers by striking out the words, 'the north line of Tanner's farm,' and inserting the words, 'Fanny street, or where the grade will run out through the hill at Sigel Garden.'" Other facts were found, and the court held that the ordinance for grading Fifth avenue, and the assessments made thereunder, were void, and created no lien against the abutting property. This court, in reviewing the case, says: "The first question in the case is whether the contract with Bullen and Dustin, and the special tax levied to pay them for said grading, were legal. We think that they were not legal, for the reason that no sufficient petition was ever presented to the city council. It therefore follows that said city had no legal right to sell said lots for said special taxes." The court then considers a third question in the case, as to whether the city is liable to the contractors for the grading, and uses the language quoted in the brief, and relied upon by counsel for plaintiffs in error. There is no question in this case between the contractors and the county. The question here is between a land-holder and the board of county commissioners and treasurer. The first point in the syllabus of the Sleeper Case is: "A contract made by the city council under chapter 70, Laws 1867, for grading a street in Leavenworth city without a sufficient petition having first been presented to the council, is, and all proceedings under such contract are, void as against lot-owners." The case, as we take it, is authority for two propositions: First, that the board of county commissioners acquired no jurisdiction to cause the Quindaro boulevard to be improved on account of the insufficiency of the petition; second, the petition is subject to a collateral attack in cases like this. In the case of Noffzlgger v. McAllister, 12 Kan. 315, this court say that the county commissioners of Bourbon county had no authority to make an order putting the night herd law in force in a township without a petition from a majority of the qualified electors of the township asking for the same; that the petition is a jurisdictional fact, and without it no valid order can be made. The order of the board recited that a petition had been presented by a majority of the qualified electors of the township. In this case there was a collateral attack. The cases of Commissioners v. Muhlenbacker, 18 Kan. 129, and Shaffer v. Weech, 34 Kan. 595, 9 Pac. Rep. 202, are both to the effect that the requirement that the requisite number of resident land-holders must sign the petition is a jurisdictional one; that it is a precedent condition, and a failure to comply with it will make all subsequent proceedings void.

The general rule applicable to such inferior jurisdictions as boards of county commissioners is that in their proceedings they are to be held to the strict limits of their authority as conferred and prescribed by statute. We are confident that the rule held and applied by this court is that the land-holder can show in a collateral action the want of jurisdiction of the county board to order the improvement, without he has so placed himself, by acts or words, as to be equitably estopped from so doing. The trial court finds as a conclusion of law that no sufficient facts have been shown to create an estoppel as to Barker in the matter of the Quindaro boulevard. The special findings of fact upon which this conclusion is based are the fifth, seventh, and thirty-sixth. The fifth shows that Barker was familiar with the manner in which the construction of said improvements were made, and knew that his land was within the half-mile limit, and would be assessed to pay for such improvement, under the law of 1887. The thirty-sixth shows that, by reason of the improvement of the boulevard and other streets, the land of the plaintiff was made easy of access upon paved streets, and has greatly enhanced in value. The seventh finds that the petition for the improvement of the boulevard was presented to Barker for signature, but he did not sign it, and that it is not shown that he knew who did sign it, or that it was not signed by a majority of the resident land-holders within the territory taxed until after the said improvement was completed. In our judgment this finding is conclusive against the contention of counsel for the plaintiffs in error that Barker is estopped from asserting the jurisdictional defect in the petition for the improvement of the boulevard. Giving to the plaintiffs in error the benefit of the most favorable reported cases, yet it is almost universally held that, in order to estop a tax-payer to object to a jurisdictional defect, he must have known of such defect at the time it occurred, or discovered it before the work was commenced. 7 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 20, and citations in foot notes. Indeed, the rule is stated very much stronger than this in the case of City of Leavenworth v. Laing, 6 Kan. 274. The other findings do not recite sufficient facts to create an estoppel. We recommend that the findings and judgment of the trial court as to the boulevard be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

HOVEY et al. v. BARKER.(Supreme Court of Kansas. April 11, 1891.)

On rehearing. For former report, see ante, 591.

PER CURIAM. Upon a re-examination of the former opinion handed down in this case, and the various authorities presented upon the argument for a rehearing, the motion will be overruled.

McDONALD v. WELSH. (No. 13,832.)*(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1891.)SWAMP LANDS—SETTLEMENT—EVIDENCE.

1. Const. Cal. art. 17, § 3, providing that state lands which are "suitable for cultivation" shall be granted only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to each settler, applies to swamp lands granted to the state by Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, when such lands are "suitable for cultivation," and can be reclaimed and cultivated by an actual settler. Following Fulton v. Brannan, ante, 506.

2. Evidence tending to prove that plaintiff determined to settle on the land at the time he examined the boundaries, and then intended to proceed immediately to build his cabin and to complete it in a reasonable time, and that he commenced to build the cabin as soon as he could get the lumber, and in fact completed it within a week after making application, is sufficient to justify a finding that he was an actual settler at the time he made his application, where there was no pretense that defendant ever settled on the land.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Freeman & Bates, for appellant. Chas. G. Lamberson, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This is a contest between the plaintiff and the defendants, Taylor and Welsh, for the right to purchase swamp land, referred by the surveyor general of the state to the superior court of Tulare county for trial. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant Welsh moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, he alone appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The land in contest was segregated as "swamp and overflowed land," by authority of the United States, in October, 1884. The court found that the plaintiff settled upon the land, and in due form applied to purchase the same on the 9th day of December, 1887, and that the land then was, and ever since has been, suitable for cultivation. The court also found that the appellant on said 9th day of December, 1887, filed his application to purchase the land, but that he never was a settler on the land.

1. The principal point made by counsel for appellant is that section 3, art. 17, of the constitution has no proper application to "swamp and overflowed lands," because that class of lands must be considered as unsuitable for cultivation. On this point the very able argument of the learned counsel for appellant is a copy of their argument on the same point in the case of Fulton v. Brannan, (No. 13,603,) ante, 506, lately decided by this court. As it did not prevail in that case, it is unnecessary specially to reconsider it in this.

2. It is contended that the evidence does not sustain the finding that plaintiff was an actual settler on the land on the 9th day of December, 1887. The plaintiff testified that he had lived upon the land continuously ever since he built his cabin upon it, "which was about four or five days after making my application. I first saw the land in December, 1887. I went down from Hanford with a party of four. Mr. Diss, one of the party, showed me the corner stakes. The stakes he showed me were the south-west corner, the south-east corner, and the half-mile stakes. I returned to Tulare the same afternoon, and swore to the application. I went back to the land in four or five days, (about December 16, 1887, I think,) and built a cabin." H. H. Freeman testified: "I was with plaintiff when he went to look at the land. I helped him build his cabin. We built the cabin four or five days after he applied for the land. As soon as we could get the lumber there we built the cabin." There was no other evidence than the above as to the date of plaintiff's settlement on the land. There was no pretense that appellant ever settled on the land, and, therefore, no contest as to priority of settlement. If the land was suitable for cultivation the appellant was not entitled to purchase it, even though plaintiff had not applied for it. Dillon v. Saloude, 68 Cal. 268, 9 Pac. Rep. 162. The evidence tended to prove that plaintiff determined to settle on the land at the time he examined the boundaries thereof, December 9, 1887, and then intended to proceed immediately to build his cabin, and to complete the same within a reasonable time, and that he commenced to build the cabin as soon as he could get lumber on the land for that purpose, and actually completed it within a week after his application. This, I think, is sufficient to justify the finding as to plaintiff's settlement. Gavitt v. Mohr, 68 Cal. 507, 10 Pac. Rep. 337.

3. Appellant's counsel make the further point that the finding that the land was "suitable for cultivation at the time of the trial of this action, and at all times since plaintiff filed thereon," is not sufficient as against the defendant Taylor, whose application to purchase was filed in April, 1884, and against whom judgment was rendered for the reasons that his application was "made and filed before the land was subject to application or sale, and that said land is and was suitable for cultivation." If this is not a sufficient finding that the land "was suitable for cultivation" at the time Taylor made his application, yet it is a sufficient answer to the point made,—that there was no privity between the appellant and the defendant Taylor, and that the latter has not appealed from the judgment against him. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

McLEAN et al. v. CROW. (No. 13,465.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1891.)

FIRM NAME — CLAIMS AGAINST DECEDENTS — INSTRUCTION—NEW TRIAL.

1. A firm name showing only the surnames of the partners is not "a fictitious name," nor a "designation not showing the names of the partners," within Civil Code Cal. § 2466, requiring every firm doing business under such name or designation to file and publish a certificate showing the full names and residences of its members. Following Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. Rep. 659.

2. Whether or not physicians' services were rendered during the last sickness of deceased, and so entitled to a preference, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1646, is an immaterial issue in an action brought in the superior court by the physicians against the administrator for such services, as a judgment against the administrator can only have the effect of a claim duly allowed against the estate, and its order of payment must be determined on the marshaling of the assets in the probate court, where all the creditors may be heard.

3. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 612, which provides that the jury, on retiring, may take with them all papers which have been received as evidence in the cause, except such as should not, in the opinion of the court, be taken from the person having them in possession, the court does not abuse its discretion by permitting the jury to take with them the claim on which the action is based, which forms a part of the complaint, and which has been received in evidence.

4. Where the court has charged that expert evidence as to the value of plaintiffs' services is not conclusive, and that it is only intended to supplement the general knowledge and experience of the jury in relation to the matters before them, and that they must exercise their own judgment upon the facts, independently of the opinion evidence, it is proper to refuse a further instruction that such evidence should be received with scrutiny and much caution.

5. The fact that the trial court denied defendant's motion for a new trial during the pendency of his application in the supreme court for leave to prove an exception cannot have prejudiced defendant, where his application was subsequently denied by the supreme court.

• Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; WILLIAM O. MINOR, Judge.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 612, provides: "Upon retiring for deliberation, the jury may take with them all papers which have been received as evidence in the case, except depositions or copies of such papers as ought not, in the opinion of the court, to be taken from the person having them in possession."

Stonesifer & Minor, for appellant. Hutton & Fulkert, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This action was brought by S. McLean and C. W. Evans, partners doing business under the name and style of McLean & Evans, for services as physicians, rendered defendant's intestate during his last illness. The estate is said to be insolvent, and the answer denies that any such services were rendered the deceased during his last illness; that such services were worth more than $150; and that the plaintiffs had made, acknowledged, or published the certificate of co-partnership and notice, as required by section 2466 of the Civil Code.

As the surnames of both partners appear in the firm name, and no part of the name is fictitious, the case seems entirely covered by the recent case of Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. Rep. 659.

Whether the services were rendered during the last illness or not was an immaterial issue in the case. Generally it is an easy thing to determine, the claim being recognized as a debt against the estate, whether it is or is not a preferred claim, under section 1646, Code Civil Proc. In case of doubt, the administrator may refuse to pay until required by an order of the court. At last the assets must be marshaled and the order of payment determined by the probate court, where other creditors may be heard. Suits on claims against an estate may be brought in any court, including justices' courts. It would be an anomaly to allow a justice of the peace, in a proceeding where other creditors could not be heard, to give a preference to one claimant over others, and enter a judgment binding on the probate court when it shall come to pass upon the relative rights of all creditors. The judgment against the administrator can only have the effect of a claim duly allowed against the estate, (section 1504, Id.,) to be paid in due course, and cannot give the creditor any further rights. As already intimated, a claim may, on its face, be plainly a funeral expense, or an expense of the last sickness, and, if allowed at all, manifestly a preferred claim; but there is nothing in the mode of allowance which fixes its rank. As there is no mode of allowance that can give a claim priority, it must follow that there can be no judgment establishing the validity of a claim, which the administrator or court has refused to allow, which can have that effect. In this case, had the administrator been satisfied that the claim was valid, though not for services rendered during the last illness, and therefore not entitled to rank as a preferred claim, his allowance would not have given it such rank, although on its face it purported to be for such services. It would still be an open question. This being so, we do not feel called upon to consider whether the phrase "last sickness" in section 1643, Id., means services rendered in extremis, although it would seem obvious enough that it must mean something more than that, and something more than the same phrase in statutes authorizing nuncupative wills.

Section 612, Id., we think, justifies the action of the court in allowing the jury to take with them the claim as presented, and upon which the suit is based, when they retired to consider their verdict. Besides constituting a portion of the complaint, it was a paper which had been received in evidence. It was a matter within the discretion of the court. Clark v. Insurance Co., 36 Cal. 163.

The defense asked an instruction in regard to expert testimony, in substance, that the jury were to exercise an independent judgment, giving to such evidence such weight only as they deemed it entitled to; that it did not preclude them from exercising their own judgment upon the subject, and, further, it ought, like all opinion evidence, to be received with scrutiny and much caution. We see no objection to the instruction asked, and the court might well have given it, but it does not necessarily follow that the judgment should be reversed for the refusal. The object of the testimony was to prove the value of the medical services. The only evidence upon the subject was the expert testimony, and the statement of the doctors as to the nature of the service, the length of time, and the other circumstances of the attendance. At the request of plaintiffs, the court had already instructed the jury that they should consider these facts, and, "when they have all the facts and circumstances attending and surrounding the transaction, the opinion of experts as to value, based upon the same evidence, is not conclusive; their opinions are not to be substituted for the common sense and judgment of the jury. The purpose of their introduction is to supplement the general knowledge and experience of the jury in relation to the matters before them, and thereby to aid them in the exercise of their own judgment, to the end that a more just and accurate conclusion as to the value may be drawn from the evidence."

This covers all the points upon which defendant asked the court to instruct the jury, except the closing admonition as to caution in receiving such evidence. This is the duty of the jury as to all evidence, and is understood, particularly so when the jury are told that they must exercise their own judgment upon the facts, independently of the opinion evidence.

The sixth instruction asked by the defendant was so clearly wrong that it does not merit discussion. Plainly, the jury were to find the value of the services, whether more than $150 or not.

The second instruction given at the request of plaintiffs is in exact accord with our ideas of the issues properly submitted to the jury.

The defendant objects to the order denying his motion for a new trial, on the ground that it was premature, as he had or was about to petition the supreme court for leave to prove his exception. The only evidence of this matter in the transcript is contained in the order denying a new trial, where it is recited, the "defendant objecting to the hearing of the motion at this time on the ground that defendant is petitioning the supreme court for leave to prove his exception." If the defendant had petitioned for leave to prove an exception which had been denied by the trial court, that court ought to have granted time for that purpose. There is here, however, no evidence of such fact, or any evidence that we can notice that such application was pending. The records of this court show that an application of that character was made June 8th, and was not successful. The motion for a new trial had been denied on the previous day, after due notice. Either party may bring such a motion to a hearing. What effect upon this order the allowance of an exception here would have had, if the application had been successful, we are not called upon to say. As it has turned out, the defendant has not been injured. We think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PARTNERSHIP — FILING CERTIFICATE OF FIRM NAME.

A firm name showing only the surnames of the partners is not "a fictitious name," nor "a designation not showing the names of the partners," within Civil Code Cal. § 2466, requiring every firm doing business under such name or designation to file and publish a certificate showing the full names and residences of its members. Following Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. Rep. 659.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county; A. R. CONKLIN, Judge.

Thomas Rhodes and Wells Hendershot, for appellant. J. W. Mahon, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought to recover $396.35 for certain personal property alleged to have been sold by plaintiffs to defendant. Defendant demurred to the complaint, and the court below sustained the demurrer. Plaintiffs appeal. The only ground of demurrer is that the complaint does not state that plaintiffs had filed a certificate of partnership, as required by section 2466 of the Civil Code. The complaint shows that the plaintiffs, F. M. Carlock and H. D. Robb, were copartners doing business under the firm name of Carlock & Robb. The firm name was therefore not a "fictitious name" nor "a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners," within said section of the Code. Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. Rep. 659. Moreover, the proper way to raise such a point is by answer. The judgment is reversed, with direction to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

PEOPLE v. McNULTY. (No. 20,659.)

MURDER—INSANITY—BURDEN OF PROOF—NUNC PRO TUNC—AMENDMENT—INFORMATION.

1. Insanity, as a defense to a charge of murder, must be established by a preponderance of evidence. Following People v. Travers, (Cal.) ante, 88.

2. A judgment stating that defendant has been convicted of the "murder" of deceased is sufficient, though it does not show that it was murder in the first degree.

3. The trial court can amend its minutes nunc pro tunc, to show, in accordance with the fact, that, when defendant appeared for judgment, he was asked "if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him."

4. An information charging that defendant did kill and murder "one James Collins" sufficiently charges that defendant murdered a human being.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

Wilson & Trout, for appellant. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant, McNulty, was charged, by information, with the murder of "one James Collins." He was convicted as charged, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment rendered against him, and from an order denying a new trial. "The defense set up at the trial was insanity. The bill of exceptions is the charge of the court." The grounds of error alleged are that the court in its instructions charged the jury that the defendant must establish the fact of insanity, after proof of the alleged killing, by a preponderance of evidence; his contention, in brief, being that sanity is a necessary ingredient in the guilt of one charged with murder; that such guilt must be proved beyond any reasonable doubt; and hence, if the evidence discloses a reasonable doubt as to whether a defendant is sane, he must be acquitted. The question which is exhaustively presented, and the authorities fully stated and discussed, has recently been settled by an opinion of the appellate court of this state in People v. Travers, (Cal.) ante, 88, which as to the matter in hand reads thus: "(3) In the instructions given upon the subject of insanity, there was no error prejudicial to appellant. They are somewhat voluminous; but the main proposition contained in them was that a person is presumed to be sane until the contrary is shown, and that the burden is on a defendant of showing insanity by a preponderance of evidence. This rule has been established in this state by a long line of authorities. People v. Myers, 20 Cal. 518; People v. Coffman, 24 Cal. 237; People v. McDonnell, 47 Cal. 184; People v. Wilson, 49 Cal. 13; People v. Messersmith, 61 Cal. 246; People v. Hamilton, 62 Cal. 377; People v. Kernaghan, 72 Cal. 609, 14 Pac. Rep. 566; People v. Eubanks, 86 Cal. 295, 24 Pac. Rep. 1014. And this long line of decisions cannot be held to have been overruled by People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 22 Pac. Rep. 127, 549, where the defense was accident; and People v. Elliott, 80 Cal. 296, 22 Pac. Rep. 207, where the defense was self-defense. In those cases the court was dealing entirely with those 'circumstances,' referred to in section 1105 of the Penal Code, which mitigate or justify or excuse an act done by a sane man who might commit a crime, and its attention was not called in any way to that unusual and peculiar mental condition called 'insanity,' which renders a man utterly incapable of committing crime at all. In the opinion of the court in People v. Bushton, reference is made to People v. Smith, 59 Cal. 607, and People v. Flanagan, 60 Cal. 8, in which the very doctrine of the Bushton Case was stated; but in those cases—where the defenses were self-defense and defense of property—the court certainly did not intend to overthrow the settled rule of the court on the subject of insanity. We are clear, therefore, that the undisturbed law of this state still is that the burden of showing insanity is upon a defendant who seeks shelter under it as a defense." 26 Pac. Rep. 90.

This disposes of all the points made by counsel for the defendant.

An attorney, permitted to file a brief as amicus curiae, has raised certain points as to the minutes of the court not showing that certain things were done which are required by law, and that the judgment was insufficient as not showing that the defendant had been convicted of murder in the first degree, although it does state that the sentence was "for the murder of James Collins on the 25th day of March, 1888, of which you have been duly convicted." The judgment was sufficient, as stating the general offense, "murder," for which the defendant was convicted. People v. Murray, 43 Cal. 455; Ex parte Simpson, 47 Cal. 127. It appears that, upon a suggestion of the diminution of the record, there was filed here a certified copy of the minutes of the trial court, containing, among other things, an amendment of the minutes nunc pro tunc, as to the fact that when the defendant appeared for judgment he was asked "if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him." This amendment could be made by the trial court so as to conform to the true state of facts, even pending appeal. People v. Murback, 64 Cal. 372.

As to all other matters which it is complained were not done,—even if it be conceded, without deciding, that as the record originally appeared it affirmatively showed that they were not done,—the certified copy of the minutes of the proceedings show that none of the points made as to the sufficiency of the minutes are well taken; that everything was done which the statute required to save all the rights of the defendant when called up for sentence and judgment.

He also urges an objection to the sufficiency of the information in respect that it does not designate a human being as having been murdered by defendant in the allegation that the defendant "did then and there willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder one James Collins;" the argument being that one James Collins might mean a horse as well as a person or human being. It is manifest that the defendant could not have been otherwise than informed by the language used that he was accused of the murder of a human being, when he was charged with having murdered "one James Collins." This is all that the law requires. Subdivision 6, § 959, Pen. Code; People v. Freeland, 6 Cal. 98. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

NORDHOLT v. NORDHOLT, (two cases.) (No. 13,962.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1891.)
INFANCY—AVOIDANCE OF DEED—FULFILLMENT OF TRUST—DURESS.

1. One who takes and holds the legal title to land in trust cannot disaffirm or avoid his deed in execution of that trust on the ground of his minority.

2. In an action to avoid a deed on the ground of minority alone, there being evidence that plaintiff induced his mother to deed to him in trust for defendant, his brother, on his parol promise to convey it to him; that at the time he did not intend to keep his promise; that he afterwards conveyed it, with the secret intention of thereafter avoiding it on the ground of infancy, —it is error to admit evidence that the conveyance to defendant was induced by duress.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; WILLIAM P. WADE, Judge.

Gage & Roberts and Brousseau, Hatch & Thomas, for appellant. Shinn & Ling and Anderson, Fitzgerald & Anderson, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. The issues in these two actions were the same, and the actions were consolidated and tried together by the lower court on the same evidence. The court found for respondent on all the issues, and rendered judgment accordingly. The appeals are from the final judgment, and from an order denying motion for new trial. It appears by the pleadings that the parties are brothers, and that on November 17, 1886, their mother conveyed to the respondent, William, by deed absolute on its face, expressing a nominal consideration of one dollar, an undivided fourth part of certain real property situate in the city and county of Los Angeles; that appellant, John, claimed that this conveyance was in trust for him, and demanded of William a conveyance of the legal title; that on February 10, 1887, William, who was then a minor, over the age of 18 years, conveyed to John, by a bargain and sale deed, expressing a nominal consideration of one dollar, the same undivided fourth of the property; that this conveyance was claimed by appellant, John, to have been made in execution of the alleged trust. The respondent denies the trust, and seeks to avoid his deed of February 10th, to John, on the ground that at the time of its execution he was a minor of the age of only 18 years. If the respondent took and held the legal title in trust for appellant, he cannot disaffirm or avoid his deed in execution of that trust, on the ground of his minority, since the execution of the trust was a duty which a court of equity would have compelled him to perform notwithstanding his infancy. Elliott v. Horn, 10 Ala. 348, and cases there cited; Starr v. Wright, 20 Ohio St. 97; Prouty v. Edgar, 6 Iowa, 353; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 416. Therefore the respondent's right to disaffirm his conveyance of February 10th depends upon the issue as to whether he held the legal title in trust for the latter. Upon this issue the lower court found for the respondent, and the appellant contends that this finding is not justified by the evidence. There is nothing in the deed of the mother to respondent to indicate that the conveyance was in trust; nor is the alleged trust evidenced by any written instrument subscribed by the respondent or his agent. If the trust exists, it arises from fraud, and is therefore a constructive trust, not within the statute of frauds, which may be proved by parol; and this is the theory on which the case was tried. The evidence tended to prove that the mother, at the request of respondent, had been induced to convey the property in question to her four children, viz., respondent, appellant, and her two daughters, one undivided fourth to each; that William (respondent) had requested her to convey to him John's fourth in trust for the latter, on account of John's dissipated habits at that time, to be reconveyed to John when he should become temperate, or when William should become 21 years of age; that at first the mother consented to this, and, in the absence of John, William presented to her the draft of a deed to this effect, and requested her to execute it; that she refused to execute the deed as drawn, conveying John's fourth to William in trust, but did then (November 8, 1886) execute a deed to William and her two daughters, conveying to each one undivided fourth of the property; that afterwards (November 17, 1886) respondent again requested his mother to convey to him the other fourth, in trust for John, which she then did, without other consideration than the parol understanding with respondent and his express promise to her that he would reconvey that fourth to John, as above stated; that, at the time of making this promise to hold in trust and to reconvey to John, respondent did not intend to perform his promise, but intended to claim and hold that fourth absolutely for himself, as he does in these actions; that, upon John's claiming and demanding of him a conveyance of that fourth, he executed the deed of February 10, 1887, but with the secret intention of thereafter disaffirming it on the ground of his minority, as he is endeavoring to do in these actions. These facts, if proved, constitute such fraud as would justify a court of equity in declaring the respondent a mere trustee of the legal title for the benefit of the appellant. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. Rep. 689; Adams v. Lambard, 80 Cal. 426, 22 Pac. Rep. 180; Sandloss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 481. And the evidence, positive and circumstantial, on the part of the appellant, seems prima facie sufficient to prove them. Indeed, they seem to be supported by a decided preponderance of evidence properly admitted.

But it was claimed by the respondent on the trial, without any foundation therefor in the pleadings, that his deed to appellant of February 10, 1887, was executed under duress per minas, which his testimony on the trial had some tendency to prove. This testimony of the respondent as to threats by John was objected to by counsel for appellant, on the ground that it was irrelevant to any issue made by the pleadings. The objection was overruled by the court, and counsel for appellants excepted. Thereupon respondent testified as follows: "Well, at that time John thought he had a quarter interest in this property, and he used to ask me for the property all the time. At that time he was drinking very heavily, and he told me several times if I did not give him up that property he would do me up, or something to that effect. I felt the influence of him, and I talked with Judge Ling about it, and he said if I gave him a deed I could disaffirm it after awhile, and keep him quiet for the present. So with that I made a deed to him of one-quarter interest in the property. John would speak to me about the matter, on an average, every other day. He would say that he had an interest—a quarter interest—in the property, and that he wanted it; he wanted a deed to that property." I think the court erred in overruling the objection to this testimony to the possible, if not probable, prejudice of the appellant. The conveyance of February 10, 1887, under the circumstances of John's claim and demand, tended to justify an inference that the respondent then recognized the trust and his obligation to convey the property to John, which corroborates and strengthens the other evidence of the trust; but, if the conveyance was coerced by duress of any kind, no such inference could be drawn. Why, if respondent did not recognize the trust, did he execute the deed of February 10, 1887? This question, so pertinent under the circumstances, is answered by evidence of duress. But, since the execution of the deed was expressly admitted by respondent's pleadings, and the duress sought to be proved was affirmative matter in avoidance of the deed, it should have been specially pleaded; else no evidence to prove it should have been admitted against the objection of appellant. McCreary v. Marston, 56 Cal. 403; McCreary v. Duane, 52 Cal. 262; Miller v. Sharp, 48 Cal. 394; McCombs v. Reed, 28 Cal. 281. The only matter pleaded in avoidance of the deed is the minority of the respondent, which, we have seen, is not available if the respondent held the property in trust as alleged, and as the evidence tends to prove. For the error in admitting respondent's testimony as to duress, I think the judgment and order should be reversed, and the causes remanded for a new trial.

I concur: BELCHER, C.

HAYNE, C. I concur in the foregoing opinion, but go further. I think it would make no difference if the duress were pleaded in the fullest manner. The deed of the respondent can no more be avoided on the ground of duress than it can on the ground of minority. A court of equity will not lend its assistance to a man to set aside on the ground of duress an execution of a valid trust. That would be to assist a fraud. This question fairly arises, and, if it be not disposed of now, the case will probably come back again.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the causes remanded for a new trial.

INSOLVENCY—PETITION—VERIFICATION.

1. The allegation in a petition in insolvency against a firm, alleging that A. and B., doing business under the firm name of A. & B., are indebted, instead of averring that the firm "A. & B." is indebted, is not insufficient, as showing that the indebtedness is by the parties as individuals, rather than by the partnership.

2. Where, in a petition, different creditors have joined, having several debts, and are required to join in the verification, some of the matters must necessarily be stated upon information and belief, and that form of verification is proper, although there are no allegations in the petition which are stated to be upon information and belief.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

O. L. Abbott, for appellants. N. O. Bradley and G. E. Lawrence, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. The only questions presented by this appeal are as to the sufficiency of the petition and the verification. They are as follows:

"In the superior court of the county of Tulare, state of California. In the matter of D. L. Wright and W. B. Wright, copartners doing business under the firm name of D. L. and W. B. Wright, insolvent debtors. To the Hon., the superior court of the county of Tulare, state of California. The petition of D. S. Cohn and S. Cohn, doing business under the firm name of Cohn & Co., Frederick Kern, Matthew McGovern, Frank T. Elam, and Geo. Wright, respectively, shows that petitioners are each residents of the state of California, and that D. L. Wright and W. B. Wright, copartners doing business under the firm name of D. L. and W. B. Wright, above named, are residents of the county of Tulare, state aforesaid, and are indebted to your petitioners as follows to the said firm of Cohn & Co. in the sum of $1,241.85, on a promissory note executed and delivered by said firm of D. L. and W. B. Wright to said firm of Cohn & Co. of date October 28, 1889, for the principal sum of $1,375, bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, no part of which has been paid, save and except the sum of $152.15, leaving now due on said note the sum of $1,241.85; to Frederick Kern in the sum of $60.75, for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered to said insolvents within the last two years; to Matthew McGovern in the sum of $8.50, for care of team and livery bill, furnished within two years last past; to Frank T. Elam in the sum of $7.85, for blacksmithing and lumber, furnished within two years last past; George Wright in the sum of $6.00, for brick and mortar, furnished within two years last past,—in all $1,324.95; and each and all of said sums are now due, and the same or no part thereof has been paid, and neither of said petitioners has become a creditor of said firm of D. L. and W. B. Wright, by assignment within thirty days prior to the filing of this petition; that said D. L. and W. B. Wright, copartners as aforesaid, were on the 7th day of December, 1889, insolvent; that said firm of D. L. and W. B. Wright did, on or about the 7th day of December, 1889, transfer and convey to one E. E. Giddings and John Nance their certain livery stable outfit, and their stock belonging to said livery stable, and other property situate in the town of Dinuba and in Tulare county, with intent to delay, defraud, and hinder their creditors and your petitioners herein from collecting their just claims against said firm; that said firm of D. L. and W. B. Wright have transferred and conveyed all their property within thirty days last past, and now have no property, as your petitioners are informed and believe, subject to attachment. Wherefore your petitioners pray that the said court issue its order to said D. L. & W. B. Wright, copartners doing business under the firm name of D. L. & W. B. Wright, to show cause, at a time and place fixed by the court, why they should not be adjudged insolvent debtors, and the surrender of their estate be made for the benefit of their creditors in manner required of insolvent debtors.

The objection to the petition is that it does not show that the creditors were creditors of the partnership, rather than of D. L. and W. B. Wright as individuals. The allegation is that D. L. and W. B. Wright, doing business as partners under the firm name of D. L. & W. B. Wright, are indebted, etc., and not that the firm of D. L. & W. B. Wright are indebted, etc. I think this averment can only be understood as charging that the indebtedness arose in the business of the copartnership. There is no provision in the insolvent act for adjudging two or more persons insolvent, and providing for a joint assignment, except section 35, which authorizes such proceedings in favor of or against partners in reference to partnership debts and assets. In such case the proceeding is properly for or against them individually as partners. This must be so, for the separate estate of each member of the firm also passes to the assignee. And such was the practice in bankruptcy in the federal courts. Partnership debts are, after all, only joint obligations, and the firm cannot be insolvent unless the individual members are so. It is, doubtless, necessary to show what the partnership debts are, for various questions are likely to arise between individuals and firm creditors in marshaling the assets and paying debts. The form adopted here in the averment of the partnership indebtedness is quite similar to that which has always been employed in pleading partnership indebtedness, and I think is sufficient. The objection to the verification is that it is in the usual form for the verification of a pleading, which includes matters stated on information and belief. There are no matters in the petition stated to be on information and belief, and the statute does not prescribe the form of the verification. Where different creditors, however, having several debts, are required to join in a verification, some of the matters must necessarily be stated upon the information and belief of each of the affiants. I think the petition and verification sufficient, and the judgment and orders appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

PAYMENT — APPLICATION — COMPOUND INTEREST — ACCOUNTING BETWEEN MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE.

1. Where mortgagees in possession of the mortgaged estate receive therefrom a net income over and above their expenditures, they are under obligation to so apply such payments to reduce the more onerous undertakings of the debtor if it can be done consistently with their receipt of all he has contracted to pay them; and where, of several obligations secured by such mortgage, one bears compound and the others simple interest, the payments must be applied so as to first extinguish the one bearing compound interest.

2. Where the court has made a finding upon settlement of the account of mortgagees in possession, stating it as of that date, and the decree is not entered until some time afterwards, it is not error for the court to make a supplemental finding showing the expenditures and receipts since the former account, and to modify it accordingly.

A. L. Hart and Solen Hall, for appellants.
J. D. Goodwin, D. W. Jenks, and W. N. Goodwin, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. February 4, 1875, Adam Murdock borrowed from the defendant Clarke $8,500, and executed to him his promissory note therefor, "with interest thereon at the rate of one and one-fourth per cent. per month from said 4th day of February, 1875, interest payable semi-annually, and, if not so paid, to be added to the principal, and bear a like rate of interest;" and at the same time conveyed to him certain real property consisting of the "Big Valley Ranch" and the "Beaver Creek Ranch" "for the purpose of securing the payment of said promissory note according to the terms thereof." March 22, 1875, Clarke conveyed to his co-defendant, Cox, an equal one-half of the interest in said note and security, and on the same day Murdock borrowed from Clarke and Cox the further sum of $5,000, for which he gave them his promissory note for that amount, "with interest at the rate of one and a-half per cent. per month from date until paid." At that time it was agreed between Murdock and the defendants that the defendants "should have and hold the possession and control" of the said real estate, together with certain property "until the said promissory notes, with interest thereon, together with such further amounts or sums as should be advanced and paid out by said Clarke and Cox for said Murdock, should be fully paid to them." April 10, 1875, a bill of sale of said personal property was executed by Murdock to Clarke and Cox "in pursuance of said agreement, and as further security for the payment of said several amounts." The defendants took possession of the ranches aforesaid on the 23d day of March, 1875, and after the execution of the bill of sale therefor they also took possession of certain of the personal property therein described. After the execution of said bill of sale the defendant, at the request of Murdock, advanced and paid to and for his use and benefit other sums of money, for some of which he gave them his note, "with interest at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month," and for a portion of which "no note or instrument in writing has ever been given." Murdock died intestate December 7, 1875, and thereafter his administratrix (the respondent herein) brought this action against the defendants for an accounting of the money received by them; and in the prayer to her complaint asked "that such sum as may be necessary for that purpose be appropriated to the payment of the said sums of money borrowed of the said defendants by the said Adam Murdock, with the interest thereon; and that said applications of said money to such payment be made as of the date at which the said money was received by the defendants." The case came on for trial April 30, 1888, and in its decision rendered February 19, 1889, the court settled the account of the defendants from the time they took possession of said property down to May 1, 1888. In its findings of fact the court found "that since they have been in the possession of the said property, as aforesaid, the total expenses of defendants in the necessary and proper management and care of said property, properly chargeable to said estate, has been $34,358.57, and their receipts from the products of said ranches, the sales of cattle and lease of hay land, have amounted to $48,160.45." The court also found that the defendants had, in addition to realizing the foregoing amounts from said property, made use of the property so held by them, for their own benefit, and that "the value of the use and occupation of the said ranches on the part of the defendants for their own stock since the 1st day of November, 1877, up to the present time is $1,000 per annum, and that the defendants are properly chargeable therewith." It also found "that no part of any money received by the defendants from the sale of stock or other products of the ranch, or from the leasing of the hay land, has been applied to the payment of the debts due to them by the estate of Adam Murdock;" and, in conclusion, "that upon a full accounting the plaintiff was indebted to the defendants on the 1st day of May, 1888, in the sum of $29,752.59, no credit for compounding of interest being allowed defendants." From these findings the court found as its conclusions of law that the plaintiff was entitled to a reconveyance of the property "upon the payment to said Cox and Clarke of the said sum of $29,752.59, with simple interest on the notes held by them against said estate since the 1st day of May, 1888, and such further sum as may have been expended by them for the benefit of said estate since said date, less such sum as they may have received from said estate by the sale of cattle and other products, and the leasing of hay land, and less a rental of $1,000 per annum since said date, for the use of said ranches for their own stock;" and directed a decree to be entered accordingly. Prior to the entry of the decree a supplemental account, rendered under the foregoing directions from May 1, 1888, was settled by the court, and in its decree, after settling said account, the court found that there was a total of $31,926.37 due and owing from the plaintiff to the defendants, and directed and decreed that "upon the payment by plaintiff to defendants of the said sum of $31,926.37, within thirty days after the entry of this decree, the defendants shall convey to the estate of Adam Murdock, deceased, all of said property then remaining in their hands. This decree was entered July 3, 1889, and thereafter the defendants appealed to this court "from the part of the judgment and decree rendered in favor of said defendants against said plaintiff, and which adjudges that no credits for compounding of interest be allowed the defendants, and which adjudges that there was due from the plaintiff to the defendants at the date of filing said decree, $31,926.37 only." The points presented on behalf of the appellants are that the court should have computed interest upon the $8,500 note by compounding the same according to its terms, and that the same rate of computation should be continued until the entry of the decree.

1. The rules governing the application of indefinite payments made by a debtor to his creditor, to whom he owes different obligations, had their origin in the civil law; but in those countries where the common law prevails the rules of the civil law have been greatly modified, and in some respects entirely repudiated. Both systems concur in giving to the debtor the right to designate at the time of the payment the debt to which he wishes the payment applied. Both systems also hold that, if the debtor shall not then designate the debt to which he wishes the payment applied, the creditor may make application of the payment; and that, if neither makes such application, it shall be made by the court. The principles upon which the application is to be made by the creditor or by the court differ widely in the two systems. By the rules of the civil law, if the debtor at the time of payment makes no application thereof, it is the duty of the creditor to make application in accordance with the supposed intention of the debtor, and to that debt upon which the creditor would have applied if had he been the debtor; and that any application by the court must be made to that debt which the debtor at the time had the most interest to discharge, irrespective of its effects upon the creditor. 1 Dom. Civil Law, book 4, tit. 1, § 4; 1 Evans, Poth. p. 528; Civil Code La., arts. 2163-2166. This rule has been recognized in some of the states of this country, but in the courts of the United States and of the greater number of the individual states it has been repudiated, and it may now be considered as the settled rule in this country wherever the common law prevails that when neither party to the transaction makes any application of the payment, and there are different debts due from the debtor to the creditor, the law will make the application in such a manner, in view of all the circumstances of the case, as is most in accordance with justice and equity, and will best protect and maintain the rights of both parties. Field v. Holland, 6 Cranch, 8; Logan v. Mason, 6 Watts & S. 9; Stone v. Seymour, 15 Wend. 19; Smith v. Loyd, 11 Leigh, 512; Allen v. Culver, 8 Denio, 284; Story, Eq. Jur. 459b.; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 533. One of the elements underlying the rule for the protection of each party in his rights is that the burden shall be made as light upon the debtor as is consistent with giving to the creditor all that the debtor has bound himself to pay. If the creditor by any application that may be made for him can receive all for which the debtor is under an obligation to him, it is but equity that it should be applied in such a mode as will be least onerous to the debtor. On the other hand, when the interest of the debtor cannot be promoted by any particular application of the payment, or when it is a matter of indifference to him in which mode the application is made, the law raises a presumption that the payment was actually received in the way that was of most advantage to the creditor. If the application can be so made as to discharge all the obligations of the debtor without increasing his burden, it will be deemed indifferent to him upon which obligation the payment shall be applied. The principles of this rule find their application in cases where it is held that a payment is to be applied to interest instead of principal; to an interest-bearing debt in preference to one bearing no interest; to the payment of legal interest instead of that which is usurious; to a debt that has matured rather than to one not yet due; to the payment of legal items in an account rather than of those which are illegal; and, on the other hand, for the purpose of protecting the rights of the creditor, a payment will be applied to the earlier items of an account in preference to later ones; to an unsecured debt in preference to one for which he holds security; and, when he has more than one security, to that debt for which the security is the most precarious. No specific rule can be laid down that will embrace all the cases that may arise for its application, inasmuch as the infinite variety of human transactions cannot be included within the limits of a formulated rule; and therefore courts must be governed by principles, rather than by fixed rules. In this state an attempt has been made for the guidance of courts in this matter, but the rules there prescribed are insufficient for all occasions, and do not embrace even the conditions of the present case. Section 1479, Civil Code, provides: "First. If neither party makes such application within the time prescribed herein, the performance must be applied to the extinction of obligations in the following order; and, if there be more than one obligation of a particular class, to the extinction of all in that class ratably: (1) Of interest due at the time of the performance; (2) of principal due at that time; (3) of the obligation earliest in date of maturity; (4) of an obligation not secured by a lien or collateral undertaking; (5) of an obligation secured by a lien or collateral undertaking." Neither of these subdivisions is directly applicable to the facts in this case. All of the obligations of Murdock are equally secured, and the moneys received by the defendants were at no time sufficient to extinguish all of the interest then due upon the principal obligations. The obligations also bear different rates of interest, and upon one of them the interest is to be compounded semi-annually, while the others bear only simple interest. Hence, instead of having the Civil Code as a guide, the court was compelled to take as its guide the equitable principles found in the above rule. Under these principles it was its duty to apply the payments that had been from time to time received by the defendants to those obligations which were most onerous to the plaintiff, so long as none of those obligations were impaired. Ordinarily this rule would require the payment to be applied in extinguishment of the interest upon that obligation which bore the highest rate, but, inasmuch as in the present case the obligation which bore a lower rate of interest provided for compounding that interest, that became the most onerous, and, within the principles above stated, was the first to be extinguished, especially since thereby the defendants would suffer no loss, but receive all that Murdock had obligated himself to pay to them.

The findings show that from the time the defendants took possession of the property they were in the annual receipt of an income therefrom far in excess of their expenditures for its care and preservation, and that from that date until the time of the accounting they had in their hands moneys belonging to the plaintiff, which, added to the amount of annual benefit which they derived from the property, and from which the court found they were indebted to the plaintiff, greatly exceeded the interest accruing upon the $8,500 note. It would be contrary to all principles of equity and justice for them to retain this money in their hands, and at the same time insist that the interest upon the $8,500 note which they held against Murdock should accumulate by being compounded according to its terms. It was their duty to apply these moneys as fast as they were received to keeping down the interest upon the obligations for which they held the property as security, and upon that obligation which was most onerous to Murdock, and upon which the court must presume he would have intended the application, as being most beneficial to him. In applying money that had been received by the defendants, first to the discharge of the interest upon the obligation which provided for its compounding, and whatever surplus there might be to the reduction of the interest upon the other obligation, the court acted in accordance with the principles of the above rule, making the burden upon the plaintiff the least onerous consistent with the obligations that had been made by Murdock, and at the same time giving to the defendants all the money that they could have received had Murdock paid them from time to time the semi-annual interest as it fell due, with the moneys which they held in their hands for him. This application of the money in the hands of the defendants to the discharge of the interest upon the $8,500 note, instead of being "a modification of the contract entered into between the parties," as is stated in appellants' points, is in reality an exact compliance with the contract. In this mode the interest on the note that was "payable semi-annually" was discharged in exact accordance with the terms of the note. The defendants received all that Murdock had agreed to pay them, and at the very time that such payment was to be made, and at the same time the burden of the different obligations was made lighter upon the plaintiff than it would have been had the other course been followed. The findings do not show the tabulation or stating of the account between the parties, but merely give the amount of the receipts and disbursements for each year, and the result of the accounting, "without making any allowance for compound interest." This result is consistent with the rule we have above stated. Inasmuch as the evidence upon which the findings were made is not before us, and the findings themselves do not show the several dates at which the money was received by the defendants, or present any facts inconsistent with reaching this result, upon the principles herein laid down we must assume that it is correct. We do not understand that the appellants contest the accuracy of the computation upon this principle. They contend that the account should have been stated by allowing compound interest.

2. The settlement of the account by the court as of May 1, 1888, was an adjudication by it of the amount then due from the plaintiff to the defendants, and was in the nature of a verdict or finding for that amount. A finding by the court in an action upon a promissory note embraces the whole amount due for principal and interest thereon at the date of the finding, and bears interest therefrom as a whole at the legal rate, and not according to the rate of interest stipulated in the note. Alpers v. Schammel, 75 Cal. 590, 17 Pac. Rep. 708; Golden Gate Mill & Min. Co. v. Joshua Hendy Mach. Works, 82 Cal. 184, 23 Pac. Rep. 45. Section 1035, Code Civil Proc., prescribes that "the clerk must include in the judgment entered up by him any interest on the verdict or decision of the court from the time it was rendered or made." Under this rule the defendants had no reason to complain of the mode of computation adopted by the court in its conclusion of law. In the present case, the account having been originally settled as of May 1, 1888, but the decision of the court not having been made until February 18, 1889, and the defendants having in the mean time made expenditures and received income from the property, a supplemental account was required. When the court came to settle that supplemental account it found "that since the trial of said cause on the 1st day of May, 1888, and up to the said 19th day of June, 1889, the said defendants have expended on behalf of said estate the sum of $6,360.25, and have received as proceeds of said property the sum of $4,186.47, leaving due to the defendants for expenditures over and above receipts, in addition to the said sum of $29,752.59, the sum of $2,173.78, making a total of $31,926.37 now due and owing from the plaintiff to the defendants." We cannot say from this statement in the decree that a proper computation of the amount to which the defendants were entitled was not properly made by the court, inasmuch as it is not shown at what dates the moneys were respectively received or expended by the defendants. We find no error in that portion of the judgment from which the defendants have appealed, and it is therefore affirmed.

PENAL ACTIONS—MINING CORPORATIONS—FAILURE TO POST NOTICES.

In an action for a penalty against a gold mining company brought under St. Cal. 1880, p. 134, which provides that such corporation shall on the first Monday of each month make and have posted in the office of such company certain reports and accounts current for the previous month, an answer denying the allegation of the complaint that said company had an office for the transaction of business is insufficient to raise a material issue; Civil Code, §§ 290, 321a, contemplating that all corporations shall have a place of business.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; F. D. SOWARD, Judge.

Gray & Sexton, H. V. Rearden, and F. R. Wehe, for appellant. Smith & Ford and T. M. Osmont, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. This action was brought to recover the sum of $1,000 liquidated damages, and costs of suit, under the provisions of an act of the legislature of this state approved April 23, 1880, (St. 1880, p. 134.) The complaint alleges that during the year 1889 the Pacific Gold Mining Company was a corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for the purpose of carrying on and conducting the business of mining; that the corporation owned valuable mining claims in the county of Sierra, and had its office for the transaction of business in the town of Howland Flat, in that county; that the plaintiffs and defendant were stockholders of the corporation, and the defendant was one of its board of directors, and its president and acting superintendent; that during the months of January, February, March, April, May, June, and July, 1889, the corporation was engaged in working its mines, and during each of said months it employed numbers of men therein, and incurred liabilities, and received and disbursed divers sums of money; that it became and was the duty of the defendant and his co-directors to make and have posted in the office of the company on the first Monday of each of said months, certain reports and accounts current for the previous month, as required by the act of the legislature before referred to, but that disregarding their duties and obligations in this regard, they failed, refused, and neglected to make, or cause to be made, or posted or filed, the reports and accounts required, or any of them. Wherefore judgment was asked for the penalty imposed by the statute. By his answer the defendant denied that the Pacific Gold Mining Company "had an office for the transaction of its business in the town of Howland Flat," or at any other place. He further denied that it was the duty of the directors of the corporation to cause to be made and posted the reports and accounts current, named and referred to in the complaint; denied that any duty or obligation was imposed upon the directors of mining corporations, by the act of April 23, 1880, to have made and posted reports and accounts current as alleged in the complaint, or any penalty for a failure to do so; denied that, by reason of the facts alleged, the plaintiffs had been damaged in the sum of $1,000, or in any sum, or at all. On motion of the plaintiffs, the court gave judgment in their favor on the pleadings, and from that judgment the defendant appeals.

The principal contention of the appellant is that the court erred in granting judgment on the pleadings, because the denial in the answer that the corporation had an office for the transaction of its business in the town of Howland Flat, or at any other place, raised a material issue. We do not think this contention can be sustained. The law contemplates that every corporation shall have an office. The Civil Code provides that when a corporation is formed its articles of incorporation must set forth the place where its principal business is to be transacted, (section 290;) and it may afterwards change its principal place of business from one place to another in the same county, or from one city or county to another city or county within the state, notice of such change being given by publication in a newspaper for three successive weeks, (section 321a.) It also provides that the by-laws of a corporation shall be kept in its office and be open to the inspection of the public during office hours of each day except holidays. Section 304. And the statute under which the plaintiffs seek to recover provides that "such account or balance sheet shall be verified under oath by the president and secretary, and posted in some conspicuous place in the office of the company." Now, if the appellant's contention should be sustained, it would be possible for the directors of every mining corporation to avoid the duties and penalties imposed upon them by the act. They could close up their offices, and then say, we have no office where the reports and accounts current can be posted, and therefore are under no obligation to obey the commands of the statute; or they could discharge their secretary, and then claim the same immunity, because there was no secretary who, in conjunction with the president, could verify the accounts and balance-sheets, and fit them to be posted, and therefore they need not be posted. But this would be simply an evasion of the mandates of the law. In Schenck v. Bandmann, 81 Cal. 231, 22 Pac. Rep. 654, the action was brought under the same statute to recover the declared penalty. The defendants sought to excuse themselves on the ground that they did not obtain the information necessary to enable them to make out the itemized account or balance-sheet for the month of October till the 15th day of November, and therefore they could not be held liable for not doing it on the first Monday of the month. The attempted excuse was held insufficient, and the judgment was affirmed. We think the defendant, and his co-directors here, had, or ought to have had, an office for the transaction of the business of the corporation, and the denial was therefore insufficient to raise a material issue. The other points discussed by counsel do not require any extended consideration. The statute complained of has been considered and upheld in the following cases: Loveland v. Garner, 71 Cal. 541, 12 Pac. Rep. 616; Beal v. Osborne, 72 Cal. 305, 13 Pac. Rep. 871; Schenck v. Bandman, 81 Cal. 231, 22 Pac. Rep. 654.

We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

PENAL ACTION—FAILURE OF MINING COMPANY TO FILE ACCOUNTS CURRENT—AMENDMENT.

It is not error to refuse an amendment to an answer in an action for a penalty, under St. Cal. 1880, p. 184, against a mining company for failing to post certain reports in its office enabling defendant to plead in bar a judgment for the recovery of a penalty in another case, as the offense is a continuing one.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; F. D. Soward, Judge.

Gray & Sexton, H. V. Reardon, and F. R. Wehe, for appellant. Smith & Ford and T. M. Osmont, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This case is similar in character to that of Chapman v. Doray, ante, 605, (No. 13,655,) just decided. The pleadings are the same, except that the penalty sought to be recovered here was for the failure to make and post on the first Monday of August, 1889, the reports and accounts current for the previous month, while the failures alleged in Chapman v. Doray were for the months of January to July, inclusive, for the same year. Judgment in both cases was rendered on the same day, and the proceedings up to judgment were similar. In this case, after judgment had been rendered in Chapman v. Doray, and before judgment herein, the defendant asked leave of the court to file an amended answer, to enable him to plead the recovery and judgment in the other case as a bar to a recovery here. The court denied the motion, and the defendant excepted. Judgment was then entered, from which the defendant appeals, on a bill of exceptions. The same points are made here for a reversal of the judgment as were made in Chapman v. Doray, and, on the authority of the decision in that case, they must be overruled. It is further urged that the court erred in denying the defendant's application to amend his answer. We see no error in this ruling. The proposed answer would have presented no defense. Each failure is a delinquency for which an action may be maintained. It is true that, when the stockholders forbear to sue till after several failures have occurred, only one penalty can be recovered up to the time such forbearance ceases, and the suit is brought. Loveland v. Garner, 71 Cal. 541, 12 Pac. Rep. 616. But an action may be maintained for such delinquency as it occurs. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PRINCE v. CITY OF FRESNO. (COUNTY OF FRESNO, Intervenor.) (No. 13,781.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—RECORDER—FEES.

The recorder of the city of Fresno, under Deering's Pol. Code, p. 830, §§ 806, 807, is vested with concurrent jurisdiction with justices of the peace of all actions, civil and criminal, arising within the corporate limits of the city, and shall receive such fees for his services as may be allowed by law to justices of the peace for like services, except that for his services in criminal prosecutions for violations of ordinances he shall be entitled to receive only such monthly salary as the board of trustees shall by ordinance prescribe. Held, that he is vested with a dual jurisdiction as recorder and justice, and that the fines he receives for violations of the Penal Code are to be paid over to the county treasurer, and he must be paid for his services as in the case of justices.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. HARRIS, Judge.

W. D. Tupper, Dist. Atty., and H. H. Welch, for appellant and intervenor. Goucher & Jones, for respondent. C. C. Merriam, for defendant.

FOOTE, C. This action was tried upon an agreed state of facts, under sections 1188 and 1140 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff is the duly elected and qualified recorder of the city of Fresno, which is a city of the fifth class under the laws of the state. During the months of April, May, June, July, August, and September, 1889, he "collected fines in his court from parties convicted therein of violations of various provisions of the Penal Code of the state of California, as distinguished from violations of the ordinances of the city of Fresno, to the amount of $646.90." He presented to the city his bill for fees claimed to be due him, earned during that time, in substance as follows: For fees in cases where fines were collected for violations of the Penal Code of the state, $175; for fees in cases where fines were not collected for violations of the Penal Code, $319.25; total fees claimed, $494.25. The city refused to allow the bill in whole or in part. The county came in as an intervenor, claiming to be interested in the suit, and it is set out in the agreed facts that "if it be determined that the city is not liable to the recorder for said fees, then the county is liable, it being unquestioned that either the city or county is so liable; and if the determination of this suit is adverse to the recorder, the plaintiff, then the fines collected as aforesaid, to-wit, the said sum of $646.90, should be paid in to the county treasurer; wherefore it is prayed that the questions raised by the facts above stated be determined by this court, and judgment entered accordingly." Judgment was rendered "that plaintiff pay to the county treasurer of the said county of Fresno, intervenor herein, all fines heretofore imposed by him for violations of the provisions of the Penal Code, and paid after commitment, and the residue of all such fines paid before commitment, after deducting therefrom the expenses of the prosecution in cases in which said fines were imposed; and that the intervenor, by its proper officers, agents, and representatives, audit and pay to plaintiff for his services heretofore rendered in cases of violations of the provisions of the Penal Code the same fees and compensation as are allowed by law to justices of the peace in like cases." The recorder's court of the city of Fresno, its jurisdiction, rules, practice, and procedure, are established by section 806 of the act entitled "Municipal Corporation Bill," page 830, Deering's Pol. Code. "Said recorder's court shall have jurisdiction, concurrently with the justice's courts, of all actions and proceedings, civil and criminal, arising within the corporate limits of such city, and which might be tried in such justice's court; and shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions for the recovery of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture prescribed for the breach of any ordinance of such city; of all actions founded upon any obligations or liability created by any ordinance, and of all prosecutions for any violation of any ordinance." Section 807 (same page) reads: "The recorder shall be judge of the recorder's court, and shall have the powers and perform the duties of a magistrate. He may administer and certify oaths and affirmations, and take and certify acknowledgments. He shall be entitled to charge and receive for his services such fees as are or may be allowed by law to justices of the peace for like services, except that for his services in criminal prosecution for violation of ordinances he shall be entitled to receive only such monthly salary as the board of trustees shall by ordinance prescribe, which compensation, when once fixed, shall not be altered within two years." The jurisdiction conferred by section 806, supra, on the recorder's court here involved, is: First. Concurrent with justice's courts, as conferred by general laws according to section 4316 of the Political Code, and section 832 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, as to all matters ordinarily cognizable in a justice's court, within the corporate limits of the city of Fresno. Second. Exclusive jurisdiction within the same territory as to certain matters growing out of the ordinances of that city. He may, in addition to presiding as judge of the recorder's court, perform all the duties and have the powers of an ordinary magistrate. He may, like a justice of the peace, take acknowledgments and affidavits. Section 179, Code Civil Proc. He is for his services when acting, in like manner as a justice of the peace, allowed "to charge and receive for his services" the same fees as such justices "are or may be allowed by law * * * for like services;" the only exception to this being that he is not entitled to receive fees in that way for anything done for his services in criminal proceedings under the city ordinances, but is for those services given a salary by the city trustees. It is not said expressly whom he shall charge, or from what source he shall receive the fees for his action when exercising the jurisdiction and performing the functions of a justice of the peace.

The main question for determination is, we think, whether as to all criminal matters, under the Penal Code of the state, the action of the recorder is that of a justice of the peace or not. The appellant seems to contend that the recorder is a mere officer of the city of Fresno, under the law authorizing charters for cities of the fifth class, and that under section 1461 of the Penal Code, which gives the definition of a police judge, this recorder is such judge, and as such is not required, under section 1570 of that Code, to pay over fines to the county treasurer, but must, under section 1457, pay them to the city treasurer, and must get his fees from the city. But we do not agree to this view of the matter. As to a very similar statute conferring jurisdiction upon a recorder, it was said in Curtis v. County of Sacramento, 18 Cal. 292-294: "The appellant was recorder of Sacramento city, and, as such, claims that the county is indebted to him for fees due him for convictions made by him of divers criminals prosecuted under the laws of the state. The only question presented by the record is whether he is to be considered as a justice of the peace in respect to this claim, and is entitled, as if he were, to the fees. It seems that the charter of the city of Sacramento (Comp. Laws, 968, § 35) provides that the recorder 'should exercise all the powers of a justice of the peace in regard to offenses committed within the city limits, subject to all the rules governing justices of the peace, and have power to administer all oaths known to the law.' * * * The point is made that the recorder is a judicial officer, and the constitution inhibits him from taking fees; but we think the constitution did not contemplate this class of officers as subjects of this inhibition. As a mere subordinate officer of the corporation, to carry into effect its by-laws or ordinances, he is less in dignity than a justice of the peace, and cannot be comprehended by a provision which expressly excludes justices; and we think that the mere addition of the duties of justices in respect to criminal matters has no effect in depriving the office of the same qualities in this respect as that of justices. Besides, as to all this matter, he is really, and in fact, a justice of the peace; and the constitution, when it exempted justices from the operation of this restraint, meant to exempt all those, by whatever name called, who are intrusted with the duties assigned by the law to those officers." (The italics are our own.) The decision, while covering other matters besides the one in hand, seems to go to the point involved here,—that a recorder of a city may have a dual jurisdiction and functions, and may be a justice of the peace as to the certain matters and a recorder as to others. So here we think that the law under consideration confers this jurisdiction, and we know of no provision in the constitution which inhibits the legislature from creating such an official. Const. Cal. art. 11, §§ 1-13. It appears, therefore, that as to such matters as are given him in charge as a justice of the peace, the recorder is such an officer, and not a police judge. If the recorder imposed fines as a justice of the peace, and not as police judge, such fines by law are subject to be paid over to the county treasurer under section 1570 of the Penal Code, after payments of costs, etc. If, then, as we conclude, the recorder, as to all prosecutions under the Penal Code of which he has cognizance under the charter, is a justice of the peace, although section 807 of the municipal corporation bill does not in express terms declare that he shall charge the county for his fees when acting under that Code, it nevertheless gives him authority to charge and receive for his services such fees "as are or may be allowed by law to justices of the peace for like services." Section 225 of the county government act provides: "The following are county charges:" Subd. 5. "All charges and accounts for services rendered by any justice of the peace for services in the examination of persons charged with crime not otherwise provided for by law." Possessing, then, as the recorder does, the right to act and charge as a justice of the peace, and he being to all intents and purposes a justice of the peace, when acting under the Penal Code of the state as distinct from the city ordinances, he must be paid for such services as he may perform as such by the county, like any justice of the peace in a township of a county. And the fines are subject to the same disposition as if he had imposed them as such justice of the peace. For these reasons we advise that the judgment be affirmed.

CHAPMAN v. BANK OF CALIFORNIA. (No. 14,153.)

APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT—NOT FILED IN TIME.

Where the transcript on appeal was not filed within the time prescribed, but it appears from the affidavits that the attorney of appellant, on the day the notice of appeal was served, was called to a distant state on account of the illness of his mother, and did not return until a few days before the time had expired, and that, owing to a press of business, by inadvertence he overlooked this case for a few days, but that within nine days after the time had expired he presented to the clerk a correct type-written copy of the record to be certified, but before it could be compared and certified the notice to dismiss was served, the motion to dismiss will be overruled.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

T. M. Osment, for appellant. Newlands, Allen & Herris, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. Motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment and order denying a new trial on the ground that the transcript was not filed in time. The judgment in favor of defendant was rendered September 27, 1889. The order overruling plaintiff's motion for a new trial was made August 28, 1890. Notice of appeal from the judgment and order was filed and served September 25th, and undertaking on appeal filed September 27th. The time for filing the printed transcript prescribed by rule 2 of this court expired November 5, 1890. On November 15th, no transcript having been filed, respondent served notice of his motion to dismiss. On the same day, but subsequent to the service of said notice, appellant filed a written transcript, duly certified by the county clerk, which was thereafter printed and served. The fact that the transcript was filed the same day notice to dismiss was served, but at a later hour, does not bring the appellant within the protection of rule 2 of this court, (Hoyt v. Railroad, 25 Pac. Rep. 160, No. 14,066,) and the motion to dismiss must prevail unless the appellant has by his affidavit shown a sufficient excuse for his delay to call for some relaxation of the rule providing for the dismissal of appeals for failure to file the transcript within the time prescribed. As to this, the undisputed facts are that on September 25th—the very day the notice of appeal was served—the attorney for appellant was called to the state of Tennessee on account of the illness of his mother, and did not return to California until October 24th. On his return, owing to the demands upon his attention of a multiplicity of business that had accumulated during his absence, by mere inadvertence he overlooked this case for a few days; but within nine days after the time for filing the transcript had expired, viz., on the 14th day of November, he prepared and presented to the county clerk a correct type-written copy of the record to be certified. The clerk was not able to compare and certify this transcript until the following day, and in the mean time the notice to dismiss was served. This shows that the appeal was taken and prosecuted in good faith. The delay in filing the transcript was trifling, and the hearing and decision of the cause on its merits will not thereby be delayed, at least not appreciably. The circumstances which occasioned the delay and oversight of counsel were such as to appeal strongly to the discretionary power of the court, and would, without doubt, have procured an order extending the time for filing the transcript if they had been brought to our attention before the motion to dismiss was made. If so, there is no reason why we may not after the motion relieve the appellant from the consequences of his delay when the facts show that before service of the motion to dismiss he was proceeding with all expedition to rectify his mistake. Motion denied.

EXTRADITION—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENT.

An affidavit accompanying a requisition, which merely states that affiant "has reason to believe and does believe" that petitioner embezzled or fraudulently converted to his own use the property mentioned, is insufficient for the governor's warrant of arrest as a fugitive from justice, in that it is not positive in its charge. PATERSON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Habeas corpus.

G. E. Riley and J. I. Caldwell, for petitioner. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The petitioner is before the court upon a writ of habeas corpus, the return to which shows that he is in the custody of the sheriff of Nevada county by virtue of a warrant for his arrest as a fugitive from justice, issued by the governor of this state, in compliance with a requisition from the governor of the state of Alabama. The governor of this state was not authorized to issue his warrant for the arrest of petitioner unless it was shown to him that the petitioner is substantially charged with a crime in the state from which it is alleged he has fled, and the law of congress (Rev. St. § 5278) requires that this fact must be made to appear by a copy of an indictment found, or an affidavit made before a magistrate of such state, certified as authentic by the governor of the state making the demand. Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 95, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291. And whether the alleged fugitive is so substantially charged with a crime is a question of law which is always open, upon the face of the papers, to judicial inquiry, on an application for discharge under a writ of habeas corpus. Roberts v. Reilly, supra. We have before us the copy of the affidavit accompanying the requisition of the governor of Alabama, and the sole question for determination is whether such affidavit substantially charges the petitioner with having committed any crime which would have justified his arrest in that state. The affidavit purports to have been made by one J. C. Orr, and charges that he (Orr) "has reason to believe, and does believe, that, within twelve months before making this affidavit in said county, W. A. Spears embezzled or fraudulently converted to his own use one carload mules, or the value of the same, to-wit, of two thousand dollars, the personal property of J. C. Orr, which came into W. A. Spears' possession by virtue of an employment to sell said mules." It is obvious that this affidavit does not directly charge that petitioner has committed any offense, and it would be a dangerous precedent to establish that any man may be deprived of his liberty and removed to another state upon such an accusation. The statement therein that affiant "has reason to believe, and does believe," that petitioner embezzled or fraudulently converted to his own use the property mentioned is not the statement of any fact, and for that reason the affidavit is fatally defective. The language of the supreme court of Michigan, in Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 451, 5 N. W. Rep. 635, is applicable here: "Charges are not verified by an affidavit that somebody is informed and believes that they are true. This is mere evasion of the law. The most improbable stories may be believed of any one, and the man most free from any reasonable suspicion of guilt is not safe if he holds his freedom at the mercy of any man three hundred miles off, who will swear that he has been informed and believes in his guilt." That such an affidavit is insufficient to support the issuance of a warrant, under the laws of this state, was held by this court in Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 165, 15 Pac. Rep. 619. We there said: "But a mere affidavit in the form of an information, containing no evidence, and followed by no deposition stating any fact tending to show guilt, is insufficient to support a warrant. The liberty of a citizen cannot be violated upon the mere expression of an opinion; under oath, that he is guilty of a crime." In Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean, 121, the affidavit accompanying the requisition of the governor of Missouri for the arrest of Smith was made by one Boggs, and charged "that on the night of the 6th day of May, 1842, while sitting in his dwelling in the town of Independence, in the county of Jackson, he was shot with intent to kill; and that his life was despaired of for several days; and that he believes, and has good reason to believe, from evidence and information now in his possession, that Joseph Smith, commonly called the 'Mormon Prophet,' was accessory before the fact of the intended murder, and that the said Joseph Smith is a citizen and resident of the state of Illinois." This affidavit was held insufficient as a basis for the governor's warrant, upon the ground, among others stated, that it was not positive in its charge. See, also, 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 222. It is true that the courts are not authorized to discharge a prisoner because of formal defects in the indictment or affidavit charging the offense, and that the sufficiency of the charge, as a matter of technical pleading, is to be tried and determined in the state from which the alleged fugitive fled. Davis' Case, 122 Mass. 329; Kentucky v. Denison, 24 How. 107. But the defect in the affidavit before us is not a mere technicality. The objection to its sufficiency is substantial, and it is that in judgment of law it does not make any charge at all. Upon the hearing the attorney general read as evidence, from a printed volume of the statutes of that state, section 4204 of the Criminal Code of Alabama, from which it appears that a warrant of arrest for a misdemeanor may be issued upon an affidavit in which the affiant states "that he has probable cause for believing, and does believe," that such offense has been committed; and it was argued that, inasmuch as no other section of this Code was formally offered in evidence, the court must presume that the affidavit here is sufficient under the laws of that state. We think, however, that we are not confined to this particular section, which is not applicable here, but are authorized to look into the volume in which it appears, and upon such examination we find the law of that state to be what, in the absence of all evidence, we would presume it to be, substantially like that of our own state, so far as relates to arresting one charged with a felony. It follows that the affidavit before us must be regarded as insufficient to justify the issuance of the executive warrant of arrest under which the petitioner is detained in custody. Petitioner discharged.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; GAROUTTE, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.

PATERSON, J., (dissenting.) I am unable to concur. "The warrant of the governor is prima facie evidence, at least, that all necessary legal prerequisites have been complied with," (Church, Hab. Corp. § 480,) and the petitioner has not made it appear to my satisfaction that the courts of Alabama could not hold him for examination on the affidavit charging him with embezzlement.

APPEAL — REVIEW — RECITALS OF JUDGMENT — CLAIMS AGAINST DECEDENTS — PROOF OF PRESENTATION.

1. Recitals, in a judgment on the pleadings, of the motion, the grounds thereof, and the ruling thereon, and the entry of judgment as a consequence, though not necessary to the validity of the judgment, are properly there, and, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, are conclusive evidence on appeal of the action of the court.

2. Where, after the commencement of an action, defendant died, and, his executors being substituted in his place, the supplemental complaint averred that the claim, duly verified, had been presented, the affirmative averment of the answer that the claim was not verified or presented as required by the statute is a sufficient denial.

3. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1502, providing that, if an action is pending against one at the time of his death, the plaintiff must present his claim to the executor or administrators for allowance or rejection, authenticated as required in other cases, and no recovery shall be had in the action unless proof be made of the presentation required, there cannot be judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings, but the presentation must be proven.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; C. H. MARKS, Judge.

E. Jackman, in pro per. J. K. Law, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This action was commenced against the testator of defendants. The executors having been substituted for the original defendant, plaintiffs made out and presented their claim against the estate, and then filed an amended complaint in which no mention was made of the presentation of the claim. Some months later they filed a supplemental complaint, in which the death, probate of the will, appointment, and qualification of the executors, and presentation of the claim, are alleged. After answer both to the amended and supplemental complaints, the plaintiffs moved for judgment on the pleadings. The motion was granted, and the defendants appeal from the judgment. There is no bill of exceptions, and the respondents now raise the point that the correctness of the ruling cannot be reviewed here, as the motion and the order granting it, and for judgment, are not brought up, and, as they claim, cannot be without a bill of exceptions. As a matter of fact, the judgment includes all that a bill of exceptions could show,—all that is necessary for a review of this action of the court. The motion and the grounds of it are specifically recited, and the ruling upon it, and the entry of judgment as a consequence. The question is not whether these recitals are necessary to the validity of the judgment, but whether they are properly there, and constitute, for the purposes of this appeal, evidence of the action of the court below. The recitals are similar to those usually contained in what was called the postea of a common-law judgment, giving a history of the action of the court which led to the judgment. We think they are properly in the judgment, and, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, are conclusive evidence here of the action of the court. Instances in our Reports, where such recitals are referred to, as constituting evidence of what was done in the court below, are numerous. If the answers constituted a defense, judgment could not have been entered without a trial, unless the answers were disposed of in some mode known to the law. It was certainly proper to show in the judgment how this was done, and why judgment was entered without a trial.

The pleadings are verified, and it is claimed that the denials contained in the answers are insufficient, and raise no issue. This contention we think well grounded as to most denials in the answers, but there is one fact necessary to the plaintiffs' case which we think sufficiently denied to raise an issue, and therefore judgment was improperly entered on the motion. In the supplemental complaint it is averred that a claim duly verified was presented. The traverse of this allegation is in the affirmative form. Defendants aver that the claim was not verified or presented as required by the statute. The denial of the verification seems as broad as the allegation, and if that be deemed sufficient, as we think it is, the denial must be held so.

For another reason the judgment ought not to have been entered without evidence. Section 1502, Code Civil Proc., is as follows: "If an action is pending against the decedent at the time of his death, the plaintiff must in like manner present his claim to the executor or administrator for allowance or rejection, authenticated as required in other cases; and no recovery shall be had in the action unless proof be made of the presentations required." The effect of that section plainly is that, although due presentation of the claim be not denied, still it must be proven. If, as claimed by respondents, this section still leaves the matter subject to the usual law of pleading, to be proven when denied, but not when admitted, the requirement serves no purpose. Such would have been the case without it. It is just possible that this requirement was inserted under the expectation that the trial might proceed upon the pleadings as they stood at the time of the testator's death, without any supplemental pleading. Still we must presume the law-makers familiar with the practice, and the language is broad enough, even on that supposition, to require proof in all cases. The case of Drake v. Foster, 52 Cal. 225, does not help the respondents, but is an authority against them. By implication it is held that not to require such proof is error, but where there was a trial on the merits it is held that objection on this ground cannot be made for the first time in this court. Here the plaintiffs moved for judgment on the pleadings, without evidence, and the defendants resisted the motion. No opportunity was afforded them for making this specific objection. This point and this construction of the statute were sustained in Bank v. Howland, 42 Cal. 132. We think the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to defendants to amend their answer if they desire.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLEIF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with leave to defendants to amend their answer if they desire.

MINERAL LANDS—GRANTS—EXCEPTIONS.

1. Act Cong. March 3, 1853, being an act "to provide for the survey of the public lands in California, the granting of pre-emption rights therein, and for other purposes," section 6 of which grants to the state of California land sections 16 and 36 "for the purposes of public schools in each township," does not include the mineral lands in those sections, though they are not specially excepted from the grant. Following Mining Co. v. Consolidated Min. Co., 102 U. S. 167.

2. The grant by congress in 1853 being a grant in presentia, lands that were mineral lands then were excepted, and the fact that they were afterwards worked out and abandoned as unprofitable does not pass title to them to the state.

3. In ejectment by plaintiff claiming under a patent from the state, defendants, who are in possession of the land as mining claims under locations made in accordance with the law and the local customs, can contest the patent, as they are in privity with the United States.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

F. P. & C. Tuttle, for appellant. Hale & Craig and J. M. Fulweller, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. This action is ejectment to recover possession of the east half of the east half of the south-west quarter, and the west half of the west half of the south-east quarter, of a certain sixteenth section of land situate in Placer county. Other portions of the section are described in the complaint, but, as no contest was made as to them, they need not be referred to further. The defendants Hubbell, Shea, and California Quartz Mining Company alone answered. They denied all the averments of the complaint, and alleged that the portions of the section above described were in 1850, and ever since had been, and then were, mineral lands of the United States, having known valuable mineral deposits therein, consisting of placers containing gold in paying quantities, and quartz ledges or deposits of gold-bearing rock in place, carrying gold and other precious metals in paying quantities; and that during all the times mentioned the said placers and quartz ledges had been, from time to time, in the actual possession of citizens of the United States, who were working and exploring the same for the gold and precious metals they contained. They further alleged that in the year 1880 two quartz mining claims, which are particularly described, were located on the demanded premises by citizens of the United States, and in conformity to the laws thereof and the local rules, regulations, and customs of the mining district,—one by the grantor of defendant Shea, and the other by the grantors of the defendant California Quartz Mining Company,—and that the locators and the said defendants, as their successors in interest, had ever since held, possessed, and worked their respective claims as mining claims. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was entered that the defendants above named were the owners and entitled to the possession of their respective mining claims as described, and as to them that the plaintiff take nothing; and that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of all the balance of the land sued for as against all of the defendants. From this judgment, so far as it was against her, and from an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff claimed title under a patent from the state, issued to one Banvard, her grantor, in 1870; and the first question is, was title to this land vested in the state at the time of the issuance of the patent? If it was, then the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and if not, we think the proper judgment was entered. Whatever title the state had was acquired under the act of congress of March 3, 1853, "to provide for the survey of the public lands in California, the granting of pre-emption rights therein, and for other purposes." 10 St. U. S. 244. By this act (section 6) it is declared that sections 16 and 36 "shall be, and hereby are, granted to the state for the purposes of public schools in each township." In Higgins v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 253, it was held by the supreme court of this state that mineral lands were not excepted from the operation of the grant of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, made to the state by the act of March 3, 1853, and that as fast as the townships were surveyed the state became the owner of these sections absolutely. And see Wedekind v. Craig, 58 Cal. 642. The rule declared by this court, as above stated, has not been approved by the supreme court of the United States. On the contrary, it was held by that court in Mining Co. v. Consolidated Min. Co., 102 U. S. 167, that the grant of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of public land to the state of California by the act of March 3, 1853, was not intended to cover mineral lands, but that such lands were, by the settled policy of the general government, excluded from all grants. That decision is controlling, and must be followed here.

The question then remains, were the disputed premises at the time of the grant mineral lands,—that is, known to be valuable for minerals? Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 404, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95. Upon this question the court below found as follows: "That during all the year 1850, and at the time of the acquisition of the said lands by the government of the United States, and continuously ever since, and on the 10th day of December, 1870, when the said patent was issued to the said E. M. Banvard, and at the time of the survey of the said lands and the return thereof by the said United States, the said east half of the east half of the south-west quarter, and the said west half of the west half of the south-east quarter, of said section sixteen were, and have been, and now are, known public mineral lands of the United States, having therein known valuable mineral deposits, consisting of gravel or placer deposits, and of quartz rock in place, bearing gold in paying quantities, and ever since the 26th day of July, 1866, have been free and open to exploration and purchase, and to occupation and purchase as mineral lands by citizens of the United States, and such as have declared their intention to become such citizens." It is claimed by counsel for appellant that this finding as to the mineral character of the land was not justified by the evidence, and hence that the judgment should be reversed. We do not think this position can be sustained. It is true the evidence was somewhat conflicting, but, taken as a whole, it was amply sufficient, in our opinion, to justify the finding. It is further claimed that the placer mines had been worked out, and the quartz mines abandoned as unprofitable, before 1870, and that there was no evidence showing or tending to show a holding or working of any part of the land at the time of the issuance of the patent in 1870. Conceding this to be so, still it cannot aid the appellant. The grant of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections was a grant in present, and the only question is, was the land in question known to be mineral in character at the time the grant was made? If it was, the title did not pass to the state, but the state took a right to other land in lieu thereof, and not a right to this land when its minerals should be exhausted. It is also claimed that the defendants were not in a position to attack the patent. But, as we have seen, the state had no title to the mineral land, and passed none to its patentee. The title still remained in the general government, and under its laws the land was open to occupation and purchase as mineral land. The defendants were in possession of their claims under locations which were made in accordance with the law and the local rules and customs. They were therefore in privity with the United States, and had a clear right to contest the patent and assert their rights. At the trial the defendants introduced evidence showing the work done on their claims after their location in 1880. This evidence was objected to by the plaintiff as irrelevant and immaterial, and the objections were overruled, and exceptions taken. The evidence was introduced to show that the claims were still valuable, and to overcome the plaintiff's theory that they were of no value. This, we think, they had a right to do. But, if the rulings were erroneous, the plaintiff was in no way prejudiced by them, as she had no title. It follows that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

COUNTS, Treasurer. (No. 14,029.)

COUNTY BONDS — NOTICE TO VOTERS — ORDERS.

1. Under the county government act, (St. Cal. 1883, p. 811, § 37,) providing that when the supervisors wish to create a bonded indebtedness they shall "by order specify the particular purposes for which the indebtedness is to be created, and the amount of bonds which they propose to issue," and shall submit the question of the issue of the bonds to the "qualified electors" of the county, an order and proclamation of election, stating that there is to be submitted the question of the issue of $75,000 of bonds for the construction of "two public wagon roads in said county, — one from Bear Valley to Coulterville, and one from Mariposa to Yosemite," — sufficiently specified the particular purpose for which the indebtedness is to be created.

2. The fact that the order submits the question to "the people" does not invalidate it where the proclamation states that the question is to be submitted to the "vote of the people of this county," as it means the vote of only those people who are "qualified electors."

3. The board of supervisors, though required by the county government act to proceed by ordinance for some purposes, can proceed "by order" in such case, as section 37 of that act so provides.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Petition for writ of mandate.

Garret W. McEnerney and J. W. Congdon, for petitioner. L. F. Jones and Rosenbaum & Scheeline, for respondent. C. W. Cross, amicus curiæ.

VANCLIEF, C. This is an original application to this court on the petition of Mariposa county for a writ of mandate to the treasurer of said county, commanding him to sell and dispose of, according to law, bonds of Mariposa county, alleged to have been issued in accordance with section 37 of the county government act, (St. 1883, p. 311,) for the purpose of constructing two public wagon roads in said county. An alternative writ issued, and the case stands upon a general demurrer to the petition. The section of the county government act above referred to is as follows: "The supervisors can only contract a bonded indebtedness other than such as is authorized by section twenty-six of this act as follows: They shall, by order, specify the particular purpose for which the indebtedness is to be created, and the amount of bonds which they propose to issue, and shall further provide for submitting the question of the issue of said bonds to the qualified electors of the county at the next general election, or at a special election to be called by the board for that purpose. If a special election, none but qualified voters of the county shall be permitted to vote thereat, and it shall be held as early as possible in conformity with the general election law of this state. Notice shall be given of such election, by publication in some newspaper or newspapers published in the county, for four weeks prior thereto. If there be no newspaper so published, then by posting notices for the same time in each election precinct in the county, and at the court-house door. The ballots shall be printed, 'For the issue of bonds,' or, 'Against the issue of bonds.' If two-thirds of the electors of the county voting at such election shall vote in favor of issuing bonds, and not otherwise, the board may proceed to issue the amount of bonds specified, in the manner provided in this act for funding the floating indebtedness of the county; and all the provisions of this act relating to the issue and payment of bonds in the latter case shall apply to bonds issued under this section, except that such bonds shall not run for more than twenty years; and the board shall levy the tax necessary to create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal of said bonds, in each and every year after their issue, until finally paid. The revenue derived from the sale of said bonds shall be applied to the purpose or purposes specified in the order of the board, and no other. Should there be any surplus, it shall be applied toward the payment of said bonds."

1. Upon the argument of the demurrer the respondent specified several grounds of objection to the petition, the principal one of which is that the board of supervisors did not, as required by the section above quoted, "by order specify the particular purpose for which the indebtedness is to be created." The petition shows that on the 7th day of May, 1888, the board, in regular session, passed and adopted the following orders: "Petitions having been received, signed by 598 residents of Mariposa county, to call a special election early in July, and thereat to submit to the electors of the county the question of voting to issue bonds to the amount of $75,000.00, running twenty years, to be payable after the expiration of ten years, the funds raised from the sale of said bonds to be applied to the construction of two public wagon roads in Mariposa county,—one from Coulterville to Bear Valley, and one from Mariposa to Yosemite,—it is ordered that a special election be, and the same is hereby, called to be held Monday, July 9, 1888, for the purpose of submitting the issuance of bonds for the building of said roads to Coulterville and Yosemite to the people. It is ordered that the following proclamation be issued: Proclamation. Public notice is hereby given that in accordance with an order of the board of supervisors of Mariposa county, state of California, made on the 7th day of May, 1888, a special election be held throughout Mariposa county on Monday, July 9, 1888, for the purpose of submitting to the vote of the people of this county the question: Shall the board of supervisors of the county of Mariposa be empowered to issue bonds to the amount of $75,000, running 20 years, to be payable after the expiration of 10 years, for the purpose of constructing two public wagon roads in said county,—one from Bear Valley to Coulterville, and one from Mariposa to Yosemite; the ballots to be cast 'For the issue of bonds,' or 'Against the issue of bonds.' The polls must be opened at six o'clock in the morning of the day of election, and must be kept open until seven o'clock in the evening of the same day, when the polls shall be closed. It is ordered that the proclamation be published in the Mariposa Gazette for four weeks prior to said election." It will be seen that the order and proclamation of the board did state the purpose for which bonds of the county for $75,000 were to be voted and issued, viz., the construction of "two public wagon roads in said county,—one from Bear Valley to Coulterville, and one from Mariposa to Yosemite." This was equivalent to proposing to create an indebtedness of the county to the extent of $75,000 for the purpose expressed, since the issuing of the bonds of the county as proposed would necessarily create such indebtedness. The point most insisted upon under this head is that the purpose expressed is not a single purpose, but two distinct purposes. There is no complaint, however, that the expression of either of these purposes is not sufficiently explicit and definite. The roads were described as "public wagon roads," which the law requires to be at least 40 feet in width (Pol. Code, § 2620,) and the termini of each road were defined. This was as definite a description as could well be made without an actual survey of the routes and grades, the expense of which the board had no authority to incur, before it was determined that the county would construct the roads. The object of the statute in requiring the board to "specify the particular purpose for which the indebtedness is to be created, and the amount of the bonds," is simply to notify the electors of the county of these facts, to the end that they may be enabled thereby to form an intelligent judgment as to the propriety of creating the proposed indebtedness for such purpose; and it would seem that this object is as well accomplished by the specification in the order under consideration as it would have been if the purpose, specified in the same way, had been to construct only one road. Suppose the purpose to be specified had been to extend an existing road by adding 10 miles to each end thereof; or to construct two branches to an existing road, or (as in this case) to construct two roads to connect at different points with an existing road, (as that from Bear Valley to Mariposa,)—might not the purpose to create indebtedness for the construction of the two roads, in each of the supposed cases, be regarded as a single purpose? Few purposes are executed by the performance of a single act. The execution of the purpose to construct a single road may require the construction of numerous bridges and the performance of various kinds of labor in different places. In People v. Dunn, 80 Cal. 211, 22 Pac. Rep. 140, it was held that the act of 1889 entitled "An act to provide a permanent site for the 'California Home for the care and training of feeble-minded children,' and to erect suitable buildings, thereon," had but one purpose, and that an appropriation therefor as but one appropriation for a single purpose. The court said: "It was not necessary that there should have been a separate appropriation for the purchase of the land, another for the erection of the buildings, another for the construction of fences, and another for each improvement necessary to the proper completion of the proposed work." In view of the object of the statute in requiring a specification of the purpose for which indebtedness is to be created, what is the substantial difference between a specification of the purpose to construct one road of 20 miles in length, and an equally definite specification of a purpose to construct two roads, each of 10 miles in length? Would not the electors be as well informed as to the particular purpose in one case as in the other? The only attempted answer to this question by counsel is: (1) That by submitting the question as to the propriety of two roads at one election, "a voter was put in the awkward position of either voting for both propositions, or against both propositions. While he may have been exceedingly anxious that one of these roads should have been built, he may not have been willing to tax himself for the building of the other; and yet, in order to get the one, he had to submit to the other." And (2) that, inasmuch as the order does not specify what portion of the $75,000 was to be expended on each road, "the board of supervisors might expend but the sum of $1,000 for the road from Bear Valley to Coulterville, and $74,000 on the other road." Might not these objections be urged with equal force against a purpose to construct a single road? A large portion of the electors might consider one-half of a proposed road very beneficial, and much needed by the public; while they might consider the other half, though perhaps more expensive, of very little public benefit. And might not the board of supervisors expend nine-tenths of the money appropriated for the construction of the whole road upon that half which will be least beneficial to the public? A statute of Arkansas authorized any county to subscribe to the stock of any railroad company in that state a sum not exceeding $100,000, after obtaining the consent of the inhabitants of the county at an election held for that purpose. At an election held under the act the electors voted in favor of a subscription of $100,000 to each of two railroad companies. The subscriptions and the bonds authorized by this election were held valid by the supreme court of the United States. County of Chicot v. Lewis, 103 U. S. 164. In McMahon v. Board, 46 Cal. 214, the purpose proclaimed to the electors was to raise $30,000 for "improving highways in said township, for building bridges, macadamizing and improving the old county road in said township, and also to macadamize and improve a portion of the new San Pedro public road in said township." The court said: "If such a proclamation was a compliance with the statute, it would have been equally so if it had omitted to mention any particular road or highway, and had specified only that the money was to be expended in the improvement of highways and the building of bridges generally in the township. The voters would have had no information as to what particular highways or bridges it was proposed to improve or build." This seems to justify the inference that, if the proclamation had specified each particular road and bridge to be improved, (though the purpose was to improve many,) it would have been sufficient. The proposal to improve two or more than two roads or highways in the township was not considered objectionable as being expressive of more than one object or purpose, although the accomplishment of that object, or the execution of such purpose, required the improvement of several roads and bridges. The decision in the case of People v. Baker, 83 Cal. 149, 23 Pac. Rep. 364, 1112, as a precedent, should be restricted to a state of facts substantially similar to the facts of that case. In that case the order expressed two purposes for which the money was to be expended: (1) "The purpose of constructing, grading, repairing, and maintaining bridges and public highways within the county;" and (2) "the purpose of erecting and maintaining a county jail, and poor-house, and hospital within the county." No particular bridge or highway was specified; nor was there any specification of the dimensions of the jail, poor-house, or hospital, nor of the site upon which either was to be built. From all the information given by the order and proclamation the electors could neither estimate the probable cost, nor form a judgment as to the necessity or usefulness of any one of the proposed improvements. The decision that the order in that case did not sufficiently specify the particular purpose or purposes for which the indebtedness was to be created, is undoubtedly correct, but it was based upon a state of facts widely and materially different from the facts of this case.

2. The order is said to be invalid, because it submits the question to the people, and not to the qualified electors. An election was called, at which "none but qualified electors of the county shall be permitted to vote." Section 37. And the petition states "that at said election none but qualified voters of Mariposa county were permitted to vote." Page 10. The proclamation prescribed by the order states "that, in accordance with an order of the board, * * * a special election be held throughout Mariposa county on Monday, July 9, 1888, for the purpose of submitting to the vote of the people of this county the question," etc. Undoubtedly the "vote of the people of this county" meant the vote of only those people who were qualified voters or electors, and could not have been otherwise understood by the qualified electors. It was not necessary to use the precise language of the statute.

3. It is claimed that the board should have proceeded by ordinance, and not by order. Conceding that the county government act for some purposes requires an ordinance, while for other purposes only an order is required, it is only necessary, in answer to this objection, to say that for the purpose under consideration section 37 of the act requires the board to do what it is thereby required to do, "by order."

4. The order and the proclamation do show the purpose to create a bonded indebtedness of the county, and the amount of the bonds proposed to be issued. I think the demurrer should be overruled.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the demurrer is overruled.

NEW TRIAL — INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE — DISCRETION.

FITZGERALD, C. Appeal from an order of the superior court of Alameda county granting a new trial. This is an action of ejectment, which was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff. The order appealed from states no ground upon which the motion for a new trial was granted. But the record shows that the motion was made and urged upon the ground, among others, "that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision." We have reached the opinion, after reading the evidence attentively, that it must have been upon this ground that the court below based its action in granting the motion, and, as there is unquestionably a substantial conflict in the evidence, the granting of a new trial was clearly within the discretion of the court. Every presumption will be indulged in favor of the proper exercise by the court below of its judicial discretion in granting a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the decision; and as it is the well-settled rule of this court not to interfere unless there has been a manifest abuse of discretion, and as no such abuse is disclosed by the record as would justify such interference, it follows that the order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; TEMPLE, C.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. PACIFIC BANK. (No. 14,146.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. May 4, 1891.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—EVIDENCE—EXCEPTIONS.

A bill of exceptions containing all the evidence, but not specifying any particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court, does not bring up for review the sufficiency of the evidence under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 648, providing that when the exception is to the decision on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it the objection must specify the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. P. HOGG, Judge.

R. B. Mitchell and Henry C. McPike, for appellant. P. F. Dunne, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The judgment appealed from must be affirmed. The appeal is directly from the judgment, and is here upon the judgment roll alone. There is a bill of exceptions in the record purporting to contain all the evidence upon which the case was heard in the court below, but it does not contain any specification of errors wherein it is alleged that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court. Section 648, Code Civil Proc., declares: "When the exception is to the verdict or decision upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, the objection must specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient. The objection must be stated with so much of the evidence or other matter as is necessary to explain it, and no more." The bill of exceptions in the present case does not "specify any particulars" in which the "evidence is alleged to be insufficient" to justify the decision of the court, but at the end thereof, after setting forth the evidence, is found the following statement: "The foregoing being all the evidence introduced on the trial, the cause was submitted to the court for decision, and, after considering the same, the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and ordered that judgment be entered in accordance therewith in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the whole amount prayed for; to which order and decision the defendant then and there duly excepted." It has been repeatedly held by this court that such general exception is not a compliance with the foregoing section, and that the court cannot examine the evidence for the purpose of determining its sufficiency to justify the findings, but can only determine whether the findings support the judgment. Coveny v. Hale, 49 Cal. 552; Watson v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 523; Bonner v. Quackenbush, 51 Cal. 180; Coglan v. Beard, 67 Cal. 303, 7 Pac. Rep. 738. As the appellant does not question the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment, it must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

KEENA v. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF PLACER COUNTY. (No. 14,034.)

HIGHWAYS — ABANDONMENT — ORDER OF SUPERVISORS.

Under Pol. Code Cal. § 2643, subd. 3, providing that the board of supervisors must, "by proper ordinance," abolish such roads as are not necessary, and sections 2619, 2621, providing that roads may be abandoned by "order" of the board, a road may be abandoned by order, as the words "proper ordinance" require nothing more than a proper order.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYERS, Judge.

E. P. Tuttle, for appellant. A. K. Robinson and J. E. Prewett, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The record in this case shows the following facts: In 1872 a certain road in Placer county was laid out and declared to be a public highway by the board of supervisors of the county. In October, 1887, the board made and caused to be entered in its minutes an order that a certain described portion of the said highway "be, and the same is hereby, abandoned." In January, 1890, the board made another order that its order of October, 1887, be set aside and canceled, and that that portion of the road described therein be opened for public travel, and that the road overseer proceed immediately to remove all obstructions therefrom. The plaintiff then commenced this proceeding in the superior court of Placer county, to obtain a writ of review of the last-named order. The writ was granted, and a return thereto made, showing all the proceedings and orders taken and made by the board of supervisors for the laying out, abandonment, and reopening of the said road. The court found and decided that the road was properly laid out and became a public highway in 1872, and that it extended across land then and ever since owned by the plaintiff, and which within the last year had been inclosed by him; that on the 7th of October, 1887, a petition in proper form, and signed by more than 10 persons, all of whom were citizens, residents, and tax-payers within the said road-district, and taxable therein for road purposes, was presented to the board of supervisors, asking that the road be abandoned, and thereupon the board made and entered its order declaring that the road be discontinued and abandoned; that on the 11th of January, 1890, the board made and entered an order setting aside and canceling the order of October 7, 1887, and directing that the road so abandoned be opened for public travel as a public highway; that the plaintiff has asked and requested the board to vacate and set aside the order last mentioned, but it refuses to do so; that the plaintiff has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law; that the action of the board in making and entering the order sought to be annulled is an especial injury and damage to plaintiff in this, that, unless the order be annulled, the board and its road-master will proceed to open and use the road through his lands without giving him adequate or any compensation therefor, and without having acquired the lawful right so to do; and, as a conclusion of law, that the order made on the 7th of October was valid and operated a discontinuance of the road, and the order made on the 11th of January was in excess of the powers of the board, and should be vacated and annulled. Judgment was accordingly so entered, and from that judgment the defendant appeals, without any statement or bill of exceptions. It is argued for appellant that a board of supervisors has no power to cause a public road to be abandoned, except it be by a "proper ordinance," framed, passed, and published, as required by section 26 of the county government act, (St. 1883, p. 299;) and that as the attempted abandonment, here under review, was only by an order of the board, it was wholly ineffectual to accomplish the end intended, and the road still continued to be a public highway, notwithstanding the order. In support of this position, counsel rely upon section 2643, subd. 3, Pol. Code, which reads as follows: "The boards of supervisors of the several counties of the state shall have general supervision over the roads within their respective counties. They must, by proper ordinance: * * *

(3) Abolish or abandon such as are not necessary." The chapter of the Political Code relating to highways was passed on the 28th of February, 1883, and there is nothing in it defining an ordinance, or showing how it differs from an order. The county government act was passed on the 14th of March following. The question then is, what was meant by the words "proper ordinance," as used in the section cited? In answering this question the county government act cannot be resorted to, but other parts of the Code can. Now, turning to section 2619 of the same chapter, we find a provision as follows: "All public highways, once established, shall continue to be public highways until abandoned by order of the board of supervisors of the county in which they are situated, or by operation of law, or judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction." And in section 2621 this language is used: "A road laid out and worked, and used as provided in this chapter, shall not be vacated or cease to be a highway until so ordered by the board of supervisors of the county in which said road may be located." In section 2643, supra, there are 11 subdivisions, prescribing the powers and duties of boards of supervisors in relation to roads; and to hold that most of these powers could not be exercised by ordinary order would evidently be absurd. For example, subdivision 10 is: "Audit all claims on the funds of the respective road districts when required to pay for right of way, or work or improvements thereon." The provisions of sections 2619 and 2621 clearly import that a highway may be abandoned by an order of the board of supervisors. In our opinion, therefore, the words "proper ordinance," as used in section 2643, mean nothing more, and require nothing more, than a proper order. It follows that the proceedings of the board in this regard were authorized and sufficient. It is further argued that the petition for the abandonment of the road was not accompanied by a bond, and was not in itself sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute, citing sections 2681 to 2695 of the Political Code. We do not think any bond is required by the sections cited, when the petition is only for the abandonment of a road. And, assuming that a petition is necessary in such a case, the court below decided that the petition presented to the board was sufficient, and we cannot say that its decision in this respect was erroneous. We conclude, therefore, that the judgment should be affirmed, and so advise.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

APPEAL—BOND—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 949, providing that upon an appeal the judgment or order appealed from shall be stayed when appellant gives an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300, as required by section 941, an order requiring an administrator to pay intestate's adopted child a large sum of money as a "family allowance" is stayed by an appeal by other claimants of the estate, who execute the appeal-bond required by section 941.

Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman, (H. S. Brown, John R. Jarboe, and W. S. Goodfellow, of counsel.) for petitioner. T. I. Bergin, W. H. Hart, and Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an original proceeding here by certiorari, brought to review and annul an order of the superior court requiring petitioner as administrator of Thomas Blythe, deceased, to pay a large sum of money to Florence Blythe. The latter had brought an action under section 1664, Code Civil Proc., to have herself decreed to be the adopted child and heir of said Blythe, deceased; and on October 22, 1890, a decree had been entered by the superior court (respondent here) declaring her to be such adopted child and heir. From that decree certain defendants, known generally as the "Williams claimants," took an appeal to this court. On October 31, 1890, the court made an order granting a large amount of money to said Florence as a family allowance; and from this latter order the Williams claimants also appealed, giving the usual statutory undertaking on appeal provided for in section 941, Code Civil Proc., in the sum of $300. Notwithstanding the appeal, the court afterwards, on November 19, 1890, made another order, directing the administrator to pay to Florence the amount of money mentioned in said order of October 31st; and the question presented is, does the appeal stay proceedings under the order appealed from?

We think that the question here presented was definitely settled in favor of petitioner's contention by the decision of the court in Re Estate of Schedel, 69 Cal. 241, 10 Pac. Rep. 334. In that case a legatee appealed from a decree of distribution, and gave the $300 undertaking provided by section 941 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and it was contended that such an undertaking did not stay proceedings upon the decree appealed from; but the court held otherwise, and said, among other things, as follows: "Sections 942 to 945, inclusive apply to appellants who are required to perform the directions of the judgment or order appealed from. This is manifest from their language. But the appellant in the present case is not required to do anything. It feels aggrieved by the decree, however, and has the right to appeal. The case is one not provided for in sections 942, 943, 944, and 945; and, consequently, by the terms of section 949, the perfecting of the appeal by giving the undertaking mentioned in section 941 stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment appealed from." We see no sound distinction between that case and the one at bar. Such a distinction is contended for by respondent on the ground that the policy of the law puts an order in the form of a "family allowance" on a different footing from any other order which gives property of the estate to one litigant against the claims of others; but the alleged distinction is not discernible. The main point of the litigation seems to have been whether there was any family; and it is difficult to see why, in such case, the right of an appellant to keep the property in statu quo during the appeal is not as effective against an order of "allowance," as against an order of distribution. But as to the main fact upon which the Schedel Case was decided, it is identical with the case at bar, namely, that in neither case was the appellant required to perform "the directions of the judgment or order appealed from." The general rule, as declared in section 949, is that the $300 undertaking mentioned in section 941 "stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from." The exceptions are contained in sections 942 to 945, inclusive; and those sections apply to cases where the appellant has money or other property in his possession which has been adjudged by the lower court to belong to the respondent, or where the appellant has been directed to do some act for the benefit of respondent; and where it would be unjust to allow the appellant to retain the possession of the property, and perhaps dissipate it, or put it out of his power to perform the act required, without securing respondent by a bond. But in the case at bar the appellants are in no such advantageous position. They are in possession of no property or money which they could squander during the appeal, and are not required to do any act. During the appeal the money involved will merely remain in the hands of the administrator, secured by his bond. The case, therefore, does not come within any of the exceptions above mentioned; and the execution of the order of October 31st was stayed by the appeal. The subsequent order of November 19th was, therefore, made without jurisdiction. It is ordered and adjudged that the order of the respondents, the superior court and the judge thereof, made on November 19, 1890, requiring the petitioner, as administrator, to pay to Florence Blythe the sum of money mentioned in the said order of October 31, 1890, as set forth in the petition herein and every part thereof, be, and the same hereby is, set aside and annulled.

GARDNER V. STROEVER. (No. 13,776.)

PUBLIC NUISANCE—INJUNCTION—SUIT BY PRIVATE PERSON.

1. The owner of a slaughter-house, who slaughters a large number of animals daily, and has no other place for slaughtering, is specially injured by an obstruction in the highway which wholly cuts him off from access to the slaughter-house, and may enjoin the nuisance by a suit in his own name, under Civil Code Cal. § 3493, providing that "a private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance if it is specially injurious to himself, but not otherwise."

2. Though the obstruction exists at the commencement of the suit, it may be abated by a mandatory injunction, as well as by a judgment that the obstruction be removed and the nuisance abated.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; P. O. HUNDLEY, Judge.

Rearden & Freer, for appellant. Gray & Sexton, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to obtain an injunction restraining the defendant from maintaining an obstruction upon a public highway and for damages. The complaint alleges that there is, and for more than 10 years has been, a public road, situate in Butte county, and about 70 rods in length, extending from the Oroville and Miner's Ranch public road to the residence of one Nancy Cooper; that plaintiff is in possession and entitled to the possession of a slaughter-house situate on the south side of the said road, "and that the only means of entrance and exit to and from said slaughter-house to the said public highway, leading from Oroville to Miner's Ranch, or any other public highway, is over and along the said highway leading to the residence of Nancy Cooper aforesaid; that the defendant on the 20th day of February, 1889, wrongfully, unlawfully, and fraudulently, and for the purpose of vexing, annoying, and preventing this plaintiff from reaching his said slaughter-house, entered upon said public highway leading from the Oroville and Miner's Ranch road to the residence of Nancy Cooper, aforesaid, at a point between plaintiff's slaughter-house and said Oroville and Miner's Ranch road, and caused to be erected across said public highway an obstruction, to-wit, a building which completely obstructed said road, for all uses of a road, and wholly prevented this plaintiff from reaching his said slaughter-house; that plaintiff has no other way, convenient or otherwise, by which he can reach his said slaughter-house; that plaintiff is engaged in the butchering business in the town of Oroville, and is compelled, in order to supply the wants of his customers, to slaughter a number of animals each day; that he has no other place for slaughtering said animals than the place heretofore described; that if the defendant is permitted to maintain his said obstruction across the public road as aforesaid, plaintiff's business will be entirely destroyed and broken up, to his damage in the sum of $5,000; that, by reason of the acts heretofore complained of, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $300." The prayer was for damages in the sum of $300, and a perpetual injunction. The defendant demurred to the complaint generally and specially, and, his demurrer being overruled, answered denying all its averments. After trial, the court found all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, except as to the damages sustained; and as a conclusion of law that the plaintiff was "entitled to damages in the sum of one dollar, and to an injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing or maintaining any obstruction upon said road, and for costs of suit." Judgment was accordingly so entered, and from it the defendant appealed, and has brought the case here on the judgment roll.

It is urged for appellant that the demurrer should have been sustained because it appeared that the obstruction complained of was a public nuisance, and it did not appear that it was specially injurious to the plaintiff, or that he had suffered or would suffer any injury therefrom, other than what was common, in kind and character, to himself and all others living on the road beyond the point of obstruction, though on account of his business his injury might be greater in degree than theirs. The Code contains the following provisions: "Anything which is * * * an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, is a nuisance, and the subject of an action. Such action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by the nuisance; and by the judgment the nuisance may be enjoined or abated, as well as damages recovered." Code Civil Proc. § 731. "A private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance, if it is specially injurious to himself, but not otherwise." Civil Code, § 3493. In Blanc v. Klumpke, 29 Cal. 156, it was held that if a nuisance in a highway only affect the plaintiff in common with the public at large, in the use of the highway, he cannot have his private action; but if the free use of his private property is interfered with by such nuisance, he may have his private action to abate the same. And this seems to be the general rule, and well supported by the authorities. See Wood, Nuis. §§ 811, 830, and cases cited. Here it was alleged in the complaint, and found by the court, that the plaintiff had a slaughter-house where he was compelled, in order to carry on his business, to slaughter a number of animals each day, and that he had no other place for slaughtering the animals; that the obstruction was erected by the defendant for the purpose, and had the effect, to wholly prevent the plaintiff from reaching his slaughter-house, and, if continued, would break up and destroy his business, to his damage in the sum of $5,000. This, we think, clearly shows that the nuisance was specially injurious to the plaintiff, and that under the well-settled rules of law he had a right in his own name to commence and maintain an action to enjoin or abate it.

It is further urged that the injunction ought not to have been granted, because it appeared that the obstruction sought to be enjoined actually existed at and before the time of filing the complaint; citing Gardner v. Stroever, 81 Cal. 148, 22 Pac. Rep. 483. This position cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. An obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with its comfortable enjoyment, is a nuisance, and the statute says it may be enjoined or abated. Such an obstruction must necessarily have an actual existence before it can be a nuisance. The judgment here might have been in direct terms that the obstruction be removed and the nuisance abated; but the mandatory injunction granted was evidently intended to have, and did have, the same effect. It was therefore an authorized and appropriate remedy. In the case cited the appeal was from an order refusing to dissolve a preliminary injunction granted on the complaint alone. The order was reversed on the ground that the obstruction complained of already existed. The court said that "mandatory preliminary injunctions are seldom granted, and only in a peculiar class of cases, of which this case is not one." We think the decision clearly right, but it in no way contravenes what has been said above. Obviously, alleged nuisances ought not, in ordinary cases, to be abated by preliminary injunctions; since it might appear on the trial that the alleged nuisance was not a nuisance, or that the plaintiff had no right to sue for its abatement in his own name. It results, in our opinion, that the judgment should be affirmed.

APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for the balance due on a contract, the court finds from conflicting evidence that no false representations were made as alleged by defendant, its finding will not be disturbed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; PHILIP W. KEYSER, Judge. W. H. Cobb, for appellant. Barney & Donohoe, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. On the 8th day of July, 1889, appellant bought of respondent several stacks of hay, unmeasured, and agreed to pay therefor at the rate of $6 per ton; the purchase price to be ascertained by the measurement of the hay upon the basis of 512 cubic feet to the ton. The hay was measured, and amounted to 275 tons. At the time of the purchase appellant paid $1,200 upon the contract, took possession of the hay, and forthwith proceeded to bale and remove it from the field. This is an action to recover the balance of the purchase price. Appellant's contention is that as a matter of fact there were only 185 tons of the hay as shown by the baler's weights, and asks judgment for $90 against the defendant, setting out that respondent represented to him that the hay was of such quality that 512 cubic feet thereof would make a ton; that appellant relied upon such representations, and that they were false, and therefore the agreement to measure the hay upon the basis of so many cubic feet to the ton should be set aside and disregarded. This contention of appellant as to a warranty is completely answered by the following finding of the court: "That the plaintiff did not make the defendant any false or fraudulent representations with regard to the quality or quantity of said hay, or as to its measurement, or as to the manner in which it was stacked; nor did he make any warranty as to the quality or quantity." The evidence of the plaintiff and defendant is conflicting upon this point, and consequently we will not disturb the finding. The order striking out the testimony of the defendant, Lyon, when he was recalled, even if error, was not prejudicial, as he had previously testified to the same matters upon his redirect examination in chief.

Let the judgment and order be affirmed.

EXCEPTIONS—WHEN SETTLED—SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 650, providing that the exceptions taken at the trial, if the action were tried without a jury, must be settled, by the party desiring a bill of exceptions, within 10 days after receiving notice of the entry of judgment, and section 1010, providing that "notices must be in writing," a copy of the findings and judgment, served on the attorneys of the unsuccessful party by the attorneys of the prevailing party, is sufficient notice of the entry of judgment; and a bill of exceptions must be settled within 10 days after the service of such copy, unless the time is extended by order of court. Distinguishing Biagi v. Howes, 66 Cal. 469, 6 Pac. Rep. 100.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. WARD, Judge.

Wicks & Ward, for appellants. Stephens & Appel and O'Melveny & Henning, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This case was tried by the court, and findings and judgment in favor of the defendant were filed on the 11th day of June, 1889. On the next day, after the entry of the judgment, a copy of the findings and judgment and a copy of defendant's memorandum of costs and disbursements in the action were delivered to the law clerk of plaintiffs' attorneys, at their office, and the following indorsement was then and there made by the clerk upon the memorandum of costs: "Received copy of the within memorandum of costs, together with copy of the findings and final decree in the within mentioned action, after filing of said findings and filing an entry of the decree, this June 12, 1889. WICKS & WARD, per C., Plaintiffs' Attorneys." On the 21st of the same month, the plaintiffs' attorneys served upon defendant's attorneys and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial of the action, and that the motion would be made upon a statement of the case to be thereafter prepared and settled. On the 2d of July plaintiffs' attorneys obtained an order for 10 days' extension of time within which to prepare and serve their statement on motion for new trial, and on the 11th of the same month they obtained another order for an additional extension of 20 days within which to prepare and serve such statement. No statement on motion for new trial was ever served or filed, and no order extending the time within which to prepare or serve a bill of exceptions was ever obtained or applied for. On the 9th of August plaintiffs' attorneys had an order entered dismissing the motion for new trial, and thereafter, on the same day, served on defendant's attorneys their draft of a bill of exceptions in the action, and a notice of appeal from the judgment, stating therein that "said appeal is taken on the judgment roll and on bill of exceptions." On the 16th of August defendant's attorneys served on plaintiffs' attorneys notice that they would move the court to strike out plaintiffs' draft of a bill of exceptions, on the ground that the same was not prepared or served within the time required by law, or within any further time allowed by the court or a judge thereof. This motion subsequently came on for hearing, and was denied; and thereupon the judge of the court settled, allowed, and certified the bill as it is presented in the transcript. The foregoing facts are shown by a supplemental bill of exceptions, prepared, certified, and filed on behalf of defendant.

1. The first question presented here for decision is, was the plaintiffs' bill of exceptions prepared and served within the time allowed by law? Of course, if it was not, it must be disregarded. The Code provides as follows: "When a party desires to have exceptions taken at a trial settled in a bill of exceptions, he may, within ten days after the entry of judgment, if the action were tried with a jury, or after receiving notice of the entry of judgment, if the action were tried without a jury, or such further time as the court in which the action is pending, or a judge thereof, may allow, prepare the draft of a bill, and serve the same, or a copy thereof, upon the adverse party." Section 650, Code Civil Proc. "Notices must be in writing." Section 1010, Id. The appellants contend that they never received any written notice of the entry of the judgment, and that their bill of exceptions was therefore served in time; citing Biagi v. Howes, 66 Cal. 469, 6 Pac. Rep. 100. On the other hand, the respondent contends that the copy of the findings and judgment served on appellants' attorneys, after entry of judgment, as shown by their acknowledgment of service above set out, was a sufficient notice to meet the requirements of the Code. We think the respondent's contention should be sustained. The case cited by appellants is not directly in point. The question in that case arose under a different section of the Code, and it was whether or not the defendants served and filed their notice of motion for new trial in time. The action was tried by the court without a jury, and the decision was announced on the 28th of March. The defendant's attorney was present in court at the time, waived findings, and asked for and obtained an order of court staying proceedings on the judgment for 20 days. No notice of the decision eo nomine was ever given, but notice of the rendition and entry of the judgment was given on the 5th of April following. On the 15th of the same month, the defendants gave notice of their intention to move for a new trial, and thereafter, within the time allowed by the court, prepared and served their statement. It was held that, under section 659 of the Code, a party intending to move for a new trial, when the action was tried by the court without a jury, has a right to wait for a notice in writing of the decision from the adverse party before giving notice of his intention; and he is entitled to such notice before he is called on to act, although he was present in court when the decision was rendered, and waived findings, and asked for a stay of proceedings on the judgment. In this case, written notice, in substance and effect, of the entry of the judgment was given, and the appellants acted on that notice in their proceedings to obtain a new trial. "The law respects form less than substance," (Civil Code, § 3528,) and, in our opinion, the notice should be held sufficient, (see Barron v. Deleval, 58 Cal. 95; Mullally v. Benevolent Society, 69 Cal. 559, 11 Pac. Rep. 215.) This being so, it follows that the appellants' bill of exceptions was not served in time, and hence that it must be disregarded.

2. The judgment roll discloses no error, and we therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—EXCESSIVE PUNISHMENT.

Order No. 1537 of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco is not void for imposing an unreasonable punishment in providing as a penalty for the uttering, etc., of profane and obscene language, and words and language having a tendency to create a breach of the peace, a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

In bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner sets forth "that he is held under a warrant of arrest issued by the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, upon a complaint charging him with uttering, etc., profane and obscene language, and words and language having a tendency to create a breach of the peace, in violation of section 28, order 1587, of the board of supervisors of said city and county of San Francisco;" and alleges as a reason for the issuance of the writ "that said ordinance is null and void, as the penalty imposed for its violation by section 1 thereof is a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding six months; or both, which is unreasonable, and renders the ordinance void." We can conceive of many cases in which a fine of $1,000 and an imprisonment for the term of six months would not be an unreasonable punishment for the uttering of profane and obscene language in the presence of other persons. Whether the offense in any particular case is sufficient to justify such punishment must be determined by the court before whom the offense is tried.

The application for the writ is denied.

VANCLIEF, C. This is an action for damages for diverting water from a ditch alleged to be the property of the plaintiff, and for a perpetual injunction restraining such diversion in the future. Judgment passed for the defendant, and the plaintiff brings this appeal from the judgment, upon the judgment roll, without any bill of exceptions, and contends that the court failed to find upon material issues of fact, and that the findings of fact do not support the judgment. There are 13 findings of fact, occupying 6 pages of the transcript, and 5 findings called "conclusions of law," which include some matters of fact. That the findings support the judgment is too obvious to require special consideration; and that there is either a direct finding, or a finding by necessary inference from facts found, on every material issue, seems quite as clear. As there is no bill of exceptions, the record affords no ground for the point made on the statute of frauds. It does not appear which party introduced the verbal contract, which, it is claimed, should have been in writing, nor that either party objected to it. I think there is no merit in the appeal, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

STRAHAN, C. J. The meaning of two clauses of the contract have been presented, one by defendant and the other by plaintiff. The defendant relies upon this clause of the contract: "In case that the performance of the undersigned should prove incompetent or unsatisfactory to the party of the first part, said party of the first part shall have the right to terminate this contract at any time, and shall not be held liable for any damages for such termination, or for any wages after such termination." The defendant claims that he had a right, under this part of the contract, to terminate it when he saw proper to do so, and of that he was made the sole judge by the terms of the contract itself. The plaintiff contends that the foregoing clause is modified by this provision: "The engagement holding good until it has been faithfully fulfilled by the parties of the second part, or canceled by the party of the first part for intoxication, vulgarity, or infringement of the rules by the parties of the second part." The rule of construction is that each and every part of a contract must be so construed that all may have effect, if it can be done. Looking at this entire contract, and its manifest object, the first clause may properly be held to refer to the competency of the plaintiff's Tyrolean Warblers, and their ability to give satisfaction to the defendant; and the other clause relates entirely to the personal conduct of the Warblers in and about defendant's theater. The two clauses relate to different subjects, and were inserted for different purposes. The last clause does not in any way limit or affect the first. If the defendant had alleged in his answer that the performance of the Tyrolean Warblers proved incompetent or unsatisfactory to him, and that he terminated the contract for that reason, an altogether different question would have been presented. It would have then become necessary to determine whether or not the contract sued on is within the principle announced in Zaleski

v. Clark, 44 Conn. 218; Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136; McCarren v. McNulty, 7 Gray, 139; Railroad Co. v. Inhabitants of Brewer, 67 Me. 295; Manufacturing Co. v. Ellis, 68 Mich. 101, 35 N. W. Rep. 841; Gibson v. Cranage, 39 Mich. 49; Hoffman v. Gallagher, 6 Daly, 42; Gray v. Railroad Co., 11 Hun, 70; Machine Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 565, 15 N. W. Rep. 1006; Benj. Sales, (Bennett's Ed.) pp. 560, 561, note; Slingerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. St. 291, 2 Atl. Rep. 230; Boller Co. v. Garden, 54 Amer. Rep. 715, and note. But the defendant did not make this question in his answer. He tendered a different issue altogether, and, having been defeated on it before the jury, seeks to try a different question in this court. It is true the complaint is somewhat faulty in the manner of assigning breaches of the contract sued on. It is alleged that the defendant wrongfully and without cause discharged plaintiff and his "Geschwander Trio," and refused to permit them to serve as aforesaid, though they were ready and willing to serve. It would have been better pleading to have followed the wording of the writing in assigning breaches, but we are not trying this case now on demurrer, but are considering the sufficiency of the complaint after verdict. In such case a more liberal intendment prevails in support of the judgment, and which we think ought to be invoked in this case. Alken v. Coolidge, 12 Or. 244, 6 Pac. Rep. 712; Houghton v. Beck, 9 Or. 325; Andros v. Childers, 14 Or. 447, 13 Pac. Rep. 65; Willer v. Navigation Co., 15 Or. 153, 13 Pac. Rep. 768. It follows that the judgment appealed from must be affirmed.

MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK V. POPE.

REPORT OF REFEREE—WHEN SET ASIDE—FACTORS —POWER TO FLEDGE—INTEREST.

1. The provisions of the Code of this state, to the effect that the court may affirm or set aside the report of a referee in whole or in part, and may make another order of reference, as to all or so much of the report as is set aside, to the original referees or others, or may find the facts and determine the law itself, and give judgment accordingly; and that, upon a motion to set aside the report, the conclusions thereof shall be deemed and considered as the verdict of a jury,—only authorize the court to set aside such report as to conclusions of fact, under the same circumstances in which it is authorized to set aside the verdict of a jury and grant a new trial, which it is authorized to do when the verdict is against the great weight of evidence.

2. Where the court sets aside the report of a referee in whole or in part, and elects to find the facts and determine the law itself, it is its duty to find the facts and conclusions of law in the same manner as it is required to do when it tries a case without the intervention of a jury.

3. A factor or commission merchant, who receives goods to be sold upon commission, has no authority to pledge them; but, where he has advanced money upon the goods, he thereby acquires a lien upon and special property in them to the amount of such advances, which he may pledge for his own use.

4. Where certain commission merchants received from time to time amounts of fish oil from a company engaged in the Alaska trade, upon the understanding and promise to make sale of it for the account of the company, and to render the proceeds thereof, less their charges for services in that behalf; and it was agreed between the merchants and the company that an account current of interest charges should be kept and paid at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum; and the merchants, after receiving and shipping portions of the oil to a consignee in a foreign market for sale, upon which they had made advances to the company on account thereof, drew in their own name, and for their own use, against the consignments, and negotiated the drafts upon their own credit, but attached thereto the bills of lading as collateral security for the payment thereof; held, that interest upon the money received by the merchants in the negotiations of the drafts did not constitute a proper debit against them in their account with the company.

5. Held, further, that the circuit court could not properly decide that interest upon said money, so drawn, was chargeable in the account against the said merchants, in the absence of a finding of fact justifying such decision.

Charles H. Carey, for appellant. L. B. Cox, for respondent.

THAYER, C. J. The counsel for the appellant contends that a circuit court cannot properly interfere with the findings of a referee regarding any fact as to which there is a conflict of evidence, and insists that there was evidence in this case tending to prove that the said firm of George Pope & Co. was to receive 5 per cent. commissions on all shipments and sales of oil and fish, and that the said circuit court should have left undisturbed the findings of fact by the referees upon that question. He also contends that there was no evidence authorizing said circuit court to allow to the trading company credits for interest upon the certain drafts drawn by the said firm against consignments of oil shipped by the firm for said company. The statute (section 229, Civil Code) provides as follows: "The court may affirm or set aside the report [referring to the report of the referee before whom a trial of the issues in an action has been had] either in whole or in part. If it affirm the report, it shall give judgment accordingly. If the report be set aside either in whole or in part, the court may make another order of reference, as to all or so much of the report as is set aside, to the original referees or others; or it may find the facts and determine the law itself, and give judgment accordingly. Upon a motion to set aside a report, the conclusions thereof shall be deemed and considered as the verdict of a jury." The language of this section of the Code is too plain to be mistaken. It authorizes the court to set aside the report of a referee under the same circumstances in which it is authorized to set aside the verdict of a jury and grant a new trial, which it may do when the verdict is against the great weight of evidence; and in case it does set aside the report, in whole or in part, it is the duty of the court to make another order of reference, as to all or so much of the report as is set aside, to the original referees, or to others, or it may find the facts and determine the law itself, and give judgment accordingly. If the court adopt the latter course, it is its duty to find the facts and conclusions of law in the same manner it is required to do when it tries a case where a jury trial has been waived. The court did not pursue that mode in this case, but I do not think the error is of such a nature as would authorize a reversal of its decision, as it evidently did not prejudice the rights of the appellant. It, however, would have been better practice to have pursued the course indicated, and cases may arise in which it would be highly important that it should be done.

I have examined the evidence as to the amount of commissions which the said firm was to receive upon the shipment and sales of the oil and fish, and am of the opinion that the circuit court very properly made the reduction in the amount found to be due by the referees. The only testimony upon that point seems to have been that given by McDonald, and he testified that he made the arrangements himself on behalf of the firm to sell the oil at 5 per cent. commission, $\frac{2}{3}$ of which was to go to R. D. Welch, and $\frac{2}{3}$ to be retained by the firm. This arrangement covered the first shipments up to a certain date. That afterwards he made arrangements with Mr. Lowenberg to the effect that the trading company should pay $\frac{7}{8}$ per cent. commissions, 5 per cent. of which was to be retained by the said firm of Pope & Co. The referees allowed 5 per cent. commissions on all oil sold, and the circuit court only made the reduction in accordance with the arrangement as testified to by said witness. It is claimed that McDonald, in making out a statement of the accounts between the trading company and the firm, charged the 5 per cent. commissions on all the sales; but this was hardly sufficient to impeach his testimony regarding the arrangement made with Lowenberg, nor does the testimony of Pope contradict that of McDonald's in regard to the said arrangement. The finding of the court that the trading company should have credit for the sum of \$43.08, on account of fish sold by the firm of George Pope & Co., instead of \$21.25, as found by the referees, involves so slight a difference that the counsel for the appellant expressed at the hearing a willingness to waive any point regarding it. The decision of the circuit court, however, that the trading company was entitled to credits for interest upon the certain draft referred to, does not seem to be supported by allegations, finding, or proof. It could not have been claimed by the respondent in the complaint, as the balance of the entire accounts between the company and the firm claimed by it was only \$7,740.56, which evidently did not include a credit of \$5,936.92, the proceeds of the draft for that sum drawn by the firm against certain consignments of oil. That the firm should have credit for the amount of said draft was the main contention between the parties to the action; and the referees found that issue in favor of the appellant, which finding the circuit court substantially confirmed. By giving the firm that credit, the claim of the respondent only amounted to \$1,403.64, the difference between the \$7,740.56 and the \$5,936.92, which was subject to a further reduction for interest charged in favor of the trading company upon the money drawn. The appellant admitted in the answer an indebtedness of the firm to the trading company of the sum of \$1,394.90, to which should have been added the \$189.54, the overcharge for commissions upon the shipment and sales of the oil. The real difference, therefore, in the accounts between the parties as claimed by them in the pleadings, after being adjusted in the respects above mentioned, was very small. The circuit court, however, increased it several hundred dollars, by deciding that the trading company was entitled to credits for interest upon the drafts referred to. This allowance, apparently, was on account of a matter which was not legally in controversy between the parties, as it did not in fact constitute any issue in the case. There was no evidence concerning it, except that Pope & Co., after making shipments of the oil, and after having made advances to the trading company on account thereof, drew against the consignments, and negotiated the drafts so drawn at the city of Portland. They did this in eight instances, but did it upon their own account, and by pledging their own credit. It is true that they attached the bills of lading to the drafts negotiated, which became collateral security in the hands of the holders of the drafts. They were entitled to do that, and I cannot see that it gave the trading company any right to claim interest on the money so obtained. Pope & Co. had no authority to pledge the oil for the payment of the drafts, but they had a lien upon it constituting a special property interest, to the amount of the advances made by them to the trading company, which they had a right to pledge for their own use. Coleb. Coll. Sec. §§ 407, 408. The decision of the circuit court allowing interest on said draft must therefore be reversed, and the judgment rendered by said court be so modified that the respondent recover of the appellant the said sum of \$1,394.90, found due by the referees; the further sum of \$189.54, the rebate upon the commissions as charged by the firm of Pope & Co., with \$25.76 interest on said last-mentioned sum; also \$42.75, the price of the fish sold by said firm in excess of the amount found by the said referees,—amounting in all to the sum of \$1,652.95, together with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from the time of the commencement of the action. The case will therefore be remanded to the said circuit court, with directions to enter judgment as herein provided, with costs and disbursements in favor of the party legally entitled to recover the same; each party to pay their own costs and disbursements incurred in this court; and neither will be entitled to recover costs or disbursements from the adverse party.

REFLEVIN—TITLE TO SUSTAIN—POSSESSION—ATTACHMENT—LEVY.

1. In an action to recover the possession of personal property, the plaintiff ordinarily must show that he is the owner of the property, or is lawfully entitled to the possession of it by virtue of a special property therein. The ownership, however, requisite to maintain such an action need not be absolute; a right to the possession and dominion over it for the time is all that is essential.

2. Hence where one person is in possession of personal property, exercising dominion over it, and another takes and carries it away without his consent, the former may maintain an action against the latter to recover the possession of the property, although in fact it belongs to a third person, unless the latter can justify his taking of the property by showing such a privity existing between him and the owner as would entitle him to represent the owner's interest in it.

8. A sheriff, in the execution of a writ of attachment, is not authorized to take personal property into his custody where it is in the possession of a third person. In such case he can only attach the property by leaving a certified copy of the writ, and a notice specifying the property attached, with the person having the possession of the same.

4. Where a plaintiff owned a band of cattle, a part of which he agreed to trade to one G., in consideration that G. would convey to him a half interest in a certain lot of land in the town of C. P., and would also assign to him certain policies of insurance upon the buildings situated on the lot, and the plaintiff took the cattle to be traded to C. P., and left them there to remain a certain length of time, when he would return and consummate the trade; and the plaintiff returned at the expiration of the time, but, ascertaining that G. had not assigned to him the policies of insurance, as agreed, took the cattle and sent them back to the pasture, where he was keeping the band from which he had taken them; and subsequently the sheriff, under a writ of attachment in an action wherein one C. was plaintiff and said G. was defendant, in attempting to attach the cattle so agreed to be traded as the property of G., seized and took into his custody, against the protest of the plaintiff, a number of cattle, which he selected from the band without knowing whether or not they were the cattle agreed to be traded; held, that the attempted levy was a nullity, and that the plaintiff had such an ownership in the cattle, even if he had made a bill of sale of them to G., and the latter had conveyed to him the interest in the said lot, but had failed to assign to him the policies of insurance, as would entitle him to maintain an action against the sheriff to recover the possession of the cattle seized.

P. P. Prim, R. Williams, and C. W. Kahler, for appellant. H. K. Hanna and Francis Fitch, for respondents.

THAYER, C. J. The issues in this case involve the right of the appellant to the possession of the cattle mentioned in the complaint, as against the respondents. The latter claimed the right to the possession of the cattle under the attachment proceedings referred to in the answer to the complaint. The grounds of error relied upon by the appellant consist entirely of exceptions taken to instructions given by the court to the jury, and to the refusal of the court to give certain instructions as requested by the appellant's counsel. It appears from the bill of exceptions contained in the record that the appellant gave evidence at the trial of the action showing that he was the owner of 23 head of full-blooded Galloway cattle; that he was keeping them in a Mr. Bybee's pasture, in said county of Jackson; that he had been keeping them there four or five weeks prior to the time of the alleged taking by the respondent Birdsey, mentioned in the complaint; that a short time before said taking he took out from the pasture 7 head of the 23 head of cattle, and drove them over to Central Point, and turned them over to William Gates and Mr. Fenton to take in; that he gave Mr. Fenton charge of the cattle, and told him to keep them until he came in Sunday morning; that this was on the 14th or 15th of September, 1889; that he took the 7 head of cattle over to Central Point to trade with Mrs. Gates for an undivided half interest she owned in lot 11, block 11, town of Central Point; that he was to give her the cattle for her half interest in the lot, and she was to assign to him her interest in the insurance policies on the buildings situated thereon; that the cattle were not delivered to Mrs. Gates, because he did not come back until Monday morning, and she had left the Sunday evening before, and had not assigned to him the insurance policies; that he then took charge of the cattle, and had them sent back to the pasture with the others, but, on the following Monday, Birdsey, as sheriff, took the 8 head of cattle in controversy, which were a part of the said 23 head, under the attachment in favor of Cooper and against William Gates. It also appears from the bill of exceptions that, when the said sheriff went to levy the attachment upon the cattle, the appellant notified him that they belonged to him, (appellant,) and forbade his taking them; and that the sheriff not being able to identify the said 7 head taken over to Central Point, those which he intended to levy upon, he employed one Edward McDonald to go with him and pick them out; that they took out 8 head, including a suckling calf, but did not know whether they were the same animals which had been taken to Central Point and driven back. It further appears from the bill of exceptions that the respondent W. G. Cooper was called as a witness, who testified that he had had conversations with the appellant in regard to the cattle; that he asked him about the black cattle,—if he had not traded Gates some black cattle; that appellant said, "Yes." Witness asked where they were. Appellant said, "Out at Bybee's pasture." That he traded them for real estate; gave Gates a bill of sale of the cattle. Witness asked him why the cattle did not belong to Gates. Appellant said they were Gates'. Witness asked him why they were not at Gates' now. That appellant said: "They agreed to assign over those fire insurance policies, and when I came in Monday morning I found they hadn't done it, and I took the cattle right straight back home." The honorable judge of the court, in signing the said bill of exceptions, appended to it the following certificate: "The above bill of exceptions is hereby allowed. The evidence above set out is not all the evidence in the case, but there was other and additional evidence upon all the points mentioned in the evidence as here set out."

atim, and I shall not attempt it, but shall content myself by referring to some rules of law which bear upon the questions involved. The case was a very simple one to determine. The appellant was clearly entitled to the possession of the cattle, unless they belonged to William Gates at the time they were taken by the respondents. If the appellant had agreed to sell the cattle to Mrs. Gates, or to William Gates, for that matter, and the latter had not performed the conditions upon which the sale and delivery were agreed to be made, the vendee would not have been entitled to the possession of the cattle, nor the sheriff to take them under the attachment proceeding. Neither was the sheriff entitled to take the cattle from the appellant by virtue of the writ of attachment, so long as the latter had them in his possession, claiming to be their owner. The case of Spaulding v. Kennedy, 8 Or. 208, is decisive upon that point. Nor was the appellant required to prove general ownership of the property, in order to entitle him to a recovery of the possession thereof. If he had a right to the possession of it as against the respondents, it was sufficient. In Sprague v. Clark, 41 Vt. 10, the supreme court of that state, in construing a statute upon the subject of replevin, use this language: "Under this statute, any person who is entitled to the possession of any goods or chattels may maintain replevin against any person who unlawfully takes or detains such goods or chattels from him. To entitle him to the possession, it is not necessary that he should be the owner, or that he should be entitled to possession, as against all others. It is sufficient if he is entitled to the possession as against the person who takes it from him. In such case the taking of it from him is an unlawful taking. A person who is in the possession, claiming the property or an interest in it, or a legal right to the possession, may maintain replevin against any person taking the property from him who cannot show a better right to it. The defendant in the action of replevin can prevail only when it appears that he is entitled to a return of the property, and that can be only when it appears that his right is superior to that of the plaintiff. The question is to be determined according to the respective rights of the parties to the suit." This decision, though made under a statute, is, I think, a fair exposition of the general rule of law upon the subject. The supreme court of New York, in Rogers v. Arnold, 12 Wend. 31, by NELSON, J., says: "It has long been settled in this state that the possession of personal chattels by the plaintiff, and an actual wrongful taking by the defendant, are sufficient to support replevin, and that it may be brought where trespass de bonis asportatis will lie;" citing several of the earlier cases. The Civil Code of this state does not provide when a person may maintain replevin, but it does provide that, in an action to recover the possession of personal property, the plaintiff may claim an immediate delivery thereof, when he is the owner of the property, or is lawfully entitled to the possession of it by virtue of a special property therein; from which it may be inferred that at least such an interest in personal property will entitle the plaintiff to recover the possession of it in the action when it is wrongfully detained from him. In Johnson v. Carney, 10 N. Y. 570, the court of appeals held that an actual possession of the property by the plaintiff, coupled with an equitable interest therein at the time of the seizure by the sheriff, was sufficient to maintain the action, and to entitle the plaintiff to a return of the property, although the general property and right of immediate possession be at the same time in a stranger, the defendant showing no privity between himself and such stranger. This I am inclined to believe is the true rule upon the subject.

The lawful possession of personal property is a sufficient title, in my opinion, to entitle the possessor to recover it against one who has taken it without right. This view is sustained by the language of Justice NELSON in Rogers v. Arnold, supra, at page 85, as follows: "When we speak of property in the plaintiff or in the defendant in this action, it is material to understand what is meant by the term. From the language used in some of the books, it might be inferred that the question between the parties involve the absolute ownership of it. The case already referred to, showing under what circumstances this action will lie, negative this idea. Right to the possession and dominion of the goods and chattels for the time is all that is essential. This is the view which this court had of the question at an early day. Harrison v. McIntosh, 1 Johns. 380. It is conceded by the learned judge who delivered the opinion in that case that an interest of the plaintiff in the property which would have sustained trespass or replevin would have constituted a good replication to the plea of property in strangers." It would be a remarkable doctrine, indeed, if one person could invade the possessions of another, take and carry away without authority goods and chattels he was claiming and exercising dominion over, and defeat his recovering them back by a plea that some stranger owned them. The respondents in this case could gain no standing in court to question the appellant's ownership of the cattle without first showing that William Gates owned them, and that the writ of attachment was duly levied upon them. A defendant in such a case, in order to justify the taking of property claimed by the plaintiff, must show not only that it belonged to a third person, but that there was such a privity between him and the third person as entitled him to represent the latter in the ownership of the property. Nor does the evidence in the case, as shown by the bill of exceptions, estop the appellant from claiming the cattle. If he told the respondent Cooper everything testified to by the latter; and, even more, if he had told him that he had sold the cattle to Gates in consideration of the half interest in the lot and the assignment of the policies of insurance, that he had executed a bill of sale of the cattle, and received a deed for the property, but that the policies of in-insurance had not been delivered to him, and he refused to deliver the cattle until they were,—it would not have constituted an estoppel. The appellant had an undoubted right, as before suggested, to hold the cattle until the agreement upon the part of the Gates family was fully performed. A party cannot be compelled to deliver property upon a sale thereof, when delivery and payment are to be simultaneous, until the vendee has fully performed the terms of the agreement on his part. Until then the vendor has a lien upon the property, amounting to a special property in it, and is entitled to hold it as against every one. The theory upon which this case was tried in the circuit court, as indicated by the instructions given to the jury, and the refusal of the court to give instructions requested by appellant's counsel, which were excepted to, is clearly in conflict with the views herein expressed. The judgment appealed from will therefore be reversed, and the case remanded to the said circuit court for a new trial in accordance with the principles of the foregoing opinion.

CHITTENDEN V. PRATT. (No. 13,799.)

SAME V. McRAE. (No. 13,800.)

PURCHASE OF MORTGAGED GOODS — ESTOPPEL OF MORTGAGEE.

Plaintiff held a mortgage on crops to secure his rent, and defendants, with full knowledge of his lien, sold goods to the tenant, and took hay, covered by the mortgage, in payment. At plaintiff's request the bank holding the note for the rent wrote defendants that the mortgage existed, and that for their own protection they should satisfy themselves that it had been paid. Plaintiff also wrote to his tenant that the sale to defendants was a good one, and advised the tenant to hold them to it. Held, that these letters did not estop plaintiff to require defendants to account to him for the value of the hay received.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. T. MYERS, Judge

PATERSON, J. Both of these cases present the same issues, were heard on the same evidence, and have been brought here on appeal in one transcript. In 1885 plaintiff leased to William Foster certain lands for the cropping season of 1885-86, and took from him a mortgage on the growing crop to secure the payment of the rent. By the terms of the mortgage the plaintiff "had the right to enter upon the leased premises, and to cut and harvest said crop, thresh, sack, remove, and sell the same, and out of the proceeds of such sale to retain, first, all cost and expenses incurred in cutting, harvesting, threshing, sacking, removing, and selling said crop; and also to retain out of such proceeds the principal and interest secured by said chattel mortgage." The mortgage was duly executed and recorded, and defendants had actual notice of its existence. After the execution and recordation of the mortgage, and before the crop was harvested, Foster purchased certain articles of personal property from each of the defendants, and promised to pay for the same in hay at $10 per ton. When the crop was ready for harvesting, the plaintiff did not avail himself of the privilege referred to in finding 3, set forth above, but permitted Foster to harvest the crop, and prepare it for market. The defendant McRae received from Foster 90,225 pounds of hay, and defendant Pratt received hay amounting in value, at $10 per ton, to $319.32; but the amount due each defendant from Foster was greater than the value of the hay each received at $10 per ton. On June 14, 1886, the California State Bank held the note and mortgage as collateral security; and at the request of plaintiff, who had heard that Foster intended to sell some of the hay to the defendants, sent a letter to each of the defendants, which was received on the following day, a copy of which follows: "Dear Sir: We hold a crop mortgage of Mr. Wm. Foster to Aretta Chittenden, on the crop raised on the Mrs. Chittenden ranch, to secure the payment of a note for twelve hundred and ninety dollars ($1,290) and interest. We understand that you have bought a part of the hay; hence, before you settle with Mr. Foster for the same, you will do well to satisfy yourself that the mortgage above spoken of has been paid; otherwise we shall hold you responsible. Yours truly, CALIFORNIA STATE BANK." One of the defendants showed the letter he had received to Foster, whereupon the latter wrote to plaintiff as follows: "Roseville, June 18, 1886. Mr. Chittenden—Sir: I write to you to inform you that the bank has notified Mr. Pratt and Mr. McRae that they must not buy anything off the ranch. I sold that hay for ten dollars ($10) per ton. Now they can take that hay for the same price. You or them have spoilt my sale, so either you or them must take that hay for the same price, and take it right away; for the hay is baled now, and the sun is bleaching it out, and the hay was sold on the ranch. Please let the bank know, for the hay must be moved; and, if not, either them or you will have to pay me damages. Respectfully, WM. FOSTER." The plaintiff, through his agent, replied, saying: "Sacramento, June 21, 1886. Friend Foster: I have just returned from the ranch. On my return found a letter from you. If I had received it before, would have come and seen you. I will be up again in about a week. You say in your letter that the bank had notified Pratt and McRae that they must not buy anything from the ranch. That is not so. I have just come from the bank, and saw a copy of the letter to them. They always reserve a copy of all they do. It is simply this: They wrote them they held a crop mortgage of $1,290 and interest on the crop. If you go to Pratt and McRae, and ask to see the letter, you will find that this is all there is about it. You have made a good sale of the hay, and probably they would like to crawl out of it if you were foolish enough to let them. You said you had it in black and white with them, and, if so, you will hold them to the bargain. No one has done anything to interfere with your deal. Yours, respectfully, W. A. CHITTENDEN." All of the hay taken by the defendants was part of the mortgaged crop. Foster has paid $673 on the note made by him to plaintiff, and the balance is now due. The correspondence referred to all occurred before any of the hay was removed from the ranch. The defendants credited the account of Foster with the amount each had received from him, and refused to account to plaintiff for any part of the hay. Plaintiff thereupon commenced this action to recover the value of the hay. The court below held that the plaintiff was estopped by her letter of June 21, 1886, to Foster, from claiming anything; that she therein authorized Foster to make the sale on his own account, and waived any claims he might otherwise have asserted under the mortgage; and such is the contention of respondents here. The defendants were charged with notice that the legal title to the hay was in the plaintiff, (Berson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 550.) and that she could not be divested of her lien through a wrongful removal of the property from the land, (Wilson v. Prouty, 70 Cal. 196, 11 Pac. Rep. 608; Martin v. Thompson, 63 Cal. 4.) The defendants, as creditors of Foster, could not have taken the mortgaged property under an attachment, without first paying or tendering to plaintiff the amount of the mortgage debt, (Wood v. Frauks, 56 Cal. 217;) and, as the lien continued, the taking by defendants was a conversion for which plaintiff has a right of action, unless she is estopped by the letter referred to, (Wilson v. Prouty, supra.) We are unable to give to the letters and acts of the parties the effect which was given to them by the court below. The defendants were notified that if they took the hay they would have to see that the mortgage debt was paid by Foster, or they would be held responsible. The letter of June 21st does not relieve them from this responsibility. The plaintiff evidently considered that the sale to defendants would be an advantageous one to all parties. She would receive the amount due her, and at the same time the mortgagor would obtain a good price for the property, and be enabled thereby to reduce his indebtedness. She did not desire to interfere with the sale, but she did nothing that was inconsistent with her rights, or which tends to show that she intended to waive her right as mortgagee, or to induce a change of position on the part of the defendants. Foster had written that "the bank has notified Mr. Pratt and Mr. McKae that they must not buy anything off the ranch." This was evidently a misapprehension of the terms of the letter which had been written by the bank, and the plaintiff proceeded in her letter of June 21st to correct his error. There is nothing in her letter indicating an intention on her part of permitting the defendants to appropriate her crop without paying the mortgage debt. There is no merit in the other contention of the respondent. It is not a case of variance, nor was there a failure of proof. It is well settled in cases of this kind that a party may waive the tort, and sue in assumpsit for the value of the property. Lehmann v. Schmidt, 87 Cal. 15, 25 Pac. Rep. 161. No doubt respondents acted in the utmost good faith, and in the belief that they were entitled to the property under the circumstances, but plaintiff cannot be deprived of her property through a mistake of the defendants. The judgment and order in each case are reversed, and the causes are remanded for new trials.

HEIDT v. MINOR et al. (No. 12,947.)

NOTARY PUBLIC—MISCONDUCT—LIABILITY OF SURETIES.

1. A notary public, who was also engaged in negotiating loans, represented to plaintiff that certain persons desired to borrow and gave her what purported to be mortgages executed by them, to which he had appended his certificate of acknowledgment, and on the faith of which plaintiff gave him the money to be delivered to the mortgagees. The mortgages were forgeries. The notary converted the money to his own use, and absconded, and plaintiff brought suit on his bond. Held that, as receiving money is no part of the official duty of a notary, his sureties are not liable for that fraudulently retained by him, but only for the damages caused plaintiff by the falsehood of his certificate of acknowledgment.

2. The measure of plaintiff's damages from this element of the notary's fraud is the value of the mortgages if they had been valid.
